THE LAND OF BIG RED APPLES is the title of an attractive and highly interesting book recently issued. It is handsomely illustrated with views of South Missouri scenery, including the famous Olden fruit farm of 3,000 acres in Howell county. It pertains entirely to fruit raising in that great fruit belt of America, the southern slope of the Ozarks, and will prove of great value, not only to fruit-growers, but to every farmer and homeseeker in other states looking for a farm and a home. Mailed free. Address J. E. Lockwood, Kansas City, Mo.

Australian Shrubbery.

With the exception of a living carpet of delicate maidenhair, which attains a height of from five to six feet, and of ropes of creeper ferns which swing from tree to tree like fairies in the castle of a giant, the forest of Australia is altogether bare of undergrowth. In the woods of recent growth, however, vegetation is more luxuriant. The long tendrils of the clematis and rata connect trunk with trunk in garlands of white and scarlet bloom, and at their base flourishes an infinite variety of ferns, while here and there a graceful fern rears its silvery-lined crown.

A Good Disinfectant.

Great need is often felt of a good, reliable disinfectant in such quantities that the amount of the purchase money precludes its use. An ounce of permanganate of potash, which may be obtained of any druggist, will make a bucketful of as good a deodorizer and disinfectant as can be obtained. It only needs to be dissolved in water, and can be kept in crystals until needed. This solution is sold in bottles at a large price in England, under a registered name, and has an enviable and well-merited reputation.—New York Recorder

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A CHOICE SELECTION OF INTERESTING ITEMS.

Comments and Criticisms Based Upon the Happenings of the Day

THE meanest thief yet chronicled is the Buffalo youth, who stole a basin of holy water from a church chancel.

POVERTY is very good in poems, but is very bad in a house. It is very good in maxims and sermons, but is very bad in practical life.

THE use of the horsewhip by an actress in Denver is pretty good proof that business was dull at the opening of the theatrical season in that city.

CAREFULLY peruse the advertising columns of our paper. If your wife and baby are cross you may learn what to use to keep them in good temper.

"SOUP, soap, and salvation" is the alliterative motto of a Baltimore mission. The inference is that hunger and dirt are unconquerable enemies of salvation.

BROTHERLY love is not always embraced in the kissing of emperors. But, though rather theatrical for these days, it is the best way for rulers to resort to arms.

THE wreck of the Vanderbilt yacht Alva will be blown up. Her captain has already been blown up for anchoring his vessel in the path of sea travel, just as if a Vanderbilt owned Vineyard Sound.

CHICAGO has a trio of footpads, none of whom is seven years of age. They use a real pistol, which, with professional skill, they present muzzle forward. They have not yet attained sufficient muscular strength to cock the weapon, but they are growing.

THE grandson of Dom Pedro has brooded over an ambition to secure the Brazilian throne until he has become a howling lunatic straitjacketed in a padded cell. Meanwhile the throne is in the garret, and the dust of passing seasons settles upon it fearlessly of being disturbed.

LIZZIE BORDEN is believed to be insane because she alternately smiles and weeps. The fates forbend! Is this a conspiracy to incarcerate as deranged all of our vast female citizenship except soured spinsters and antiquated matrons? Out with the woman that cannot smile and weep a dozen times in as many minutes.

THERE is something in obstinacy which differs from every other passion. Whenever it fails it never recovers, but either breaks like iron or crumbles sulkily away, like a fractured arch. Most other passions have their periods of fatigue and rest, their sufferings and their cure, but obstinacy has no resource, and the first wound is mortal.

AS THE spirit of the age is unquestionably one of fairness, it follows that a martyr stands far more chance of public support and sympathy than an autocrat; and that the surest way to create popularity for a man is to persecute him. The presumption is always, and generally with justice, against the persecutors. Persecution of whatever kind is at once a blunder and a crime.

A TACOMA man went down to Philadelphia with a wad of money and a double-action gun. Yet he was robbed and drugged and arrested and poisoned inside of twenty-four hours. What with its tricky financial institutions and footpads the ancient city of brotherly love is gaining an unenviable reputation. Unsophisticated Western men should beware and fight shy of Philadelphia when good Sunday School Samaritans lie in wait to "take in" the stranger.

SOME years ago an eccentric uncle left to James Babcock a fortune of millions, provided he should marry within five years. Since then Babcock has been talked about, angled for and proposed to unrelentingly. There is relief in knowing that he has betaken himself from the matrimonial market and is safe in the sacred circle of domesticity. It is also a delight to know that Mrs. Babcock feared to love him for himself alone, as she had been accused by rivals of acting by a mercenary motive quite to be condemned.

ANEST the objection of the Prussian Reichstag to appropriating more money for war materials bumptious young Emperor William asserts himself as follows: "I will give up the educational bill if necessary, but I will never withdraw the military bill." Just a little more in this strain from Willie and it is likely that the option of "giving up" and "withdrawing" will be taken from him. The Germans are conservative, but when they are aroused that army and the Hohenzollern barnacle with it will be swept aside to make room for the despised educational bill and some other things.

ONE of the papers published in London has adopted the plan of displaying from its building three times each day the signals which tell what kind of weather is predicted by the meteorological bureau. Also it keeps on hand in the office a set of cards which may be had for the asking by persons who do not know what the signals mean but want to understand them. The average Londoner who goes past that office has only to look up in order to tell whether or not it is advisable to carry an umbrella, and the only fault in the arrangement consists in the fact that he has already left home when he sees the signal.

THE conviction of a Philadelphia lady and her agents of cruelty to animals in "docking" a horse's tail ought to be a sufficient warning to the fools everywhere who think they can improve on the work of the Creator. The cruelty is not alone in the torture the animal endures in the "docking" process, by which a portion of the bone is removed and certain muscles rendered useless; it is to be found also in the suffering of the animals from flies, mosquitoes and other insects from which it can free itself only by the use of the tail. But the S. P. C. A. ought to take note also of the outrageous cruelty involved in the check rein, which forces the horse to hold his head in an unnatural position and to suffer accordingly.

PROBABLY there is not another question that is sent to the newspapers so often as the one asking for a statement of the relative importance of Chicago as a port of navigation. It is officially answered in the Government report on the internal commerce of the United States for 1890. The vessel tonnage entering and clearing at Chicago is about one-half of that which enters and clears at London, the latter being the principal port of the world. It is nearly two-thirds as great as the total Liverpool tonnage, and greatly exceeds that of any other port in the United Kingdom. It nearly equals the total tonnage arriving and clearing at New York in the foreign trade, and exceeds the combined tonnage entering and clearing in the foreign trade at the ports of Boston, Baltimore, Philadelphia, and San Francisco. It nearly equals the total tonnage in the foreign trade at Hamburg, which is the chief among the German ports, and exceeds by a large margin the foreign tonnage at Antwerp. If the coastwise tonnage of New York were added to its foreign tonnage, that port would probably dispute the second place with Liverpool on the list of world ports. Hamburg would occupy the fourth position, and there is every reason to believe that the fifth and sixth positions would fall to Chicago and Buffalo.

THE chief difficulty in the way of appointing a poet laureate to succeed Tennyson appears to be that the three or four bards who would appear at all respectable in the dead singer's mantle are strongly tainted with socialism. Were it not for Swinburne's often and fiercely expressed scorn to the pomp and trappings of royalty he would succeed to the office as of an inheritance. Tennyson began his poetic life inspired with something of the same scorn. But it was long, long ago, that he wrote and believed:

How'er it be, it seems to me
'Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.

All that sort of thing had been forgotten when he was made Lord Tennyson. And even Swinburne's "Songs Before Sunrise" might be overlooked, but it would hardly do to favor with the smiles of royalty the man who advised the assassination of the Czar. William Morris, of "Earthly Paradise" fame, is another great poet, but he is also a socialist. And so faithful Sir Edwin Arnolds stands a pretty good chance for the honor. His lyrical feet are lame, his rhymes are bad and his blank verse monotonous. But then poor Pye was a poet laureate of whom Byron says that he would rather err with Pope than shine with Pye, and so was Colley Cibber, hero of the Dunciad. The list is not all made up of Tennysons.

Unexpected.

There are occasions on which it is rather gratifying to hear an unexpected reply, one tires of listening to commonplace responses to everything that is said; but as a rule the unlooked for answer is disconcerting. Mr. Sharples makes a point of continually catechizing his boy John, who is now 7 years old, on points of natural history. As Mr. Sharples lives in the heart of a large city, and the boy seldom sees any other animals than horses and dogs, he has rather a hard time of it. The other day the father asked: "Johnny, what animal is it that says 'hee-haw! hee-haw!'" The little boy opened his eyes very wide. He had never heard such a noise before. Then he answered promptly: "You, papa." "Do you know, Harry, I am often afraid I shall never meet you in Heaven," said a Sunday school teacher to a rebellious urchin. "Have you been so very naughty then?" asked the Pharisaical Harry. Unexpected answers are not confined to children. An anecdote is told of a lady who was somewhat famous for this kind of a retort. An acquaintance was lamenting over the sad fate of a relative who had made an unfortunate marriage, and concluded: "What would you do in such a case? I am sure I should die." "No, I should kill," was the brisk rejoinder. Many an interesting illusion has been shattered by an unexpected answer. When Prince Ferdinand made his entry into Widin, in Bulgaria, an inhabitant of the town read a short poem of welcome to him. The new majesty was moved to tears. "I will decorate you!" exclaimed the prince, deeply affected. "I should prefer a little money," replied the poet. "Why?" "Because," said a bystander, "my friend has already obtained a medal for reading this poem to Prince Alexander, and now he would like something else for a change." A party of tourists at a well known ruin asked the custodian if they might carry away some of the fragments of stone which were lying in the embrasure of an historic window. "Oh, dear, yes," was the reply; "it does no harm to the window. I put fresh bits there every day on purpose for visitors to take." Equally disappointing was the reply of the famous chef who, when bribed to reveal his secret for "roasting a turbot," coolly replied, "Vel, sare, I no roast him at all; I put him in de oven and bake him."

English Sparrows.

It has been said that the pugnacious sparrow drives away our native birds, but so far as the writer's observation goes, the charge has little foundation in fact. Others, too, have observed a large number of robins, bluebirds, and chippies nesting in the neighborhood, and that they are not molested by the sparrows. A pair of robins selected a tree near the sidewalk, not over fifty feet from our front door, and many times a day we see the parent birds gathering their food upon the lawn, and never once, there or elsewhere, have we seen them disturbed by sparrows. A bluebird has a nest in a house at a neighbor's just diagonally across the street, and a chippy family of young in a tree only a few rods to our left, and never once have we known of either being molested. We believe the truth to be that the numerous shotguns in the hands of wanton destroyers of innocent bird life, or in those who are killing birds for the millions to dress hats with, are responsible for the wholesale destruction of native song birds, or driving them away more than the ever present, active sparrow, who is so busily engaged in providing for his own wants or those of his little household, that he has neither time nor inclination to war upon his inoffensive neighbors.

Recreation.

Every part and power of the human body, to be kept in full efficiency, requires some measure of exercise and change. The desire for change should be satisfied as though it were a desire for food or drink. There are three things which enter mostly into recreation—uncertainty, wonder and the exercise of skill in things which are not of the ordinary daily work. Uncertainty is to be found even in the mind of a boy when tossing his penny into the air. He sees it fall, and the uncertainty as to which side will turn up is a refreshment to him, as being a thing apart from daily toil. The same with games of chance, when played without the element of gambling. Fireworks, great plots in theatres, fairy-tales, ghost-stories, sensational novels, the big letters on newspaper placards—anything, however fallacious that creates wonder in the mind of a man, refreshes him. In hunting, fishing and the felling of trees, there is an exercise of skill apart from the ordinary labor of the day. Those who have mental work to do ought to have manual labor afterwards, and those who have manual labor should find recreation and refreshment in mental occupation of some kind or other.

Tender and True.

Jack—I dined with Buskin the other day. He's a dry wit—called the turkey Douglas.
Tom—Why?
Jack—Because it was tender and true.—Truth.

DEALING IN "FUTURES" AND "OPTIONS."

By Hon. W. D. Washburne, U. S. Senator From Minnesota in the American Journal of Politics.

The line between fictitious sales and sales of actual property should be clearly drawn.

Dealing in options is nothing more than gambling, pure, simple, and absolutely cold blooded. Its devotees do not contemplate the delivery or receiving of property, and I do not suppose that there is an instance on record where any property passed; but it is simply a bet on what the value of that property may be at a given time in the future. I think that even those who are opposed to legislation against it do not claim that there is anything in "dealing in options" except gambling. For example, A sells a million bushels of wheat, if you please, to B, to be delivered next December. A does not own a bushel of wheat, never has had a bushel and does not expect to have, and B, who has made the purchase, never expects that A will deliver the wheat to him at the time specified in the contract, but on the expiration of the contract the two gentlemen make a settlement on the basis of the price that wheat may bear at the time specified. There is no ownership or property; there is no change of property; there is no legitimate transaction. It is simply a bet on the part of the two operators as to what the price of wheat will be at the time designated. So that this, as in the case of "options," simply becomes a wager as to the price of property at a given time in the future and finally resolves itself into a bet and nothing more. All assumed sales of property where there is no ownership, where operators on boards of trade assume to sell property, wheat, pork, or cotton on exchange where there is no ownership, where no delivery of the property is expected to be made or is made, should be placed under the ban of law. This would not interfere with commerce. It would simply destroy the most vicious kind of gambling that has ever existed.

From the best information I have been able to obtain at least 95 per cent of the sales on the Chicago board of trade are of this fictitious character, where no property is actually owned, no property sold or delivered, or expected to be delivered, but simply wagers or bets as to what that property may be worth at a designated time in the future. It has finally come to this, that the operators on boards of trade fix the prices of different articles without regard to the law of "supply and demand" or any natural conditions whatever. So that the business of the country has reached a crisis that is absolutely unbearable; so that the boards of trade, which are a necessity in conducting the commerce of the country, have been subverted from the uses and purposes for which they were created and have been turned into gaming resorts where the great products of this country are made the basis and football of gambling transactions; so that wheat and cotton have become as much gambling tools as chips on the faro-bank table. The property of the wheat grower and cotton grower is treated as though it were a "stake" put on the gambling table at Monte Carlo. The producer of wheat is compelled to see the stacks in his barn dealt with like the peas of a thimble-rigger, or the cards of a three-card-monte man. Between the grain producer and the loaf eater there has stepped in a "parasite" saying at what price one shall sell and the other buy—a "parasite" between them, robbing them both. I make the broad statement that the prices of many of the agricultural and food products of this country are made arbitrarily and artificially on the boards of trade, and most notably the board of trade in the city of Chicago, and that, too, without the slightest regard to the laws of "supply and demand" or any natural conditions whatever. I will say, further, that for the past three years, almost without exception this price has been made by the "short seller"—the "bear"—who has persistently and continually depressed the price. Why should he not be suppressed? What place is there or should there be for such an animal in this country? Great Britain, the largest importing country of our products in the world, passes laws to prevent combinations for raising of prices to its consumers. Why should not the United States, the great exporter of these products, with equal propriety, pass laws to suppress any system that depreciates prices? The price of wheat has steadily declined from the highest point on the last crop to the present time, 84 cents a bushel. The price of cotton has declined about 30 per cent. That the decline of prices in these great products has not been brought about by natural causes is very evident. As a matter of fact the general conditions upon which prices are or should be made have not been changed in that direction. Substantially, we knew as well last October the amount of the wheat crop in this country as we knew it in July. The rates of freight from the farm to the seaboard have been reduced at least one half in the last fifteen years, and, as I think, in the last ten years. Yet this fact seems to have had no effect whatever in staying the downward trend of prices. This decline is to be accounted for, in my judgment, only in one way, and that by the manipulation and making of artificial prices on the produce exchanges of the country, and by the toleration of a system by which the "short seller" keeps constantly on the market a large amount of wheat that has no existence.

Formerly the price of wheat was made at Mark Lane, and the price of cotton in Liverpool. Now the market of wheat, not only for this country, but for the entire world, is made on the Chicago and New York boards of trade, and the price of cotton on the cotton exchanges of New York and New Orleans. Liverpool and London have no more to do with fixing prices than Todunk or Anacostia. Mark Lane is a great market, the board of trade of Chicago a colossal bucket shop, and in the matter of making prices Mark Lane is at a disadvantage, for it can deal only in actual products, while the Chicago institution can put on the markets hundreds of millions of what does not exist; so that Mark Lane becomes eliminated from the situation, so far as the fixing of prices is concerned.

That supply and demand do not determine prices, but that they result from manipulation, only made possible by "short selling," has been demonstrated numberless times, and was made clear by the recent corner in corn. There was no legitimate demand for corn at $1 per bushel, but "short selling" had created artificial conditions which enabled the manipulators to fix such a price, but when this artificial demand suddenly ceased, that instant the prices shrank one half, showing that great disturbances do arise from "short selling," and the collapse of the Harper wheat corner was an illustration of their far-reaching effects, as in that case wheat, which had for months been selling at an average of about 80 cents per bushel, rose rapidly to 95 cents, to fall instantly on the failure of the corner to 68 cents, and it was eight months before the price again reached 80 cents, and there is little doubt that the price received for the entire succeeding crop was materially less by reason of the manipulation of Harper; and aside from this destructive effect upon values, the other effects were neither trifling nor temporary, and but for the system of "short selling" the Fidelity bank would not have been plundered, reputations ruined, great losses sustained by merchants, bankers, and artisans, and Harper would not now be "doing time" in the Ohio penitentiary.

OFFICERS KANSAS STATE ALLIANCE.

List of officers elected at Fifth annual session of the Kansas state alliance held at Emporia November 10th, 11th and 12th, 1892.

President—W. S. Hanna, Ottawa, Kansas.

Vice president—Mrs. M. C. Clark, Topeka.

Secretary and treasurer—J. B. French, Topeka.

Lecturer—S. M. Scott, McPherson.

Assistant lecturer—G. E. Miller, Republic.

Steward—H. Reenmyder, Hays City.

Assistant steward—W. A. Ranson, Mt. Hope.

Doorkeeper—G. A. Camp, Wellington.

Assistant doorkeeper—Y. F. Ricketts, Meriden.

Delegates to the national alliance—W. S. Hanna, John G. Otis.

Delegates to the national silver convention—John Davis, Junction City; Walter N. Allen, Meriden; H. P. Clay, Prescott, and G. B. Scanlan, Randall.

P. B. Maxon, of Emporia, endorsed for railroad commissioner.

There were sixty-eight votes in the state alliance and a very harmonious and enthusiastic meeting is reported.

TOMMYBOB'S DREAM.

It was Thanksgiving evening, and Tommybob slept. While over his pillow Thanksgiving dreams crept. They whispered, the while he grew rigid with fear: "Look out, for the ghosts of the slaughtered are near!"

TOMMYBOB'S THANKSGIVING VISION.

Then in walked a turkey, bespattered with mud. And with gobbles which curdled poor Tommybob's blood. The lack of a liver and a load of fine dressing Made it beat with its drum sticks until 'twas distressing. It perched on the footboard and whispered, "I'll stay And hiccough, young man, till next Thanksgiving Day." Fried oysters rode bicycles made of mince pies. And each took a "header" right into his eyes; A plum pudding camped on a terrible ache, And doubled its fist at a large jelly cake; While raisins unnumbered fell over in fits—Which frightened poor Tommybob out of his wits. As the nuts fell like hail, some one sounded a gong. And at once all the company joined in a song: "Woe, woe to thee, Tommybob! Many a night We'll dance on thy bed till thou tremblest with fright. Till thou learnest that thy stomach should not be abused, For know that thy gluttony 'll not be excused."

Then at Tommy they sprang. He uttered a groan. And, lo! they all vanished, and he was alone.

Tommybob has decided a greedy young sinner Has to pay a big price for a Thanksgiving dinner. And that eating to live will make much finer living Than living to eat, as he did on Thanksgiving. —Golden Days.

JACKANAPES.

ITY streets shrouded in twilight. Thin snows fast becoming blackened under the hundreds of home-bound footsteps. And after the glad home-comings, when the yellow hearth fires gleamed in the night outside, a dwarfed little urchin might be seen trotting after a man who turned down the by-street which led to the depot.

"Mayn't I pack your satchel, sir?" asked the boy, as he caught hold of the man's greatcoat.

"Just going to the depot; but come along, and maybe I'll give you a quarter for Thanksgiving. Guess that'll make you feel like giving thanks. How about it?"

"Me an' the quarter seems both willin', but I knowed it was Thankgiving day to-morrow for weeks. You see, I've been a-fixin' to skive down and see mammy."

"What's skive, and who is mammy?"

"Why, mammy is just mammy, my mammy, and skive is the way of settin' any little ideas the directors of the road has got about my payin' fare. Mammy lives at—ville. Ever been at—ville?"

"No," replied the young man, with a half-disgustful laugh. "I don't believe you ever were, either. —ville is an all-night ride. Guess you've never been out of the city, unless you had to get out. What does your mammy call you, James?"

"Ain't seen her for two years, and don't know what she'll call me. Pap used to call me 'Jackanapes.'"

"Well, then, skin, Jackanapes," said the young man, as they reached the depot. He entered the Pullman of the through train standing on the third track, and, tossing his luggage into a seat, lounged back into the smoker.

The train started. The long vista of flaming street lamps soon faded away, and the distant city was only a blur of light in the murky darkness. Suddenly the young man thought of Jackanapes and his mother. Plattsville was an early morning stop on the road he was on. Perhaps the boy was on the train. At the next station the young man went out to look for the boy. Jackanapes was not in the train.

He went out and called his name. No answer. Staring back at the tender, he heard some one say: "I let the kid alone, he's lame. We ain't paid nothin' for puttin' people off as don't pay." It was the engineer speaking to his fireman.

"Are you there, Jackanapes?" called the young man.

"Sure," replied a voice from in front of the blind baggage-car.

"All right. If they put you off come back to the sleeper and ask for me. My name is Fenton—Thomas A. Fenton. I'll pay your fare."

"Yer osh n—"

But the train was moving, and the young man has ended back to his car. For that child of the slums perhaps a mother was waiting, a home, a Thanksgiving.

"Bah!" cried Fenton aloud from his meditation. "What is Thanksgiving for but children, women, and fools; and in what a season is it celebrated? When nothing lives in nature but the moss beneath the drip of snow! When the sigh of death is voiced in the stir of withered leaves! The oaks moan in the heart of the forest: 'Who has torn away our leaves?' The small bird pipes: 'Who has left empty my nest?' The dry water springs sigh: 'Alas, my margins!' It is the voice saying: 'Go mow down the tallest plants, cut off the flowers full bloomed, the buds of promise, the slender new stems; and yet more, tear up the roots, burn the seeds, scatter ashes and salt upon the land that God has given thee to make fruitful. When all this be done, set apart a day for thanksgiving.'"

"Yes," he laughed aloud, "for babblers in swaddling clothes and mothers with basing spoons." But he remembered that he used to be fool enough to celebrate Thanksgiving when he was a boy with a home and a mother. And then he stopped. Somehow the thought of a dead mother drives infidelity from a man's heart.

In that moment came a companion thought. He was a man without a home. Shrouded memories became quickened. He saw the house where he was born—low and little and black and old. But in the days of childhood it seemed not so. Within its narrow confines were the metes and bounds of all happiness and all hopes. How swiftly the seasons sped by. How he remembered all—the grasses waving at the marshes' edge, the quiet shade of country roads, and the lanes grown indistinct with weeds and grass, the cattail standing in the sunlit pools like statues of content, the green and sunny wooded slopes, the orchard's bending boughs, the golden stacks of grain, the suna h's flags of flame, the yellow autumn fields, the maples with transgured leaves, the winter hearth with dancing fairies in the flames. He heard the song of birds, the hum of bees, the murmur of the streams, the wailings of the wandering winds, and the voices of the tollers from the field singing the harvest home. To the child it had all been a story without an end.

He left his home as he grew older. It seemed small and mean. His brave mother had bade him godspeed and God save! In the months that had passed he had not written her a line. He was too proud to let her know that he was falling down and not climbing up the ladder of fortune. But brighter days and fortune came. It was years after. Then he had written many times. No reply. One letter came from a neighbor saying that his mother and baby brother had gone to relatives in the South and the mother had died there. He knew no relatives in the South and had after years given up the search. How often he had longed for the day when he might tell his beads of sorrow before the shine of her forgiveness! Dead. What a Thanksgiving reverie! But the reverie brought tears and a sleep.

"MAYN'T I PACK YOUR SACHEL, SIR?"

When Fenton awoke it was not yet morning. Clouds big with portending storms scowled at the feeble rills of light spilled over the jagged edge of early dawn. Great drops of rain splashed against the car windows, and soon a driving storm hid the landscape in unbroken darkness. And that truant from the city streets, crouching in the sobbing rain and perhaps concurring from the hurrying sheets of clouded darkness roseate and a purplid dreams of home. A home with the world of strife shut out and world of love shut in. Poor Jackanapes! thought Fenton. —ville must be the next stop. It was the next stop by the time-table. Fenton went over and asked the porter: "It's the next station, sah, but not the next stop. This is a through train, sah, and we just slow up a bit at —ville to grab off the mail pouch."

Already the train was slackening its speed. Fenton saw the station speed by. The air-brakes were suddenly applied and the train came to a full stop. Going to the platform Fenton saw the train hands running back with lanterns.

"What's the matter?"

"O, just a kid stealin' a ride. He jumped off and got rolled." The lanterns had stopped. Fenton hurried forward.

"Do you know him?" asked the brakeman.

"Yes," said Fenton, as he knelt by the body. "He's a Jackanapes and I'm his friend."

"Come, Jackanapes, you're nearly home now," said Fenton as the train sped on and he half lifted the boy from the ground. "Shall we go and find mammy? It's Thanksgiving Day and she will be waiting maybe?"

"Taint much difference now," said the boy as he opened his eyes. "It's the good leg what's hurt now. I was comin' back, but the train wouldn't stop. It don't make much difference; I couldn't see to jump. But mammy would like to see us 'cause I—"

"Yes, I know. Jackanapes; put your arms around my neck. I'll give you a ride home. Where does mammy live and what's her name?"

"Her name's your'n—Fenton, and she lives that-a-way."

At the threshold of a tumble-down cottage on the edge of the little village a woman stood gazing intently through the misty dawn, when down the muddy road came a tall figure bearing on its back a burden.

"Moth'r," said Tom Fenton.

"Mammy," said Jackanapes.

"I knew you would come back some day, Tom," said the mother some moments later; "but I didn't ask for nothing more. I didn't want to be a burden to my boys when they were strugglin' on through a hard world."

"COME, JACKANAPES, YOU'RE NEARLY HOME."

"No, mo, her; a good world. This is home and Thanksgiving Day. For wherever mother is home is, and there is Thanksgiving. Eh, Jackanapes?"

TAKING CARE OF THE TURKEY.

Directions for Preparing the Bird in the Highest Style of the Art.

The pride of the epicure is to have the fowl as large as possible and fat. It must be nicely dressed, and then it is ready for treatment. Place in a close-covered vessel with enough water to cover entirely, and boil until slightly tender. While it is boiling prepare the dressing as follows: Roast a pint of large chestnuts in their shells, stirring them occasionally so that they may be uniformly toasted. When brown, shell and pound fine in a mortar. Throw into a large bowl and add three stale grated rolls (or that have been softened by steaming and free from lumps), and three corn muffins; one pint fresh oysters, with their liquor; one small onion, shaved fine; two sticks celery, cut fine (or one teaspoonful celery salt); salt, pepper, a sprig of parsley, a pinch of cayenne, three tablespoons of butter, and three hard-boiled eggs that have been mashed very fine with a fork. Beat and thoroughly mix, adding water in which the turkey is boiling until the proper consistency, which must be stiff enough to put in with the hands. When the turkey is ready and cooled sufficiently to handle stuff full and tight, and what ever you have left put in baking pan to make gravy. Bake in water in which it was boiled, basting frequently and gradually turning the fowl entirely over, allowing the breast to brown last. When it is of a beautiful golden brown all over it is done.

The heart, liver, and gizzard, after being boiled, should be cut up fine and left in the gravy, half of which should be thickened and yellowed by the yolk of an egg beaten in, and the other half made brown with browned flour, or white with the white of an egg stirred in, and served in a double gravy boat. When the turkey is taken up the dish should be garnished all around with brown fried or steamed oysters and the sliced white rings of hard-boiled eggs, while upon the turkey are placed the wheels of yolks of the slices, and over all sprinkle a dainty touch of green parsley leaves. "Now, isn't that a dainty dish to place before a king?"

Thanksgiving Dainties.

THANKSGIVING CAKE.

—Sift 2½ pounds of flour, in which mix three spoonfuls of baking powder. Cream 3 pounds of sugar and two of butter together. Beat 12 eggs, and mix with the sugar and butter; and half a pound of beaten almonds, a teaspoonful of preserved lemon peel; sift in the flour, pour in a teaspoonful of milk; flavor with extract of rose. Bake in a moderate oven two hours. When cold, ice.

THANKSGIVING PUDDING.

—Take three cupfuls of flour, one of raisins, one of brown sugar, one of molasses, one of butter, four eggs, and a teaspoonful of soda; mix well, put in a pudding-bag and boil two hours. Serve with plum pudding sauce.

DOUGHNUTS.

—Take two cupfuls of sugar, four eggs, one cupful of sweet milk, teaspoonful of baking powder, teaspoonful of extra of cinnamon, with flour to make a soft dough. Cut in shape and fry in boiling lard.

CRANBERRY TARTS.

—Fill small tart tins with puff paste, bake in hot oven. Take out, fill with cranberry jelly, and set on ice until ready to serve.

Too Much.

"Look here, Jimmiv, this one wid some cranberry sauce'd do, wouldn't it?"

"Don't, Johnny, don't! Respect a feller's feelin's."—Life.

WHAT OUR WOMEN DON.

FASHIONABLE OVERGARMENTS ARE THE THING.

A Handsome Dolman of Chinchilla Goods Ornamented with Lace and Ribbons—The Latest Wrinkles in Drawing Room Arrangements.

Gossip from Gotham.

New York correspondence.

SEASON of fancifully fashionable overgarments is at hand, and so thin women are at an advantage over thick ones. Many a stylish mantle or cloak won't do at all for broad figures. Typical garments in the new styles are herewith depicted.

The initial fashion-plate shows a dolman or palatine, made of chinchilla goods and ornamented with lace and ribbons. At the joining of the sleeves with the front breadths folds of gray silk are placed. The lace, falling in the form of a collar and forming a straight collar, is ornamented with bows of gray ribbon. The second garment, sketched full length, is a pelisse made of poplin, or broad-ribbed bengaline, and trimmed with sable. The bias at the bottom, the cape and yoke are all made of maroon or brown velvet. Behind, both sides of the cape are hidden by the large double fold in the midst of the back of the pelisse. The straight collar is trimmed with fur. The yoke of velvet is adorned in front with ornaments of passementerie and at the back with a band of fur. At the bottom the trimming is double. This pelisse can be made in cloth or any other adaptable material.

The little girls, bless their doll-faces and coquette-hearts, are delightfully

There is a divan phenomenally broad, and even then jammed with pillows, which are magnificently covered, usually with velvet on one side and damask or silk on the other. Vases crowded with flowers are everywhere. The walls are all panelled and no pictures are hung. Several screens are spread, however, and on the leaves pictures are mounted, which is rather a good idea. The pictures are thus brought within easy inspection range. An exquisite marble group is in the center of the smaller room, representing a young mother with a child climbing about her knee. She is nude to the waist. The pedestal is velvet-covered, and surrounded by blooming plants. A cross corner of this room is a desk table; it is littered with dainty writing tools and somewhat crowded with framed pictures and a three-leaved screen set with a lot of family cabinet photographs. The table is lighted by four candles, each with a dainty shade, and placed here and there on the table. In the corner back of the table is an enormous paragon. The rooms are lighted by candles. The floors are inlaid wood, and are strewn with rugs. Things are so arranged that little pathways lead in and out about the furniture, but it would never do to get lost in the Princess' drawing-rooms at night. Come to think of it, maybe the rooms are all different now. They were as I have described a year ago when I was in London. Possibly their being cleared out is what has started the movement of our bric-a-brac in this country.

The last picture gives a promenade costume capable of serving as a skating dress. As drawn here, it is an armoured serge of a gayish green shade, trimmed with velvet of the same color and with gray feather trimming or fur. The skirt is cut as usual on the bias, but is trimmed with a band of velvet edge by a narrow band of feathered trimming. This bias is lined with muslin, hem stitched onto the skirt and sewed on together with the feather trimming. The upper part of the skirt has the darts necessary to make it set well on the hips. These darts are very carefully sewed and pressed, in order to make them invisible. At the back the dress falls in folds. The bodice, which is joined to the cape, descends some inches below the waist and the front breadth of it is lined. The yoke is of velvet edge with feather trimming, to which is adapted the fold that crosses the yoke. This fold can be cut or made in a different shade. It gradually diminishes as far as the back, where it entirely disappears under the cape. The vest is perfectly straight, is fashioned on muslin, without darts and lined with silk. In cutting the cape, as it is somewhat difficult, it would be better to try it in any worthless material first, so that there will be no danger of spoiling the fabric. It is cut of a single piece. The pleated sleeves are sewed onto the armholes of the waist and trimmed with a band of velvet. The cape may be wadded and lined with silk.

Copyright, 1892.

There is a movement of fashion to clear out old parlors and saloons of the clutter of bric-a-brac that for so many years has crowded all space. Let us hope the movement will be successful. But do you know whence the fad for crushing things together in our rooms came? From royalty itself. The drawing-room of the Princess of Wales, at Sandringham, looks like a magnificent auction room. The two great rooms are separated by a curtained doorway. The drapery is dark and very heavy plush. All the woodwork, walls, etc., are painted light. A fireplace and mantel, surmounted by a great mirror, is at the end of the larger room. The folding doors from the hall are at the side and flanked by pier glasses. All the mirrors are bracketed with candles. There is a grand piano with fringed cover. An enormous basket of growing palms is in the middle of the room, and over in a corner some great plumes of feathery dried grass—like what we see here dyed pink and blue—are set up high. There are dozens of tables of all kinds except solid kinds. They are all laden with bric-a-brac of the most perishable sort. There are quantities of chairs upholstered in all materials and all styles.

A CALLER.

There is a divan phenomenally broad, and even then jammed with pillows, which are magnificently covered, usually with velvet on one side and damask or silk on the other. Vases crowded with flowers are everywhere. The walls are all panelled and no pictures are hung. Several screens are spread, however, and on the leaves pictures are mounted, which is rather a good idea. The pictures are thus brought within easy inspection range. An exquisite marble group is in the center of the smaller room, representing a young mother with a child climbing about her knee. She is nude to the waist. The pedestal is velvet-covered, and surrounded by blooming plants. A cross corner of this room is a desk table; it is littered with dainty writing tools and somewhat crowded with framed pictures and a three-leaved screen set with a lot of family cabinet photographs. The table is lighted by four candles, each with a dainty shade, and placed here and there on the table. In the corner back of the table is an enormous paragon. The rooms are lighted by candles. The floors are inlaid wood, and are strewn with rugs. Things are so arranged that little pathways lead in and out about the furniture, but it would never do to get lost in the Princess' drawing-rooms at night. Come to think of it, maybe the rooms are all different now. They were as I have described a year ago when I was in London. Possibly their being cleared out is what has started the movement of our bric-a-brac in this country.

The last picture gives a promenade costume capable of serving as a skating dress. As drawn here, it is an armoured serge of a gayish green shade, trimmed with velvet of the same color and with gray feather trimming or fur. The skirt is cut as usual on the bias, but is trimmed with a band of velvet edge by a narrow band of feathered trimming. This bias is lined with muslin, hem stitched onto the skirt and sewed on together with the feather trimming. The upper part of the skirt has the darts necessary to make it set well on the hips. These darts are very carefully sewed and pressed, in order to make them invisible. At the back the dress falls in folds. The bodice, which is joined to the cape, descends some inches below the waist and the front breadth of it is lined. The yoke is of velvet edge with feather trimming, to which is adapted the fold that crosses the yoke. This fold can be cut or made in a different shade. It gradually diminishes as far as the back, where it entirely disappears under the cape. The vest is perfectly straight, is fashioned on muslin, without darts and lined with silk. In cutting the cape, as it is somewhat difficult, it would be better to try it in any worthless material first, so that there will be no danger of spoiling the fabric. It is cut of a single piece. The pleated sleeves are sewed onto the armholes of the waist and trimmed with a band of velvet. The cape may be wadded and lined with silk.

Copyright, 1892.

FARADAY's father was a blacksmith, and disapproved of his son's experiments with chemicals.

The National Women's Alliance Incorporated.

A charter for the National Woman's Alliance was filed with the Secretary of State September 24, 1901. The incorporators are the wife of Senator Peffer, the wife of Congressman Otis, the wife of Secretary J. B. French, of the State Farmers' Alliance, Mrs. Emma D. Pack, editor of the Topeka Farmer's Wife, and Mrs. Fannie McCormick, worthy foreman of the Knights of Labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION IS TO ESTABLISH A BUREAU FOR THE BETTER EDUCATION OF WOMEN ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS AND TO DEVELOP A BETTER STATE, MORALLY, FINANCIALLY, WITH THE FULL AND UNCONDITIONAL USE OF THE SUFFRAGE.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Fannie McCormick, president; Mrs. Emma D. Pack, secretary; and Mrs. H. A. Otis, treasurer, with the following vice presidents:

- Mrs. M. B. Jend, of Alabama.
- Emma Ghent Curtis, Colorado.
- Annetta Nye, California.
- Marion Todd, Illinois.
- Anabella McCann, Kentucky.
- P. A. Stafford, Missouri.
- Eva McDonald Valosh, Minnesota.
- S. E. V. Emery, Michigan.
- Elizabeth Rodgers, New Jersey.
- Annie D. Weaver, New York.
- L. D. Stillson, Arkansas.
- Alice J. Taylor, Mississippi.
- Mary M. Clardy, Texas.
- Anna L. Dugas, District of Columbia.
- D. E. Pierce, Washington.
- Mary E. Leese, Kansas.
- E. M. Ward, South Dakota.
- Eleanor Goodrich, Iowa.
- Mary L. Jeffs, Ohio.
- Mame C. Bonham, Indiana.

The Farmer's Wife, published at Topeka, was designated as the official organ. The committee on constitution and by-laws report the following:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

In view of the great social, industrial and financial revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the universal demand of all classes of our American citizens for equal rights and privileges in every department of human life, we, the industrial women of America, declare our purposes in the formation of this organization as follows, viz:

- 1st. To study all questions relating to the structure of human society, in the full light of modern invention, discovery and thought.
- 2d. To carry out into practical life the precepts of the golden rule.
- 3d. To recognize the full political equality of the sexes.
- 4th. To aid in carrying out the principle of co-operation in every department of human life to its fullest extent.
- 5th. To secure the utmost harmony and unity among the sisterhood, in all sections of the country.
- 6th. To teach the principles of international arbitration and, if possible, to prevent war.
- 7th. To discourage in every way possible the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or the habitual use of tobacco or other narcotics injurious to the human system.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Women's Alliance.

Sec. 2. The officers shall consist of a President, Secretary and Treasurer, also one Vice President from each state and territory represented, and an Executive Board of five.

Sec. 3. Officers shall be elected at the regular annual meeting in each year.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the organization.

Sec. 5. In the absence of the President, one of the Vice Presidents may preside, as the meeting may select. Each Vice President shall have charge of the work in her state until a state organization is perfected, and shall act as the general organizer of her state and report the progress of the work to the National Secretary every month.

Sec. 6. The Secretary shall keep a correct record of the proceedings of the Alliance, conduct the correspondence, keep the official seal and authentic all documents, receive all moneys and turn the same over to the Treasurer and take a receipt therefor.

Sec. 7. The Treasurer is to receipt for all moneys and pay the same out upon the order of the President, countersigned by the Secretary.

ARTICLE II.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. A state organization shall be chartered by the National President whenever seven local organizations are formed, in compliance with the National constitution.

Sec. 2. Each community shall be organized under the direction of the State Organizer, whenever ten members are enrolled.

Sec. 3. That each community shall have a representation in the state organization of one delegate for every twenty members or fraction thereof in excess of ten, provided each organization shall be entitled to one delegate.

Sec. 4. That each state organization shall be entitled to one delegate to the National Alliance for every 100 members in the state or fraction in excess of fifty.

STATUTORY LAWS.

SECTION 1. Any woman desiring to advance the social, moral, intellectual and financial condition of her race, can become a member of this Alliance by signing this constitution and declaration of purposes, and paying the fee of 30 cents and a monthly dues of 5 cents to the secretary of her local assembly.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the local organization to send to the secretary of the state organization the sum of 15 cents for each member enrolled, and 5 cents each quarter out of dues paid in by each member during the quarter.

Sec. 3. That the secretary of the State organization shall send to the secretary of the national organization the sum of 5 cents out of membership fees received during the quarter, and one-half of all dues paid into the State secretary during the quarter.

Sec. 4. That all charters shall be issued from the National Alliance. State charters shall be furnished at $5.00 and local charters at $1.00.

Sec. 5. This constitution and by-laws can be amended at any time by a majority vote of the National Women's Alliance at any regular annual meeting.

Committee. (Mrs. M. E. LEASE, President; Mrs. H. A. OTIS, Secretary; Mrs. M. C. CLARK, Treasurer.)

The incorporators are the executive board for the first year.

Mrs. FANNIE MCCORMICK, Pres't.

Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, Sec'y.

Woman's Chronicle.

Published every Saturday.

MRS. KATE CUNNINGHAM, Editor.

MRS. MARY BROOKS, Associate Editor.

TERMS, $1.00 per Year, IN ADVANCE.

Cor. 2nd and Louisiana Sts., Little Rock, Ark.

JOHN SPEAR,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

5 AND 10 CENT GOODS.

538 Kansas Avenue,

NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SILK DRESS FREE!

We will GIVE AWAY absolutely

FREE of cost, an elegant black or colored SILK DRESS pattern of 16 yards to any young lady in every town in America who is willing to introduce among her friends "THE MOD-ERN QUEEN," a large 16-page

61 column, illustrated magazine, one of the best published. Directed to Fiction, Fashions, flowers,

Fancy, Wo L. Home Decorations and every thing pertaining to the household. Sent at once

25 cents for the magazine one year on trial and a package of elegant silks to select from.

Address, THE MODERN QUEEN CO.

1750 Center Street, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mention this paper.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes. Medici Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enameled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each we will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE,

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1000 pages, nonparel type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla bin for price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, Toronto.

"A vast amount of trust, ordinary matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manilla binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has

320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers; Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Cakes and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1.

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is an ultra-fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

SEEDS J. G. PEPPARD, 1400-1402 UNION AV., MILLET A SPECIALTY. Red, White, Alfalfa and Alsike Clovers, Timothy, Blue Grass, Orchard Grass, Red Top, Onion Sets, Tree Seeds, Cane Seed. KANSAS CITY, MO.

DOBBINS'

ELECTRIC SOAP,

Is for sale everywhere, and has since 1869 been Acknowledged by all to be

THE BEST FAMILY SOAP IN THE WORLD.

Its quality has never been changed since we first made it. We ask every woman using it to save all the OUTSIDE WRAPPERS, and donate them to her favorite Religious or Charitable Institution, NO MATTER WHAT DENOMINATION, anywhere in the United States, as we have promised to pay these institutions cash, for all the OUTSIDE WRAPPERS of our soap, they will collect and send to us. This will give needed financial assistance to worthy charities, at no expense to you. We thus propose to thus donate, at least One Hundred Thousand Dollars a year. Among hundreds of worthy institutions, are all the "Little Sisters of the Poor," Orphan Asylums, Sisters of Charity, Hospitals, Woman's Relief Corps, G. A. R. or S. of V., Soldiers' Homes, King's Daughters' Circles, Women's Christian Temperance Unions, etc.

The housekeeper will find on trial, ACCORDING TO DIRECTIONS, the washing does not require

HALF THE QUANTITY OF DOBBINS' ELECTRIC SOAP

that it does of ANY OTHER; that there is a great saving of time and labor in its use; that it saves the wear and tear of the clothes on the wash-board, and does not cut or rot them to pieces, or hurt the hands, as adulterated soaps do.

It Disinfects Clothes Washed with it, leaving them thoroughly cleaned and sweet, instead of adding a foul odor of rosin and filthy grease. It washes flannels WITHOUT SHRINKING, leaving them soft and nice.

Respectfully,

I. L. CRAGIN & CO.,

CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA,

NEW YORK AND BOSTON.

EVERY Family Student School Library

S-H-O-U-L-D Own a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

THE INTERNATIONAL, NEW FROM COVER TO COVER, IS THE ONE TO BUY.

SUCCESSOR OF THE UNABRIDGED. Ten years spent in revising, 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended. Sold by all Booksellers.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions.

Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and full particulars.

FAMILY LEDGER

MODERN STORIES OF WESTERN LIFE AND ADVENTURE

10 WEEKS 10 CENTS

THE GREAT WESTERN FAMILY STORY PAPER

LARGER YET SIMILAR IN STYLE TO THE "300 A YEAR" NEW YORK STORY PAPER

ADDRESS: MAIN OFFICE, FAMILY LEDGER, STOCKTON, CALIF.

OFFER GOOD ONLY WHEN MENTIONED IN THIS PUBLICATION

FARM FUN

THE GREAT Cartoon Journal FOR THE THIRD PARTY, will be sent to any address for the Remainder of this Year, with a premium Alliance Songster on Trial for 15c.

FARM FUN is the only illustrated satirical publication in the world on the Farmer's side. It is the sworn enemy of Fack, Judge, and other illustrated Plutocratic papers. Has sixteen pages full of illustrations. You will like it, and your whole family. Take advantage of this special offer, and send 15c. in stamps. Address FARM FUN PUB. CO., CINCINNATI, O.

500 PARCELS OF MAIL FREE

Including Sample Books, Novels, Pictures, Magazines, Letters, Papers, etc., each with your address boldly printed on each wrapper. You will receive more choice reading and beautiful mail of any one at your town. We will also insert your address for twelve months in our Guaranteed Directory, that goes with every copy of our publications, and 500 of your body printed and guaranteed addresses, in two colors, for your personal use to stick on your letters, books, etc., also Lum Smith's 16-page HAROLD, 12 months (regular price 50 cents). All free and postpaid to you. Send your address today on a postal to GUMMED ADDRESS CO., 120 S. 3th St., Phila., Pa.

"TRUE" NATIONALIST.

Progressive, Fearless and Spicy.

SUBSCRIPTION, - $1.00 PER YEAR.

Advocates the Initiative, the Referendum and the Imperative Mandate as the best means of progress on the lines of human liberty. Commends its principles to MEN of all political parties. Corner Beaver and Pearl Streets, New York City.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper? Do you wish to know what the eastern women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the I-omanists? Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work? Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

Eliza Trask Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 8, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

FARMER'S WIFE.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY & FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, DECEMBER, 1892.

NINTH YEAR. VOL. 11, NO. 5.

MRS. LEASE ENDORSED

By Men and Women All Over Our Land,
FROM EVERY VOCATION IN LIFE.

No Man or Woman Ever Received Greater Compliments.

HUNDREDS OF LETTERS RECEIVED

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, and From the Lakes to the Gulf.—We Publish but a Few Extracts From Noted Women.

It is with pleasure that we publish the few extracts of the many letters received by Mrs. Lease. Although she has not announced herself as a candidate for the office of United States senator, we believe that if the office should be offered her unanimately she would accept; and should she be elected to this honored office, to which no woman has heretofore aspired, we believe she will fill the office so well that men and women of every political faith will ever be proud.

What Mrs. Lease says: "It is wonderful the number of letters I have received from women lawyers. They come from all parts of the country, but I have stacks and stacks of letters from all classes of women. Those I think the most of and appreciate most are the letters from the hired girls, the servant girls of the country who have to work from early morning till late at night. It shows the women of our land are thinking while they work.

MRS. MARY E. LEASE.

The only woman ever mentioned for United States Senator.

To you I send a sisterly greeting. May you have courage and strength in your efforts and that you may inscribe the word "triumphant" or "victory" upon your banner in letters, that like our stars and stripes, will never grow dim, is the wish of a far away friend.—Marie D. Corsey, 309 Douglas St., Syracuse, New York.

I cannot let this chance pass, but must congratulate you on your victory in the late election. I live off here in this neck of the woods, and yet I watch the work of our women with such anxiety. I consider your candidacy the greatest boom to the cause that has ever occurred, for it brings this subject to a point of law. I wish you the greatest success.—Helen M. Dickens, Ontonagon, Mich.

Many of us are directing our thoughts toward you, and hoping that you are the Moses to lead us out of bondage. I wish to say to you, "Stand firm, John Brown." Thousands of women are hoping for you and thousands will yet call you blessed for the work you are doing for your sister women.—Sarah E. Sanford, Pres. W. E. S. A., Oakland, Cal.

Believing that you were one of the most effective speakers in the last campaign, I request you to allow your friends to support you for the office of U. S. senator.—Miss Sadie Johnson, Chamberlain, S. Dakota.

Will you permit me as a representative of the great mass of American women, unknown to fame, whose lives are given over to domestic and social duties, to whom an "arrest of thought" has come, and whose awakened intelligence feebly struggles with the questions of the hour, will you permit me to urge your candidacy for the office of U. S. senator, believing that the cause of woman suffrage would be greatly benefited by your election to this office, and your discharge of its duties with the ability and energy which you would unquestionably bring to the position.—Helen B. Randolph, Lincoln, Ill.

I sincerely hope to see you our honored representative in the senate. God bless the few hearts of oak we have there now! And we think you would prove a living epistle from the people to that body.—Mrs. D. I. Furbeck, Topeka, Kan.

Be strong, be of good courage. My excuse in addressing you is this, because you are a woman and I am a woman wishing you success in the race for senator and in your efforts to do right as God gives you to see the right.—Mrs. Emorest Smith, Breedsville, Mich.

I see you are spoken of as a candidate for the United States senate. Let me say I think you are the one for the place and I wish you good luck. If we only had a few more women like you it would be a God send. I hope to live to see the women in the lead, they have been in the background long enough. I am a third party woman all over; my husband is the founder of the third party in this county.—Mrs. John D. Wilson, Lagartia, Colo.

Being absorbed with "little duties," it has but recently been borne in upon me that the report of your candidacy for U. S. senatorship was something serious. From my heart I hope you may succeed. But whether successful or not, all the same you are making smooth the path for the oncoming feet of America's great army of women. May health and strength and peace be with you.—Mary J. Coggeshall, Chairman Ex. Com., Des Moines, Ia.

I hope with all my heart that you will be elected the first woman senator in the world. I have said for years I would never visit Washington until I could see a woman president or senator, and perhaps I shall yet have the pleasure of making my word good, for if you are elected I shall surely go to see you take your seat, and I think your joy will scarcely equal mine on that day.—Abel B. Marston, Wichita, Kansas.

I am not going to agolize for writing you, for having read your speeches and two different times gone twenty-five miles to hear and meet you, I feel justified in writing. What I want say to you is this: I, for one, bid you God speed, and after our recent victory in Wyoming in electing a woman to such a position as we did, I feel wonderfully encouraged. There is no woman worthy the name of woman who is not proud of Mary E. Lease. Yours for the Right.—Adelaide Ballard, Hull, Sioux Co., Iowa.

To-day for the first time I became aware of your candidacy for the position of senator from Kansas. I hasten to send my best wishes for your success and to wish you God speed. You have done more for the advancement of woman than any of the so-called "reformers," and the increasing class of women who believe in the advancement of womankind are glad that you have given your talents to advance the rights of women.—Viola Kaufman, Lomax, Neb.

Even though you may be defeated you ought to receive laurels from people from all parts of the Union in that you are the first and only woman whose name has ever been mentioned as a candidate for so important a position and particularly will the people of Kansas shower praises upon you and be justly proud that their state is the first to produce a woman sufficiently strong in character and independent in principle to make a decided stand that may lead to great possibilities for the women of America. Allow me to wish you unbounded success. Vive la Republique et Madame Lease!—Bessie Bluns, Detroit, Mich.

You are growing stronger than your enemies and I hope you will not be scared out of the field by their malicious tongues. I know how many things you have had to hurt you recently, but the fact that the public is finding out your ability ought to comfort you; and you are doing so much for your own sex. I feel that your candidacy for the senate has been a liberal education for the men all over the country. Even the New York Tribune discussed it respectfully in an editorial. With much love, I bid you goodbye and God speed.—Mary M. Ford, Kansas City, Mo.

I have watched your unflinching courage, your fearless espousal of the right under the fire of the most unscrupulous band of enemies that ever threatened a nation, and have rejoiced in your ability to stand. You have forever routed the ancient idea that woman is the weaker vessel. I congratulate you and am proud of you, as all women should be as well as all good men. I hope you will decide to make a determined stand for the senate. I am sure there is no constitutional objections.—Helen M. Gougar, La Fayette, Ind.

I believe that I voice the sincere sentiment of a large majority of the members of the People's party east of the Alleghenies, when I say that I hope that the legislature of the state of Kansas will do itself the honor, and afford the people of Kansas the opportunity to enjoy your distinguished services, by selecting you as senator from that state.

Not only would it be a service to there destroy the unwholesome supposition that a woman is not a citizen, but it would renew the confidence of the people in the progressive character of the People's party of the state of Kansas.—Alfred S. Houghton, Boston, Mass., chairman People's party central committee, Eastern Division.

At the meeting of the Equal Suffrage association held in Beloit, Kansas, Nov. 20th, it was decided that in token of our grateful remembrance of you as a suffragist that we as a body send you our congratulations in honor of your position and good will for the good of women, and your prospect of becoming United States senator.

We are expecting much to be done for us during the winter, and we pray God that your mind may ever be kept in a pure, unbiased channel and that you may be continually led by the all-wise creator; and that every position you may occupy either politically or socially, your influence may be felt for God, and home, and native land.—Mrs. I. McDowell, Sec. pro-tem; Mrs. Dr. Labdell, president.

We are proud of you, glad of you, and recognize that your work is helping the cause nearest to us, better perhaps than any direct work can do.

We hope (irrespective of party) that you may be made senator from Kansas and we believe you would add dignity and worth to that august assemblage. I am secretary of the Woman's Club in this place, which has been in existence ten years and has a large membership; but I did not wait to consult them before writing, since I have heard at club so many commendations of the work you were doing. We rejoice in the worth and ability of each woman and believe for each true worker, real success.—C. V. Loomis Layton, Richland Center, Wis.

Will you kindly accept the congratulations and good wishes for your success from an old woman, who is one of the earliest advocates of woman's rights in this state. Young women rarely realize the importance of this movement in your state. When by necessity compelled to make an honest living they soon find how little chivalry there is in competition with men; besides they lack courage and independence, through long oppression. I sincerely hope that you will be elected, and have no doubt that the presence of one woman will be the beginning of a new era and the means of keeping an eye on all of the inconsistencies in high places.—Mary Drinkhouse, San Francisco, Cal.

God grant that the legislature may realize the opportunity which is theirs to immortalize themselves and their state by simply an act of righteousness. The first time I met Jerry Simpson, he told me that you had done more to down Ingalls than any one person and would, no doubt, if eligible, be elected senator. I see nothing whatever in the constitution to exclude a woman, if the law recognizes her as a citizen. I shall watch the result most anxiously and my hopes and best wishes will be with you every day and hour. The people of our state who heard you, quote you as an oracle of wisdom and eloquence.—Elizabeth M. Wardall, South Dakota, E. S. A.

I do not remember your initials, but there is but one Mrs. Lease. I have just finished writing to Gen. Weaver, and I want to thank you, now that the battle is over, for the noble effort you made in the interest of the People—For Reform.

Colorado and the west have spoken in no uncertain sounds, and there will be no going backward. I was talking with B. Clarke Wheeler and Stewart last night about you and your party. Wheeler got to the state senate and Gov. Waite out did them all. You and your party will ever be remembered in Aspen, (the banner city). I cannot close without expressing the wish and hope that we shall have one fearless woman in the senate of the United States! Let us try, anyway.—F. A. Hunt, Chairman Weaver Reception committee.

I am heart and soul in four race for the senatorship and hope the men may have the courage and manhood to elect you. No one doubts your ability. I do most heartily wish I could be in Topeka and aid you. Oh! it would be a grand victory to send a woman, and one who has withstood such persecution—but are the hearts of men big enough? The trouble I see confronting you is the desire of the men for the place themselves. You are deserving of the highest honors the People's party could bestow; but in history, alas, it is too true that those who have done the most for the people have been martyrs. May the good spirits guide and keep you and justly reward you.—Fanny R. Vicksey, Kansas City, Mo.

The American woman—the thinking ones—in public and private life, all wish you success. The purifying influence of woman has never been questioned from our first mother Eve down to the present time. In the great tribunals of our Nation a woman of generous heart, big brain and broad ideas, will add and can do more to demonstrate practically woman's equality, to say and judge and do in the affairs, public and private, that go to make up the sum of this life, than a million theories proved at long range. The male mind has been covered so long with a panoply of self assertion and self esteem, he is almost as impenetrable to the failures of the rights and privileges of women, as the far famed Achilles.—Lillian Lewis in "Lady Lil."

Allow me to offer to you my warmest congratulations that you have succeeded in forcing the acknowledgement of your ability for, and your right to, the office of United States senator, if the people choose to demand your election to that office. It argues well for the cause of equal suffrage that you have been prominently named for the senatorship, even if it does not materialize as yet. The world is surely moving our way and I have faith to believe that the enfranchisement of woman is not a thing of the distant future, but that the twentieth century, at its dawning, will see woman in her true place, the acknowledged equal of man from a legal point of view. Again I send to you my warmest congratulations and a God speed.—E. B. Kendrick, State Superintendent Bureau Demorest Medal Contest.

It is with great pleasure that I read the announcement of your name as candidate for United States senator.

May God speed the right and put it in the hearts of the Kansas legislature to elect you to that important position. It would be the greatest victory of the century. Every man's responsibility taken by women is one more plea for an enfranchised womanhood.

With a woman in the U. S. senate, whose fitness for that position is acknowledged, even by her opponents, surely the good time longed for by every one interested in the cause of humanity, is not far distant.

May success crown your efforts and give us a little of the mother element in the U. S. senate.—Maria A. Fowler, Sec. and Treas. of the Wis. W. I. A.

Thanksgiving day is full of meaning this time. We have much to be thankful for, but most of all for the gift of your noble self to the cause of political reform. On my own behalf I thank you for your heroic example. I hope that you will be elected to the position of United States senator from Kansas, and thus establish a precedent that shall be a beacon light to lead the women of this country out from the degradation of political servitude. I am deeply interested in the grand cause so valiantly and ably espoused by you, and that other hero, General Weaver, and watch with keen interest the onslaught of truth, and the upheaval of the totting old political hulks, which alas, have no further honest excuse for existence this side of oblivion. Their gods are all dead, or they have joined the People's party, which four years hence will relieve the pretenders of further masquerade.—Clara Foltz, Attorney at Law, San Francisco, Cal.

Though I am to you unknown, yet your name to me is "familiar as household words" and is known and honored by every justice loving woman in our country. I write entreating you, if there is a possibility of your election to the U. S. senate, to honor that body as a member, by your honesty, wisdom and eloquence. I want to see you there, not only for what you could and would do for the general well-being of the nation, but, especially as a measure toward the advancement of our sex. A woman as a U. S. senator, and the peer in ability of any other senator would be a mighty step forward for one half of our citizens, the women of our nation. In begging you to accept the office, I believe I voice the sentiment of every intelligent woman suffragist in Connecticut.—Emily P. Collins, Nationalist and Honorary Pres. of Hartford Equal Rights Club, Hartford, Conn.

I have been very much interested in your anticipated prospects of a seat in our U. S. senate. That one of my own sex should be thus qualified to fill such a responsible position, and that she is the choice of a grateful people, is indeed to me, and should be to every woman of our land, a source of pleasure and reason for pride. I take this opportunity, therefore, of congratulating you, and trust that you may be successful in your work and a credit and an honor to the cause you represent and American womanhood whose eyes will be upon you, and that your work and every deed may be governed by the strictest principles of justice and purity, and that you may not only enjoy this honored position in the senate of the U. S. of America, but be found worthy of a higher and more exalted position in the Kingdom of God, soon to come, when His will is done on earth as it is done in Heaven. And ever in my work of winning men and women to Christ, will pray God's richest blessing upon you and yours.—Mrs. M. E. Grove, Plum, Venango Co., Penn.

I have been unanimously authorized by the Political Equality club of this city, to convey to you our earnest congratulations upon your prospective election to the United States senate. Great will be our encouragement and extreme our satisfaction when the prejudices of men and of women shall have become so nearly obliterated as to make the election of a woman to any office of honor, possible. The women of our club believe in social, financial and political equality, and that the restrictive clause, "because she is a woman," has no excuse for an existence. We implore for you all the graces and qualities of the mind and heart which shall make you the pride of the women of America, and we add our rejoicing that a woman has even been seriously spoken of as United States senator, for we believe it has given us a great lift in the direction of our political freedom—Bertha Washburn Howe, Corresponding Secretary, 95 Corydon St., Bradford, Pa.

Let me assure you, dear Mrs. Lease, that the women of Wisconsin are with you heart and soul. We have watched your course with admiration and pride and are praying without ceasing that the hearts of the men of the Kansas legislature may be inspired with a proper sense of justice and such courage that they will choose you to represent them in our National congress. Should they do so, it would be the greatest step yet taken for woman, it would place Kansas at the head, on the roll of honor among the states and it would be an assurance to the whole nation that your party is in deed and in truth a party of progress, the party to which women may look for their emancipation. It is needless to add that such assurance would secure to the party ultimate and early victory. In behalf of the Federal Suffrage association, which I have the honor to represent, and of the Wisconsin Woman's Suffrage association, I wish you God speed in your candidacy and I pray that you may be permitted to defend the principles of human liberty in the senate of the United States.—Ozola Brown, Federal Suffrage association.

I write to tell you how earnestly a body of women endorsed the mention of your name for U. S. senator from Kansas. This was at a meeting of the state executive committee of the Connecticut Women Suffrage association and Society for the study of Political science. Would that this expression of their feeling might secure to you a position that would thus be so adequately filled!

I wish also to send to you my own earnest desire for your success in this direction for two reasons:

1st. As a woman who believes that women, as well as men, should be directly interested in the government under which they live, to whose laws they are amenable and which they are taxed to support.

2nd. Because I believe that the People's party is truly the party of the people and, so believing, all my hopes for better government and better conditions for the men and women of our country, centers into a determination to aid toward its success.—Sara Winthrop Smith, member ex-committee Connecticut Women Suffrage association and society for the study of Political Science, and member for Connecticut, ex-committee National American A. S. A.

Another notable event of this surprising year is the consideration of the election of a woman to the office of United States senator. It is clear that no constitutional objection can be raised. The woman who is talked of all over the United States for this office is better equipped for the duties thereof than is the average senator. Her deserts at the hands of her party were unquestioned. Her forcefulness, her scathing eloquence have been mighty factors in the People's party success. It is believed by many that no other individual has been equally useful to that organization. Mrs. Lease towers head and shoulder above her comrades and will stand out in history as a factor more potent, a figure more striking than any other of the period of the new political movement.—Laura M. Johns, president Kansas E. S. A., in her annual address.

Please accept sincere congratulations for your wonderful achievements and success in a state where woman comes to the front as she should. Your hard won laurels will wield an influence which will be felt around the world, whose power is not easily estimated. Your success challenges the admiration of unnumbered thousands, from ocean to ocean, and "thrice hail!" say we to the one woman who has braved so much. May you
(Continued on fourth page.)

The Farmer's Wife.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Ed.
TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE LADIES' CORNER.

MEN ARE NOT EXPECTED TO READ THIS COLUMN.

The Mean Man — The Artificial Jolly Girl Is an Unsatisfactory Article — "Go Bury Thy Sorrow" — A Few Hints Upon Deportment.

The Revolt of Mother.

HE being known to fame and his friends as the "mean man" was on a train going out of Jersey City the other afternoon. So was that depressed individual, the mean man's wife. And there was also the loud-voiced vender of comic periodicals, "all the latest novels," and other valuable literature. This last-mentioned person made his way through the car, scattering his gifts right and left with the lavish hand for which he is noted, and to the mean man there fell a comic weekly. He was able, says the New York World, by diligent reading, to get through most of the jokes before the return of the newsboy. He read the last page while the newsboy waited and then politely returned it. Meantime the down-trodden wife gazed wistfully at the gay sheet, but that was a matter of no importance to her lord and master. He folded it and handed it back. Suddenly a gleam of determination came into the eyes of the lady, and she beckoned the disgruntled caterer to the traveling public's intellectual wants.

"I'll have that paper," she remarked, clearly, while thunder clouds of wrath gathered on the mean man's brow.

Then, as she settled herself to its perusal, she added, with an attempt at carelessness.

"Have you 10 cents, Samuel? I haven't."

Samuel produced the coin in ominous silence, and they rode on. And the men who saw applauded "the revolt of mother," but the women whispered: "Oh! Won't she have to pay for that when they get home."

Woman, the Inventor.

One of the purposes of the woman's share in the Columbian Fair, and perhaps not the least important, is that the exhibits shall demonstrate that women have had through the ages greater originality and inventiveness than they have been accredited with. Among the primitive pupils women were the originators. It is claimed, of industrial arts, and it was only after they became lucrative that men usurped them. Women devised the earring and dressing of game, and the fashioning of the skins of animals into garments. Woman invented the needle, the shuttle, the weaving of textiles. She was the first potter, and she originated basket making. There will be shown, as illustration of the influence of women during the medieval times a copy of the old Bayeux tapestry made by Matilda of Flanders and her maidens, which is the best and most authentic history of the conquest of England by her husband, William the Conqueror; reproductions of the statues of Salina von Steinbach, daughter and assistant of the architect of Strasburg Cathedral; to her is ascribed the change from the stiff medieval angles to the graceful flowing lines that followed; and of the remarkable book prepared in the twelfth century by the abbess of Herrat, which contained a compendium of all the knowledge of the day, illustrated by illuminations, and considered by many to be the origin of the modern encyclopaedia. There will be records, too, of the women who were professors in the early Italian universities, and many other things of interest illustrative of woman's early prowess, and proving that the present uprising in the ranks is only the natural force of the stream seeking its level, and not at all a new departure.

To Be Cheerful Is a Duty.

A lady writes: Are we not all inclined to make too much of our own sorrows? A mother and father who have, perhaps, lost those who were dearest to them—those, among their children, in whom they took the greatest pride and comfort, and can hardly realize that they have much left—are such as these justified in keeping a darkened house and wearing upon their faces a look of unutterable woe? Should they not rather put aside their own feelings, and in the midst of their family, make life as bright and happy as possible? Is it not a positive duty to do this? Who can tell how many more years, or even months, they will spend together? And how very selfish to keep them buried in grief because our own hearts are sore. The young, especially children, need sunshine and brightness as much as fresh air and food, and when I see a darkened house and gloomy faces forced upon their little lives for months, I know it is all wrong and the older members are only courting a still greater sorrow, for the lesson intended to be taught has not yet been learned. God never intended children to mourn, and we are certainly not right in forcing them to do so. We cannot forget, but we can train ourselves to speak of the loved ones who are gone, and thus keep their dear names ever fresh in our memories.—Baltimore News.

The Jolly Girl.

"The jolly girl is born, not made. No training can counterfeit her. There are those, to be sure, who affect jollity, but it is only skin-deep. The jolly girl is jolly under adverse circumstances, in bad weather, when she hasn't a cent to her name, when she has the toothache, when she has lost her situation, when she breaks her needle, when her back hair tumbles down in public, when she is shopping, when her masculine neighbor at the theater goes out, and when he returns, when her bills are due. She never seems to indulge in that feminine luxury 'the blues,' and it is a mistake to suppose that she is noisy; there is jollity of the lady-like, aristocratic sort, as well as of the fish-wife order. One is never dull with her. She has that infinite variety which all the world covets and loves. Possibly it is no special virtue in the jolly girl, any more than blue eyes in the blonde maiden or red hair in the Titianesque. Jollity flows from her presence just as the nightingale's fluting bubbles from his throat and enchants the world, just as the poet pours forth his song 'in profuse strains of unpremeditated art,' just as the tree blossoms, the grasses sprout, the stars shine without effort, without design, with sincerity, and constancy, and spontaneity. Let her be shipwrecked or an invalid stranded on a bed of pain, yet she does not lose or abate that peculiar trait which makes sunshine for those about her and sweeps the cobwebs out of their sky."

The Art of Good Manners.

Cultivate dress as a fine art, for minute attention to personal adornment and elegance of toilet is the duty of every man or woman in civilized society. It is the outward show that enables the world to judge of us personally, our character, refinement, and condition, of the station in life in which we are thrown. It is a duty we owe to our family, our friends, and the world at large. It is the passport to good breeding and the support of fine manners.

Never eat bonbons or confections of any kind on the street, or vehicles or in public places. Munching sweets is considered by all refined and intelligent persons as ill-bred and provincial. Study repose of manner. Swinging of arms, humming of tunes, frequent contortions of the face, and restlessness of feet and hands are not only very trying to your family, but they are a source of irritation and annoyances to others.

Never discuss yourself, your servants, or domestic affairs. In polite circles conversation is of a nature so general that continual talking of one's self is considered ill-bred and vulgar.

Never interrupt conversation at any time or in any place. A good listener is a great boon to mankind. There is a code of rules which is the result of all these social observances. A sentence, an incident, an opinion expressed should be given without interruption.—Harper's Bazar.

Woman's Work and Aims.

Miss LAWSON, a young sculptor of Cincinnati, Ohio, has sold her statue, "The Mermaid," for $6,000.

The Baroness Burdett-Coutts still takes a keen and active interest in philanthropic subjects despite her advancing years.

MISS ELIZABETH DEERING HANSCOM is among the first women to enter Yale's open door. She is going to study for the Ph. D. degree.

TWENTY-NINE students have registered in the women's department of Brown University. Nine are sophomores, fifteen are freshmen and five are special.

OLIVE THORNE MILLER, the authoress, knows as much about ornithology as a professor. She devotes six months of every year to the study of birds and bird life.

MISS HARRIET MONROE, author of the ode to be read at the dedication of the World's Fair, for which she has been awarded $1,000, is described as having a beautiful oval face, crowned by a mass of brown hair. She has lived with her parents in Chicago all her life, except two years spent in a Georgetown convent. Her literary work extends back to her school days.

MADAME ALPHONSE DAUDET is a writer of talent, and has frequently assisted her husband in his work. When Daudet fell dangerously ill as he was writing "Les Rois en Exil," he commissioned his wife, in case of his death, to finish his book. Her style is refined, artistic and characterized by most delicate precision and charm, and her books are faithful interpretations of Parisian home life, with most charming chapters on childhood.

HANDSOME HEADGEAR.

STYLISH MILLINERY FOR THE EARLY WINTER.

Nothing is More Unbecoming than a "Misfit" Bonnet—Of All Traitorous Accessories, Gloves Are the Worst—Hairdressing Styles Changing.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondence.

MILLINERY for the early winter is variously novel and beautiful. This initial hat, with a velvet crown, is suitable for a little girl. The brim is white felt, and the crown may be black, blue or orange velvet. Running around it is a white silk cord, which forms ornaments on one side, holding three white quills, the tops of which are shaded to the color of the velvet. The bonnet in the second picture has a raised border, trimmed with six roses placed at equal distance from each other, and the front is ornamented by a butterfly bow of lace, from which a jet aigrette starts. The strings are of narrow velvet. The third bonnet is composed of black velvet and jet, with almond-green and old-rose reversible ribbon. It makes a really charming setting to a youthful face. It has a mixed jet and straw border, and is trimmed with a bow of the almond-green and old-gold or rose color reversible ribbon. There are, also, black jetted lace pompons. Black veils are being worn as much as ever, with hats as well as bonnets. Light, fine nets with tiny chenille knots are most in favor, though some are still seen with heavy spots and a kind of border, which is not becoming to any face. By the way, if you are not a girl, but a grown woman well started toward matronliness, permit me to advise you to have your bonnets large enough. There is nothing more unbecoming than a bonnet too small for its wearer, or one which persists in being relegated to the back of the head. Jet or steel coronals are too hard to suit sweet matronly faces. A fold of yielding velvet or a quilling of lace or good ribbon is better. Such a bordering forms a worthy frame to the face. If you want particularly to have a jet rim, blend it with gold, if you are a brunette, and it will prove a satisfactory combination.

A LOVE OF A BONNET.

Of all traitorous accessories a woman's gloves are the worst. You simply cannot trust them. Better start out in a hurry and trust to "fixing your hat as you go" than to trust to "putting on your gloves" the same way. In the first place, though you selected your gloves with due care, when you get half way on your journey and have come to the other glove, you will find you have taken both for the same hand. You may know positively that you started with a pair, but when it comes to putting on the second glove you will find you had two lefts. It would have been better to have had two rights. Then, at least, your right hand would have been covered and you could have perhaps gotten through hand-shaking gestures without showing the other hand much; but as it is, it's either mortification or go back. Another trick a pair of gloves will play on you when you have the two hands all right, but they do not belong to the same pair, and a difference in the color or length will be startling when you get them both on. Then, perhaps, if the pair is all right you will find you have lost the other one when you come to put it on. That is one of the nicest accidents that can happen, and gloves just love to do that way. As to splitting! Everyone knows that the brand-new gloves you have bought are to go with your party dress and that because the pair is new you decide to "put them on in the carriage"—they split away up the palms when you pull them the least bit.

ANOTHER.

Buttons are always perfidious. Unless you button to the last button before leaving the house, they are sure to fly off. Also, button holes have a way of bursting if you depend on them the least bit. The only safe way is not to repose a bit of confidence in a glove; to give them no chance to do monkey-shines. No matter what else you slight, no matter what else you "do on the way," finish your gloves before leaving the house; nay, and before leaving the room have both carefully pulled on and all buttoned. That is the only safe way. Even then you don't fancy you are safe. If there is any real good chance the glove will burst, or the buttons will fly. As to the minor weaknesses of gloves we all know how the pair that exactly matched the sample of your dress proves not a bit like the dress, or they get quite a different color when on the hand. Nothing soils as do gloves. You may sit with your hands on your outspread handkerchief in your lap, you need not move them once, and still when the carriage gets there and you are in the dressing-room your gloves are "perfect sights." The matter with gloves is they "ain't got no feelin'" for nobody; that was the explanation a maid of mine gave once.

A NEW COIFFURE.

The styles in hair-dressing are slowly but surely changing. True, the hair is still waved from the roots, but it is drawn into a soft knot towards the nape of the neck—a style eminently becoming to women with pure oval faces and regular features, but exceedingly trying to everyone else. The bandeaux which have been worn so long are not suitable to this style of coiffure; but probably before long the double Roman fillet will be seen once more. These prove peculiarly becoming to those who are the happy possessors of abundant hair. In a picture herewith, I give a view of a new arrangement of a woman's hair; this style, for which it is not necessary to have much hair, can be done, too, with false hair, which has the advantages of being easily frizzed, and of not being necessary to spoil one's own locks. When the hair has been parted in front it is tied behind the head. The ends are frizzed and the head arranged in light puffs, as indicated in the engraving. The front part is then curled, and the ends turned back and passed into the chignon. Let me add, sentimentally, that the hair should be as fragrant as pine-needles or sea-salt. And from cleanliness indeed only so can such a fragrance come. So with every part of the sweet woman herself, so with every detail of her wear, and fashion is rapidly making all this obligatory.

PRINCESS MAUD OF WALES.

The chignon is coming in. I wrote that fact in these letters recently. An amusing letter has reached me from a despairing correspondent who on reading that news, she says, arranged her hair in a huge lump in the middle of the head. This enthusiastic but impulsive votary of fashion has since discovered that the revised chignon is worn low in the neck, and she implores me to make this known at once, in order to save women from disfiguring themselves more than is necessary in their well-meant efforts to be "in the fashion." What a terrible responsibility is thus thrust on me. For how many guys may I not be responsible already. Be cautious, therefore, how you don the net, my readers.

The final sketch is not an original study of fashion, but a copy of a photograph of Princess Maud of Wales, taken within a month, and showing her as dressed for an evening occasion. You will see that there is not much "style" about her.

Copyright, 1892.

The fortune of the late Jules Lebrandy, the great sugar refiner and speculator of Paris, is estimated at 360,000,000 francs, probably the largest fortune in France.

Plain Mud.

There is nothing to make one realize the importance of mud, indeed, like a journey up the Nile when the inundation is just over. You lounge on the deck of your dahabieh and drink in geography almost without knowing it. The voyage forms a perfect introduction to the study of mudology, and suggests to the observant mind (meaning you and me) the real nature of mud as nothing else on earth that I know of can suggest it. For in Egypt you get your phenomenon isolated, as it were, from all disturbing elements.

You have no rainfall to bother you, no local streams, no complex denudation; the Nile does everything. On either hand stretches away the bare desert, rising up in gray, rocky hills. Down the midst runs the one long line of alluvial soil—in other words, Nile mud—which alone allows cultivation and life in that rainless district. The country bases itself absolutely on mud. The crops are raised on it, the houses and villages are built of it, the land is manured with it, the very air is full of it. The crude brick buildings that dissolve in dust are Nile mud solidified, the red pottery of Assiout is Nile mud baked hard, the village mosques and minarets are Nile mud whitewashed. I have even seen many a ship's bulwarks repaired with mud. It pervades the whole land when wet, as mud undisguised; when dry, as a dust storm.

Egypt, says Herodotus, is a gift of the Nile. A truer and more pregnant word was never spoken. Of course, it is just equally true in a way that Bengal is a gift of the Ganges, and that Louisiana and Arkansas are the gifts of the Mississippi; but with this difference, that in the case of the Nile the dependence is far more obvious, far freer from disturbing and distracting details. For that reason, and also because the Nile is so much more familiar to most English-speaking folk than the American rivers, I choose Egypt first as my type of a regular mud land.

But in order to understand it fully you mustn't stop all your time in Cairo and the Delta; you mustn't view it only from the terrace of Shepherd's hotel or the rocky platform of the Great Pyramid at Gizeh; you must push up country early, under Mr. Cook's care, to Luxor and the First Cataract. It is up country that Egypt unrolls itself visible before your eyes in the very process of making; it is there that the full importance of good high black mud forces itself upon you by undeniable evidence.—Cornhill's Magazine.

A Southern Tribute to Lincoln.

Col. Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal and an ex-Confederate officer, recently penned a tribute to Abraham Lincoln that all the world should read. Here it is:

Born as lowly as the Son of God, in a hovel; of what real parentage we know not; reared in penury, squalor, with no gleam of light nor fair surrounding; a young manhood vexed by weird dreams and visions, bordering at times on madness; without a grace natural or acquired; singularly awkward, ungainly, even among the uncouth about him; grotesque in his aspect and in his ways; it was reserved for this strange being, late in life, without name, or fame, or preparation, to be snatched from obscurity, raised to supreme command at a supreme moment and intrusted with the destiny of a nation. The great leaders of his party were made to stand aside; the most experienced and accomplished public men of the day, men like Seward, and Chase, and Sumner, statesmen famous and trained, were sent to the rear, whilst this unknown and fantastic figure was brought by unseen hands to the front and given the reins of power. It is entirely immaterial whether we believe in what he said or did, whether we are for or against him; that during four years, carrying with them such a pressure of responsibility as the world had never witnessed before, he filled the measure of the vast space allotted him in the actions of mankind and in the eyes of the world is to say that he was inspired of God, for nowhere else could he have acquired the enormous equipment indispensable to the situation.

How the King Used Hair Dye.

There is an amusing little story told of the King and Queen of Italy, which shows that there is a keen sense of humor in King Humbert. His hair turned very rapidly quite white, and this state of affairs greatly troubled his beautiful consort, and without mentioning the subject to the King, as a gentle hint she caused a bottle of the dye to be placed upon his dressing table. The next morning the King appeared at the breakfast table carrying in his arms a favorite poodle which, although formerly white, was black as ebony; whereas the King's hair still preserved its accustomed hue. It is said that the experiment was never tried again, and Queen Margherita has become accustomed to look upon her royal spouse's locks, if not with pleasure, at least with equanimity.—Fashions of the Day.

PROBABLY no one ever sinned without drawing all his relatives into his punishment.

CHRISTMAS

A GOOD old-fashioned Christmas, with the logs upon the hearth, the table filled with feasters, an' the room a-roar 'th mirth. With the stockin's crammed to bustin', an' the medders piled 'till snow—

A good old-fashioned Christmas like we had so long ago!

Now that's the thing I'd like to see ag'in afore I die, But Christmas in the city here—it's different, oh my! With the crowded hustle-bustle of the slushy, noisy street, An' the scowl upon the faces of the strangers that you meet.

Oh, there's buyin', plenty of it, of a lot o' gorgeous toys; An' it takes a mint o' money to please modern girls and boys. Why, I mind the time a jack-knife an' a toffy-lump for me Made my little heart an' stockin' jus' chock-full of Christmas glee.

An' there's feastin'. Think o' feedin' with these stuck-up city folk! Why, ye have to speak in whispers, an' ye dar'n't crack a joke. Then remember how the tables looked all crowded with your kin, When you couldn't hear a whistle blow across the merry din!

You see I'm so old-fashioned-like I don't care much for style, An' to eat your Christmas mas' banquets here I wouldn't go a mile; I'd rather have, like Solomon, a good yard-dinner set. With real old friends than tinkle soup with all the nob's you'd get.

There's my next-door neighbor Gurley—fancy how his brows 'ud lift If I'd holler "Merry Christmas!" Caught, old fellow, Christmas gift! Lordy-Lord, I'd like to try it! Guess he'd nearly have a fit. Hang this city stiffness, anyways, I can't get used to it.

Then your heart is kept a-swellin' till it nearly busts your side, An' by night your jaws were achin' with you smiles four inches wide, An' your enemy, the wo'stone, you'd just grab his hand, an' say: "Mebbe, both of us was wrong, John. Come, let's shake. It's Christmas Day!"

Mighty little Christmas spirit seems to dwell 'twix city walls, Where each snowflake brings a soot-flake for a brother as it falls: Mighty little Christmas spirit! An' I'm plinn', don't you know, For a good old-fashioned Christmas like we had so long ago.

—Centurv.

SOMETHING TANGIBLE.

I was tired; the look of ennui on the stern, cold face, the drawn expression about the eyes, the listless pose of the body, the aimless, uncertain wandering of the thin, nervous fingers bespoke it, verified it, made it certain.

Yes, he was tired. As he glanced about his elegant offices, now deserted by the clerks for the New Year's holiday, the suggestion of wealth, power, and high financial standing had no charm to evoke enthusiasm. To Richard Penrith the handsome balance in the ledger, the princely securities looked up in the massive safe, the plump bank account at the great trust institution across the way, were no more at that moment than a heap of dross, a bundle of withered autumn leaves.

One o'clock in the afternoon; the clerks had gone home, and he sat lost in gloomy, profitless, motiveless reverie. Two—he still stared at vacancy, thinking of nothing, of everything; wishing the wheels of business would never stop, feeling as lonely and out of his element in the festive prospects of the next day, as if he was an uncongenial spirit from another world.

Three o'clock. From the stone-paved court below, there was wafted to his hearing the merry voices of young clerks and messenger boys engaging in the pranks and capers that followed the last "settling up" of the year. The hearty, boyish accents made him wince. How long it seemed since he was a boy! How many years since he put love, emotion, every human sentiment, into a sealed casket, buried it fathoms deep, and became a sordid, money-making machine! With a sigh, bitter and resentful, he put on his hat, hurried from the office, stepped into his handsome carriage at the curb below, and was driven homeward down the magnificent boulevard, one of the richest, certainly the most wretched, of men in all the great city.

The portals of his princely home opened to admit him to luxury and comfort a king might covet. His sister, who directed in domestic affairs and well maintained the social status of the establishment, met him, attired with the elegance of a queen. "Richard, we shall need you to-night."

He frowned irritably. "What is it now?" he queried. "A reception. I expect two generals, an artist, and some of the best people of our set. Do try and come out of your shell of uncongeniality for once."

"And shrivel in the hypocritical glare of false friendship and hollow pleasure?" he interrupted bitterly. "No, sister. I thank you, but a quiet corner for me. I am tired—I am weary of all this show, vanity and vain labor. Five years a drudge, five more a cynical, flint-hearted money-maker, and what is the recompense?"

His sister stared at him in amazement. The recompense! Was the man going mad? Wealth, social eminence, a proud name! What heights could possibly lay beyond that pinnacle of earthly grandeur and success? "Excuse me for to-night," pleaded Penrith. "I am tired of it all. Oh, if out of it all I could extract one grain of comfort, one genuine emotion of enjoyment—something akin to the old boyish zest—something tangible!"

Something tangible! He dwelt on the words at the stately dinner table. They lingered with him as he tried to settle down to a quiet smoke in the library. There arose in his mind a picture of the past. It was poverty, obscurity then; but a thought of the bare-footed rambles through the woods, of the real coziness of the little attic-room back at the old home—stead, of ambitions tinged with ideal sentiment and glowing hopes, glorified the years now dead.

He glanced from the window at the dying day. Mournful, inexpressibly cold, repellent, unlovely, seemed the wilderness of stately mansions and stiff, precise equipages on the street without. How different the dear old village where he was born! The narrow streets, its quaint homes, its heart-warming people floated across his vision now, and seemed part of another world.

It was not so very far away. That little country town nestling among the hills was only an hour's ride from the great metropolis. Was he getting sentimental? What was this strange impulse that lured him to steal thither like a thief ashamed, and try to warm the frozen currents of his dreary life at the ashes of a dead past? Ah! the dear old town. How natural it looked! The old red school-house, the rickety depot, the broad common—once again, for the first time in ten years, Richard Penrith trod his native soil that night.

He wandered about the place like an uneasy ghost haunting the scenes of former experiences. He felt a keen pang of actual envy as he peered through the frost-crested windows of the homely village store, and saw its proprietor, happy, serene, all one glow of perfect delight over the gathering in of an extra few dollars for holiday business. Why! a turn of stock in the city often meant a fortune for him, and yet scarcely stirred a nerve!

All heart, all sympathy, all human, simple felicity! What a paradise, compared to the hot-house, superficial life of the city! He paused as the name spoken by a bent, old man, passing with a companion, struck his ear with a shock.

"It's all Miss Naomi's doings, sir. Bless her dear heart! She's nursed my wife back to health, she's got my boy a situation, and we ain't the first that angel of charity has helped."

"Miss Hewitt is a great friend to the poor; yes."

Naomi—Miss Hewitt! Richard Penrith stood stock still on the snowy street. A slight flush mounted his brow, his eyes grew larger, then tender.

Strange how he had forgotten her—stranger still that after all these years the sudden recurrence of that once treasured name could stir his nature as it had not been moved for nearly a decade!

He tried to smile at the memory of their boy and girl love, but failed. Something choked him as he walked on, and paused to peer through the windows of a neat, pretty cottage. Yes, there was the "best room" brightly lighted, and old Mrs. Hewitt seated knitting, surrounded by coziness and warmth. There was the pretty rustic porch. How often he had kissed Naomi good-night under the dew-spangled vines surrounding it. All was the same, only the vines were dead and drooping now. All was the same. His heart gave a great bound as the vivid lamplight showed a little framed portrait on the wall; his picture as he had been, treasured, esteemed faithfully by the winsome lass he had sacrificed to the cold, cynical demands of gold.

He fell to wondering how Naomi looked now. She was not visible about the house, and he strolled reluctantly on, and passing people stared suspiciously at him. He followed the concourse. Ah, another reminder of the past, the old church, its glowing portals an open welcome to all the weary, and hungered, and penitent.

He entered and glided to an obscure pew. It took him back ten years. How a certain watch-night meeting one New Year's Eve long ago came back to his mind! Naomi was there then, and he was her "company." Why! Naomi was here now! Yes! his heart thrilled as he made her out.

Changed? Yes, as gentle years of sympathy, and purity, and love for fellow mankind change the face of a saint. The glory of perfect womanhood in her kindly beaming eyes made Richard Penrith shrink at a sense of his own callous unworthiness.

Angelic influences were here to-night, surely. The white-haired preacher seemed to appeal to his heart as to a brother's. He was distressed, awakened, and then a peaceful calm swayed his soul—he hated the things he had loved, he realized the hollowness of the bright bauble he had striven for, holding at its call only bitter dust and flight.

How his heart beat! It must have been dead for years? New Year's chimes ringing, he stood on the church porch, he timorously advanced to the side of the trim, loving, fond woman he had watched all the evening.

"Naomi—Miss Hewitt, do you not remember me?"

Her face paled, her little hand trembled as he grasped it. Then her soul beamed out in honest welcome, and then—

They were boy and girl again, "keeping company," walking home from watch meeting as of yore, and the holy stars smiled down.

Richard Penrith bade Naomi Hewitt good-by at the cottage porch only to return the next day.

At evening he returned to the city to be greeted with dismay at his unexplained absence by his sister.

"You have alarmed us, Richard. So unlike you, too. But you look better. I declare! You haven't seemed like your own self for an age. New Year's resolutions, Richard?" she laughed archly.

"Yes," replied the brother, his eyes sparkling, "I have determined to turn over a new leaf."

"Indeed. Give up your cigars—come out in society?"

"As a married man, yes."

"Richard!"

"I mean it, sister," spoke Richard Penrith, solemnly and earnestly. "This New Year's day has taught me to value the true pleasures of life—not wealth, not power, not pride."

"Ah! You have found something else, Richard?"

"Yes," replied Richard Penrith, tenderly. "Back at my boyhood's home, back where Naomi is waiting for me to claim her as my wife, I have found—something tangible—love!"

MARGARET MAHAN.

CHRISTMAS ON THE FARM.

The Day Should Be One of Joy and Happiness in the Rural Home.

Because the regular routine of chores has to be gone through 365 days a year is no reason why Christmas and other holidays should not be days of gladness and good cheer upon the farm.

Make the same provision the day before, for the lessening the amount of work that must be done, as you do for Sunday; then let it be done up as quickly as possible as thoroughness will allow; and we believe in showing "good will" to even the dumb brutes by giving them an extra allowance of feed, either in quality or quantity—not that we think they have any appreciation of the day or motive that prompts it, but they will appreciate the fact. The work done up, turn about to have just as good a time as possible—a day full of joy and happiness because the pleasure of others is sought more than the gratification of self.

If the home consists of only "wife and I," see that wife has as much attention and "waiting on" as when you were courting her. If there is sleighing the old times can be all the better revived, if not, and the wheeling is not good, just make the day one of the best in which to see your "girl."

If the home nest has birdlings in it, have a romp with these; if the "birdlings" have grown to be "great strapping fellows," show them that father can be a boy with them and have a good time at hunting, trapping, or whatever they choose.

If those who bless your home are fair maidens of "sweet sixteen," or any other age, consult their wishes and tastes as to how the day is to be used. In either of the last three cases be sure the wife and mother is consulted and her wishes put first.

Americans do not take enough holidays. American farmers do not unbend often enough or long enough. Try taking more leisure, begin with New Year's, 1893, and continue at intervals through the year, and see if Christmas '93 does not find you younger and less worn out than Christmas 1892 did.

Manna.

The manna of commerce comes chiefly from Sicily. It is a sweet substance, obtained from a small tree which is known as the manna ash. This tree can be grown as far north as England, but in that country it yields no manna, and is cultivated for ornament only. The manna is formed from the sap. The trees are ready to be tapped at the age of eight years, when the stems have a diameter of about three inches. The tapping is done by making cuts through the bark to the wood, the incisions being one or two inches long, and about an inch apart.

The first cut is made at the lower part of the trunk. The next year the untouched part of the stem is operated upon in the same way, and the practice is continued in successive years till the tree is exhausted.

The finest manna is that which is incrustated around pieces of stick or straws placed in the incisions. Flake manna is that which has hardened on the trunk. The inferior quality is from the lower incision. After its removal from the tree the manna is dried on shelves.

There are other plants that yield a similar product. The tamarisk of Arabia exudes from its branches a substance that becomes solid in the cool of the morning. This is known as tamarisk honey. The exudation is assisted by the puncture of a small insect. It is said that this honey is described by native writers as a dew which falls upon the leaves of the tamarisk and other trees.

The Persians gather a kind of manna from a leguminous plant by shaking its branches, or by picking the leaves and gently beating them over a cloth when dry. Throughout Persia and Afghanistan naturally produced manna is harvested from different trees and shrubs. It is eaten by the people as a sweetmeat, and is exported to India.

In Australia a sweet substance is obtained by the natives from the sandalwood. It is a favorite article of food with them and with the colonists. The manna gathered from the leaves of the eucalyptus is rather a product of insects. The exudation of the sap is due to their puncturing of the leaves, and the same is supposed to be the origin of the manna which is collected from the twigs of certain species of oak.

The notion of the Arabs that the manna was a dew deposited upon the leaves of shrubs reminds us that we have the phenomenon of honey-dew on leaves of the elm in this country. It is to be observed on hot and dry days in August. The upper surface of the leaves becomes varnished with a soluble sweet gum, much resorted to by insects in the morning. It hardens in the hot sun. This appears to be a true natural exudation of sap from the leaves, caused by excessive heat. There is no indication of the leaves, caused by excessive heat. There is no indication of the leaves being punctured; the visits of the insects are a result, not a cause. —Youth's Companion.

The Buffalo's Cup.

A traveler describes a strange formation in Mitchell County, Texas, which, in our time at least, will be a reminder of the days when the buffalo roamed the plains of the great West. "At the junction of two creeks," he writes, "is a bed of friable gray sandstone mixed with coarse gravel. Water passing over the edge has worn away a part of it, and has created a fall of thirty feet. The loose gravel carried round and round in the eddies has gradually bored holes in the sandstone. These holes are from three to six feet wide, circular and from fifty to a hundred feet deep. There are from fifteen to twenty of them, all filled with fresh water. By the long-continued churning of the gravel they have been made jug-shaped or cistern-like, and in some instances the wall dividing the two wells has been cut through. This must have been a favorite watering place with the buffalo. In the solid rock is cut a deep trail down to the water. And where the descent is steepest the footmarks are over six inches deep, showing that every animal passing there put its foot exactly in the spot occupied by those which had preceded it."

Why Do We Wear Mourning?

The custom is outworn; it is an anachronism in the nineteenth century, says the North American Review. It is unchristian; it clouds the spiritual significance of the resurrection with the ever present expression of temporal loss. It is cruel; it forces helpless and innocent people into action, which entails privation and unnecessary suffering. It is untruthful; it makes false outward show of changes in sentiment. And it is essentially vulgar; for it presses private affairs upon public notice; it thrusts claims of fashion and frivolity upon a time which most greatly moves the heights and depths of being; and it forces its superficial worldliness into the fiercest throes which can ever rend human nature. Why, then, do we still wear mourning?

The new spring crop of Writ McAllister pictures in the New York papers show the conservator of "the four hundred" full of the ginger of youth and a diminished bald spot.

OUR BUDGET OF FUN.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

Jokes and Jokelets that Are Supposed to Have Been Recently Born—Sayings and Doings that Are Odd, Curious and Laughable.

Tea Table Talk.

An adder's bite—the bank clerk's lunch.—Lampoon.

The bars of music are found in music halls.—Picayune.

A night lark is followed by the morning swallow.—Boston Transcript.

We expect the fellow with plenty of sand to get his deserts.—Elmira Gazette.

The man who is riddled with bullets generally gives it up.—Philadelphia Record.

When a barber talks too much his stories are generally illustrated with cuts.—Texas Siftings.

Time is nothing to a country cornet band at a political demonstration.—Los Angeles Express.

When a disease is well seated it becomes a standing menace against health.—Boston Courier.

JAGSON says some fellows never seem to have gained ground till they are buried.—Elmira Gazette.

"He is an artist by profession." "I know that; but what is he by occupation?"—Washington Star.

"Was the temperance orator amusing?" "Yes, he had a good deal of dry wit."—Philadelphia Record.

A MAN who is in society and who wants to keep in must be continually going out.—Yonkers Statesman.

WHEN there is nothing in a man's scheme it makes no difference whether or not the bottom drops out.—Picayune.

STANDING on one's dignity is as uncertain a way to get along in this world as walking on stilts.—Acheson Globe.

JAGSON says the only thing in his house that doesn't seem to collect dust is his boy's savings bank.—Elmira Gazette.

GAY—"The Widow Weed wears very heavy mourning." Day—"Yes; but she doesn't feel as black as she is dressed."—Puck.

HAIR-DRESSER—"What shade will madam have ze hair dyed zis time?" Mrs. Taddles (in a whisper)—"Keep it dark."—Tid-Bits.

A JUDGE should be careful in making promises. It is his business to commit others and not himself.—Yonkers Statesman.

THERE are some men who can't take home a beefsteak without believing they are taking their wives a present.—Acheson Globe.

You may speak as you will of pedigree generally, but in the sleeping-car it's a man's berth which raises him above his fellows.—Siftings.

TROUBLE and kin and cats are about the only thing a man can have that other people don't try to get away from him.—Acheson Globe.

The telephone is said to have been known in India for thousands of years. Yet there has been very little talk over it.—Rochester Democrat.

A WOMAN may not acknowledge it, but in wearing a shoe one size too small for her she realizes that she has "put her foot in it."—Boston Courier.

It is all right for Nancy Hanks to have a record, but a good many politicians this fall are finding that to be the worst thing they have to contend with.

Fogg says he should like to see a man who, loving his neighbor as himself, is as considerate of his neighbor's dogs as of his own hens.—Boston Transcript.

LADY friend (to Mrs. Newlywed)—Well, how do you like your flat? Mrs. Newlywed—Which do you mean—the one I married or the one I live in?—Tit-Bits.

PROF. SWIFT, of the Warner University, says there are six comets now visible in the heavens—a regular posse comet at us, as it were.—Philadelphia Ledger.

MAMMA—"Well, did you tell God how naughty you have been?" Lily—"No, I was ashamed. I thought it had better not get out of the family."—Brooklyn Life.

WIFE—"Don't you think this bonnet makes my face look rather short?" Husband—"No; but it makes my pocket-book look like a perfect dwarf."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

"CAN you suggest an inscription to go over the gates of the new cemetery?" the president asked the editor. "Let me see," replied the editor, "how would this do. 'We have come to stay.'"—Lake City Times.

NOT A FOREIGNER.—Mrs. Schuyler—"My son is a regular Bohemian." Mrs. Harlem Phil—"Oh, pshaw, now, don't be puttin' on. You know he was born right here in New York."—Chicago News Record.

MISSION TEACHER—"What did Columbus do?" Gotham Waif—"Why, der—?" Mission Teacher—"Why don't you say 'the' instead of 'der'?" Gotham Waif—(with dignity)—"I ain't no Anglermaniac."—Good News.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAOK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year, at 30 cents each, we will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by postal.

MRS. EMMA D. PAOK, EDITRESS.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS.

It is a deplorable fact that the friends of equal suffrage are too lukewarm or negligent in its support of suffrage journals. The time has come in Kansas for the suffrage question to be settled by a vote of the people (men.) The FARMER'S WIFE will be the main factor in this great fight for human liberty. The submitting of this question will have its effect upon every state and territory, and every man or woman favorable to our cause should subscribe their mite towards a great victory. The FARMER'S WIFE does not ask for alms, we merely ask that you help us in our work by subscribing for our paper and getting your friends to do so. The subscription price is so small, in the reach of every one. It certainly should require and demand your immediate attention. Now don't glance at this article and pass it idly by, but attend to it at once. Throw away all partisan views and let us unite in this great battle for the women of Kansas. Let us hear from you. Who will be the first to send us a club of twenty? Who will send us the first ten or five? Send us your own subscription at least; we need your encouragement and help. Will you do it?

Respectfully,
THE EDITOR.

If time is money, then give us more time.

American patriotism must be a household virtue.

It is the spoils of office that spoils many a good man.

Men want office here below, they want that office long.

Remember your baby isn't any prettier or smarter than forty dozen other babies.

We see no valid reason why the office should not seek the woman as well as the man. It is only the little matter of the words he or she.

For the first time in the history of Kansas, there will be no dancing at the Governor's inaugural. Surely, the People's party is a party of reform.

It passeth our understanding how the president or any governor of any state can tell just what certain offices seeking a certain man unless such certain man through his friends, volunteers the information.

"Every woman in business or professional life is pioneering the way for women who are to come after her, and posterity will be very largely the debtor of the women of this generation."

"The resumption of rights long denied or withheld never made a social convulsion; that is produced by refusing them. The influence of the enfranchisement of women will glide into society as noiselessly as the dawn increases into day."

A greater part of our paper is taken up this issue with letters to Mrs. Mary E. Lease. They not only one and all endorse Mrs. Lease for senator, but are in line with the equal suffrage movement that is so exciting the minds of Kansas people at the present time.

In our next issue we will give the names of women holding official positions in Kansas, either by election or appointment. Nearly one-fourth of the county superintendents are women and there will be women appointed in nearly all of the offices at the state capital and in many of the state institutions.

"The ballot does not make men happy nor respectable, rich nor noble; but they guard it for themselves with sleepless jealousy, because they know it is the golden gate to every opportunity; and precisely the kind of advantage it gives to one sex, it would give to the other. It would arm it with the most powerful weapon known to political society; it would maintain the natural balance of the sexes in human affairs, and secure to each fair play within its sphere."

Mrs. Mary E. Lease has been engaged to lecture Dec. 30th, at Library hall, under the auspices of the State Medical association. Her topic will be "An Hour with the Irish Poets." The Suffrage association have also engaged this distinguished orator, the date of their lecture, however, is unsettled, on account of Mrs. Lease having so many engagements.

"A half century ago the woman who essayed to support herself outside of her home, would have been tabooed from polite society. It was an actual disgrace for a woman to have a trade or profession, and were they in her possession, there were few who had bravery enough to patronize her; but the face of nature has changed, and society now is in a more benignant mood, and is ready to court where she has been severe, and the result is, the self-supporting, self-respecting woman is sought, and the press of the land is glad to record her achievements and proclaim her success."

While attending the state E. S. A. at Enterprise we had the pleasure of meeting Martha P. Spencer, superintendent of the state industrial school for girls at Beloit. We were at once impressed with the idea that Miss Spencer was the right person for the responsible and important position she now occupies. She has a frank, easy manner which serves to draw one to her instead of the unfortunate faculty that many possess, that of repelling. Miss Spencer has taught for nineteen years, and has acquired a tact to guide and lead the erring that few possess. In looking through the history of the State Normal school, we noted with pride the high compliment paid Miss Spencer as a teacher and noble, Christian woman: "She lives in her work and her work lives in her. No teacher ever excelled her in conscientious solicitude for the well-being of her pupils. She has ever been in full sympathy with the spirit of education, and she craves no greater boon than the privilege of reaching out and extending a helping hand to her unfortunate sisters."

A great deal of Miss Spencer's help at the school is by incorrigible and wild girls who are placed in her care, and through her gentle ways she has won them back from a life of shame, and has fitted them for lives of usefulness and happiness.

Women's Victory.

Special to the FARMER'S WIFE.

Boston, Mass., Dec. 17.—The independent woman's ticket for school board was elected by several thousand extra votes and the women of Boston are rejoicing. As early as seven o'clock the women were out with their carriages to see that women in charge of the twenty-five wards were at their posts. Every precinct was in charge of women.

WOMAN'S SIDE SHOW.

We clip the following extract from the Woman's Chronicle, Sister Kate Cunningham's paper; it is the exact sentiments of the FARMER'S WIFE:

During the National Convention of the Farmers' Alliance recently held in Memphis, Tenn., a National League was organized, to be composed of three divisions: First—the voters. Second—Male minors under the age of fourteen. Third—the women. As usual the women bring up the rear. They are not even so desirable as members of a political league as a boy of fourteen. The explanation of this is not far off. The fourteen year old boy is a prospective voter, while the women may grow old and gray in wisdom and well doing, yet still remain a voiceless factor in the affairs of her country. Fancy such women as Mary E. Lease, Marion Todd, Anna L. Diggs and venerable Mrs. Emory, who have had so much to do with building up labor organizations, falling into line of march just behind the fourteen-year-old boy.

Susan B. Anthony has been appointed a member of the state Board of Education of New York.

Mrs. Ann Sculley has been elected a justice of the peace in Wyoming.

A woman by the name of Knowles has been elected attorney general of Montana.

GENERAL J. B. WEAVER

Defends Mrs. Lease from the Attacks Made Upon Her by Certain Journals With Impure Motives.

DES MOINES, IOWA, Dec. 10, 1892.

Mrs. Mary E. Lease, Wichita, Kan.,

DEAR MADAME:—I have with much regret recently noticed that your course during the late campaign is being attacked by certain parties and journals who impugn your fidelity to our cause and your integrity of purpose.

They charge or insinuate that you received pay from republicans for your telegrams and interviews sent out to northern papers. I take the greatest pleasure in stating that in every instance you asked my advice concerning the dispatches which you sent north and submitted the same to me. Every word you sent was sanctioned by me and in no instance did you deviate the slightest from the truth. You did not utter one single word or sentence either in your press dispatches or interviews which had not been reiterated ten thousand times by the more than 400,000 Populists who voted our ticket in the south, nor did you state the matter in as strong a light as is now being published weekly by our press throughout the south. Your statements were not in any manner more radical than those made by General Field and myself, in our address sent from Pensacola, Fla. You were making a battle for our oppressed brethren in the south, and throughout the whole country. You passed through the ordeal and knew what you were talking about. Your eminent services rendered to the cause of humanity during the late campaign should at least exempt you from the criticism of those who claim to be friends of our movement, as they certainly entitle you to the gratitude of all good people. The wonderful tact, masterful ability, and untiring devotion displayed by you during the severe trials and labors of the campaign were not surpassed if indeed equaled, by any of your co-laborers, and I gladly and unqualifiedly endorse your work and utterances throughout. You accompanied Mrs. Weaver and myself much against your own wishes and at our earnest request. I can further state that had you wanted to turn traitor to our cause, I happen to know that you could have received a sum which would have placed you in easy circumstances for life—one-tenth of which would have purchased any boudoir in the country—and yet you spurned it all, and chose to work and suffer for the meagre wages which we were enabled to pay you for your distinguished services. But you can afford to be persecuted. It is heaped upon you because you are struggling for the outcast and oppressed children of our blessed Master. Fraternally yours,

J. B. WEAVER.

KANSAS STATE E. S. A.

The Kansas Equal Suffrage association met in Enterprise in annual session on the 8th with about 150 delegates present.

The convention was called to order by Mrs. Laura M. Johns, president of the association, and the welcoming address was delivered by Hon. C. B. Hoffman and responded to by Mrs. Belville-Brown of Salina. Mrs. Johns, in the president's annual address, said: "This is the hour to strike. A session of the legislature will be held this winter in Topeka. The situation holds to us peculiar difficulties, yet particularly good advantages. In both parties are avowed suffragists, and the life of political parties depends upon the one first to make the fight in Kansas." In concluding she said: "The matter of greatest importance, and that to which all other matters must give way, is the compelling of the legislature this winter to submit an amendment allowing women the elective franchise."

The following officers were elected: President, Miss Laura M. Johns; vice president, Mrs. Annie L. Diggs; recording secretary, Mrs. Annie C. Wait; corresponding secretary, Mrs. Elizabeth F. Hopkins; attorney, Miss Ella M. Brown; librarian, Mrs. May Belleville-Brown.

Columbia Daily Calendar.

The Pope Mfg. Co., of Boston, again deserves the credit of presenting the most practical business and professional calendar for the year. For eight consecutive years, this company has issued what is known as the Columbia Desk Calendar and Stand, consisting of a pad of 365 leaves, one for each day in the year, and one for the entire year. Upon each leaf are sermons on the Gospel of "Out-door Happiness and Health," with authoritative advice on national road making by the most eminent experts. The pad rests upon a metallic stand, arranged to take up very little room, and is indeed an indispensable article for the desk.

"AMONG THE OZARKS."

THE LAND OF BIG RED APPLES is the title of an attractive and highly interesting book recently issued. It is handsomely illustrated with views of South Missouri scenery, including the famous Olden fruit farm of 3,000 acres in Howell county. It pertains entirely to fruit raising in that great fruit belt of America, the southern slope of the Ozarks, and will prove of great value, not only to fruit-growers, but to every farmer and homeseeker in other states looking for a farm and a home. Mailed free. Address J. E. Lockwood, Kansas City, Mo.

MRS. LEASE ENDORSED.

Continued from first page.

go on and on and reap a bountiful harvest as you have so faithfully sown; may the sunset of your life be cloudless and perfect; may you live to see, as I think you will, woman standing by man, his equal.—M. Elizabeth Crane, Marshalltown, Iowa.

Although I am not Susan B. Anthony, however, I can tell you how interested all women are in your work. How they follow up all your movements as closely as possible, and rejoice over what you have done, and are doing, and more, what you will do for women. All those with whom I have discussed the matter, and they are many, agree that you have accomplished more for woman suffrage than any other woman of the day. We are certain that you will obtain the senatorship and are proud of you, and delighted to know of the good you will do for your sister women when you are in office.

The woman of this generation who is educated in politics has this advantage over a man, she combines reasoning power and logic as good as his with a truer and more unerring instinct. Woman's ideas of politics are less shallow than their knowledge of form in political life. We admire you, honor you, and wish you all success in your career.—Anna Bradford, Leroy, N. Y.

We support Mrs. M. E. Lease for U. S. senatorship because:

So far she has no equal as a speaker, debater or teacher of the great economic truths.

She has at no time compromised with either of the "twin iniquities," being at all times a middle-of-the-road People's party advocate.

She has done more and greater work for the People's party than any other one person.

Her Georgia experience entitles her to the highest honors which our party can give.

Her election would advance the cause of woman 50 years.

For the first time in its history Kansas would send to the senate a true representative of the working people.

Having suffered every privation that poverty can bring, she understands the true condition of the masses.

Having given four loved ones to her country during the Rebellion, she would never consent to a measure that would precipitate war, until every peaceful remedy was exhausted.—Eva M. Blackman in Leavenworth News.

No one, man or woman, more heartily congratulates you than this humble writer. I have watched with the warmest interest and gratitude, your brave and earnest efforts for the cause of humanity, from the time you first appeared before my mind's eye at the Omaha convention, up to the present time. No woman of this age has done more for her sex, or for both sexes for that matter, than yourself.

The cause you, as a woman, seem to champion publicly alone, namely, the fair settlement of the industrial problem, is the greatest before the world today. When it is justly solved, there will be no wall of want, no wretchedness, vice and despair, no agonizing anxiety and suicides, all because "might makes right" in money-grabbing.

That old brutal maxim that is now at the bottom of the competitive system, as it is used to be applied physically, will give way, and all will be protected from hunger and cold as they now are from blows. And first among the pioneers of this blessed change, will be that of the woman I now address. First, and ahead of the name of any man, because it took much more courage and devotion on the part of a woman, to publicly stand up for the cause, because every inferior man from sea to sea, stands in the path of woman's progress and tries to scare her back by flaunting in her face cheap ridicule and two-for-a-cent jokes.—Mrs. Sara A. Lawton, Florence, Alabama.

The fright of the press lest Kansas should elect Mrs. Lease United States senator is truly comical. There are some journals that would not like to be called other than respectable that indulge in daily jibes and flings, but the silliest objection of all is based on the insufficiency of the masculine pronoun to cover her case. They say the Constitution of the United States says the person elected senator shall be "an inhabitant of that state for which he shall be chosen." Now if the objectors will find the word she anywhere in the Constitution we will give up the point, but certainly they will not claim that the Constitution does not refer to women even without this pronoun. When a woman receives the presidential appointment to a post office, it is as a postmaster; when she graduates in medicine or law it is with the same title that it never entered into the mind of man could include a woman. The whole country is alive with women Bachelors of Art, Bachelors of Science, Bachelors of Philosophy, etc., and if the term bachelor can thus include the maid and matron, the very respectable and generic pronoun he can include woman too. At least as long as the pronoun he does to imprison, and to hang a woman by, it is quite good enough for her to be elected to the United States senate under.—Clara R. Colby in Woman's Tribune.

At a meeting of the executive committee of the Connecticut State Woman Suffrage association held at Mrs. Hooker's on the 20th inst., we voted at the dinner table, over Mrs. Hooker's chicken pie, to send you our congratulations, individually and collectively as officers of the association, on your prospect of a nomination to the United States senate. A woman elected to the United States senate would be an immense stride forward, though women ought to have been there from the first. But as we have to deal with "what is," and not with "what ought to have been" we must naturally feel greatly encouraged at the prospect of our woman United States senator. Of course, if one is elected to that august body, others will follow in due time. We are anxiously looking forward to the formation of a new party which will recognize the equality of woman. No one can expect that either of the two old parties, the Democratic or Republican, will ever give women this recognition. The new party must be made up of the best elements in both parties, and I believe the first step toward this is the recent sweeping defeat of the Republican party. There has been no live issue in this party since the abolition of slavery became an assured fact. It can't build up again on the wretched McKinley bill. It will require a live issue to infuse the breath of life into it, and it will not take upon its old party lines the two live issues that are right ahead of us, woman suffrage and the squelching of the gin mills and rum shops of our land. Neither will the Democratic. We must have a new party. We hope you will be nominated and elected United States senator.—Frances Ellen Burr, Sec. of Conn. State Suffrage Association and Secretary of Hartford Equal Rights Club.

MY DEAR MRS. LEASE:—I see your name mentioned for United States senator. I hope the new party, the People's party will demonstrate that they believe in practice as well as theory, that women are people; and in no way can they make it more clear, in no way more just, than in electing you to the senate. Surely no man of the party has done as much to carry it to success as have you.

To the men who may have aspirations for the senate, to withdraw their claims and join in bestowing the honor, the justice upon a woman fully their peer in every respect, would not only be noble in them, but it would settle the question of woman's status in the new party. It would declare before all Israel that women were not only welcomed as helpers to its success, but as sharers of its honors and emoluments as well. It would be something new under the sun! No I sincerely hope the innovation will be made.

But whether the People's party of Kansas is thus just, thus grateful to the woman who has served it most faithfully and well, or not, still I hope it will proceed at once to the work of securing the women of the state in their citizen's right to the full suffrage. With both of the great parties of Kansas, the People's and the Republican, pledged in taking the initiatory steps, I cannot see how their representatives in the legislature assembled, can honorably fail to pledge themselves to make the woman's political equality their first duty. And with the endorsement of both parties, I believe the constitutional amendment proposed—to strike "male" from the suffrage clause—would be triumphantly carried at the ballot box.

If you and Mrs. Diggs can secure this from the People's party and Mrs. Johns secure it from the Republican party—Kansas is sure to be the second state in the union, free and equal for women and we can add to the blue of our flag a second star and have inscribed on it the taillor's name of Kansas, alongside that of the pride and glory of our nation—Wyoming! I am sure you will do all in your power to place Kansas in this honorable position.

Again wishing you success in gaining the place of senator of the United States, I am very sincerely yours, SUSAN B. ANTHONY.

STATE AGENTS FOR THE SALE OF LIQUORS.

The Shawnee County Alliance at its regular meeting Dec. 2nd, adopted the following resolutions:

RESOLVED, That we request the state legislature to amend the liquor law so as to destroy the monopoly now enjoyed by the druggist and provide for the sale of intoxicating liquors for medical, mechanical and scientific purposes through state agents, such agents to receive a stated salary, based upon the number of inhabitants of the district assigned without reference to the amount of liquor sold, that the people may be supplied with pure, unadulterated liquors for lawful purposes at the actual cost connected with the purchase and sale of the same, and that the various abuses of the present drug store system may be abolished.

RESOLVED, That we invite all county and sub alliances of the state to join in this request and forward resolutions on the subject, care of the Advocate, Topeka, at the earliest date possible.

The State Temperance union adopted similar resolutions at its recent meeting and appointed Amanda M. Way, J. R. Detwiler, J. A. Murray, I. O. Pickering, Richard Wake as a committee to bring the subject to the attention of the legislature.

The latest and prettiest song now being sung on the stage, is entitled "The Indian Summer time." It is by the popular author, Will L. Thompson, of East Liverpool, Ohio. The price is 40 cents. Send the author half price and you will receive a copy.

When in Topeka stop at Sixth Avenue Hotel.

CAMPAIGN SONG FOR '96.

Marching On to Victory.

BY ANNIE L. DYGGS,
Great humanity born in the image of God,
Has toiled through long ages its birthright to gain.
Pierced struggle and blood marks the pathway trod,
Each onward step taken in peril and pain.

CHORUS.
All hail to the giant whose glorious feet
Are mightily marching all bond slaves to free.
March onward, mount onward, great manhood,
There's a glimpse and a glint of the glory to be

In the centuries gone the battle was won
For mankind to worship what God he could see.
But a century gone and kings were o'erthrown,
Ours now the task the world's toilers to free.

All hail to the giant whose head would not bow
To idols or kings; whose warm heart will beat With high hope in the march of the glorious now.

All hail to the giant who will not retreat, Shall our battle be won? Shall the toiler go free?

Make answer ye idols of clay and of gold;
Make answer proud kings, once divine by deceit;
Thus doth the dead past the glad future unfold.

Oh the pitiful past has been dark and been drear;
Bent backs have ached and worn feet have been sore;
Hearts have been crushed, minds darkened with fear,
But the black past is dying, give thanks evermore.

FIGS AND THISTLES.

A PIOUS whine never helps the Lord a bit.

WHENEVER a sin can hide its head it feels safe.

THE shortest cut to happiness is to try to give it.

A LOOK toward the devil will kill as quick as a leap.

God never sends us where it is not for our good to go.

NO MATTER where faith walks it always steps on a rock.

It is the cowardly dog who is always showing his teeth.

FALSE worship will kill the soul as quick as no worship.

EVERY man hates his own sin when he sees it in another.

NO MAN can ever lose his religion
by trusting God too much.

THE only heavy burdens are those we try to carry ourselves.

AN armor-bearer ranks the same as a prince in God's army.

ONE of the most beautiful sights on earth is a happy child.

OUR steps toward Heaven get shorter every time we look back.

THE man whose desires are sanctified always gets what he wants.

THE only right way to start out to be religious is to do it abjectly.

THERE is something wrong if you never pray except when you have to.

THE devil never gets the man who is willing to be saved in God's way.

NO ONE can be made rich with money who would not be rich without it.

THE man who is not giving anything to God is stealing from himself.

WITH a man more money means more to eat; with a woman more to wear.

NO MAN can fully respect himself as long as his ways do not please God.

THE man who wilfully continues in sin is conscious that he deserves no help.

THE man who does his best in his present place is on his way to a better one.

THE hardest kind of repentance to bring about is repentance for popular sins.

FOLLOW the man who believes the Bible and you will find that he is living it.

THE devil never gets tired of setting traps for people who have faith in God.

THE man who conquers himself has God for a helper, whether he knows it or not.

THE only people who are discontented are those who are not doing their whole duty.

THE devil likes to be around when a wicked man is preached into heaven at his funeral.

THE devil never gets tired of shooting where he can now and then make a doubt stick.

IF men were sure they could get to Heaven by hard work every loafer would soon be busy.

WHEN you find that your yoke is not easy it means that you are not close enough to Christ.

God can't do much for a man on Sunday who has been working for the devil all the week.

THE worst the devil can do against the Christian is to make him cling to God a little closer.

THERE are so many reformers who want to go as far away from home as they can to begin work.

THE man who weeps that those he loves may smile, does something that angels would like to do.

KANSAS NEWS.

McPherson is blessed (or cursed?) with twenty-three secret societies.

Colonel Milton Stewart, of Wichita, who was department commander of the G. A. R. of Kansas eight years ago, has moved to Chicago.

Russell Journal: The work on the mill at Lucas is progressing finely. The stone work is nearly completed and will soon be ready for the framework.

The delegates to the meeting January
2 of the Kansas State Federation of Labor, at Kansas City, will travel for one and a third fares for the round trip.

The Salvation Army is soliciting money, food and clothing to furnish to the poor of Topeka on Christmas. They intend to feed from 300 to 500 needy people on that day.

Emporia Republican: Elmore Cross, aged 14, was hanging on the side of a eight car at Reading, when by some misfortune he slipped and fell under the wheels, which passed over his body and cut it in two pieces.

Topeka Capital: Ira Howe, head miller of the Crosby mill, reports that for a time the mill has been running a little more than its reckoned capacity of 900 barrels per day. One day the record was 935 barrels.

From McPherson: Senator H. B.
Kelley, who has recently sold the Mc-Pherson Freeman, says that if the Cherokee strip opens next spring, as he thinks it will, he will take a printing outfit to the new country and start a newspaper.

The recent snow storm prevailed throughout Kansas. Snow fell to the depth of from six to eight inches in various localities. There was no wind, however, and consequently no drifting, so that railway traffic was only slightly interfered with.

Wa-Keeney World: Mrs. Charvat, while retiring from a meeting of the Rebekah lodge, missed her footing at the top of the stairs in Opera block and fell to the bottom. It seems a miracle that she was not killed. As it was she was badly bruised.

Stockton News: Carl Osborn, a former academy boy, now attending Washburn college, has been appointed recording clerk in the office of secretary of state at a salary of $1,000 a year.
Mr. Osborn's many friends are glad to hear of his success.

Sharon Springs Times: Wm. Carney has gone east again on the interest of the paper mill which is almost an assured fact. We are really proud of the enterprise and liberality which our people display and we feel confident that a county settled with such residents as Wallace county has, is sure to soon be the banner county of the state.

Stafford People's Paper: There are many families here that are living in cramped and uncomfortable quarters who would get better houses if they could be found. Without question there are others who would move here if houses could be obtained. Certainly if present indications are not wonderfully deceiv-ing, a person having the capital who would put up a few good houses for rent, would do well. Besides it is a public need.

Emporia Republican: While going home from Hamilton, D. M. Burt was held up and robbed of $200. He lives south of Hamilton on the road to Eureka. While passing along a lonely place in the road he met two men. One grasped the bridle rein of the horse Mr.
Burt was riding, and the other pulled a gun and requested Mr. Burt to liquidate. Mr. Burt handed over the $200 which he had in his pocket to the unknown highwaymen.

Chapman Howitzer: A dozen couples of the Central college students dropped in on the high school last Friday and spent the afternoon in the class rooms.
They were a good-looking, jolly company and seemed to enjoy their visit. A short social was held at the close of the day, and the students of the two schools were introduced and became acquainted with each other. May the friendships of the students and schools long continue.

Lakin Advocate: Judge Riner holds that the $56,000 bonds issued by the first board of county commissioners are void for the reason that the commissioners had no power to issue them, being prohibited by statute until the county had been organized one year.
We believe this decision will be sustained, as the innocent purchaser is obliged to know enough of the law to understand whether the bond he invests in is issued contrary to law or in conformity with it.

Stockton News: Many of the counties in the state have already secured or are agitating the building of a county high school. To build a school in Rooks county at the present time, no matter how badly needed, is almost an impossibility, but we are of the opinion that the officials could in some way arrange with the Stockton academy to form classes for those pupils in the county prepared and desiring to enter upon a higher course of study than can now be allowed elsewhere in the county. The plan is a perfectly feasible one, would be of little expense to the county as compared with the building and maintenance of a county high school, and would also assist in the development and building up of a very worthy institution located in our midst, which has already proved itself a success.

Jewell City Republican: Mrs. Emily
Hunt's house in Grant township caught fire from the flue and burned down.
Mrs. Hunt lost nearly all her household goods and winter clothing. In addition to these she lost a mower and rake and two sets of harness which were stored in the cellar, and flour from twenty bushels of wheat. A gold watch and chain, greatly prized because it had belonged to her husband, went with the rest. We hear that Mrs. Hunt's mother was considerably burned about the arms. There was an insurance of $500 on the building.

KANSAS RAILROADS.

Think of Kansas having one-nineteenth of all the railway mileage in the United States.

The Santa Fe has 21,055 employees, who are paid a total of $11,377,038.71 a year, an average daily compensation of $2.01.

The American Express company will succeed the Pacific Express company on the Missouri, Kansas & Texas railroad in Kansas.

The Santa Fe has 53 general officers, 687 general office clerks, 517 station agents, 770 engine men, 870 firemen and 575 conductors.

The Rock Island did a business of $14,972 in Agra in the months of August, September and October. It is one of the small but live towns of Phillips county, and is having a substantial growth.

Geo. Gould has for five years been president of the Gould lines in Kansas.
He has been manager of the Gould railroad interests everywhere for some time. There is not likely to be any change in policy or practice in the operation of any Kansas railroad by reason of the death of Jay Gould.

Abilene special: An interesting law suit will come up at the next term of the United States court, regarding the Union Pacific's right to run dining cars and ignore the eating house contracts.
When the Pacific hotel was built in 1875 by T. O. Henry, then called the Henry house, a contract was made with the Kansas Pacific by which trains were to stop for meals for twenty years. During the past year the Union Pacific has ignored the contract and only stops have been made if the trains happened to be exactly on time, and never more than fifteen minutes. Most of the time no stop has been made as it injured the dining car business. The Travelers' Insurance company, which now owns the hotel, having acquired it under foreclosure, has brought suit to compel the recognition of the contract, and asking for $50,000 damages. The case is of considerable importance to Abilene, as the stopping of the trains make a decided difference in business throughout the extra meals each day.

STOCK AND FARM.

Great Bend Democrat: Mrs. Mary
Bird has in, this year, 125 acres more of wheat than she had last year, and it is doing well.

Plainville Times: Some cattle feeders, whose names we have not learned, just arrived with 300 head of cattle, and will feed them one-half mile west of Natoma, on the Horman place this winter.

Lakin Advocate: Trustee-elect George
A. Dadds, raised about 2,000 pounds of watermelon seeds this year that pay him 12 cents a pound, and about 900 pounds of cucumber seed that brings him 17½ cents a pound under a contract with D. M. Ferry & Co.

The present shortage in hogs is very great, and exists in every part of the United States. Every packing center reports an enormous decrease in the number of hogs slaughtered. In short, conditions for high-priced hogs are now much more favorable than they have been for ten years. It seems that it will be impossible to produce a large supply of hogs before the lapse of another year. The figure may reach $7 per cwt. in Kansas City.

KANSAS CHURCHES.

There have been five new churches built and dedicated in Chase county the past year.

Pawnee Rock Leader: The Christians have had a baptistry made and will put it in the church and fit up a dressing-room soon.

Phillipsburg Dispatch: The Presbyterian church has lately had the heater and pipes put in working order and that edifice now has steam heat.

Plainville Times: A series of protracted meetings was commenced Wednesday in the Tomlinson school house east of Plainville, by Rev. James I.
Haworth, of Illinois, and Rev. Wm.
Harris, of Osborne county, who are ministers of the Friends' church.

From Junction City: Rev. A. Barnes pastor of the Universalist church of the city for the past twenty years, is dead.
He was confined to the house only a short time. He was nearly 70 years of age. His death will be greatly mourned by many residents of the city. Judge James Humphrey and State Superintendents George W. Winaus spoke at the funeral service.

Will Be Commenced Next Month.

TOPEKA BUSINESS DIRECTORY

It has been intimated that Topeka business firms would not advertise in our paper for fear of aiding or supporting our cause. The following are not of that class, and we request our readers to trade with them and let them know your reason. Remember these columns are open to all persons that want your trade.
Watch for them next month.

NOTIONS. If you want Bargains in first-class goods, buy from N. W. SLY & CO., 327 North Kansas Ave.

They carry Millinery, Notions, Ladies' and Gents' Furnishing Goods, and in fact everything in a first-class store.

Kansas Carriage Works.

We make CARRIAGES,
SURREYS, BUGGIES,
SPRING WAGONS, Etc. All work fully warranted. Prices as low as the lowest for good grade of work. Remember the place, 125 and 127 Kansas Ave, between First and Crane. Give us a call, see our work, and get our prices.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.
Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.
Send for Circulars and Prices.
J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

NO HATCHER MADE
Can show better results
Over 60 in successful operation at Decatur, Ill., alone.
The greatest hatch ever accomplished, 22 chicks hatched at one time, with a 200 capacity Reliable incubator.
Hundreds of testimonials.
Incloses 4 cents in stamps for new illustrated catalogue.
RELIABLE INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., QUINCY, ILL.

Office 330 N. Kansas Ave. Residence, (Over Postoffice.) 1129 Central Ave.
A. C. DAVIS, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon.
TOPEKA, KANSAS.
Office Hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 1 to 4 and 6 to 8 p. m.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by

CLARA BEWICK COLBY,
Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUGHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURTON, KANSAS.

— I. S. & T. A. HARDING, —

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY.

Hat Dyeing and Bleaching a Specialty. Hats and Bonnets
Reshaped in the Latest Styles. Also Felt Hats Repaired. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

228 Kansas Avenue, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Home Made Netting.
Pat'd by A. G. HULBERT,
St. Louis, Mo.
SAFE, DURABLE FENCE: ONLY $80 PER MILE.
save one-half the cost avoid dangerous barbs Agents make $200.00 per month and expenses Cash
The best local and traveling agents wanted everywhere. Write at once for circulars and choose territory; address A. G. Hulbert, Patentee, care of Kulbert, Jones & Co., 304 OLIVE STREET,
St. Louis, Mo.
Factory Catalogue with 500 engraved designs and prices, sent free to any who want fancy iron and wire work or city, cemetery and farm fences, etc.

A Charming Souvenir.

We have received recently a little Souvenir Book, illustrated in colors and devoted to the description of the business of The Youths Companion, and especially illustrating the new building, which is just completed and occupied.
Every one who is interested in the paper, and we know that the number of families in our vicinity who take it increases year by year, will desire to see and read this bit of history concerning a favorite paper.

While The Companion is one of the oldest papers in the country, it having been started in 1827, it is one of the freshest and most vigorous of all our publications and has attained the unequalled circulation of six hundred thousand copies weekly. Its prospectus, containing the announcements of authors and articles for the year 1893, shows that the coming volume will be,
if possible, better than any of its predecessors.
Any new subscriber may obtain the Souvenir book free by asking for it at the time the subscription is sent. The paper will be sent free to January 1st to all who subscribe now, including the Double Holiday Numbers. Price $1.75 a year. Boston, Mass.

"Baby."

Among the monthly magazines worthy of more than passing notice, is BABY: A Journal for mothers. Every number abounds in useful and practical information for mothers, relating to the care and welfare of infants. Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher is numbered among the regular contributors. All the articles are short and to the point, and are full of helpful hints. In fact every thing that a mother ought to know is to be found in its admirably edited columns, which contain much that is entertaining, as well as instructive. In many respects "Baby" is fully equal to the standard magazines, and although devoted to a specialty—babyhood—is treated in an entertaining manner, which makes it very interesting to the general reader. Each month adds to its popularity with mothers, and now they acknowledge it as an infallible guide. The subscription price has recently been reduced to 50 cts a year, which is within the means of all.
Cash premiums are offered to those obtaining new subscribers. Any mother who has not yet seen a copy of this valuable magazine, can obtain one free by sending a stamp to the BABY
PUB. CO., 140 Broadway, N. Y.

SEND FOR for a year's trial. Subscription (40c. Regular Price 75c.) for

THE AMERICAN HEARTHSTONE, a thirty-two (32) Page Family Magazine, one of the best Family and Story Papers Published, and receive free, either the 50c. Button Hole Scissors, Pen and Pencil Stamp, 10 Useful Books for Farm and Home, or 20 Complete Novels.

10c. FOUR MONTHS ON TRIAL 10c.

The first person's letter opened daily in answer to our Advertisement containing a four month's trial. FREE. Charges Paid. All letters received in answer to our Advertisement will be numbered, and to every person we receive the hundredth letter from we will send a Fine Watch, FREE.
Charges Paid.

The above offers are for new Subscribers only.
Mention where you saw this. Agents wanted everywhere to get up Clubs. A Fine Watch or Bicycle can be secured by a few hour's work. Sample Copy and Outfit Free.

Address, AMERICAN HEARTHSTONE,
Lock Box 17. Rockaway, New Jersey.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail St. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1008 Hancock St., Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

GIRLS and boys make "$3" and friends selling Headache Powders, perfectly harmless. Sample 12c. Big pay to Agents.
F. G. STEWART & CO., 302 Dearborn St.,
Chicago, Ill.

For You Send 4 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age and sex, and receive a Clairvoyant diagnosis of your disease, free. Dr. M. E. Hill, Mechanicsville, Iowa.

New Eyes Cataracts, scars or films can be absorbed; paralyzed nerves restored; diseased eyes or lids cured;
a home treatment; "no risk;" hundreds convinced; pamphlet FREE.
THE EYE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

24 Sea Shells in neat cabinet, named (scientific) and illustrated catalogue of Nat. Hist. specimens, post paid, 30c. C. F. CARR, Madison, Wis.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR.

Destroyed forever by the Electric Needle, at the office or by patient at home. Never fails.
For terms, etc., address Dr. Daniel T. Ro Gan, 108 N. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PENNYROYAL AND COTTON PILLS
for female irregularities. Positive. Ladies, send direct to manufacturer and avoid compounds from irresponsible parties; sent, securely sealed, on receipt of $1, with plain directions.
S. M. KOLES, Chemist, 214 Delancey St., N. Y.

Humphreys' Specifics may well be called lucky numbers, and lucky, indeed, are the persons who use them. The thirty-five Specifics cover all diseases from infancy to old age.

WE CAN DO IT!

DO YOU WISH YOUR PATENTS
PRACTICALLY DEVELOPED?

VALUABLE ARTICLES MANUFACTURED?

PRACTICAL IDEAS WORKED OUT?

WE CAN DO IT
WE HAVE DONE IT.
SEE!

TOPEKA FOUNDRY,
NEAR ROCK ISLAND FREIGHT DEPOT.
TOPEKA, KANSAS.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A CHOICE SELECTION OF INTERESTING ITEMS.

Comments and Criticisms Based Upon the Happenings of the Day.

BREAD cast upon the water is supposed to be in soak.

It is not in our open exposed deeds that we need the still voice of the silent monitor, but in the small secret every-day acts of life.

SOME one has discovered the fact that when Columbus landed there was no reporter present to ask him what he thought of America.

GUY DE MAUPASSANT, the famous French story writer, is out of the lunacy hospital. The news will set his numerous admirers wild with delight.

CAPT. SHAW, ex-Chief of the London fire brigade, who, while saving other valuable things, saved a lot of money, proposes to make considerable investments in Colorado.

It's a common thing on the railroads to see sheriffs' officers bringing burglars to the penitentiary. But what does it imply when the sight causes a car porter to shed sympathetic tears?

ANOTHER San Francisco millionaire is dead, and, of course, another will contest with its usual development of scandal is promised. The San Francisco millionaire has a hard time whether alive or dead.

It's just as well that the experiment of sending up dynamite to make rain was not a success. If it had been there's such an Anarchistic flavor about this business that some of that class might be trying dynamite on the clouds for beer.

WILLIAM BRADBURY, a London publisher who has just died, was the first Englishman to print Dickens' earliest stories. He knew their merit well, for to prevent pirating he and his brother, practical printers, set up the manuscript themselves.

FACTS accumulate to prove that no condition can face this country which its natural resources are not able to cope with. The blowing of cyclones having become common here is a man out in Indiana who has raised whiskers forty-seven inches long.

If Prof. Dvrenforth could only be sent up attached to one of his dynamite ram-producing bombs, he might find out how it is that the weather office always manages to get ahead of him in fixing up rain conditions before he has time to blow them up.

The speed of the City of Paris during its recent record-breaking performance averaged over twenty-four geographical miles an hour. And she will soon be flying the American flag—a mistress of the seas, such as her national protector soon may hope to be.

THAT Lancaster man who committed suicide just before his marriage because his wedding suit had too many misfit wrinkles about it, wasn't as big a fool as many people thought him to be. He might have inflicted a misfit husband upon an unoffending wife.

THE misfortune which befell the prosperous and enterprising city of Milwaukee excited general sympathy. The burning of half a mile of buildings and the destruction of $20,000,000 worth of property is a heavy blow, but one from which Milwaukee is bound soon to recover.

DONNA CHRISTINA, Queen Regent of Spain, is a good looking blonde of 34, and looks quite that age. Queens and Princesses can make no false pretense about their age. They cannot try to pass off for being younger than they really are. The Almanach de Gotha stops all frauds of that sort.

MINNEAPOLIS professes to have a turtle weighing 150 pounds, on the back of which is engraved the name of Christopher Columbus. That is nothing. The same historic name can be found on nearly every bill board in the country and no one suspects the lamented mariner of playing it there.

POPULAR education is moving on to a point where voting will be considered not so much a political privilege as a moral duty. Then it will be recognized that there is little choice between the men who attack the purity of the ballot, and the men who refuse to defend it. Both are dangerous to the welfare of the community.

CERTAIN actors, partly by their own effort, largely by the methods of their agents, struggling for notoriety, which to them is the same thing as fame, have resorted to every possible means to keep their names before the public. Some of them have made large fortunes by so doing. It is the story of the patent medicine over again.

MISS COZZENS, a female suffragist, speaking in London to a gathering of the downtrodden sex, advocated the use of dynamite to burst the galling shackles, thus at the same time blowing sense and righteousness into the brute man. This awful suggestion was received with applause so marked that a Miss Cozzens with a bomb in either hand may be a common spectacle of the near future.

MR. LIVERNASH of Santa Rosa has acquired a habit of shooting at people. He claims that he only does this when lost in a state of auto-hypnotism. The allegation is made with some show of reason that to be shot by the hypnotic process is very like being shot with the ordinary accessories. It would certainly be reasonable to ask Livernash to also hypnotize his targets, as he seems to have an unfair advantage under present arrangements.

The story that young Hoffmann, the musical child phenomenon, who created such a furor not long ago, is a runaway in India; that he refuses to return to his parents, and that his brain is unbalanced from overwork, bears a significant moral. The forcing of precocious children—the very ones whose development should be judiciously retarded—is bound to react injuriously on their growing nervous systems and result either in the premature ruin of their talents or the overthrow of their physical health. When done through parental pride, it is still inexcusable; when done for the sake of money-making, it becomes a crime.

LADY SOMERSET is evidently very much in love with this country, and is now making it a second visit. In England she is very prominent in movements for the betterment of the working classes, and all her time is devoted to work in this direction. She is in every way a charming woman, who has plenty of money at her command, and those who saw and heard her in this country will never forget her. Between Lady Somerset and Miss Frances Willard, who is the head of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of the United States, a close friendship exists, and it is not unlikely that Lady Somerset will eventually become a permanent resident of this country. Such a woman as she is will always be very welcome wherever she goes.

THE native newspapers of Japan are lamenting the decay of good manners among the newly educated Japanese girls. They assert that under systems of education brought from foreign lands the usages of female life have, one by one, been abandoned, and the modern girl, in her attempts to imitate foreign manners, has almost transferred herself into a man. They say that pupils in the female schools at Tokio of good families live alone in lodging houses, often walk unattended in the streets after dark, and groups of five or six of them may be seen playing at cards in tea houses. The Japan Mail, commenting upon their complaints, says that it is a subject of regret that female schools conducted on western lines should attempt to force a new code of morals among the natives.

A Horse's Consideration for a Baby.

A lady correspondent vouches for the following: A Delaware County mother missing her baby boy the other day found him in the stable in close proximity to and clapping the hind legs of a family horse with loud and delighted cries. Although a spirited animal, the horse stood perfectly still under the shower of blows, seemingly afraid to stir for fear of hurting the infantile tormentor, refusing even to eat. As soon as the child was removed the horse changed to a more comfortable position and resumed its meal.—Philadelphia Ledger.

VERY few people reach old age without suffering from some complaint that is the result of having too good a time when they were young.

THE NEW YEAR.

LUSTY babe with winter's dare,
The winds thy lullaby;
With outstretched hands eager to share
A bright or frowning sky.

We welcome thee, glad baby year,
A throne is thine to grace;
We give thee love and happy cheer,
On thee a crown we place.

Again shall lips the story tell,
Beneath thy bonding skies;
The story that they know so well,
Of love's sweet sacrifice.

Again shall hearts with anguish throb,
Sweet prayers ascend to God;
Again the rich the poor shall rob,
With blood be red the sod.

Oh, bring us more of love than hate,
And more of sun than shade;
Lead us to God's fair garden gate,
The beauty He hath made.
—Good Housekeeping.

ONE CHRISTMAS GIFT.

SNOWBALL struck the cabin door—a genuine Christmas snowball, white as milk, crisp as pearl flakes, and it jangled the fastenings of the great oaken barrier with a musical, metallic sound that suggested Christmas bells and Christmas melody.

"Hello, there! Wake up, John Ridgely! Ten in the morning, day before Christmas, and you promised to be ready on time," rang out a cheery, challenging voice, and the door opened at the call.

"I've been waiting for over an hour—" began this same John Ridgely, appearing at the threshold, but a second sudden sphere cut short the sentence. He made a dash for his two mischievous visitors, athletic young fellows, just approaching manhood, and then, flushed, laughing and skaking the spattered snowflakes from head and shoulders, the jolly trio entered the cabin.

"I say, what a rare old den of bachelor comfort you've got here, John!" spoke one of the visitors. "Talk about the fancy rugs and carpets up at the house and then look at that warm, sleek deer's skin, and those great mats made from a bear robe! As to the larder—I say, Hal! what would mother or Nellie say to get their pick for a holiday feast from such a royal layout of game?"

John Ridgely's eyes glowed with pride at this praise of his domestic equipment; then, flushing quickly, he bent over his cartridge belt to hide the shadow of pain upon his face.

Nellie! The name was enshrined in his innermost soul. It brought back the past with all its brightness—it haunted the bleak, unpromising present. His visitors were her brothers—old-time comrades, home for the holiday vacation from college, and bent on a hunting expedition. He was glad when he saw them engrossed in admiring this and that trophy of his sportsman skill. It afforded him time to conceal his surging emotion.

Life had not dealt fairly with John Ridgely—love, as well, had been a cruel taskmaster—he realized it every time his mind went back over the past two years.

Somewhat longer ago than that he had to come to visit his uncle at Hillsdale, ere starting out to fight the battle of life. Old Abner Ridgely was his one living relative in the world, a sickly, miserly old man tottering on the verge of the grave, and just subsisting in the rude apology for a shelter that had since been his home.

The very day of John's arrival, his uncle had suffered his second stroke of paralysis, and John became his nurse. Duty and anxiety had enslaved him to the old man's whims. He could not leave him to die alone, and the months rolled by and found him a fixture in the rude cabin.

"Don't leave me, John!" more than once had the old man quavered. "You shall not be sorry. Some day I will die, and then—you shall be my heir."

Heir to what? John had smiled satirically as he looked about the wrecked hut. Impatiently he thought of the great pulsing world outside, waiting to reward just such high ambitions as those he entertained, and then, one day, one royal, golden June morning, a vision crossed his dull path in the woods that illumined the green arcades with glory, and held him chained anew to Hillsdale by bonds he could not break.

Nellie—bonny, winsome Nellie Linden! She flashed across his destiny like a star of promise and beauty. Oh! the rare days of summertime, the walks, the boating, love expressed in glance and smile, though never spoken, and then, a dark void in life. She, the daughter of proud, well-to-do Robert Linden, merchant, the sister of his two present visitors, left home without a parting word to him, and all the sunlight of life seemed suddenly dashed out.

Once only since then had he heard of Nellie. She was visiting a wealthy spinster aunt in the city, who seemed to have but two objects in life—to make Nellie her heiress, and marry her to the son of a favorite friend.

That settled it as far as John Ridgely was concerned. She was probably engaged to her new lover by this time—she had undoubtedly forgotten all about him long since. Then old Abner Ridgely died, and just that that day John had concluded arrangements for selling the cabin and its land, intending to leave permanently the scene of an experience that had aged his heart and deadened all the active impulses of his ambition.

"Ready, boys!" he announced, with a painful effort to appear cheerful, shouldering his gun, whistling to his dog, and leading the way from the cabin.

Hal and Vincent chatted volubly as they followed him along the snowy paths leading into the woods.

"Oh, John!" exclaimed the former abruptly, "I've a message for you."

"A message?" faltered John, vaguely.

"Yes, from mother. She says you must come up to the house this afternoon. They're going to have a Christmas tree for the little ones this evening, and you're to select the nicest one you can find and take it up to her early, and stay with us until to-morrow."

"I'm afraid I can't—can't spare the time," stammered John, with a glance at his rough attire.

"Oh! you'll appear in disguise, John," laughed Vincent.

"In disguise?"

"Yes, mother says you'd make a famous Santa Claus, and in that rare old bearskin coat of yours, and your coon cap back at the cabin, you would deceive old Kriss Kringle himself. You've got to come, John. Pity that Nellie won't be there, but we got a letter saying that aunt was sick, and she might have to stay with her during the holidays."

John gave a reluctant assent to the arrangements suggested. At noon he left his companions, who, hot for sport, after seeing him bring down a turkey, insisted on continuing the hunt alone. He threaded the lonely paths leading back to the cabin.

Motherly Mrs. Linden received him with a glowing smile of welcome, as later he appeared at the big house on the hill and tendered the turkey as a Christmas gift, and vainly tried to creep out of appearing at the evening's festivities.

John Ridgely tried to look brave and happy and cheerful as he returned to the Linden home that evening. He had provided the prettiest evergreen the forest afforded. He could see it now gleaming with lighted candles through the bright panes, he could hear the merry voices of little ones at play.

"I'll go through with it for their sakes," he murmured; "I'll try not to think of Nellie. I'll leave the letter I have written her, the story of all my hopeless love for her, the expression of my wishes for her happiness with a luckier wooer, then to-morrow, a new life far away, the past covered over, if not forgotten."

It was almost forgotten amid the festivities of the ensuing hour. What heart, unless, indeed, formed of flint or ice, could resist the warm, exhilarating influence of such a cheery Christmas eve? And he was its center of attraction! The great bearskin coat made him stand out like a holiday picture; and the little ones stared in awe as John handed them their gifts from the dazzling tree.

His heart sank again, heavy as lead, however, as he found himself alone. Upon the tree, in pursuance of a family custom, hung yet the gifts designed for its older members. Here was a neat little package suggestive of a tiny timepiece, marked "Hal, from Mother," a second similar parcel directed to Vincent, and John Ridgely's eyes grew tender and moist, as he discerned a pretty silk-embroidered handbag, bearing a strip of paper marked "Nellie, from Little Cora, her Sister." A quick impulse actuated him. Stealthily he drew forth the letter he had written to Nellie that day. He slipped it into the hand bag. It was safe for delivery when the girl he loved came home.

Then in a mournful reverie he sat, waiting till the juvenile feast was over in the next apartment, when he was to resume his role and lead the sports for the evening.

There was a great shout from the youngsters and the jangling of merry sleigh-bells outside. John noticed it only as a part of the general babel.

Suddenly the door flew open. Excited little Cora Linden dashed into the room.

"Where is it?" she breathed, with sparkling eyes. "Where's Nellie's present I worked for her? Oh, here it is!"

She grasped the hand-bag from the tree, making the candles blink and shiver in nervous dread of a general tip-over, and danced out of the room again like a very sprite.

John read the flickle impulse of a novice as gift-making in the action. Cora was bent on showing her hand! work on the pretty silken bag to some new visitor, probably. His letter was not likely to be unearthed.

He started violently as a hand touched his shoulder ten minutes later. Little Cora was standing by his side.

She had entered the room noiselessly, and her face showed grave concern and excitement commingled.

"Have you got your present yet, John Ridgely?" she demanded, with pretty imperiousness.

"My present?" smiled John, viewing the little lady, amusedly. "Oh, yes! My present is your happy smile."

"No!" and the persistent challenger shook her golden head sagely. "Your real, true Christmas present? Because—I've got one for you."

"Bless you! Have you now?" echoed John.

"Yes. Hold out your hand!"

John obeyed his capricious companion.

"Now, shut your eyes!"

"Oh? This is getting very mysterious, little one!"

"You mind me, John Ridgely, shut both eyes. You're peeking!"

"No I ain't," asserted John stanchly, screwing up his cheeks till they were regular crows' feet.

"Honest? You won't look one little bit?"

"I promise you."

"All right. Now, then, keep your eyes tight shut and keep your hand wide open, and don't stir, nor breathe, nor move, until I say, now!"

"Till you say now," recited the accommodating John, "I'll be patient as an owl and blind as a bat."

He was faithful to his pledge. He could hear the little creature speed across the room and there was a fluttering whispering at the door, the suspicious wish of a silken robe.

"Hold tight!" spoke Cora's voice once more. "John Ridgely, these are the Christmas presents she told me to bring you. Now!"

Into his hand crept a contact soft as silk. He thrilled at a warm, tremulous touch. He opened his eyes. Little Cora was just disappearing through the door of the next room, but his hand still clasped the "present" she had placed there. He looked up.

Oh! was he dreaming? Was this but a part of the reverie of the hour? A woman's hand lay within his own, a woman's face, coy, shrinking yet tender, looked down at him—his "Christmas gift," Nellie!

Yes, it was she. Read the mystery as he might, he could surely trace in that blushing face the truest, deepest love.

"Nellie!"

His soul seemed rocking between extremes of hope and dread.

She never faltered in her true, womanly glance. She never took her hand away, only with her free one she held into view—his letter!

"Little Cora brought it to me in the hand-bag, and I read it, John," whispered Nellie, softly. "I came home at the last moment unexpectedly. I have quarreled with my aunt. She wanted me to marry her favorite, when my heart—oh, John! John! how could you doubt me? How could I love another when my heart was here—here!"

He folded her to his heart with one sob of joy and gratitude supreme, the happiest soul in all wide Christendom.

"John! John Ridgely! Oh! come here, quick!"

From the happy paradise of love those two were summoned abruptly by the excited voice of Hal Linden.

"Oh! but we made a find!" echoed Vincent Linden, bursting unceremoniously upon the lovers, and followed by half the wondering household. "You told us where to find game when you left us to-day. Remember?"

"Yes," nodded the mystified John.

"And Hal and I cornered some rare shots. Just at dusk, right near the cabin, we ran a fox to cover. Hal insisted on digging for him, because he thought it a shallow knoll, and not his den. We dug, and found—"

"This!" interpolated Hal, quite as excitedly.

He dragged into view a small pine box. Ice and frozen dirt clung to it still. He pushed off the cover.

"Money—gold!" gasped John incoherently.

"Lots of it, heaps of it, over two thousand dollars!" shouted Vincent. "Don't you understand, John? It's part of your uncle's fortune, the fortune he left to you, the fortune you could never find!"

Clink, clink! The golden coins gave forth a joyful sound as they were emptied out upon the carpet.

Outside a happier echo took up the mellow refrain.

"The Christmas chimes!" murmured happy Nellie Linden, nestling closer to the man she loved.

Her eyes met those of John in a tender glance as she spoke.

And both knew that the silvery tones were a harbinger of wedding bells later on that would signalize the victory of loyal hearts reunited, made happy while life should last, upon that glorious, beautiful Christmas eve.

PAUL INGELow.

REAL RURAL READING

WILL BE FOUND IN THIS DEPARTMENT.

How to F Board Fences Economically—Give Attention to Details—To Prevent Washouts in Grain Fields—An Effective Game Trap—Notes Etc.

Board Fences.

Every farmer who builds board fence knows that the main cost is the posts and digging the holes and setting them. If we buy first-class locust posts they cost 20 to 25 cents each, and it takes two for each rod; and if we set cheap posts they rot off in a few years and the fence must be re-built. More than fifteen years ago, writes Waldo F. Brown in the Practical Farmer, I invented a fence which supports itself without posts, and I have had it in use on my farm ever since, and it has given good satisfaction. I call it a self-supporting truss fence, because it requires no posts; but to make it perfectly safe in exposed situations, stakes should be driven down in the notches between the panels after the fence is set up. The drawing above gives an idea of the fence. The panels can be made in the barn or shop, all ready to be put up and this is an advantage, for rainy weather can be utilized in making it. The boards are nailed to uprights of hardwood two inches square, and beveled at the top, so that when the panels are leaned together these bevels will exactly fit each other. In setting up this fence the panels are leaned towards each other, with the foot of the uprights from two and a half to three feet apart, and then short boards are nailed from one upright to the other, to hold the fence in place. Fig. 2 shows an end view of the fence, which is one of the trusses which takes the place of a post, and B B are the short boards nailed across from one upright to the other, to hold the panels of the fence together. A stake, three inches in diameter, driven in the ground flat against these short boards, and a nail driven through each board into it, makes the fence as firm as if there were good posts set in the ground. I have some of this fence made only three boards high, with a barbed wire stretched above it and fastened to the stakes, and this still further reduces its cost, for a board 16 feet long costs as many cents, but a wire of this length only 3 or 4 cents. It is not best, however, to make this fence in panels 10 feet long, as they are awkward to handle and will sag a little. I like to make a fence with panels just 11 feet long, as then three of them make just two rods, and by buying a part of the lumber 12 feet long and a part 14 there will be a very little waste, as the ends cut off can be used for the short stay boards on the trusses. Fig. 3 shows the three-board fence with the wire above.

To Prevent Washouts in Grain Fields. If comparatively level fields are sown to wheat or rye, furrows should be made that will quickly carry off all the superfluous water, says the American Agriculturist. The furrows should follow the lowest portion of the field, even if it be a tortuous course. It is best to do this immediately after seeding, but it may be done at any time before the ground becomes frozen solid. Of course, some of the grain will be destroyed, but by scattering, with a fork or shovel, the upturned soil, only the plants in the immediate channel will be lost, and this precaution often saves ten times that amount being drowned out or stunted in low places. If grain occupies the steep hillside, furrows should be made from the lowest places leading down and horizontally around the hill, thus conveying much of the surplus water to the direct portions. If the furrows are gradually sloping, washing will be prevented. If the hill is quite steep several furrows should be drawn, thus diverting heavy rainfalls into several channels, with consequent less danger from washing or overflow.

Attention to Details.

Careful attention to details very often is the turning point between a profit and a loss. This is more noticeable where the competition is strong in the farming line, while prices are low and fluctuating. Hence make the best use of each day. Have the men do some work that tells to advantage. Do not let crops go to waste, but secure them promptly when matured, look after the stock while at pasture, give the work animals healthy food, feed regularly, and do not water them too warm. If the harness, vehicles, or machinery have any weak points, repair in time and do not wait until a break occurs that may cause hours of lost time in a busy season. Keep the fences in good repair, thereby saving your own crops and keeping on good terms with your neighbors. Sell crops and stock when a fair price can be obtained. If a neighbor has stock for sale cheap and you have the pasture, or feed, to still further add to its value, then make a deal. Trading sharpens the wits, and makes one more observant of honest opportunities.

A Game Trap.

Here is a trap, as described in Farm and Home, for catching any game that will take bait. For the bottom use a board 16 inches long. The sides should be 12 inches long and nailed or screwed to the bottom so that it will project 2 inches for the foot to rest on while setting the trap. Use two standards 16 or 18 inches long, which are screwed to one end of the box. The middle piece is a round stick of hard wood to which is attached a coiled spring. The fork may be made of wood or iron and is for catching the game when the trap is sprung. A piece of seasoned hickory is used to attach the bait on, as shown in the cut. This holds the trap up when set and lets it down when the bait is taken. Underneath the fork are fastened a number of spikes or pointed irons to make sure of holding the game.

All Around the Farm.

MARK all the grain bags. MAKE your farm productive will pay.

A RICH soil is an essential to the growing of good crops.

CHURN at as low a temperature as you can and wash the butter grains with cold water.

LINSEED and cotton seed (cake or meal) is excellent, but all oily foods are liable to cause moulting.

A WHEAT crop of twenty bushels per acre at 75 cents per bushel will give some profit, but it is much better to raise thirty bushels.

CORN fodder, put in shocks and left in the field during a good part of the fall and winter, loses from one-third to one-half of its feeding value.

When your birds have bowel disease change the food for a day or two and change the grit. One-half the troubles are from lack of sharp, hard grit.

THE farmer who raises uniformly good crops does not suffer much from the fluctuations in price. The good crops pay a profit over production even when prices are the lowest.

By judicious feeding, well-bred 2-year-old steers may be made to weigh upward of two pounds for each day of their lives. At that rate of gain beef production can be made profitable.

CORN is the great food for fattening. There is nothing equal to it for making hard, solid pork that commands the highest market price. Swine, however, will be able to digest more of it, if allowed turnips, potatoes, carrots or beets and some bran instead of nothing at all but corn. Too much corn will "cloy" them.

Farmers and Fertilizers.

There are truths in connection with farming that are known and have been expressed many times, and yet are of a character that require repeating over and over and over again, so as to keep them constantly before the minds of farmers. One of these is a want of knowledge of the requirements of the farm as relates to the application of fertilizers. Most of the States provide through their experiment stations for the determination of the fertilizing value of the various compounds that are thrown upon the market, and so far as this goes is of service and a protection against undiscoverable frauds that might otherwise be practiced upon the farmers. But with all this, are they exercising as great care as they should in the selection of the goods they use? The requirements of the soil should be fairly well understood, and then a better estimate can be made of what is best adapted to the soil to which it is applied. There is another point that ought also to be considered, that various fertilizing elements exist in very different forms, which present very different commercial values as well as fertilizing values. It is important then that the farmer should become sufficiently acquainted with these values in the different forms in which they may be found, so as to be able to judge of the desirability of a fertilizer. When, as is the case in the State of Rhode Island, the difference between the selling price and commercial prices ranges from $39.33 per ton to the small difference of two cents per ton, it can be seen how much may be saved by the application of a little knowledge.—Germantown Telegraph.

How to Make Working Mittens.

Bed ticking is the principal and best material for home made working mittens, although they can be made of old bags or overalls. A. The full round thumbless cut shows the back side of the mitten. B. The palm and the front side of the thumb. This should be made double or it can be faced with soft leather, for this is the part where all the wear comes. C is the top part of the front side of the mitten and thumb. D the mitten complete. First sew B and C together, forming the thumb and the front side of the mitten, and then to the back (A), making the mitten complete. This is a much handier and better pattern than the old method, because there is no thumb to set, which is the hardest part of the job. The face can be replaced when worn out, also.—Practical Farmer.

A Blanket of Snow.

A winter covering of snow for the fields, grass, or grain, is extremely beneficial, preventing deep freezing of the soil, keeping the plants and their roots at an almost uniform temperature, and the almost daily freezing and thawing that occurs on land not thus protected. The covering of snow should be made as uniform as possible by placing branches of evergreens or any other obstruction about the open spaces in fields and especially upon the knolls and other elevations where the wind sweeps away the fallen snow. These obstructions need not be placed in position until the ground is frozen solid, when other farm work is not pressing, and should there be an open winter the protection afforded by the obstructions alone will amply repay the labor and expense.

Sheep Shearings.

ESPECIALLY when on dry feed sheep need a good supply of water.

TO KEEP sheep healthy they require a frequent change of food.

LOOK over the flock and sell the sheep that show the least improvement.

INFERIOR sheep are often a drag when good sheep sell readily at good prices.

NEVER allow sheep to be frightened or run by a dog or in any way be disturbed.

If any of the ewes have poor teeth it will always pay to feed them ground feed.

A SHEEP kept thrifty will shear a heavier and better fleece than one poorly kept.

In commencing to feed grain to sheep, feed a small quantity at first and gradually increase.

THE farmer that is too careless to give sheep good care will do better with some other class of stock.

SHEEP of different ages and conditions should be sorted into different lots and the weaker ones have a little better feed.

WITH comfortable surroundings, which implies dry, warm shelter and regular feeding, a small amount of grain can be made to count.

The Housekeeper.

GRATE and bottle odd bits of cheese ready for use.

ONIONS keep best when spread out on a dry floor.

PRICK potatoes before baking to allow the air to escape.

THE tone of the piano is not so good when it is set back against the wall.

IT is stated that cheese will not mold if wrapped in a cloth with cider vinegar.

PLACE a lump of camphor gum with the silver ware to keep it from tarnishing.

A good way to clean stovepipes is to rub them well with linseed oil while they are warm.

CORK that has been boiled may be pressed more tightly into a bottle than when it is cold.

ONE of the best remedies for bruises, where the skin has not been broken, is arnica and sweet oil.

COFFEE grounds can be used to fill pin-cushions. They should be put in a bag and hung up back of the stove until they are perfectly dry.

Mrs. BOTTOME writes to the Ladies' Home Journal: "I am tired of seeing all the flowers at weddings and funerals; we need a few betwixt."

Definitions of Vanity.

On July 30 we offered a prize of two guineas for the best definition of "vanity." The winning definition is: "The rose-colored spectacles through which we view ourselves."

The following are some of the definitions sent in:

The thin end of nothing sharpened to a point.

The reflection of nothing seen in the glass of self-conceit.

The tendency which most men have to keep their best goods in the front shop window.

A bird that has a gorgeous wing. Yet has no beautiful song to sing.

Fools' food.

Emptiness priding itself on its contents.

An attempt to recommend ourselves by a behavior contrary to our real character.

The minimum of egg and the maximum of cackle.

The egotism of little souls.

A hollow dream upon which any passer-by may play.

A merciful provision of nature whereby fools are satisfied with their folly.

An inflated belief in the vastness of our supreme nothingness.

A mirror in which we always see the faults of others, but never see our own.

A sensitive plant which cannot live without the sunshine of public applause.

The peacock's tail of humanity.

A grain of sand convinced that it is a mountain.

The outward fullness of inward emptiness.

Everybody's private opinion.

The gilded robes in which ignorance wraps itself.

A mean, petty conceit of any superiority, showing want of true greatness.

A house of which the roof is emptiness, the walls shadows, the windows ignorance, the doors conceit, and of foundation there is none.

An undue sense of self-appreciation.

Man's meanest attempt to cheat nature.

The incurable "I" affection which unfortunately blinds us all.

Pride demoralized.

The attribute that makes a farthing dip fancy itself an electric light.

A small "I" with a big dot.

Concentrated essence of self-opinion.

The glory of mean ambition.

A permanent eagerness to bask in one's own splendor and to dazzle others by it.

The difference between a fool's estimate of his own value and the estimate of the world at large.—London Tidbits.

Ice.

Impure ice is as dangerous as impure water. Ice for domestic use should never be gathered from a source where the water before freezing was unfit for drinking purposes. The idea entertained by some that water in freezing eliminates its impurities, is a dangerous theory, because it is false. Epidemics have been traced to the use of polluted ice. Analysis and microscopic investigations have shown ice to contain large quantities of organic matter as well as bacteria, which became active when the ice was melted. The germs of typhoid fever, and probably of other diseases, may be imprisoned in ice, and after liberation, by melting, become active in the production of disease.

Be as guarded in the selection of ice as in the choice of a supply of water. Gather ice only from clean streams and ponds. Purchase from no dealer who does not follow this rule.—Bulletin R. I. Board Health.

He Couldn't.

So long as one thing continues to look like another, so long will men continue to find themselves falling into mistakes. The Detroit Free Press lately chronicled a case in point.

Principal Smith is one of the wisest and kindest of teachers, but now and then his watchfulness makes him over-suspicious. In the geography class the other day his eye fell upon a boy who seemed to be eating something.

"Jack," said the master, sternly, "take that piece of candy out of your mouth at once."

To his astonishment a giggle went round the room, and the next instant poor Jack answered:

"I can't, sir; it's a gumboil."

Why Brick-laden Vessels Founder.

Cargoes of brick have to be stowed in the most careful manner, says the Philadelphia Record, or else the vessels carrying them will founder in the mildest weather, owing to the strong tendency of the brick to absorb the water caused by the leakage which necessarily occurs on all wooden vessels. The brick will absorb the water as fast as it runs in from an ordinary leak, and the increased weight of the brick causes the vessel to settle until she makes the final plunge; and the crew are frequently at a loss to know the cause. To new shoals, defective work in the vessel's construction, and other causes are attributed the disasters.

Homer's Heroes.

The roasts of Homer's heroes was garnished with the entrails of oxen.

Saw Them in a New Light.

Jane Rogers was a good girl, devout and positive in her religious belief. She had always lived in a village where nearly every one belonged to the same denomination, and she had grown into the belief that every one who was outside of its pale must be wrong.

It was a subject of regret, almost of distress, to her to know that none of her cousins in New York—whom she had never seen—belonged to this church which was so dear to her. John Rogers' family were Presbyterians, James Rogers were Methodists, and her Aunt Catharine's children differed widely from her on the subject of baptism.

When it was arranged that Jane should go to New York and spend the winter among her kinsfolk, she felt as if she were a missionary venturing among those who were almost heathen. She read books on the different creeds, and resolved to be unflinching in her defense of what she believed to be the truth.

The day came, and she started. There was a frightful railway accident. Jane, badly injured, was carried with others of the wounded to a hospital in the city.

Her friends hastened there to meet her. They would have each of them taken her to their homes, but she was too seriously injured to be moved. She saw their pale, anxious faces, and caught loving glances on every side. As days passed and she approached convalescence, these strange faces became inexpressibly dear to her.

She learned to call them by name. The kind, grave old man was Cousin Ben; the two merry girls were his nieces; the sweet-faced old lady was Aunt Mary. They all brought flowers to her and to the poor, friendless patients in the same hospital. They went from bed to bed, comforting and cheering the wounded and the dying. Sometimes they repeated hymns, read the Bible, or prayed with some wretched sufferer.

Day after day her kinsfolk came, honest, friendly men and gentle women, each bent on doing God's work for His hurt, sick children, among whom she lay.

When Jane's mother reached the city and hurried to her, the girl told her with glad tears of their kindness.

"They have kept me hopeful, they have kept me nearer to God," she said.

Her mother was bewildered. "Which of these were the Baptists, and which the Methodists, and which the Presbyterians?" she asked.

Jane was silent for a moment.

"I do not know," she said in a low voice. "I did not ask what doctrines they believed. But I saw that when they came to the sick and dying God was in their hearts."

Jane learned in the hospital that the foundation of Christ's church is broader than sectarian walls when it means faith in him and love to our brother.—Youth's Companion.

A Mortifying Mistake.

I studied my tables over and over, and backward and forward, too. But I couldn't remember six times nine, and I didn't know what to do. Till sister told me to play with my doll and not to bother my head.

"If you call her 'Fifty-four' for a while, you'll learn it by heart," she said.

So I took my favorite, Mary Ann (though I thought 't was a dreadful shame to give such a perfectly lovely child such a perfectly horrid name). And I called her my dear little "Fifty-four" a hundred times, till I knew the answer of six times nine as well as the answer of two times two.

Next day Elizabeth Wigglesworth, who always acts so proud, said "Six times nine is fifty-two," and I nearly laughed aloud! But I wished I hadn't when teacher said, "Now, Dorothy, tell if you can." For I thought of my 'foll and—sake alive!—I answered—"Mary Ann!"

—St. Nicholas.

A Scotch Joke.

A farmer's wife, not a hundred miles from Dingwall, has a great deal of trouble with her servants. The other day one of them came to her to say: "Madame, I fear I shall not be able to work much longer! I think I am going blind." "Why, how is that?" You seem to get along pretty well with your work?" "Yes; but I can no longer see any meat on my plate at dinner." The farmer's wife understood, and the next day the servants were served with very large and very thin pieces of meat. "How nice!" the girl exclaimed; "my sight has come back. I can see better than ever." "How is that, Bella?" "Why at this moment," replied Bella, "I can see plate through the meat."—Dundee News.

A Veteran Taking Fares.

One of the street-car conductors in Oakland, Mr. A. F. Parker, possesses two medals awarded to him for bravery on the battlefield—one the gift of the Queen and the other of the Khedive of Egypt. He is a survivor of Wolsey's expedition for the relief of Gordon, and took part in the terrible march across the desert to Khartoum—the march which won Bismarck's highest commendation. Parker was a corporal in the Sixth Dragoons, and fought at Abu-Klea and Mettamme. He says that the last words of the bold Lord Beresford when he fell at Abu-Klea were, as he pointed to a Gatling gun: "Turn that handle lively and we'll make the devils dance."—Argonaut.

The National Women's Alliance Incorporated.

A charter for the National Woman's Alliance was filed with the Secretary of State September 24, 1901. The incorporators are the wife of Senator Peffer, the wife of Congressman Olin, the wife of Secretary J. B. French, of the State Farmers' Alliance, Mrs. Emma D. Pack, editor of the Topeka Farmer's Wife, and Mrs. Fannie McCormick, worthy foreman of the Knights of Labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION IS TO ESTABLISH A BUREAU FOR THE BETTER EDUCATION OF WOMEN ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS AND TO DEVELOP A BETTER STATE, MENTALLY, MORALLY, AND FINANCIALLY, WITH THE FULL AND UNCONDITIONAL USE OF THE BALLOT.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Fannie McCormick, president; Mrs. Emma D. Pack, secretary; and Mrs. Bina A. Otis, treasurer, with the following vice presidents:

- Mrs. M. B. Cloud, of Alabama.
- Emma Ghent Curtis, Colorado.
- Annetta Nye, California.
- Marion Todd, Illinois.
- Annabella McCom, Kentucky.
- P. A. Stafford, Missouri.
- Eva McDonald Valesh, Minnesota.
- S. E. V. Emery, Michigan.
- Elizabeth Rodgers, New Jersey.
- Anna D. Weaver, New York.
- L. D. Stillson, Arkansas.
- Alice J. Taylor, Mississippi.
- Mary M. Clardy, Texas.
- Anna L. Diggs, District of Columbia.
- D. F. Pierce, Washington.
- Mary E. Lease, Kansas.
- E. M. Ward, South Dakota.
- Eleanor Goodrich, Iowa.
- Mary L. Jeffs, Ohio.
- Mame C. Bonham, Indiana.

The FARMER'S WIFE, published at Topeka, was designated as the official organ.

The committee on constitution and by-laws report the following:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

In view of the great social, industrial and financial revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the universal demand of all classes of our American citizens for equal rights and privileges on every question of human life, we, the industrial women of America, declare our purposes in the formation of this organization as follows, viz:

- 1st. To study all questions relating to the structure of human society, in the full light of modern invention, discovery and thought.
- 2d. To carry out into practical life the precepts of the golden rule.
- 3d. To recognize the full political equality of the sexes.
- 4th. To aid in carrying out the principle of co-operation in every department of human life to its fullest extent.
- 5th. To secure the utmost harmony and unity among the Sisterhood, in all sections of the country.
- 6th. To teach the principles of international arbitration and, if possible, to prevent war.
- 7th. To discourage in every way possible, the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or the habitual use of tobacco or other narcotics injurious to the human system.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Women's Alliance.

Sec. 2. The officers shall consist of a President, Secretary and Treasurer, also one Vice President from each state and territory represented, and an Executive Board of five.

Sec. 3. Officers shall be elected at the regular annual meeting in each year.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the organization.

Sec. 5. In the absence of the President, one of the Vice Presidents may preside, as the meeting may select. Each Vice President shall have charge of the work in her state until a state organization is perfected, and shall act as the general organizer of her state and report the progress of the work to the National Secretary every month.

Sec. 6. The Secretary shall keep a correct record of the proceedings of the Alliance, conduct the correspondence, keep the official seal and authenticate all documents, receive all moneys and turn the same over to the Treasurer and take a receipt therefor.

Sec. 7. The Treasurer is to receipt for all moneys and pay the same out upon the order of the President, countersigned by the Secretary.

Sec. 8. The Executive Board shall have charge of the organization when the Alliance is not in session, and shall examine the books of the Secretary and Treasurer prior to the annual meeting and report the condition of the same, and shall provide for the time and place of meeting of the Alliance when not otherwise provided for.

ARTICLE II.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. A state organization shall be chartered by the National Alliance whenever seven local organizations are formed, in compliance with the National constitution.

Sec. 2. Each community shall be organized under the direction of the State Organizer, whenever ten members are enrolled.

Sec. 3. That each community shall have a representation in the state organization of one delegate for every twenty members or fraction thereof in excess of ten, provided each organization shall be entitled to one delegate.

Sec. 4. That each state organization shall be entitled to one delegate to the National Alliance for every 100 members in the state or fraction in excess of fifty.

STATUTORY LAWS.

SECTION 1. Any woman desiring to advance the social, moral, intellectual and financial condition of her race, can become a member of this Alliance by signing this constitution and declaration of purposes, and paying the fee of 30 cents and a monthly dues of 5 cents to the secretary of their local assembly.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the local organization to send to the secretary of the State organization the sum of 15 cents for each member enrolled, and 5 cents each quarter out of dues paid in by each member during the quarter.

Sec. 3. That the secretary of the State organization shall send to the secretary of the national organization the sum of 5 cents out of membership fees received during the quarter, and one-half of all dues paid into the State secretary during the quarter.

Sec. 4. That all charters shall be issued from the National Alliance. State charters shall be furnished at $2.00 and local charters at $1.00.

Sec. 5. This constitution and by-laws can be amended at any time by a majority vote of the National Women's Alliance at any regular annual meeting.

(Mrs. M. E. LEASE,
Committee.
Mrs. B. A. OTIS,
Mrs. M. C. CLARE,
The incorporators are the executive board for the first year.
Mrs. FANNIE MCCORMICK, Pres't.
Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, Sec'y.

Woman's Chronicle.

Published every Saturday.
MRS. KATE CUNNINGHAM, Editor.
MRS. MARY BROOKS, Associate Editor.
TERMS, $1.00 Per Year, IN ADVANCE.
Cor. 2nd and Louisiana Sts., Little Rock, Ark.

JOHN SPEAR,
Wholesale and Retail Dealer in
5 AND 10 CENT GOODS.
338 Kansas Avenue,
NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SILK DRESS FREE!
We will GIVE AWAY absolutely FREE of cost, an elegant black or colored SILK DRESS (pattern of 16 yards to any young lady in every town in America) who is willing to introduce among her friends "THE MODERN QUEEN," a large 16-page 61 column, illustrated magazine, one of the best published. Devoted to Fiction, Fashions, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decorations and everything pertaining to the household. Send at once 25 cents for the magazine one year on trial and a package of elegant silks to select from.
Address: THE MODERN QUEEN CO.,
75-79 Center Street, NEW HAVEN, CONN.
Mention this paper.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes, Medici Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enameled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE,
TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong marbled binding, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

- "Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, T. ronto.
- "A vast amount of trust worthy matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.
- "An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.
- "A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.
- "Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.
- "A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.
- "Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

Our Offer. By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manila binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which they may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book," absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following: Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers; Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, by which you may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book," absolutely free. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; clever and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,
THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

SEEDS J. G. PEPPARD, 1400-1402 UNION AV., MILLET A SPECIALTY.

Red, White, Alfalfa and Alsike Clovers, Timothy, Blue Grass, Orchard Grass, Red Top, Onion Sets, Tree Seeds, Cane Seed.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 Broadway, New York.

Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No business man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

COMPLEXION WAFFERS.

LADIES

If you desire to LOOK YOUNG and BEAUTIFUL, use ARSENIC CHARCOAL TABLETS. They cleanse and brighten the complexion and sweeten the breath. Very popular with Society Ladies. Address: Dr. SWEENEY, Allegheny, N. Y.

1840-1893.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while nothing but a pleasant man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

"TRUE" NATIONALIST.

Progressive, Fearless and Spicy.

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.00 PER YEAR.

Advocates the Initiative, the Referendum and the Imperative Mandate as the best means of progress on the lines of Human Liberty. Commends its principles to MEN of all political parties. Corner Beaver and Pearl Streets, New York City.

500 PARCELS OF MAIL FREE

Includes Sample Books, Novels, Pictures, Magazines, Letters, Papers, etc., each with your address boldly printed on each wrapper. You will receive more choice reading and heavier mail of any one at your town. We will also insert your address for twelve months in our Guaranteed Directory, that goes circulating daily to Manufacturers and Publishers all over the world; and 500 of your badly printed and damaged addresses, in two colors, for your personal use to select your letters, books, etc.; also Lam Smith's 16-page Herald, 12 months (regular price 50 cents). All free and post-paid to you. Send your address today on a postal to GUMMED ADDRESS CO., 126 S. 8th St., Phila., Pa.

HUMPHREYS' VETERINARY SPECIFICS

For Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Dogs, Hogs, AND POULTRY.

500 Page Book on Treatment of Animals and Chart Sent Free.

CURES: Fevers, Congestions, Inflammation, A. A. (Spinal Meningitis), Milk Fever, E. B. (Strains, Lameness, Rheumatism, C. C. (Distemper, Nasal Discharges, D. D. (Bots or Grubs, Worms, E. E. (Coughs, Heaves, Pneumonia, F. F. (Colic or Gripes, Bellyache, G. G. (Miscarriage, Parturition, H. H. (Urinary and Kidney Diseases, I. I. (Eruptive Diseases, Mange, J. J. (Diseases of Digestion, Paralysis, Single Bottle (over 50 doses), .60

Stable Case, with Specifics, Manual, Veterinary Cure Oil and Mediator, $7.00

Jan Veterinary Cure Oil, 1.00

Sold by Druggists; or sent prepaid anywhere and in any quantity on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., New York.

FAMILY LEDGER

MODERN STORIES OF WESTERN LIFE AND ADVENTURE

FOR 10 WEEKS 10 CENTS

THE GREAT WESTERN FAMILY STORY PAPER

LARGER YET SIMILAR IN STYLE TO THE

$3.00 A YEAR NEW YORK STORY PAPER

ADDRESS: MAN OFFICE

FAMILY LEDGER, STOCKTON, CALIF.

OFFER, GOOD ONLY WHEN MENTION IS MADE OF THIS PAMPHLET

EVERY Family Student School Library

S-H-O-U-L-D Own a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

THE INTERNATIONAL NEW FROM COVER TO COVER, IS THE ONE TO BUY.

SUCCESSOR OF THE UNABRIDGED.

Ten years spent in revising 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended.

Sold by all Booksellers.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions.

Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and full particulars.

Unlike the Dutch Process No Alkalies

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper?

Do you wish to know what the eastern women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the Romanists?

Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in room 9, Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work?

Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

Eliza Creak Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 9, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU

AFFLICTED WITH CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION or any disease of the THROAT and LUNGS? Send for a book of 100 pages, all FREE, describing treatment and its proper use in each disease. Treatment by Inhalation.

THE SPECIFIC OXYGEN CO., Nashville, Tenn.

HATCH CHICKENS BY STEAM

With the Improved Excelsior Incubator.

Simple, Perfect, Self-Regulating. Thousands in successful operation. Guaranteed to hatch a larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other Hatchery. Lowest priced first-class Hatchery in the U. S.

Send 6c. for Blue Catalogue. GEO. H. STANLEY, Quincy, Ill.

BEST IN THE WORLD.

SMITH'S PATENT

BROOM

HOLDER.

Sent to any address by mail for 10c. per doz. in stamps by a few days, and you will be startled at the unexpected success that will reward your efforts. We positively have the best business to offer an agent that can be found on the face of this paper. $45.00 profit on $75.00 worth of business is being easily and honorably made by and paid to hundreds of men, women, boys, and girls in our employ. You can make money faster at work for us than you have any idea of. The business is so easy to learn, and instructions so simple and plain, that all succeed from the start. Those who take hold of the business reap the advantage that arises from the sound reputation of one of the oldest, most successful, and largest publishing houses in America. Secure for yourself the profit that the business so readily and handsomely yields. All beginners succeed grandly, and more than realize their greatest expectations. Those who try it find exactly as we tell them. There is plenty of room for a few more workers, and we urge them to begin at once. If you are already employed, but have a few spare moments, wish to use them to advantage, then write us at once (for this is your grand opportunity), and receive full particulars by return mail. Address, TRUE & CO., Box No. 400, Augusta, Me.

A. J. SMITH, Totoket, Conn.

WORK FOR US

FREE TO YOU!

In order to introduce our mammoth story paper into new homes we will send free of cost to every person answering this ad, either of the elegant heavy and solid rings shown in cut. Guaranteed to be genuine gold filled and to wear well and give entire satisfaction. To each person who sends us $1 (cash or stamps) for a full year's subscription to our great illustrated weekly family story paper, established 1887, 8 pages, 48 columns, we will send either of these massive and elegant rings by return mail free, charges prepaid. Two rings and 2 yearly subscriptions, $2.00 in mind, these rings are not cheap plated goods, but guaranteed to be genuine gold filled.

This wonderful offer is only made to introduce our paper. Just as represented or your money cheerfully refunded.

Measure your finger with a slip of paper. Write to-day! Address, ROCKY MOUNTAIN SILVER CO., 1039 Curtis St., Denver, Colo.

A MAN

UNACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Ticket & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

FORMERLY CITY & FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, JANUARY 28, 1893.

NINTH YEAR. VOL. 11, NO. 6.

PAUL'S MESSAGE.

A RINGING WORD.

BY H. N. GASSON.

"If sin-hating Paul were to visit
Would not this be a message, 'How is it?'
I pray,
That tenement need,
And monopolist greed,
Such groans from God's children elicit,
Each day?
"I licenced no heathenish altar
In Rome;
For no craven peace did I falter,
Like some.
For Christ and His cross,
All money was lost,
Nor dared I for Heaven to falter,—
My Home.
"Not peace, but a sword have I brought you,
Christ said;
To free you from evil, He taught you
And bled.
But what do I see?
No man of you free!
Denying the Savior that sought you,
Instead.
"How long will church members be chore-men
To fraud?
And serve these accursed Devil's foremen Abroad?
Behold! the Lord's name
And Judas is leader of more men Than God.
"Your Savior found many to slay Him,
Of old;
And pain for His love did they pay Him, Untold.
And ye, with your light,
Ye have crucified Right,
And licensed vile men to betray Him
For Gold.
"Oh, let no fresh thorn-crown be given
His brow;
Nor never His side to be riven, Allow.
God bids thee arise,
With wrath in thine eyes,
And for Him, and for Rome, and for Heaven, STRIKE NOW!"
OWEN SOUND.

A Paper Read Before the Kansas E. S. A., at Enterprise, by Mrs. O. E. Denton.

The religious education of women has been so complex and contradictory that much time has been wasted in first learning useless and wrong things, then with laborious patience unlearning these lessons of error, and finally, grasping truth through the brain throes of intellectual and the soul pangs of spiritual birth. I cannot stop now to enumerate these past lessons of error. We are told now we owe everything that makes our condition endurable to christianity. One of the earliest religious lessons of my childhood was that women had never had any good times in this world until Christianity brought it to them; and I used to wonder why God had permitted so many generations of women to live and die before He introduced christianity into the world.

This is no more true of women than it is of men. Men and women must stand or fall together. There can be no advanced manhood and no exalted Christianity where no manhood is degraded.

Christianity is the tidings of "Peace on earth, good will to men." Its mission is to lift all humanity out of darkness and degradation into light, liberty and truth. Men cannot be exalted to that high position and women left grovelling in the darkness beneath. If time would permit, I should like to read some extracts from history to show what a so-called Christianity did do for women. The Rev. D. M. Conway says: "There is not a more cruel chapter in all history than that which records the arrest by Christianity of the natural growth of European civilization regarding women. I found women in Rome and in Germany enjoying great personal and property independence, sharing the councils and legislations of men, and hurled her down and out." The historians, Lecky and Sir Henry Main, give detailed accounts of these painful facts. Canon Kingsley himself, a high ecclesiastical dignitary in England, said in a letter to John Stuart Mills: "This world will never be a good place for women until Canon laws are civilized off the face of the earth." This gives us the key to the whole difficulty. Canon laws, ecclesiasticism, priestcraft, if you please, and Christianity had nothing to do with this cruel injustice to women. These historians made the mistake we have continued to make right down to the present time; that of confounding Christianity with theology. The terms are not synonymous. Christianity is the religion of pure principles, unselfish love and righteous living, taught and practiced by Christ; theology is wholly man made and may have little or none of these things in it.

The Bible teaches that women were prophets, priests, teachers and leaders among the Jews; women were priests of the ancient Egyptians, the Arians and the Persians. St. Paul was associated in his ministry with women preachers, and this state of things continued until the Roman fathers, grown jealous of woman's power in the church, united to crush that power and forced her down and out.

What jewels of consistency some of our dear brothers are, anyway. They have first interpreted certain Bible statements to make them mean that God has cursed motherhood and attached a sorrowful penalty to it, and then they declare that motherhood is woman's crowning glory. One of these statements is just as erroneous as the other. We all know that motherhood, even in honorable wedlock, is sometimes a woman's crowning shame; and the glory, if there be any, never consists in the fact, the often unwelcome fact, of motherhood, but in the use that is made of its opportunities. Motherhood is God's plan for perpetuating the race and life never meant it for a snare or a danger. This false teaching has crushed womanhood and degraded humanity. It was the sole cause of the indignities that were heaped upon women by the early Christian Roman fathers.

Tertullian said: "Women ought to be perpetual mourners and penitents for the original sin." Common sense says women have no more need to be ashamed of Eve than men have to be ashamed of Adam. "Know thyself" is an injunction which applies to women in this connection as nowhere else in life. I would that our young women would lay aside fashion, society, and even church work long enough to know something of themselves, know their responsibility to themselves, their God, and their offspring. Know that every child has a right to be well born, and insuring this right, as well as the mother's safety, necessitates certain physical, mental and moral parental conditions.

The world does not need more children so much as it needs better children, better developed physically, mentally and morally. I suppose my friends think me cranky upon the subject of children's rights. I confess few things disturb me more than the way most people have of ignoring the rights of these innocent and helpless ones. I have no patience with the old barbarous idea that children owe their parents a debt of gratitude for bringing them into the world. Why do we not rather say parents owe their children a debt of responsibility for forcing upon them this heritage of life, encumbered as it is with the germs of sin, disease and death? Every child has a right to a loving welcome and tender care. The child has a right to a religious training that will not drive him away from God, but bring him into loving relationship. That he may understand God is the embodiment and perfection of parenthood, the patient, tender father, the gentle, loving mother. God is a spirit and the sensitive mind shrinks from investing Him with the physical distinction of sex. We talk of men and women as though they belonged to two separate and distinct orders of beings, but the soul is of no sex. God created the human body as He did the lower animals, but the soul, imparted by the breath of God, is a part of Himself and is of no sex, but is the touch of God which leads the most ignorant and degraded to reach out and feel after God. When we speak of the Fatherhood of God we mean He is the great spiritual head, infinite in wisdom, power and goodness. As we strive to get away from the sensual self and earthly environments, the soul will drink in more of the breath of God, bringing it in harmony with, and nearer to, its living source. So we shall know what Christ meant when he said: "I am in my Father and ye in Me and I in you." And the apostle's statement: "Neither Jew nor Greek, bond nor free, male nor female," etc.

LOOKS LONELY.

The following letter is only a sample of hundreds we are receiving at the office of the FARMER'S WIFE:

OSKALOOSA, IOWA, Jan. 1893.

EDITOR FARMER'S WIFE:

If your exchange list is full please send us your "ad," and we will run it in exchange for the paper. Our table looks lonely without the FARMER'S WIFE.

Yours very respectfully,

GEO. H. BLANCHARD.

WOMEN IN KANSAS.

How They are Recognized by the New Party.

NO STATE HAS EVER SHOWN SUCH A RECORD.

The State Boards and Institutions will also Come in for Their Share.

The following is a list of those who have been appointed and elected by the new Reform party in Kansas. The FARMER'S WIFE is proud of the great achievements of the women in Kansas:

Governor's Office.—Edith Coles, clerk; Maude E. Pack, stenographer.

Auditor's Office.—Mrs. Mollie Prather, clerk.

Superintendent Public Instruction.—Lizzie Achenbach, stenographer.

Adjutant General's Office.—Mrs. Fannie Beardsley, clerk.

Attorney General's Office.—Sadie Ford, stenographer.

Treasurer's Office.—Corda Barrett, stenographer.

LEGISLATURE.

Chief Enrolling Clerk.—Mrs. A. M. Fryberger.

Postmistress.—Annie G. O'Mara.

Telephone Clerk.—Nellie Ellis.

Bookkeeper.—Mrs. Jennie Rich.

Asst. Enrolling Clerks.—Alice McDonald, Ida L. Grant, Clara B. Likeur, Anna Roberts, Emma Lenert, Sue Scott, Anna B. Chambers, Bernice M. Patterson, Mrs. C. A. Moss, Emma Rice, Lou Howard, Mrs. Cambender, Minnie Maxwell, M. J. Stewart, Katie A. Dolan, Florence Lockshier, Flora Jones.

The clerks and stenographers of the committees are not yet reported, several of them, however, are women.

IN THE SENATE.

Postmistress.—Mrs. Sam Wood.

Bookkeeper.—Nettie Murphy.

Chief Enrolling Clerk.—Anna Cherry.

Assistant Enrolling Clerks.—Phoebe Turner, Lizzie Sweeney, Jessie O'Bryan, Pearl Yohey, Mattie Convis, Clara Andrews, Nannie Gilbert, Edna Steele, Nellie Forney, May Holmes, Mary McElroy, Katie Day, Anna Randolph, Lizzie Armstrong, Mabel Fortney, Ida Williams, Maggie Merry, Maida Coburn, Emma Florea.

Journal Clerk.—Viola Bishop.

Private Clerk of Senator.—Bessie Mathis.

Stenographer of Committees.—Miriam Dana, Augusta Hayes.

Committee Clerks.—Mabel Stearns, Florence McCoy, Mary E. Ranes, Minnie Wilson, Mamie Martin, Mrs. Stryker.

In addition there are several women holding positions in the different county offices throughout the whole State. The following twenty-four women were elected county superintendents of public instruction, for the State of Kansas, for 1893 and 1894:

Mrs. Maggie K. Gamble, Barber Co. Mrs. Clara H. Hazelrigg, Butler Co. Miss Anna Widman, Cherokee Co. Mrs. Alice L. Bates, Cloud Co. Miss Eva L. Kirkpatrick, Cowley Co. Miss Emma McCleery, Decatur Co. Miss Frances E. Katner, Doniphan Co. Mrs. Mary L. Ramsell, Garfield Co. Miss Ola Clark, Graham Co. Miss Clara Port, Grant Co. Miss Kate Warthen, Hamilton Co. Miss Nannie L. Anderson, Johnson Co. Miss Dora F. Bolles, Kingman Co. Mrs. Lucy Best, Labette Co. Mrs. Jennie Kelly, Lane Co. Mrs. Linda W. Barton, Logan Co. Mrs. Alice Woodman, Morton Co. Miss Anna Zehner, Neosho Co. Miss Catherine Harkness, Ness Co. Miss Etta Cross, Osborne Co. Miss Alice G. Crumpton, Pawnee Co. Miss Anna L. Carl, Rice Co. Mrs. E. F. Brown, Seward Co. Mrs. Fannie Reid-Slusser, Wyandotte County.

MAKING WOMEN INTO MEN.

Charles Dudley Warner, in the "Editor's Study" of Harper's Magazine, says: "Being in possession of so much, we now expect to travel in the air, to read news in the sending mind before it is sent, to create force without cost, to be transported without time, and to make everybody equal in fortune and happiness to everybody else by act of congress. Such confidence have we in the power of a 'resolution' of the people and by the people that it seems feasible to make women into men."

Since no resolution to make women into men has ever been offered, either in congress or elsewhere, and since resolutions to give women equal rights with men in regard to suffrage are often thus described by the untinking, it is fair to suppose that suffrage is what Mr. Warner had in mind; especially as he is rather given to casting little slurs upon the woman's rights movement. It is perhaps worth while to examine what substance there may be in this bugbear that if women vote they will be turned into men.

One estimable gentleman illustrated the same objection by comparing men and women to trees. He said an elm might be just as tall as an oak, but it could never become an oak, and if it tried to turn itself into an oak, it would only spoil itself for an elm. It did not seem to occur to him that we do not find it necessary to hedge off an elm into a separate corner of the field, or to grow it under glass, in order to keep it from turning into an oak. The same free growth and fresh air and sunlight that tend to make the oak a noble oak, tend also to make the elm a noble elm, but have never shown the slightest tendency to turn an elm into an oak. The advocates of equal rights believe that freedom and education and responsibility, which tend to develop a man into a noble man, will also tend to develop a woman into a noble woman, but will never in the least tend to turn a woman into a man. Nature has a way of looking out for herself.

We believe that the differences between men and women are natural, not artificial. As Rev. Dr. Gregg says, "Sex is dyed in the wool." It is not the result of woman's disfranchisement. Moreover, we find that every man comes away from the polls just about the same sort of man that he was when he went there. The mysterious act of voting does not make a good man bad, a refined man brutal, a sweet-tempered man bearish, a loud man quiet, or a timid man bold. The fact that all men have equal rights before the law does not wipe out natural differences of temperament and disposition between one man and another. Why should a similar equality of legal status be expected to wipe out the natural differences of temperament and disposition between men and women? Of all the silly objections that have been urged against equal suffrage—and they are many—there is none sillier than this.

The same fearful prediction, that women would be turned into men, has been made before each successive step of the equal rights movement. It was made in regard to higher education, in regard to the opening of the colleges and of the professions; but hitherto it was proved groundless. In Wyoming and in England, where women have been voting since 1869, they are not perceptibly less womanly than before. Experience is the best of tests; and experience thus far has borne out Whittier's prediction, made years ago: "I have no fear that men will be less manly, or women less womanly, when men and women have equal rights before the law."

ALICE STONE BLACKWELL.

A GOOD LETTER.

MILFORD, KAN., Nov. 20, 1892.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack.

DEAR MADAME AND SISTER:—I received the FARMER'S WIFE for November, and have greatly enjoyed reading it. It seemed almost like meeting with the sisters. I do so miss those pleasant gatherings we used to have at Mrs. McLallin's rooms, now that I am so far away from the friends I prize so highly, and your paper comes like a letter from a friend full of good news of that which we are most interested to hear; it fills me with hope for the future good of the cause for which some of our noblest women are giving the best part of their time. Noble Mrs. Lease! how proud we all are of her. We believe she is every bit as able as any man to be a United States senator. And who of the whole army of disfranchised citizens is better able to lead us to victory? And victory it must eventually be, for we are in the right and God is for the right. What a proud day it will be when we can stand beside our brothers as their equals, no more, no less. For does not God say He created man "male and female made He them and He gave them dominion over the whole earth." But the stronger (muscular) because of that strength (muscular) have all these ages usurped the whole power. God hasten the day when man shall see the folly of his ways and when the women of these United States have the power to speak and act, goodby to the filth and dirt that have so long reigned in the high places of our beloved country. No, as Sister McLallin says, "we will not ask for the ballot" but we will make it a necessity, then, my sister, then; but until then we can wait and work, work. But my letter grows too long, so I will close, with best wishes for yourself and the success of our cause. Enclosed you will find subscription price for the FARMER'S WIFE for 1893. Please, also, inform me how much I am in your debt and I will remit the same at once. I hope you will remember me to the ladies of the W. A., and tell them I hope they will kindly remember one of their struggling sisters, although a humble one. Among my most pleasant memories shall always be the memory of the meetings of the W. A. at Mrs. McLallin's.

Fraternally yours,
FRANCES E. COOMBS.

NATIONAL WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

Mrs. Editor:—The twenty-fifth annual session of the Woman Suffrage association convened in Washington, D. C., January 15th, 1893. The first session was devoted to religious service, Rev. Anna F. Eastman delivering an able and interesting sermon; she spoke of the yoke that we are liable to place upon those weaker than ourselves, by our own imperfections, and closed by saying: "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" That if we realize the brotherhood of man we shall realize the Fatherhood of God.

When Miss Anthony introduced the speaker she said that they were subject to some criticism last year because they had a woman preach who had not been ordained in an orthodox church, but that "we would now listen to one who had been ordained in the very orthodox church, Congregational Presbyterian, a denomination which had one of its churches rent in twain in Illinois, twenty-five years ago, because a woman would pray in meeting."

Upon entering the hall, the first thing that caught my eye was two Wyoming flags, each with its lone star, draped behind the platform. I could but wish that a star representing Kansas would soon be placed upon them. At the meeting of the executive committee the next morning, there was a united feeling to concentrate the efforts of the suffragists on the states where there were hopes of results in the near future, New York and Kansas, or I might say, Kansas alone, to be assisted by the National association, the president of the New York association reporting that her state would be able to take care of herself.

Reports of officers and committees showed much progress during the past year, there being now thirty-five state auxiliaries, most of them sending reports and delegates. The representative from Florida said that their organization was only two weeks old and hardly ought to be out such cold weather.

Much of the time one afternoon was spent in a memorial service to the friends who, during the year, have passed to the world where it is to be hoped that there will be no injustice. The appropriate remarks could but bring to mind how the efforts of woman's political emancipation of the past generation were being blended with those of the present.

The busts made by Miss Johnson of Washington, D. C., for the Columbian Exposition, of Lucretia Mott and Elizabeth Cady Stanton, were on the platform, and were much admired by all; she has made one of Miss Anthony, but it was not exhibited.

The officers of last year were nearly all re-elected. Miss Anthony, being the central figure beloved by all, was addressed several times during the sessions as "Aunt Susan," a title that she seemed to prize. The resolutions as presented by the committee were unanimously adopted except the one on the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, which provoked considerable discussion as all questions do that relate to one's religion or politics, the wording of the resolution and amendments indicated opposition to uniting church and state, a question that can be discussed one year hence without being construed relate to the vexed question of Sunday opening, while the ladies were earnest in their convictions, the question was finally indefinitely postponed amid a roar of laughter caused by some misunderstanding of the chair.

The resolution urging women to enter a protest every time they pay taxes while they have no vote in making the laws was emphasized by Rev. Anna H. Shaw, stating one case where she paid a tax of only a few cents her protest had led the treasurer to believe that taxation without representation was unjust.

The reports from the states, the papers and addresses, were excellent, and could but make a woman justly proud of her sex; in short, the convention was one grand intellectual feast. The paper by Carrie Lane Chapman entitled, "Comparisons Argue Ourselves," presented in a striking manner the superior ability of the Indian to the intelligent women of S. Dakota to wield the ballot (?) but was enough to arouse the indignation of every patriotic woman.

One source for rejoicing was the reports of the awakening of the conservative southern women who, as one delegate remarked, would stand firm as soon as they could see the need of women to hold the ballot. Much is expected from Kansas for the political advancement of woman. The eyes of all the sister states are upon her; she has an opportunity to do much for woman. Political equality can extend that influence to the remotest parts of the United States, if her citizens of both sexes are equal to the needs of the day,
B. A. OTIS.

The Farmer's Wife.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE LADIES' CORNER.

MEN ARE NOT EXPECTED TO READ THIS COLUMN.

Discontent Should Have No Place in the Country Girl's Heart—Some Brainy Thoughts—Kentucky's Romantic Marriages—Col. Wright Upon Wages.

Wages of Women and Men.

HERE is, of course, no other man in the United States who has collected and handled with competency so large a mass of statistics of wages as Carroll D. Wright, United States Commissioner of Labor. Through all his investigations Colonel Wright has made an especial study for himself of the bearings of the facts that he has collected upon the condition and advancement of women. He has brought together his conclusions of many years' study and investigation in an article which appears in the Forum, bearing upon the question as to the relative wages received by men and women for the same work. Are women paid as well as men for the same work? Colonel Wright maintains that in a great majority of cases they are, but that confusion has arisen because it oftener happens than is generally supposed that the work which women do is not the same as the work which men do. As women, for instance, have forced their way into such employments as bookkeeping and lighter clerical work, the same grade of men that formerly did this work have sought higher and more remunerative occupations. The proper comparison to make is not so between what women receive and what men receive, but what the wage-earning women now receive and what they received before the great advance of women into industrial life.

There are reasons, however, why women are not in every case paid as well as men, as they are large economic reasons which deserve consideration. Among them are these: There is undoubtedly a cheaper standard of living among women than among men; women as a class, have less good equipment for life work than men, because the expectation in many cases is that the work will be interrupted by matrimony, and, most of all, women have come into the industrial field as a new economic factor and industry has not yet adjusted itself to her. We have Colonel Wright's authority, therefore, for believing that the pay of women for doing the same work is not so disgracefully less than the pay of men as it has been commonly supposed, but the appreciation of women in industry will become more generous and more general as they become a more staple and more general factor in labor.

Gretna Green of Kentucky.

In Massachusetts very young persons do not marry. In Kentucky they marry with great promptness, and, in the opinion of their elders, generally the wrong person. It would not do to say that a Kentucky girl keeps an eloping dress always ready, but she does learn to ride the first nag that comes to hand. Aberdeen, Ohio, has for many years been the Gretna of Kentucky. There recently died there an old man over 80, Squire Massie Beasley, who performed for Kentucky over six thousand runaway marriages. But it was Squire Beasley's successor, Squire Shelton, who first gave hope and comfort to young Kentucky, and was the despair of parents and guardians. Aberdeen, Ohio, is directly opposite Maysville, Ky., and a ferry boat plies between. When two horses covered with foam, fetlocks dripping and saddle blankets splashed with mud dashed down the Maysville pike, the rumor sped to the ferryboat, for all mankind loves a lover, and the ferryboat crowded on steam. During the night, when the ferryboat was laid up, the elopers crossed in skiffs, sometimes hotly pursued by a pursuing skiff, and it was a neck to neck run for the squire's den.

On one memorable night so close was the pursuit that the squire, roused from sleep, did not have time to put on his clothes, but discreetly performed the ceremony out of the window, shedding his benediction on the couple below. At another time, when the ice was running swift, the skiff in which was the fleeing couple could not make the shore. Word was brought to the old man, who put out to meet them from the Ohio side and made them one floating alongside down the middle of the stream. At length Squire Shelton's term of office expired. The little omission of legal authority, according to the New York Evening Sun, made no difference to his clients or to the squire. The tide was set too strong to be checked by these unnatural considerations. In time these marriages became so mixed up with questions of inheritance and rights of property that by special act of the Kentucky legislature all marriages performed by Squire Shelton were legalized.

The Brains of Men and Women.

At a recent meeting of the Medical Society of London, Sir James Crichton Browne, F. R. S., expressed his opinion that the difference between the intellects of men and women was real, not seeming, and deeply founded on the structure of the brain. He showed, amongst other matters, that the average female brain is lighter than the average male brain, and would still be so were women as large and heavy as men. Moreover, the specific gravity of the grey substance of the male brain is higher than that of the female, while the specific gravity of the white substance is the same in both. While the total supply of blood to the brain is much the same in men and women (allowing for the comparative poverty of female blood in corpuscles), the distribution of the blood is different, the larger part going to the front of the male brain, and to the back of the female brain. The front is the seat of cognition, volition, and the ideomotor processes, while the back is mainly concerned in the discharge of sensory functions. These anatomical considerations bear out the conclusions of such great writers as Milton and Thackeray, and, assuming them to be accurate, Sir James Crichton Browne uttered a warning against the present tendency to over-educate women by instructing them like men.—Cassell's Magazine.

To Country Girls

If your lives have fallen into some quiet, unpretentious place do not complain that it is dull and commonplace and that "there is nothing to live for here," as I have heard so many do. Why, dear heart, there is no place on God's earth so bleak and barren, so quiet and lonely, so windswept and rain-beaten but that there is a great deal to live for right there, and when you have grown a little older you will see it with clear eyes, and you will perhaps look back to the country village and wish—oh, how you will wish—that you had been happy and content in that simple life. You will know, then, that it is nobler to live well a humdrum life than to wear out body, and mind, and soul in a fever of gayety and frivolity and to stretch out your empty hands always to something you cannot seize. Better to sing babies to sleep in the soft twilight that fold down over a cottage home than to loll in velvet carriages and laugh at the brainless nonsense that men of the world whisper into your jeweled ears. And better—far better—to dwell forever away from the lights, and the roar and the temptations, and the sins of the city, with a clean heart and a pure soul, than to let the city's passionate unrest creep into your pulses and set them to beating in a mad chase after—death.—"Amber," in Good Form.

Woman's Work and Aims.

It is reported that several women editors in the United States receive salaries of $3,000.

The Ladies' Humane Society of St. Louis proposes to prosecute all persons guilty of docking their horses' tails.

A PROJECT is on foot to erect a memorial statue to Mrs. Felicia Hemans in Liverpool, where she was born in 1759.

The Princess Marie Bibesco swam across the Bosphorus recently, the first female Leander on record. She was accompanied by her brother-in-law, and arrived on the Asiatic side of the Hellespont three minutes before he did.

JEANNE EUGENIE MOREAU, the child wonder of Paris, whose phenomenal memory has made her a highly-educated person at the age of 5 years, is a granddaughter of the Philippe Moreau who led the assault on the Bastille in 1789, and who was decorated therefor by Lafayette.

Mrs. HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD, who stands easily in the front rank of American authors, is a slender, graceful woman with a manner of exceeding charm. Mrs. Spofford is very fond of the womanly employment of knitting, and her results in this direction are as artistic as her fiction.

COUNTESS BRAZZA DI SAVOIRGNAN, the sister of the celebrated African traveler, possesses a castle at Brazzazao, in the Province of Udine, where she has founded three schools for teaching lace-making to little girls out of their school and working hours. The girls are paid for the lace they produce every month, and get a prize in money besides for good conduct.

COUNTESS FEDORA GLEICHEN, who has succeeded to the studio in St. James Palace of her father, Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, whose talents as a sculptor she inherited, is now engaged on a life-sized statue of the Queen, which is to be placed in the Victoria Jubilee Hospital, Montreal, and for which Her Majesty has given several sittings. This statue is being executed for Lord Mount Stephen and Sir Donald Smith.

BANGS ARE BECOMING.

BUT THE HORRID FRIZZLE IS "ON THE LIST."

The Present Bangs Are Each and All Examples of the Survival of the Fittest—Don't Let Talk About New Hair Adjustments Bother You.

Captivating Coiffures. New York correspondence.

AFTER all the talk about fllets, coronets and Greek "parts," and so on is over it will still remain a fact that the girl to whom the bang is distinctly becoming is and always will be, as she always has been, a very pretty kind of girl. Incidentally, she is apt to look badly in a Greek part. She is bright enough to know it, and smart enough—the bang-style of girl is always smart—to pointedly stick to her bang, and let those who can do it, or who have not the sense to see that they can't, wear their Grecian effects. She stays pretty in her own particular way, retaining her own dear bang. So, here a word about bangs. The horrid frizzle is, let us hope, gone forever. You may have as much or as little hair in the bang as you please, and as you can, but there must be only a little curl, and no side bang at all. That was an ugly style, too. We who wear bangs may congratulate ourselves that the present bangs are each and all examples of the survival of the fittest. If your hair is very thick at the forehead, you may make just a little fringe. Curve it down in the center, for now no bang is ever cut concave. Let it be a genuine fringe that shows the clear color of the skin where it lies over the forehead. This fringe is not curled at all, though of course, it is not exactly straight. It has a turn in it. If it has it naturally, you need not bother about what sort it is, but if you have to "do" it, don't risk more than one-half turn of the irons. The hair at the sides and top of the head back of the bang may be waved, and for two reasons. For one, it is more dressy, and besides, if you have put back part of a previous bang in favor of the present fringe, you will find the hair very rebellious unless it is waved. Then, too, may be your hair is not very thick at the forehead, in which case the waving makes it seem so.

This fringe is as becoming to-day to young girls, or to older faces that have the girlish look, as it ever was, and if yours is a face to which the style is becoming don't let the talk about new hair adjustments bother you. The girl with the bang has been much talked down. She is readily imagined as either a school girl of the "what-d'yer-soy" type, or a most frivolous and artificial creature. But that need not worry you. Your bang is not that kind. A thoughtful, girlish face of delicate oval wears the fringe charmingly. Such a head dress as I have just described goes with downcast lids and wistful mouth very sweetly. Even the very prim girl suits her style of bang and looks the more quaintly prim and sweet for it. She may not wish to adopt a Greek head-dress and a Greek part. Perhaps her hair will not part, some hair doesn't, you know, and maybe she looks like the mischief with her hair parted. Besides, being just a quaint, prim girl, she does not want to pool her hair straight back and look like an uncompromising bluestocking. The bang is a happy compromise, so she cuts a tiny bit of fringe, then another above its end just covering the part of the first, and perhaps another still above. Each row gets its own half turn on the irons. There is just the needed "relief" to the line of the brow, the contour of profile is softened, and the bang in no way takes from the charm of the precisely poised head and the demure coil at the back. This sort of girl is always daintily attractive. She has a bright, clear complexion, a good figure, well rounded neck and shoulders which she is most prudent about displaying, and she wears pretty gowns, and all with an air, from the top of her moderate bang to the soles of her moderate shoes, of not bothering or caring desperately about her dresses or getting-up, anyhow. Now, how would that type of girl be improved by a change in her head-dress?

ARTIFICIAL.

FRIVOLOUS.

There, too, is the pretty girl who is a bit frivolous. She is naturally and unconsciously frivolous as a butterfly is light-hearted. Would you spoil her pretty face by putting classic touches to her head and parting her hair; or would you abolish her bang and leave her with straight back hair? Such a girl will cut a bang away back to the crown of her head, thereby getting rid of a lot of hair and making the coil at the back smaller and less calculated to interfere with the graceful outline of her head. The first two or three rows of the bang are tiny short lengths, and those further back are longer, so that they will not stand up and spoil the outline. The first fringes are slightly turned by the iron, and those nearer the top of the head are almost straight that they may lie more closely to the head. She is thus as sweet and delicately pretty as she can be, and a Greek coiffure would not suit her half so well.

I might go on and quote any number of types that should stick to the bang. Some women may dignify their faces by parting the hair at the forehead, but for most of you, do not do it. Fashions are not made to adapt yourself to, they are made to be adapted to you. They are not made to rule, but to serve, and if it suits your beauty you may consider them. If not, make up a fashion for yourself, or take one from some other period, or stick to the old one, like the bang, and continue looking well in your own way.

SEDATE.

The women with long, heavy hair had better cut the lengths off. Shoulder length is the most convenient. It knots on the top easily, and is easy to keep curled and clean. Then, too, you are much more apt to have nice heavy hair when you get old, and need a few charms to help you to live. Above all, you will be more in the present mode. Very heavy and long hair is more of a nuisance than anything else. There is no way of doing it up, and you can't always be pretending Ophelia or Judith and let it hang.

What has been written concerning the coiffures of the fashionable women is illustrated in the accompanying pictures. It may be added that these sketches were made at the great annual Charity ball in this city, and that they are portraits of five belles of the Four Hundred, drawn from life, in the Madison Square Garden, exactly as the original girls appeared as they posed unconsciously for the pencil of the artist. Not only are the faces of this quintette of swell girls shown with truthfulness, wearing the transient expression of the moment, but feminine readers will find in the corsages a clear notion of the new styles in low-necked gowns, as seen at this notable yearly exhibition. The subjects of portraiture sat regally in boxes, for the McAllisterian "exclusives" make it a point to sit and beam on the assemblage at the Charity ball, without mixing much with the affair.

PRIM.

Tickets are sold, you know, to whomsoever will pay ten dollars apiece for them, and that makes the occasion miscellaneous. Our imitation aristocracy attends this annual ball for sweet charity's sake, but really cannot, you know, condescend to be anything further than patrons and patronesses.

We are to wear night-caps again. Not content with attacking our husbands and the world at large with the new and confusing modes of long ago, we are going to carry it further and wear night-caps. The result, mark my words, will be a lot of fires. Out into the night will rush lit le, screaming figures, with mob caps on their heads, and their tresses streaming down their backs. That is the modern modification of the old and somewhat ugly nightcap. The modern girl has discovered that the cap is merely to keep the hair smooth at the roots, and that it is very unhealthy to have all the hair confined. One should let the long ends down the back just as usual, and have the cap tied under the chin, set back of the bang, and with a ruffle all around the face, and a bow under the chin. No fireman will have the presence of mind to carry a creature so gotten up down a ladder, or I don't know anything of human nature.

Copyright, 1904.

MARTIN PETERSON was awarded $10,000 in a suit against the Lake Shore Road at Goshen, Ind., for personal damages.

A PERPETUAL CALENDAR.

It Can Be Easily Made and Makes a Pretty Gift for a Friend.

A calendar of this kind will make a pretty gift for a friend, and to one whose fingers can readily handle the brush and paint in delicate colors the task of making it will be both simple and pleasant. Upon an oblong section of white celluloid are painted a spray of yellow chrysanthemums and a butterfly, and to the sections are attached three strips of wide, yellow satin ribbon of equal lengths, the ends being pointed and tipped with yellow tassels. Upon the shortest strip are painted in white the days of the week, abbreviated. The mid-strip, which is the longest, shows the dates; and upon the third strip are painted the names of the month, also in white and abbreviated. A pansy made of silk, selected in tints to correspond with those of the flowers and stiffened with crinoline, is adjusted over each strip, so that it may be slipped up or down to mark the day, date or month, thus making the calendar a perpetual one.

Remarkable Hypnotism.

I went to Vienna some years ago to study and saw some wonderful things done by the professor who lectured on hypnotism. One of the most remarkable examples of hypnotic effect, and one of which but little is known, is the connection of ideas between the hypnotic state and the normal condition.

For instance, I saw a young German girl hypnotized. Toward the close of the experiment the professor told the girl that in half an hour he wanted her to strike the tallest man in the room with a glass rod, and that she must get the watch of Dr. —, one of the assistants, without fail. In a few moments the girl was restored to her normal state and asked us a number of questions about what she had said and done. Then we began to chat on other matters. Just thirty minutes after the command of the professor the girl became restless and walked quickly to a table on which lay a glass rod. She then came and struck me with it sharply several times.

"Why do you do that, fraulein?" I asked.

"Oh, I don't know. I don't know," she answered in a much distressed tone, "but I have to do it; something tells me to do it."

She then went to Dr. — and asked for his watch. At first he refused to give it to her, and she became frantic in her pleadings, saying she must have it at once, and she seized him and tried to take it from him. That is but one of the many instances I have seen where commands given out to a hypnotized person were carried out later when they were in normal condition. Once this same girl did what she was told a week after the experiment, that being the time fixed by the professor.

Miles.

The measurement, in English yards, of the different lengths of a mile in several countries is as follows: Arabian mile, 2,148; Austrian mile, 8,296; Bohemian mile, 10,137; Brabant mile, 6,082; Burgundian mile, 6,183; Danish mile, 8,244; Dutch mile, 6,395; English mile, 1,760; English mile, geographical, 2,025; English mile, nautical, 6,080; Flemish mile, 6,869; German mile, long, 10,126; German mile, short, 6,859; German mile, geographical, 8,100; Hamburg mile, 8,244; Hanoverian mile, 11,559; Hessian mile, 19,547; Hungarian mile, 9,113; Irish mile, ancient, 2,240; Italian mile, 2,025; Lithuanian mile, 9,780; Oldenburgh mile, 10,820; Persian mile, 6,086; Polish mile, long, 8,100; Polish mile, short, 6,071; Prussian mile, 8,237; Roman mile, 1,628; Russian, verst, 1,165; Saxon mile, 9,904; Scotch mile, ancient, 1,984; Spanish mile, 4,635; Swedish mile, 11,700; Swiss mile, 9,153; Tuscan mile, 1,808; United States mile, 1,760.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892. Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

He has no enemies, you say;
My friend, your boast is poor;
He who hath mingled in the fray
Of duty that the brave endure,
Must have made foes.
If he has none
Small is the work that he has done;
He has hit no fraud upon the hip,
He has shook no cup from purjured lip,
He has never turned the wrong to right,
He has been a coward in the fight.

Subscribe for the FARMER'S WIFE.

These are days of Republican discontent.

Every Allianceman ought to be a propagandist.

Senator Martin sounds better than Judge Martin.

Better suffer ten wrongs than purposely inflict one.

Cast your bread upon the waters, and it shall return after many days.

Mrs. Lease would not allow her name to be used for United States senator.

Some of our representatives have their whole family with them. That's right.

L. D. Lewelling is the first governor that ever employed women in the executive office.

Many of our prominent women from all over the State are in attendance at the legislature.

Many men claim to be firm in their principles, when really they are only obstinate in their prejudices.

There would be less sorrow if each one would do as he or she would like to be done by, instead of doing as others do by them.

Mrs. J. W. Priddy's many friends in the city and over the State will be glad to know that she reached San Diego, California, in safety.

"If it is not right for the poor to take the property of the rich, it is not right for the rich to take the property of the poor."
Gov. L. D. LEWELLING.

We print a paper that was read at Enterprise, at the K. E. S. A., by Mrs. C. L. Denton. It should appeared in our December number, but was crowded out.

In this issue will be found a short letter from a sister and co-worker in Hartford, Conn. It shows that our sisters feel encouraged on the suffrage question, not only in Kansas but in other states.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the ads found in the columns of the FARMER'S WIFE. Our patrons are all reliable parties, and we guarantee they will give entire satisfaction in all their dealings.

Gen. James B. Weaver, on his way from Arizona to his home in Des Moines, Iowa, stopped in the city a short time. Notwithstanding his limited time, the news reached the house of representatives, and a committee was appointed to escort him to the hall where he made a brief speech.

Congressman Simpson, without solicitation, contributed a crisp twenty dollar bill to help feed the hungry statesmen, while they were trying to solve the great question of who should rule, the representatives of the honest yeomanry of Kansas, or the representatives of the moneyed aristocracy.

We are sure that our readers in Shawnee county will read with much pleasure Siste Otis' letter. Her letters always bring and leaves a bright ray of sunshine that lingers long in our midst, and we all look forward to the time when she will take her place with us and be one of our band as in times past.

When our friends are in the city and need any work done in the line of dentistry just call on Dr. O'Bryan. He is a young man just starting in business, and his work is first-class. We know whereof we speak, having patronized him willingly recommend his work. Give him a trial and be convinced. His ad. appears in another column.

In the great strife for position in the state house we must all remember that there is not enough for all, and with the poet say

This life is not all sunshine;
Nor is it yet all showers;
But storms and calms alternate,
As thorns among the flowers.
And while we seek the roses,
The thorns full oft we scan;
Still let us, though they wound us,
Be happy as we can.

Doing nothing for others is the undoing of one's self. We must be purposely kind and generous, or we miss the best part of existence. The heart that goeth out of itself, gets large and full of joy. This is the great secret of the inner life. We do ourselves the most good in doing something for others.

Never in the pages of our history has the ladies of our land taken such an active part in our national affairs as at present. This being the fact it brings a thought of encouragement to the struggling masses that will prove a victory to the down-trodden and litt civilization to a higher plain of light and liberty. A government of equal rights can never exist until the touching sympathy and influence of our noble women is manifested in political affairs.

No person holding a position under the new administration is more entitled to the honor than the wife of the Auditor elect. While Mr. Prather was out in the lecture field, and during the campaign Mrs. Prather was not idle. She not only cared for the family of four children, but she took care of forty head of stock cattle, milked and made butter from seven cows, besides having full charge and superintending the farming of 160 acres of land. We are told nothing escaped Mrs. Prather's notice, and fully demonstrated that she possessed rare business ability, and we predict that it called upon to do so that she could step from the place of clerk to the office that her husband now fills with as much ease as the position she now occupies.

A WOMAN SENATOR.

South Dakota Scores a Point Over Kansas and Wyoming.

A WOMAN COMING TO THE FRONT.
Mrs. M. L. McCormack Next to the Highest South Dakota Candidate.

Special to the FARMER'S WIFE.

BISMARCK, S. D., Jan. 31.—The twenty-eighth ballot for United States senator was without result. Casey received 36 votes on the twenty-ninth ballot, Mrs. M. L. McCormack 30, scattering 15. Mrs. McCormack is gaining on every ballot and is almost sure of election.

Do You Know Him?

The man who wants to argue every thing.

The man who loves the sound of his own sweet voice.

The man who thinks what he don't know is not worth knowing.

The man whose alphabet always begins with the third vowel.

The man whose opinion of himself is always placed at the highest notch.

The man who assumes an owl-like expression in order to look wise.

The man who thinks the world will fail to move when he is gone.

The man who calls everybody, that does not believe as he does, a crank.

The man who must be always tickled under the chin to keep him from sulking.

You may not know him but he is with you always. Every community has just such a man.

In a special from Cheyenne, Wyoming, in the morning papers it is stated that in the balloting for senator Mrs. Bartlett received the first vote ever cast for a woman for senator. This is a mistake. Mary E. Lease of Kansas, who was the recipient of numerous expressions of popular and legislative support, but who withdrew from the war in the interest of harmony, that a Democrat might not be elected, is not only the first woman ever spoken of for that office, but received the first ballot ever cast for a woman senator, three of the ballots being cast for her, notwithstanding she had requested her friends not to present her name.

HON. JOHN MARTIN

Receives a Farewell Reception from the Women who Rejoice in his Election.

A Pleasant Gathering at the Senator's Home.

On Saturday evening last a large number of ladies met with Mrs. Augustus Wilson at the parlors of the St. James hotel, and went in one body to the home of Hon. John Martin, United States senator-elect, to carry farewell greetings ere his departure for Washington.

Among the ladies were Mrs. Van Prather, Mrs. S. A. Allen, Mrs. F. J. Close, Mrs. Ben Rich, and the wives of other state officers and representatives. The ladies and gentlemen to the number of forty surprised the family, and were warmly received. Mr. Wilson conducted the informal ceremonies. A large basket of exquisite roses, Marechale Neil, were presented to the senator, Miss Clara E. Stallord bestowing the flowers in an appropriate and feeling manner. She said: SENATOR MARTIN:

"I have the honor and the pleasure to present to you in behalf of the ladies present this basket of beautiful flowers, with our hearty congratulations, with our blessings. We bid you good bye and god-speed you on your journey to the national capital at Washington, where you go to represent the women of Kansas and their principles, as well as of their fathers, brothers and sons, in the United States senate. We pray that God may prolong your life and preserve your health to enable you to accomplish even more than we hope, and that you may return again to the hearts homes of those who tonight are proud to do you honor."

Senator Martin responded with heartfelt gratitude in an eloquent and touching manner. Hon. F. J. Close, of the executive department of the state, followed the response of Senator Martin, paying a handsome tribute to the statesman, but none the less to the ladies and the lovely flowers they had brought to do him honor, but he thought the beauty of the flowers made all present wish for a more liberal distribution; that he for one would like to share their beauty and fragrance. Whereupon Mrs. Wilson stepped forward and gracefully presented him with a bunch of handsome roses, saying that she was only waiting to be reminded and have the opportunity of giving herself the pleasure to present Mr. Close with the roses.

Judge J. F. McFarland of Parsons, spoke in behalf of the citizens in his part of the State, with the assurance of their great gratification in the selection of Judge Martin for the United States senate; that he would not bid him good-bye, although he might leave us in person, his influence for good would so closely nestle around the hearth-stone of our homes, that we would feel him ever present.

Dr. Lathrop made a happy speech, touching upon many important points, the realities of the past, and possibilities of the future, of the selections of a man to this exalted position in the nation, who was equal to the demands of the people and the duties that confront him.

Assistant Attorney General Allen followed, and congratulated himself and all present on the good fortune of having selected so beloved and distinguished a citizen of Kansas to the responsible position of United States senator in the person of Judge John Martin, a man whose dwelling place was in the hearts of our humblest citizen.

Hon. F. G. Rawson, of the house of representatives, in his speech, referred to the warm, weary hours spent in representative hall battling and balloting for the senator. He felt that the decision was a wise one. In his tribute to the ladies of Kansas, closely linking them to the mission of the flowers, he was not forgetful of the object of the occasion, and the distinguished gentlemen they sought to bless and encourage.

Mrs. Dr. Lathrop entertained for a brief moment the party with the trials of earlier days in Kansas, and the steady march of progress to the present, by the assistance of women, too, without the ballot.

The event of the evening was the affectionate farewell speech of Senator Martin, and the kindly, warm greetings and welcomes of himself and charming family.

COMMUNICATION.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack,

DEAR FRIEND:—I received a number of your paper, THE FARMER'S WIFE, and like it, title and all, and enclose thirty-five cents, old time scrip, which is just as good now as ever, as the government is bound to redeem it. I save all I can get of these twenty-five and ten cents, for the convenience of sending in letters. I feel so much encouraged, for women are walking surely and steadily toward their freedom. Let us work for peace and freedom together. Women will as surely have their liberty as the stars are sure to shine out at night. Certain things are written down in the book of fate, and we can't get around or over them, and political parties and governments can't get around nor over them. Let us bide our time. Woman's disfranchisement, male governments, religious fanaticism and bigotry, and a good many other bad things, are doomed. The bells of the dying year are forever ringing out the old and ringing in the new; and the "new" of 1893 is a far more hopeful "new" than that of 1843, and the unfolding of the next half century will bring changes we have never dreamed of. Peace to the ashes of the past! Hail to the dawn of the new year! The eastern hills are aglow with the rising sun!

With many wishes for the success of your paper, I am yours cordially, FRANCES ELLEN BERRY,
Hartford, Conn.

KANSAS SUFFRAGE BILL.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 3 Provides for the Submitting of the Question of Equal Suffrage to the Voters of the State.

A Bill Has Been Presented in the Senate Granting Suffrage to the Women.

Mrs. Laura M. Johns and Mrs. Annie S. Diggs has prepared a bill to strike out the word male, so that the law will read all citizens. This would give women the right to vote for presidential electors, but a change in the constitution will require the submitting of the question to be voted upon in order that women can vote on state officers. There is a difference of opinion, however, on this point, and we hope to be able in our next issue to announce that a bill has passed that is both constitutional and effective.

BURDETTE'S ADVICE.

And then remember, my son, you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a newspaper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you will look around you, you will see that the men who are the most able to work, are the men who work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with overwork, son. It is beyond your power to do that. Men cannot work so hard as that on the sunny side of thirty. They die sometimes, but it is because they quit work at 6 p. m., and don't get home till 2 a. m. It is the intervals that kill, my son. The work gives you an appetite for your meals; it lends solidity to your slumber; it gives you a perfect and grateful appreciation of a holiday. There are young men who do not work, my son—young men who make a living by sucking the end of a cane; whose entire mental development is insufficient to tell them which side of a postage stamp to lick; young men who can tie a necktie in eleven different knots and never lay a wrinkle on it, and then would get into a West Hill street car to go to Chicago; who can spend more money in a day than you can earn in a month, son, and who will go to the sheriff's to buy a postal card, and apply at the office of the street commissioner for a marriage license.

But the world is not proud of them, son. It does not know their name even; it simply speaks of them as old So and So's boys.

Nobody likes them, nobody hates them; the great, busy world doesn't even know they are there, and at the great day of resurrection, if they do not appear at the sound of the trumpet, and they certainly will not unless somebody tells them what it is for and what to do, I don't think Gabriel will miss them or notice their absence, and they will not be sent for or disturbed. Things will go on just as well without them. So find out what you want to be, and do, and take off your coat and make a dust in the world. The busier you are the less deviltry you will be apt to get into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays, and the better satisfied will the world be with you.

W. M. Speck, proprietor of the Sixth Avenue hotel has moved to the northeast corner of First and Quincy streets, where he invites all of his old friends and the public generally to call. His rates are, single meals, 25 cents; day board, $3.50 per week.

China Will Retaliate.

A Chinese newspaper published in San Francisco printed lately what was said to be instructions from the Chinese Government to its consuls in this country. In regard to the Geary law which compels every Chinaman in the country to register within a year or go to jail and be expelled from the country, these instructions say that China is wealthy and could easily cope with America in war, but that she will not do that but use other means of retaliation.

The article goes on to state that if the Chinese be compelled to register in this country, American residents in China will also be compelled to register there and wear tags on penalty of imprisonment and expulsion. China will also impose a heavy duty on American flour and cotton.

A Fire-Lighter.

An invention which is a veritable boon to housekeepers is a "fire-lighter." This consists of a small iron box filled with asbestos, on which a little paraffine oil is poured and lit. The box, which has a long handle, is inserted between the bars of the grate, in which the coal has been placed loosely to allow the oil to flame freely. In about a quarter of an hour a really good fire is made, and if wood is used it will ignite, of course, in a much shorter time. With a very little care there would really be no need of kindling wood at all with this little invention.

A FRONTIER FARMER'S WIFE.

Her Burdens Are Many and Her Pleasures Few.

Nothing in Her House is of Late Improvement, and at Thirty She is Old and Tired of Her Lot and of Life.

The women who live in cities can form no estimate of the work done day after day by the farmer's wife on the frontier. There are no convenient laundries, bakeries or stores where she could buy the ready-made articles she is compelled to make herself. It is unceasing work from her early sunrise to long after the hours have grown small at night. She lights the fires for breakfast.

Nowhere is a man so completely lord and master as on the farm. His mother was a farmer's wife and lighted the fires, his wife shall do the same. While the kettle is boiling she does the milking, and cases are not rare where a farmer's wife milks as many as eight or ten cows twice a day. The milk is carried into the cellar in great heavy pails that would try a man's strength, and she returns to the work of getting breakfast. During the process of the meal she cannot sit back and eat and rest, as many do, but is kept jumping up and down waiting on the men folks and children. It is often a question to strangers who visit on the frontier if she ever gets a chance to eat at all. Then the children are to be started off to school, and though the credit of their education falls to the father it is the mother who does extra work that they may go, and who pulls them out of bed and starts them off in time every morning.

The milk is to be strained and put away, crocks scalded, butter churned, and the dishes and chamber work still wait. Dinner and supper and afternoon work take up her day. Then in their turns throughout the week there is washing, ironing, baking every other day, scrubbing, sweeping, sewing and mending. In harvest time she will have as many as fourteen to cook for and does it all alone. It is seldom that a farmer feels that he can afford to hire help in the kitchen. She has the vegetable garden to see to. To brighten the dreariness of her life she has close to the seldom opened front door a bed of half starved looking flowers—old fashioned coxcomb, four-o'clocks, grass pinks and a few other cheerful looking plants that will thrive under neglect. She makes everything that her family wears except hats and shoes. She has no time to think of rest or self.

It is in most cases her lot to welcome a new baby every other year, and the only time when help is employed to assist her is for a period of two or three weeks when the little stranger arrives. The births of the babies are about all that vary the monotony of her life. Occasionally death calls and takes from her tired arms a little life and leaves in its place an added pain in her heart. She is old and tired out at thirty.

When her daughters reach the age at which they could assist her the dreary prospect of a frontier life appalls them, and they seek employment in town. Nothing in her house is of late improvement. Her washboard is of the kind her mother used, and her churn in its heavy, clumsy build shows that it belongs to the same date. Improvement stalks all over the farm and leaves no trace in the kitchen. Her pleasures are few. The satisfaction that she is doing her best seems to be all that rewards her. She is a heroine in a calico dress, wrinkled and stoop shouldered—a woman with a burden, who never complains. Late at night, when all the members of the family are in bed, a light will shine out across the prairie from the family living room. It is by this light the farmer's wife is doing her mending and sewing, and it will shine out long after the occasional travel that way has stopped, and no one but the one that blows it out knows at what hour the patient burden bearer's labors cease. FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

OZONE CHEMICAL COMPANY:

DEAR SIR: It gives me much pleasure to state that I have used your Ozone medicines in my family with gratifying results, and can heartily commend their use to any one suffering with any disease of which they are recommended to cure. Ozone is a perfect antiseptic in all diseases.

I. W. PACK.

GLITERING GOLD

! FREE!

To every reader of this advertisement who desires to possess Gold in its natural state, just as it is taken from the Rich Mines of the Rockies, we will send, Absolutely Free, 4 Specimens of Gold Quartz, direct from our own mines, which assay $100.00 and over per ton. Each set of specimens carefully packed in a neat box and sent by return mail, all charges prepaid. Our sole and only object in making this Great Offer is to introduce into new homes our mammoth story paper, THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN SENTINEL, containing 4 large pages of long columns, and Published Weekly, at only 1¢ per year (former price 5¢). Illustrated with views of scenery the Denver & Rio Grande R.R., justly named the "Scenic Line of the World," and the Colorado-Mountain R.R., the "Pike's Peak Route." Also, Sheridan, Fort, etc. ESTABLISHED 1887. Fifth year. To each person sending us $1. for a year's subscription to our paper, we will send the above Handsome Specimens Free of charge. No free copies. Don't miss this. Cut this out, as it may not appear again. Mention this paper. Write today. We refer to all of the leading business men of Denver and Colorado. Enclose a dollar bill in your letter and address, Rocky Mountain Sentinel, 1838 Curtis St., Denver, Colo.

MAKE THEM MODERN.

HOW OLD FARMHOUSES MAY BE IMPROVED.

The American Agriculturist Tells How Antiquated Homes May Be Made to Look New and Attractive at a Very Slight Expense.

Work for Winter.

The buildings of the Colonial times which survive in the early settled towns are evidences of the durability and strength which were embodied in their solid walls and heavy framework by the squire or landlord of olden days. The plainness which characterized the exterior was equally marked within by the immense rectangular rooms, although the chimney-pieces and moldings are marvels, considering the amount of handwork displayed in their mechanical designs. The dreariness of these great rooms has sometimes condemned the old mansion, the owner choosing a smaller, more modern cottage raised from its ruins, rather than live longer subject to its airy hospitality. Often its silent protest brings regret after the deed is done; for with the destruction of the old house go all the associations attached to it and all the charm which is found in the ancient European homesteads. The faults and inconveniences of these old houses may be corrected. The illustration Fig. 1 represents a house 40x54 feet with an ell 14x15 feet. Before remodeling, a few steps led to the front door opening into a long hall; on the left was a very large parlor (Fig. 3) with two bedrooms in the rear; on the right the front room was of the same size, and held the dignified position of sitting-room and dining-room combined; it also boasted of two small closets, one on either side of the fireplace, and the only ones in the house. The fragrant and appetizing kitchen odors found ready entrance at two side doors. These doors were an evidence of the stable equilibrium and well-balanced symmetry necessary, according to the architect's mind, in designing the house, and no doubt prevented many a collision between the cook and the children. When the cook with the roast entered the dining-room she could send the frolicking children into the sitting-room through the other entrance. The kitchen had been despoiled of its capacious brick oven by an earlier reformer, leaving four straight walls, exempt from conveniences, except a stairway to the cellar under the stairs midway of the hall, and, instead of kitchen accommodations, a large storage and wash room was appended in the rear, being furnished with milk and cheese cupboards and other furniture. A stoop made a way of exit at the rear, where a semblance of a driveway led to the barns.

FIG. 1. OLD-STYLE FARM HOUSE.

FIG. 2. OLD FARM HOUSE MODERNIZED.

How to repair such an old house with the least inconvenience while living within, is sometimes a puzzle. In this case, says the American Agriculturist, the best way is to put on the rear porch first (Fig. 4), as it will be convenient to work under and roomy for the temporary storage of furniture. The washroom is next partitioned off, making a good-sized pantry with plenty of shelving, putting in a window at the end. A closet and cupboard are made in the corner near the chimney, and running water, sink and row of tubs, equip the other end of the small but convenient kitchen. When this is done the door, with its framework, leading into the old kitchen may be removed and the little corner space thrown into that room. Glass panels are put into the outside doors to light this passage.

FIG. 3. GROUND PLAN OF OLD HOUSE.

The new kitchen being remodeled, the old one may have a partition run through it, making a good-sized bedroom, library, or breakfast-room, with a passage leading into the back hall thus formed where back stairs are now built, having closets underneath. This room is used for a temporary dining-room, while the old dining-room is remodeled. A middle partition is put in with sliding doors, and a door put through into the hall at the foot of the stairs. The old cupboards are removed from the chimney corners, the mantel renovated and a bay window built on at the end. A neat dining-room is thus made, leaving a comfortable sitting-room in front. The only carpentry to be done in this is the making of folding-doors into the hall. Having this entire half of the house in order, the rear is again attacked. Building a wall in the middle line of the small bedroom opening into the hall, the end of this space is fitted into three closets, as shown in the plan, and the remaining space thrown into the hall. The old partition between the two bedrooms back of the parlor, is then removed. A more convenient bedroom is thus made. An alcove is made back of the stairs, and a double window in this part of the hall forming a cozy little reception-room or sewing-room. The parlor is changed very slightly, folding-doors being placed opposite those in the sitting-room. If these door frames are made so as to carry the work-work up to the ceiling and false beams are put up overhead, it will panel off this room to advantage, which effect will be heightened by draperies and a fine balustrade. With suitable decorations the interior should suit even fastidious tastes. The outside of the building can be greatly improved by building a veranda across the hall and parlor with a carriage entrance (Fig. 2) at the end, through which the drive is carefully laid out and graveled. The roof is extended, forming a jet eighteen inches wide all around, putting brackets below, an effect like a cornice being carried down to the level of the second-story window caps. A gable is added to the main roof over the front door. Lay walks to the porches, make a few additions of shrubbery to the grounds, and a home is now furnished at a little cost that is far more desirable than a new cottage, whose main characteristic might be an effort to appear quaint with no justifying semblance of age.

FIG. 4. GROUND PLAN OF IMPROVED HOUSE.

Davy Crockett's Beat.

"I once saw Davy Crockett clean up a crowd of crack shots," said Judge Asa Musgrove, one of the early "pathfinders," who is en route to his home in Northern Indiana. "It was in 1834, shortly before the outbreak of the war between Texas and Mexico. I was in Santa Fe, N. M. A party of a dozen or more were shooting at a target with rifles, when a stranger rode up, threw his leg across the pommel of his saddle, and watched the sport. He had a long rifle strapped across the back of his saddle, one of those old-fashioned affairs, heavily ornamented with silver. He was inclined to criticize the shooting, and was invited to set the pace. He replied that he never threw away any ammunition, but that if they would put up their crack shot he would shoot with him for ten Mexican dollars. The crowd agreed, and the stranger unsling his 'gingerbread gun,' as his opponent dubbed it. 'Perhaps you'd like to raise the bet?' said the stranger, as he ambled up to the crowd. It was doubled, then trebled. He then offered to bet his gun against that of his opponent. The wager was accepted, and the stranger brought his rifle to his shoulder. The muzzle 'wobbled' badly, and someone cried out that he was going to shoot a circle around the target. The stranger lowered his gun and offered to wager his horse against forty Mexican dollars on the result. His proposition was promptly accepted, and he once more brought the 'gingerbread gun' to his shoulder. But it did not 'wobble' this time. He put a bullet in the exact center of the target, then shot two more through the same hole, winning easily. As he rode off with the spoils someone cried out, asking his name. 'Davy Crockett,' came the reply, and the party adjourned to the nearest saloon without another word."—Globe-Democrat.

Hot-House Item.

From experiments made by English scientists it appears that camphor and oxygenated water are the most energetic excitants of growth, not only as regards the acceleration of germination but as affecting the vigor of plants.

FLORIDA'S STATE BUILDING.

One of the Most Peculiar Structures in Jackson Park.

Three hundred years ago the foundations of a Spanish fort were laid within the confines of St. Augustine, Fla. At the present moment work is progressing on a building patterned after it in every detail, and which, when completed, will be the State's representative structure at the World's Columbian Exposition. Old Fort San Marco, now Fort Marion, is the historic fortress which has stood the storms of battle and the elements for so many hundred years. Its pygmy counterpart in the Exposition grounds will have become dust within a space of time which would not add one dingier shade to the massive stones frowning from the sea wall of St. Augustine upon the blue, dancing waves of the Atlantic.

Fort San Marco was commenced by the Spaniards in 1592, and was 164 years in building. It is built of coquina quarried on Anastasia Island, and occupies the north end of a sea wall nearly one mile in length. This wall is built of the same material as the fort, and at its south end are barracks for the United States soldiery stationed at St. Augustine.

THE FLORIDA BUILDING—OLD FORT MARION.

The work of building the fort fell upon negro slaves, Indians and prisoners of war. Every stone laid in it represented the misery of toiling, suffering humanity during a period of a century and a half. When completed, however, it was considered a masterpiece. While in the possession of the British it was considered the prettiest fort in the king's dominions. Of this grim old fortress, with its moats, barbicans, drawbridges, frowning bastions and its mysterious dungeons in which, years ago, two skeletons were found in cages, Margaret Deland says: "There is no watch now; the fort has nothing to fear. Visitors come and go, or down in the grass-grown moat a thin, white donkey wanders about, cropping hungrily at the tufted thistles that stand in the angles of the bar-bican or crowd like sentinels around a stone which may have tumbled from the ramparts. The offensive attitude of these thistles, brave in green and silver and with pink cockades, is the only warlike thing about the peaceful fort."

As the building approaches completion its peculiar outlines make it a prominent feature of the north end of the Exposition grounds.

FIFTY-SIX YEARS IN MICHIGAN.

Timothy Dewey, of Concord, Who Drilled for the War of 1812.

Concord can boast of containing one of the oldest inhabitants of the State of Michigan. Timothy Dewey was born in Rutland, Vt., on the 30th day of May, 1795, says a writer in the Detroit Journal. He was next to the oldest of eleven children, and survives them all. When a youth he moved to Cohocton, Steuben County, N. Y., where he was drafted, drilled and equipped for the war of 1812, and was about to be called into active service when the war was brought to an end. On Aug. 13, 1819, he married Sallie Flint, and for their wedding tour took a journey of twenty-five miles on horseback to attend a Methodist quarterly meeting. In the spring of 1836 he came to Michigan. He walked from Detroit to Jackson, and after taking up a claim of 300 acres and building, alone, a log house, he moved his family here in the fall of the same year. Here he has lived since, and has cleared up farms for several of his children. From boyhood he has always been an ardent Methodist, and was regularly seen taking his family of twelve children to meeting with a team of oxen. He has taken great pride in the education of his children, and all have been sent to Albion College. He is now in his 98th year, is occasionally able to attend meeting, and can still do a share of the farm work. He last fall husked over 100 bushels of corn.

TIMOTHY DEWEY.

Two Brothers.

Two small boys signaled a street car, and when it stopped it was noticed that one boy was lame. With much solicitude the other boy helped the cripple aboard the car, and after telling the conductor to go ahead returned to the sidewalk. The lame boy braced himself up in his seat so that he could look out of the car window, and the other passengers observed that at intervals the little fellow would wave his hand and smile. Following the direction of his glances the passengers saw the other boy running along the sidewalk, straining every muscle to keep up with the car. The passengers watched his pantomime in silence for a few blocks, and then a gentleman asked the lame boy who the other boy was.

"My brother," was the prompt reply.

"Why does he not ride with you in the car?" was the next question.

"Cause he hasn't any money," answered the lame boy, sorrowfully.

It is needless to say the little runner was speedily invited into the car, and the sympathetic questioner not only paid his fare but gave each boy a quarter besides.

Last Herd of Wild Buffalo.

Hunters in Colorado are bent upon the extinction of the last herd of buffalo that inhabit the parks high in the Rocky mountains. There were only about twenty-five of the animals, and thirteen of these are believed to have been killed. Officers are hunting the hunters now and, catching them, will endeavor to buy the actual price of buffalo skins to a point absolutely beyond precedent. It is hoped by the San Francisco Examiner that their quest may be successful. Indeed, news that the monarch of the fleeing bison had turned upon his foes and horned a few of them into penitence or into the hereafter would fail to create a wave of sorrow.

There is something little short of pathetic in the way the buffalo have been effaced. But a few years ago, roaming in countless thousands, they were killed for the lust of slaughter, for mere wantonness. Now so scant a remnant survives that at one time it was believed not a solitary individual remained. Belonging to the plains, the buffalo was forced by this cruelty and greed of civilized man to seek other pastures. Such as did not whiten with their bones the old grazing grounds wandered away from their natural environment to the fastnesses of the mountains, far from all the haunts of human kind. There they have lived precariously, but it seems they are not allowed to exist even in exile. Man, who preaches gentleness and practices brutality, intends to chase them higher than the timber line, to escape the bullet only to die of starvation.

On behalf of the buffalo, now almost tradition, it is proper that the persons who are trailing the final representatives of the race through the canyons of Colorado should be denounced, not alone as mercenary and unworthy sportsmen, but contemptible vandals.

Mounted Duel with Lasses.

"I witnessed a strange duel in Argentina a few years ago," said Francis M. Wakelee to a Globe-Democrat man. "Two rancheros were enamored of the same dark-eyed senorita. Now when your South American is hit by the blind archer he is hit hard. He is not satisfied to visit his charmer one evening in the week and give up the rest of his time to his rivals. If he catches another admirer hanging around the house of his innamorata there is apt to be trouble and work for the priest and undertaker. The two sighing swains in question had agreed to settle by a duel with the lasso which should wed the damsel. A hundred piratical-looking cow-punchers assembled to witness the fray. The rivals appeared mounted on mettlesome mustangs, each with a long, powerful lariat of tough bullhide. They were both experts with the lasso, and their horsemanship was a marvel. They approached to within forty or fifty yards of each other, then began to maneuver for a deciding cast. After several feints the lariat of the younger of the rivals went whizzing through the air so swiftly that the eye could scarce follow it. The other sunk his spurs deep into his mustang. The animal shot forward just in time to save his master from the deadly noose, and as he did so the second lasso rose into the air and settled around the shoulders of the man who missed, pinning his arms to his sides as in a vise. He was jerked headlong out of his saddle. His successful rival drew him to him, hand over hand, half lifted him from the ground by the tenacious thong and put a bullet squarely between his eyes. He then turned and rode directly to the hacienda, where lived the cause of this barbaric scene. She mounted behind him, and he came galloping back, swinging his sombrero."

Wood Concrete.

A new wood concrete, according to the Bautechnische Zeitschrift, has been invented in Germany. Shavings and planing-mill chips, either of common or fancy goods, which may be stained before use if desired, are mixed with cheese, or, rather, casein, calcined magnesium, limestone, glycerine, silicate of soda, and a little linseed oil, and this queer mess is forced by hydraulic pressure into molds, where it is allowed to harden. When dry the composition is strong and solid, and can be sawn, planed, polished and varnished. It is expected that it will be found useful as an "ornament" in the shape of panels, or as a covering for entire wall surfaces.

FIGS AND THISTLES.

NO fault-finder can be happy.

Piety is religion with its coat off.

BATTLES are thoughts insisted upon.

EVERY lie has a truth on its track.

WHEN the Lord borrows He pays good interest.

We are not pleasing God when we are unhappy.

The more God's truth is opposed the more it spreads.

WHERE the morals are wrong the religion is not right.

It will not give us any favor with God to play at religion.

No MAN can tell how much it would take to make him rich.

The right kind of a smile never hurts a prayer meeting.

The Christian who winks at sin will soon be stone blind.

If you want the Lord to use you, stop wearing a long face.

PEOPLE who are always giving advice seldom like to take it.

STONING the preacher will not make hell any the less real.

God wants every man to live his sermon before he preaches it.

It is not the biggest pipes in the organ that are used the most.

You know the character of a man when you know what he loves.

The only way to plow a straight furrow is, to stop looking back.

Where the giants are the biggest the grapes of Canaan are the sweetest.

The man who runs from trouble will never find time to stop and rest.

God can do great things with any man who will always do his prayerful best.

To FORGET God's goodness is as wicked as to break His commandments.

No MAN will ever lose his soul because God did not give him light enough.

WHEREVER the gospel is faithfully preached, somebody is going to believe it.

A HANDSOME Bible on the parlor table will not keep the devil out of the house.

The Lord is never able to do much with a preacher who is proud of his own head.

The troubles we talk about to one another grow. Those we talk about to God die.

The most dangerous thing you can do is to decide to live another day without Christ.

No MAN who faithfully follows Christ will go to heaven alone. Others will follow him.

Caught Two Whales and a Wife.

One of the whalmen on the schooner La Nina has a little romance. His name is Willman Stevens and he has been a sailor on coasting vessels for several years. Ten months ago he fell in love with a pretty and estimable young lady at Yaquina Bay. Stevens wanted to get married, but his funds were low, so it was arranged between the two lovers that William should go on a whaling cruise and on his return the nuptial knot should be tied.

William came down on the next steamer, but found that sailors who had never been on a whaling voyage were regarded as green hands; and that when old-timers were clamoring for a chance to ship a new man had very little show. However, Stevens persevered, and persuaded Capt. Worth to take him on Whitelaw's whaler, the schooner La Nina. The green hand proved the mascot of the trip, and he killed the only two whales taken on the voyage. They were big fellows and produced 3,500 pounds of bone.

Stevens has consequently come into funds, and more funds than usually fall to the lot of a whalman. Tomorrow he leaves on the steamer Willamette Valley for Yaquina Bay to get married.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Browning's Courtesy.

Mrs. Andrew Crosse tells in the current number of Temple Bar an amusing anecdote about Browning.

"On one occasion Mr. Browning's son had hired a room in a neighboring house in which to exhibit his pictures. In the temporary absence of the artist, Mr. Browning was doing the honors, the room being half filled with fashionable friends.

"Mr. Browning was standing near the door when a visitor, unannounced, made her appearance. He immediately shook hands with the stranger, or tried to do so, when she exclaimed: 'Oh, I beg your pardon, but please, sir, I'm the cook.'

"Mr. Barrett asked me to come and see his pictures.' 'And I am very glad to see you,' said Mr. Browning, with ready courtesy. 'Take my arm, and I will show you round.'"

They call it "pin money," because a woman doesn't usually get more than a paper of pins would cost.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

A CHOICE SELECTION OF INTERESTING ITEMS.

Comments and Criticisms Based Upon the Happenings of the Day.

THERE are supposed to be about 420,000,000 Christians in the world but you'd scarcely believe it.

THERE are over 600 students in the Women's College of Baltimore, and when they take their conversational recess the professors put cotton wads in their ears or go out to see how the weather is.

NOW SPAIN has a crisis, brought about like the one in France by the exposure of a large steal, which, despite its magnitude, was not big enough to go round. Crisis abroad are born of such insufficiency.

THE Czar of all the Russias has stopped his German papers because they made personal remarks about him. In taking this sort of revenge the Czar has a peculiar advantage. He stops the paper at the border and no collector dares cross to present a bill.

THE Speaker of the House of Commons has a salary of $25,000, which doesn't "fill the bill" when he has to settle for the Parliamentary dinners which he gives to the Cabinet and the members. When he retires it is to a peerage and a pension of $20,000 a year.

DR. J. H. DOUGLAS, who sacrificed his own health and business in close attention upon Gen. Grant during his fatal illness, died in October of the same disease—cancer of the throat. Was it merely a coincidence or is cancer "catching"? Opinions differ, and nobody knows.

ANNIE BESANT has been portraying to gaping New Yorkers the theosophy that has won for her some notoriety and bread. She says there is no such thing as death. This is quite important, if true. But a practical world would like to know in such case what became of Besant's fat friend Blavatsky.

THE commune of Morteau, France, is the smallest constituency in the world, there being only twelve people for the Mayor to preside over. When any dispute arises between the people and the Mayor, the latter can take them over to the wine shop and have everything his own way when he has ordered up a couple of 20 cent bottles.

NATIVES of New York tore down the Italian flag because the Italians had refused to place an American flag above it. Thus once more an international question naturally arises. An excellent method of restoring the entente cordiale would be to have the stars and stripes unfurled on the soil of Italy. By the time the people over there got through with the emblem, honors would doubtless be easy.

JAY GOULD left his son George an extra $5,000,000 in consideration of the young man's services to his father's business for a few years past. Noted operative artists and presidents of big corporations will experience pangs of the direst envy in reflecting upon the size of young Gould's wages. In this respect he towers above Adelina Patti and Chauncey Depew like Gulliver among the Lilliputians.

IDA LEWIS, the heroine of Lime Rock lighthouse, in Narragansett Bay, still holds her position and lives on that storm-tossed bit of rock. She has saved a great many lives. Her visits to Newport are few, as it is hard to pull across from the lighthouse, and when she does go to the "Brighton of America," it is not to see the swell folks or to look at the shop windows but to buy her pork and cabbage and other food supplies needed in her lonely home.

A RIGHTeous reform has just been inaugurated in the War Department. The general order which permits private soldiers henceforth to compete for promotion to the rank of commissioned officers will give a new spirit to the regular army, and send a better class of men into the service. It is strange that the order was not issued long ago, for anything more un-American or less practical than the old system it would be difficult to conceive. Now let the Naval Department follow suit.

THE Legislature of Vermont has set a good example to those of other States in passing an act to abolish days of grace. The "three days of grace" had some reason to be in the olden times, but should have no place in modern business arrangements, and they are of no benefit to the debtor. The banks have long been in the habit of figuring interest on those three days, with the result that there was no obligation to pay till the last of them was near its close, and the former margin for uncertainty and delay has lost its meaning as well as all value for protecting a debtor from the rapacity of a creditor.

IVES, the nervy and unscrupulous speculator who some five or six years ago gained for himself the title of "the young Napoleon of finance," has installed his new-made bride in a house in New York for which he is to give $15,000 a year. When in the Ludlow street jail Ives, according to his own testimony, was permitted to do almost anything he pleased, provided he made extravagant compensation for his privileges. The officials of that institution, it now appears, must have been extraordinary derelict in a their pecuniary dealings with their prisoner, or he would not have money enough left over to put up $1,250 a month for rent of a residence.

TWENTY-SEVEN of the men who made the heroic charge at Balaklava in October, 1854, are still alive, or were a few weeks ago, when they gathered to celebrate around the social board the thirty-eighth anniversary of the struggle, in which three-fourths of their number perished. The roster is a large one for such a lapse of time, being 18 per cent of the 150 who survived that terrible rush into the jaws of death. Perhaps the percentage in attendance would have been nearer twenty had it been possible to fetch in from other lands one or two who migrated in the hope of bettering their fortunes. The grim monarch has dealt sparingly with those who escaped his frightful levy in the Crimea.

THE return to contrasted colors in masculine dress is often enough talked of, but no one seems bold enough to start the experiment in this country. It is popularly reported that in Florence Signor Mascagni, the clever young composer, goes about arrayed in scarlet, and this suggests to a London contemporary that the apostles of culture ought to feel incumbent upon them to go in for distinctive dress. Oscar Wilde, for instance, might start the reform in London, by coming out in a nice shade of apple green. Sir Arthur Sullivan might adopt purple velvet, Mr. Irving old wine-colored satin, and so farther, as the Germans say. It would at least add a note of gayety to masculine gatherings, which at present have a most funereal air.

THE practice by a common carrier of arbitrary determining what persons shall receive a so-called manufacturers' rate for transportation is a clear violation of the act to regulate commerce. So rules the Inter-State Commerce Commission, and the decision is a just one. It is the duty of a common carrier to treat all its patrons on precisely the same footing of equality of terms for equal services rendered, without inquiring whether or not any particular person or corporation can afford to pay the rate charged. The passage of the Inter-State Commerce act was intended expressly to prevent such discrimination, and the men who are paid to interpret the law would fail in their duty if they did not recognize that as a vital point, to be insisted on by them under all circumstances.

THERE is infinite pathos in the spectacle of Marshy U. Lyles, a colored woman over seventy years of age, who started to school for the first time last week, according to a dispatch from Sylvania, Ga. Every morning this old creature, who for more than three-score years has lived in mental darkness, with dinner bucket and spelling-book in hand, goes along with pickaninnies to the little log school in the woods to pore over the mysteries of the a-b-a-b's. Marshy always has been a great lover of the scriptures and her object in going to school now, she says, is that it may aid her in studying the Bible and thus help her on to glory. It is to be hoped the faithful old soul may get there and have a front and very high seat. Prof. Briggs' high criticism and Prof. Ingersoll's disbelief to the contrary, notwithstanding,

THE MISSED ITEM.

Why the City Editor Received a Reprimand.

The city editor was exceedingly busy. It had been a day of conventions and visitors and his head fairly throbbed with the consciousness of the details he must look after. The presses were making the building tremble as they turned out the Sunday supplements. With coat off, he plunged into the mass of manuscript before him and was covering it with cabalistic blue pencil marks at a wonderful rate when the door of his room opened. Angry that any one should interrupt him at that busy hour, he whirled in his chair to snap out a reprimand.

But the sight of the visitor halted him.

A timid, brown-eyed girl stood just inside the door, looking beseechingly at him through the tangled curls that half-covered her tear-stained face. The ringlets fell, too, upon a coarse jacket that made a thin covering in such a raw and blustering evening as it was outside.

"Are you the editor man?" The voice was sweet and plaintive.

"Yes; what can I do for you?" He had not intended to be even civil, but something moved him to tenderness just then.

"It's about Jule. Do you know Jule?"

"Never heard of him," with a suspicion of a laugh drawing down the corners of the mustached mouth.

"Well, he's my brother, an' he's been took up. They said he stole, but he didn't, and I know it. Jule was always good ter me, an' he told me he didn't steal the mittens—he found em."

"Wouldn't the officers believe him?" The newspaper man found himself growing interested against his will.

"No; an' that's what I come for. You see they tried him to-day an' th' Judge said he must go to th' perform school, or something like that. An'—an' I thought mebbe if you knew about it you wouldn't put it in th' paper. Jule an' me is all alone now. Since mamma went away to Heaven we've lived by ourselves. Jule sold papers an' I run errands, an' we was getting along fine. We had a lot saved, too; almost two dollars. I'll give it to you if you won't print nothin' about Jule," her face clouding as she thought she saw the shadow of a frown on the man's face.

It was not a frown, but an emotion which caused his eyes to grow suspiciously moist, and he turned away to hide them.

A clinking sound recalled him, and he saw the little one's hands dropping the whole store of pennies and dimes and nickels upon his desk—the scant savings of weeks, or, perhaps, of months.

"No, no, my girl," he hastened to say, "take them back. I do not want them. I will see that nothing is said about your brother."

A smile lighted up her wistful face. "I am so glad," she exclaimed. "My aunt, where I'll have to go now, though she don't like us, always takes your paper, an' if she don't know what's happened to Jule, mebbe she'll be better to me, an' I can help Jule out. He was always so good ter me."

The presses were roaring and rattling still louder, and, as the child turned to go, she looked bewildered.

"Hold on," said the editor, as he touched an electric bell. "Here, John," as a messenger appeared, "take this little girl where she wants to go—and, say, get her a good supper at the restaurant on the corner—there's a dollar."

The two closed the door behind them and went out into the night.

"Half an hour lost," ejaculated the worker as he turned to his desk. A reporter sent in his matter. It was police court news. The quick blue pencil flashed across the most important item in the list—a precociously bad youth sent to the reform school.

"It means a scoop, but it may make the little thing's life easier," thought the worker, and moved, somehow, by the spirit of the moment, he softened some criticisms to appear in the morning, and now ready for putting into type.

"Say, Matthews, how'd you come to miss th' best police news last night?" growled the managing editor as he came into the office the next day. "I happened to be in the court when it happened. One of the toughest young rascals I ever saw was sent up for a spell. Won't do to be scooped on such things. They teach a lesson, you know."

"Must have overlooked it," muttered the city editor, "some of the reporters got in late, you know."

"Yes. Oh, well, I suppose the world will go on as usual if we didn't get it."

The city editor thought it might go a little better.—Detroit Free Press.

A Terrible Experience.

First Student—How did you get on in your examination?

Second Student—Badly! And to add insult to injury, one of the professors was hard of hearing, so that I had to repeat in a loud tone everything I did not know.—Flegende Blatter.

Will Be Commenced Next Month. TOPEKA BUSINESS DIRECTORY

It has been intimated that Topeka business firms would not advertise in our paper for fear of aiding or supporting our cause. The following are not of that class, and we request our readers to trade with them and let them know your reason. Remember these columns are open to all persons that want your trade. Watch for them next month.

NOTIONS.

If you want Bargains in first-class goods, buy from N. W. SLY & CO., 827 North Kansas Ave.

Kansas Carriage Works.

We make CARRIAGES, SURREYS, BUGGIES, SPRING WAGONS, Etc. All work fully warranted. Prices as low as the lowest for good grade of work. Remember the place, 125 and 127 Kansas Ave, between First and Crane. Give us a call, see our work, and get our prices.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.
Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.
Send for Circulars and Prices.
J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

Office 830 N. ansas Ave. (Over Postoffice.)
Residence, 1129 Central Ave.
A. C. DAVIS, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon.
TOPEKA, KANSAS.
Office Hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 1 to 4 and 6 to 8 p. m.

NO HATCHER MADE
Can show better results
Over 60 in successful operation at Decatur, Ill., alone.
The greatest hatch ever accomplished, 225 chicks hatched at one time, with a 20 capacity Reliable Incubator.
Hundreds of testimonials. Enclose 4 cents in stamps for new illustrated catalogue. RELIABLE INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., QUINCY, ILL.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE
Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by
CLARA BEWICK COLBY,
Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUGHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURRINGTON, KANSAS.

— I. S. & T. A. HARDING, —

FASHIONABLE MILLINERY.

Hat Dyeing and Bleaching a Specialty. Hats and Bonnets Reshaped in the Latest Styles. Also Felt Hats Repaired. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

228 Kansas Avenue, - - TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Pat'd by A. G. HULBERT, St. Louis, Mo.
Homo Made Net ting.
SAFE, DURABLE FENCE; ONLY $80 PER MILE. save one-half the cost avoid dangerous bars
Agents make $200.00 per month and expenses
The best local and traveling agents wanted everywhere. Write at once for circulars and choose territory; address A. G. Hulbert, Patentee, care of Kellogg Bros. & Co., 1000 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.
Factory Catalogue with 200 engraved designs and prices, sent free to any who want fancy iron and wire work or city, cemetery and farm fences, etc.

J. W. O'BRYON, D. D. S.

DENTIST.

FIRST-CLASS WORK at REASONABLE PRICES.

Office over Davis & Sheets store,

NORTH KANSAS AVENUE, TOPEKA, KANS.

FREE Course by Mail WITH THE LEAVENWORTH Business College.

TO ADVERTISE OUR COLLEGE

We will give a thorough course of instruction in Double and Single Entry Bookkeeping by mail FREE OF CHARGE to all applicants for a limited time. This course will be completed in forty lessons. No charge for Diplomas, Address,

Prof. F. J. Vandenberg, Pres.,

411, 413 and 415, S. 5th St. Leavenworth, Kan.

"AMONG THE OZARKS."

THE LAND OF BIG RED APPLES is the title of an attractive and highly interesting book recently issued. It is handsomely illustrated with views of South Missouri scenery, including the famous Olden fruit farm of 3,000 acres in Howell county. It pertains entirely to fruit raising in that great fruit belt of America, the southern slope of the Ozarks, and will prove of great value, not only to fruit-growers, but to every farmer and homeseeker in other states looking for a farm and a home. Mailed free. Address J. E. Lokwood, Kansas City, Mo.

SEND FOR for a year's trial. Subscription (40c. Regular Price 75c.) for

THE AMERICAN HEARTHSTONE, a thirty-two (32) Page Family Magazine, one of the best Family and Story Papers Published, and receive free either the 50c. Button Hole Scissors, Pen and Pencil Stamp, 10 Useful Books for Farm and Home, or 20 Complete Novels.

10c. FOUR MONTHS ON TRIAL 10c.

The First person's letter opened daily in answer to Our Advertisement containing a four month's year's Subscription, we will send a Type Writer FREE. Charges Paid. All letters received in answer to Our Advertisement will be numbered, and to every person we receive the hundredth letter from we will send a Fine Watch. FREE. Charges Paid.

The above offers are for new Subscribers only. Mention where you saw this. Agents wanted everywhere to get up Clubs. A Fine Watch or Bicycle can be secured by a few hour's work. Sample Copy and Outline Free.

Address, AMERICAN HEARTHSTONE, Lock Box 17.

Rockaway, New Jersey

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail $1. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

GIRLS and boys make "$8" and friends selling Headache Powders; perfectly harmless. Sample 12c. Big pay to Agents. F. G. STEWART & CO., 302 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Send 4 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age and sex, and receive a Clairvoyant diagnosis of your disease, free. DR. M. E. HILL, Mechanicsville, Iowa.

New Eyes Cataracts, scars or films can be absorbed; paralyzed nerves restored; diseased eyes or lids cured, a home treatment; "no risk;" hundreds convinced; pamphlet FREE. THE EYE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

2 Sea Shells in neat cabinet, named 24 scientific and illustrated catalogue of Nat. Hist. specimens, postpaid, 30c. C. F. CARR, Madison, Wis.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR. Destroyed forever by the Electric Needle, at the office or by patient at home. Never falls. For terms, etc., address Dr. Daniel T. Roan, 105 N. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PENNYROYAL AND COTTON PILLS for female irregularities. Positive. Ladies, send direct to manufacturer and avoid compounds from irresponsible parties; sent, securely sealed, on receipt of $1, with plain directions. S. M. OLES, Chemist, 214 Delancey St., N. Y.

Humphreys' Specifics may well be called lucky numbers, and lucky, indeed, are the persons who use them. The thirty-five Specifics cover all diseases from infancy to old age.

WE CAN DO IT!
Do you want YOUR PATENTS DEVELOPED?
PRACTICALLY DEVELOPED!
VALUABLE ARTICLES MANUFACTURED!
PRACTICAL IDEAS WORKED OUT!
WE CAN DO IT. WE HAVE DONE IT. SEE!
TOPEKA FOUNDRY,
NEAR ROCK ISLAND FREIGHT DEPOT,
TOPEKA, KANSAS

A TERRIBLE DAY.

O, Nancy was bad, and Mary was sad,
And all went wrong that day;
Cook burned the meat, 'twasn't fit to eat,
And a poor old uncle had come to stay.

It all began at the rise of sun,
As such days always do.
And when a day begins that way
Things will be wrong all through and through.

And when it was time, by the clock just 9,
For Jack to go to school,
It just set in and rained like sin,
And the whole long day was wet and cool.

And don't you think not a single wink
Would the baby sleep that day;
And Jack was so bad we were all quite glad
When he had to go into the closet and stay.

The dolls were all sick, and I had to go quick,
In the rain, for the doctor man,
I got quite wet, and they're not well yet,
My Jennie and Lizzie and Mary Ann.

Things went that way all through the day,
The dinner was late at noon,
And cook was so mad she acted bad,
And rattled each plate, fork, and spoon.

We were tired enough, with an aunt who took snuff,
And the uncle who came to stay;
We were glad when night came, for with Jack and the rain
And the rest of the things 'twas a terrible day.

THE MAN IN THE BELL.

In my younger days bell-ringing was much more the fashion among the young men of — than it is now. Some fifty years ago about twenty of us, who dwelt in the vicinity of the cathedral, formed a club, which used to ring every peal that was called for.

One Sunday I went with another into the belfry to ring for noon prayers, but the second stroke we had pulled showed us that the clapper of the bell we were at was muffled. Some one had been buried that morning, and it had been prepared, of course, to ring a mournful note.

We did not know of this, but the remedy was easy. "Jack," said my companion, "step up to the loft and cut off the hat," for the way we had of muffling was by tying a piece of an old hat or cloth (the former was preferred) to one side of the clapper, which deadened every second toll.

I complied, and mounting into the belfry, crept as usual into the bell, where I began to cut away. The hat had been tied on in some more complicated manner than usual, and I was perhaps three or four minutes in getting it off; during which time my companion below was hastily called away—by a message from his sweetheart, I believe—but that is not material to my story.

The person who called him was a brother of the club who, knowing that the time had come for ringing for service, and not thinking that any one was above, began to pull. At this moment I was just getting out when I felt the bell moving. I guessed the reason at once. It was a moment of terror, but by a hasty and almost convulsive effort I succeeded in jumping down and throwing myself on the flat of my back under the bell.

The room in which it was was little more than sufficient to contain it, the bottom of the bell coming within a couple of feet of the floor of lath. At that time I certainly was not so bulky as I am now, but as I lay it was within an inch of my face. I had not lain myself down a second when the ringing began. It was a dreadful situation.

Over me swung a great mass of metal, one touch of which would have crushed me to pieces; the floor under me was principally composed of crazy laths, and if they gave way I would be precipitated to the distance of about fifty feet upon a loft, which would, in all probability, have sunk under the impulse of my fall, and sent me to be dashed to atoms upon the marble floor of the chancel, a hundred feet below.

This was my first terror, but the ringing had not continued a minute before a more awful and immediate dread came on me. The deafening sound of the bell smote into my ears with a thunder which made me fear their drums would crack; there was not a fiber of my body they did not thrill through. It entered my very soul; thought and reflection were almost utterly banished; I only retained the sensation of agonizing terror.

Every moment I saw the bell sweep within an inch of my face, and my eyes—I could not close them, though to look at the object was bitter as death—followed it instinctively in its oscillation progress until it came back again. It was in vain that I said to myself that it could come no nearer at any future swing than it did at first; every time it descended I endeavored to shrink into the very floor to avoid being buried under the down-sweeping mass, and then, reflecting on the danger of pressing too weightily on my frail support, would cover up again as fast as I dared.

At first my fears were mere matter of fact. I was afraid the pulleys above would give way and let the bell plunge on me. At another time the possibility of the clapper being shot out in some sweep and dashing through my body, as I had seen a ramrod glide through a door, flitted across my mind. The dread, also, as I have already mentioned, of the crazy gear tormented me; but these soon gave way to fears not more unfounded, but more visionary, and, of course, more tremendous.

The roaring of the bell confused my intellect, and my fancy soon began to teem with all sorts of strange and terrifying ideas. The bell pealing above and opening its jaws with a hideous clamor seemed to me at one time a raving monster raging to devour me; at another a whirlpool ready to suck me into its howling abyss. As I gazed on it, it assumed all shapes. It was a flying eagle, or rather a roc of the Arabian story-tellers, clapping its wings and screaming over me.

As I looked upward into it, it would appear sometimes to lengthen into indefinite extent or to be twisted at the end into the spiral folds of the tail of a flying dragon. Nor was the flaming breath or fiery glance of that fabled animal wanting to complete the picture. My eyes, inflamed, bloodshot and glaring, invested the supposed monster with a full proportion of unholy light.

It would be endless were I to merely hint at all the fancies that possessed my mind. Every object that was hideous and roaring presented itself to my imagination. I often thought that I was in a hurricane at sea and that the vessel in which I was embarked tossed under me with the most furious vehemence. The air set in motion by the swinging of the bell blew over me, nearly with the violence and more than the thunder of a tempest, and the floor seemed to reel under me, as under a drunken man. But the most awful of all the ideas that seized on me were drawn from the supernatural.

In the vast cavern of the bell hideous faces appeared and glared down on me with terrifying frowns or with grinning mockery still more appalling. I found I was becoming delirious and trembled lest reason should utterly desert me. I feared lest, when utterly deprived of my senses, I should rise—to do which I was every moment tempted by that strange feeling which calls on a man whose head is dizzy from standing on the battlement of a lofty castle, to precipitate himself from it—and then death would be instant and tremendous.

When I thought of this I became desperate. I caught the floor with a grasp which drove the blood from my nails, and I yelled with the cry of despair. I called for help. I prayed. I shouted, but all the efforts of my voice were, of course, drowned in the bell. As it passed over my mouth it occasionally echoed my cries, which mixed not with its own sound, but preserved their distinct character. Perhaps this was but fancy. To me, I know, they then sounded as if they were the shouting howling or laughing of the fiends with which my imagination had peopled the gloomy cave which swung over me.

In twenty minutes the ringing was done. Half of that time passed over me without power of computation—the other half appeared an age. When it ceased I became gradually more quiet, but a new fear retained me. I knew that five minutes would elapse without ringing, but at the end of that short time the bell would be rung for a second time for five minutes more. I could not calculate time. A minute and an hour were of equal duration. I feared to rise lest the five minutes should have elapsed and the ringing again be commenced, in which case I should be crushed before I could escape against the walls or framework of the bell. I therefore still continued to lie down, cautiously shifting myself, however, with a careful gliding, so that my eye no longer looked into the hollow. This was of itself a considerable relief.

The cessation of the noise had, in a great measure, the effect of stupefying me, for my attention being no longer occupied by the chimeras I had conjured up, began to flag. All that now distressed me was the constant expectation of the second ringing, for which, however, I settled myself with a kind of stupid resolution. I closed my eyes and clinched my teeth as firmly as if they were screwed in a vise.

At last the dreaded moment came, and the first swing of the bell exerted a groan from me, as they say the most resolute victim screams at the sight of the rack, to which he is for the second time destined. After this, however, I lay silent and lethargic without a thought.

When it ceased I was aroused a little by the hope of escape. I did not, however, decide on this step hastily, but, putting up my hand with the utmost caution, I touched the rim. Though the ringing had ceased it still was tremulous from the sound, and shook under my hand, which instantly recoiled as from an electric jar. A quarter of an hour probably elapsed before I again dared to make the experiment, and then I found it at rest. I determined to lose no time, fearing that I might have lain then already too long, and that the bell for evening service would catch me.

This dread stimulated me, and I slipped out with the utmost rapidity and arose. I stood, I suppose, for a minute looking with silly wonder on the place of my imprisonment, penetrated with joy at escaping, but then rushed down the stony and irregular stair with the velocity of lightning, and arrived in the bell-ringer's room. My hands were torn and bleeding; my hair disheveled and my clothes tattered.

I leaned against the wall, motionless and deprived of thought, in which posture my companions found me when, in the course of a couple of hours, they returned to their occupation.—Blackwood's Magazine.

A Serious Case.

Old Widow Barbara Sellers has the finest flock of geese within a radius of five miles of Williamsbridge. She supports herself and educates two grandchildren on the products of the birds, all but one of which contributed, either with eggs, feathers or flesh, to her income, says the Toledo Blade. The exception was a goose, known to be twenty years old, and with a possible claim to much greater age, for nobody could say when it was hatched. It long ago ceased to lay, and its age protected it from slaughter. After it was last plucked, five years ago, its feathers did not grow again, and every winter it suffered severely from the cold. Its companions insulted it with derisive cackling, stole its share of the food and occasionally assailed it with their broad beaks. Life was a burden to it, and the other morning, before Williamsbridge awoke to the fact that it was freezing hard, the old goose died.

Mrs. Sellers is in doubt whether it committed suicide or was murdered. Long before daylight she was awakened by the cackling of her geese, and, though it was too dark to see them by looking out of her bedroom window, she knew by the direction of the sound that they were in and around the duck pond, a sheet of water about three feet deep at the rear of the house. At intervals, she says, she could hear the querulous complainings of the old goose, but its voice, after being several times cut off, at last ceases altogether.

At dawn Mrs. Sellers saw that the pond was frozen over, and in the center was an old goose with its head under the ice. The other birds were around it on the slippery surface. They were watching it closely, and had it moved they would, no doubt, have forced it back. It was quite dead, however, and Mrs. Sellers thinks the younger geese beat its head below the water and made it stay in that position until the ice formed around it. She admits, however, that it may have grown weary of its life and bent its neck while the water froze it in.

The Coincident Curse of Gold.

The goldseekers of both America and Australia have a singular but well-grounded superstition that the discoverers of hidden treasures are sure to meet with violent deaths. The original proprietors of between thirty-five and forty of the most prosperous gold and silver mines in this country are known to have come to just such ends. Out of the forty or less twelve were shot or stabbed to death in saloon and other broils; five committed suicide; three were engulfed by landslides; five turned murderers or robbers and were caught and executed in various ways; one fell into a boiling spring and had the flesh literally stewed from his bones, while the others have disappeared and no one knows what ever became of them. George H. Fryer, once the millionaire proprietor of the "Fryer Hill Mine," committed suicide in Denver after spending the last nickel between himself and starvation. The discoverer of the great Standard Mine (California) was caught and swallowed up in an avalanche; Col. Story was killed by Indians; William Fairweather of the famous "Alder Gulch Mine" died with the "frenzied horrors" after a continuous two years' debauch. "Farrell of Meadow Lake" died with a terrible disease in a San Francisco hospital. The owner of that great mine, the "Honesty," became a highwayman and was shot while robbing a stage coach. John Homer tried the same route that Fryer went. "Doughnut Bill," "Minemile Clarke," "Old Eureka," and many others were killed in saloons. Plummer, known as "Montana," the discoverer of the richest mine in the world, and at one time "Sheriff of the largest county in the United States," was finally hanged on his own scaffold.

Infants Terrible Indeed.

In the Caucasus Mountains there are many wild, uncivilized tribes of people whose terribly rough ways would make the heart of a civilized mother stand still with fear if her child were to be treated as the people of the Caucasus treat their children every day. The first thing that a Caucasian baby is given for a plaything is a dagger. This is presented to him as soon as he can walk. For an hour or two each day his mother spends her time teaching him how to use the weapon, so that he will some day become an expert. He is taught to stab water so that it makes no splash and is made to hurl his dagger at a mark again and again, until he cannot miss his aim. And all this is done during the time that other boys are spinning tops and studying a spelling book. When the Caucasian boy grows up he knows just one thing—how to use a dagger—while civilized boys know—well, some of them know a great deal.—Danville Times.

If you want a boy to walk a long distance cheerfully, give him a gun and the privilege to shoot it on the way.

NON-PARTISAN FOLLY.

From the National Watchman.

Solon, the great law-giver of ancient Greece, established in his code of laws the following important statute: "Those persons that in public differences and discussions did not declare themselves of one party or another, but waited to see how things would go before they determined, were declared infamous, condemned to perpetual banishment and to have their estates confiscated." (Rollins' Ancient History.)

Christ said: "He that is not for me is against me." Here are two authorities upon the question of non-partisanship which should not be disregarded in a discussion of that subject. They simply confirm what reason and common sense have declared since, that individual responsibility cannot justly be shirked when questions of common weal or woe are being discussed or settled. Every man that is a man and every woman that is a woman should and must arraign themselves on one side or the other of those great problems that are at present agitating the public mind. The vast amount of discussion for and against these propositions leaves no room for a neutral position. As it stands to-day, all things considered, the man who declares himself to be non-partisan is either ignorant, mistaken or mercenary. There can be no honesty connected with such a position, save only that which comes through ignorance.

The cause of reform is just now suffering from a spasm of non-partisanship into which the two old parties have thrown the alliance. These two old parties have actually assumed control of the alliance, and through the treachery of some of its leaders and the weakness of others are dictating what shall and shall not be done inside the lodge room, as well as the character of the editorials that shall be printed in the alliance press. In the west this assumption has been met with a determined spirit of independence from the order that is indeed refreshing; but in the south the case is far different. The entire democratic press and politicians have united to crush the alliance, and one of their most effective weapons is this non-partisan fallacy. Non-partisanship with them means anything that does not interfere with democracy. Every member of the alliance has the right to think, talk and vote as he pleases; in that only is the order non-partisan, or can it be. It is not a farmers' club or a school of agriculture.

LET KANSAS LEAD.

From Wakefield's Jeffersonian.

The initiative and referendum is not an experiment, but has long been in use in Switzerland in some of the cantons, and it has worked so satisfactorily that all the cantons and the Swiss national government have adopted it. It has demonstrated its utility in causing a more general interest and greater intelligence on the part of the people in public affairs. It has also destroyed that bane of all good government, partisanship, the people now discussing the merits of measures instead of parties. It has civilized politics by taking all the bitterness, malignity, prejudice and abuse out of the field. Appeals are no longer made to passion, prejudice or party hatred, but to opinions of measures proposed.

Another especially valuable result is the much higher character, both morally and intellectually, of the men that it has brought to the front in public affairs. It is now possible to get the ablest and purest men to take part in the government, which it was not so long as all appeals were made to partisan hatred and prejudice, as it still is with us. Another good result has been greater economy and honesty in public expenditures. Corrupt jobs are voted down by the people, and useless offices abolished.

Why should we be so far behind the old world in the science of government and in respect for popular rights? Let Kansas take the lead in this great reform, as she has in others, and show the other states the first example of a free democracy—a government of, by and for the people.

THE GREAT BUNCO GAME.

From the Coming Crisis.

At the statement of September 30 the banks in Chicago held $39,000,000 in money. They owed individual depositors $68,000,000 and owed other banks $57,000,000. This last sum was owed to other banks to write exchange against. Now suppose these country banks withdraw their deposits (as they are now doing), how will the Chicago banks pay $57,000,000 with $39,000,000? And when it is withdrawn how will the Chicago people do business without money? But then, there is plenty of money in the banks, you know! The first bubble in the commercial world that shakes confidence will precipitate a financial crisis that will appall the civilized world, and the people who have the money will sweep in the life's work of the millions of toilers.

What silly, ignorant flies the average men are, anyhow. Knocked out by a corrupt financial system, and go on praising it, and condemning all who try to explain its famous workings. Keep on voting the old tickets and bury your children under a debt of slavery. Bah! on such intelligence.

SILVER CERTIFICATE FRAUD.

From the Wasp.

For two years past 4,500,000 ounces of silver have been bought by our national treasury, and silver certificates have been issued to pay for the silver. On receipt of these silver certificates, the seller of the silver immediately turns to the gold counter of the treasury and receives gold for the certificate and the latter is destroyed.

The money in circulation is not increased by the operation, and all there is to it is that Wall street, by the scheme, is enabled to draw the gold out of the United States treasury.

That robber, cut-throat, legal burglary was planned by John Sherman, the financial pirate and agent for the Rothschilds.

We see none of the new silver certificates in circulation. It was never intended that they should circulate.

As the gold is pretty well drained out of the treasury, Wall street is now moving on congress to repeal the law; but as Wall street must soon permit the silver certificates to circulate or accept silver dollars for them, the people will demand that the law remain as it is till amended by another bill that will give us free coinage.

Wall street will next try to get possession of the silver while it is at a low price and then boom the price in order to reap another harvest.

ONE POCKET-BOOK REASON.

From Wakefield's Jeffersonian.

One of the principal reasons for the desperate and revolutionary efforts made by the corporations to retain possession of the house of representatives in Kansas is to prevent the passage of a law making coal mines assessable for taxation in this state. Practically, all of the coal lands and mines of Kansas are owned by a ring of railway officials, and by a corrupt decision of our supreme court these very valuable coal lands can only be assessed for their surface or farm value. A quarter section underlaid by a quarter million dollars' worth of coal is assessed the same as one with no coal at all beneath it. In this way the railroad ring keep in their coffers about two millions per year of taxes they should pay, and the farmers pay that much more than their just proportion.

We are cursed with lawyers in the halls of legislation; men who are trained in the art of trickery and deception; men who for hire will prostitute their powers in the defence of any known crime; men who, when they hang out their sign, announce to the public, "My services are for hire, no matter who may want them." Their natural instincts lead to complicating the law with a mass of technicalities in order to furnish business for the profession, and have so far succeeded that we have 120,000 in this country where we ought to have but a few.

Wall street, through Congressman Harter and Senator Sherman, has arranged to flood congress with letters and telegrams from all parts of the country, asking for the repeal of the Sherman act, which compels the purchase of 4,500,000 ounces of silver each month. This is the same old game that was inaugurated by Bean-Soup Atkinson to defeat free coinage. Every banker, money shark and nearly every lawyer and doctor, will doubtless respond to this call as they did to the other. The Grand Army members will, under present conditions, be a little shy, since the pension business needs friends just now instead of enemies. In fact, an effort is being made to array the consumer against the producer, the town against the country, in order that greed and avarice may reap a fresh harvest each year.

AGRICULTURAL TOPICS.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

Cellarway for Wintering Plants—Pumpkins Make Yellow Butter—Feed Rack for Poultry—Stock Should Be Sheltered—Facts About the Farm.

Convenient Plant Pit.

American Gardening gives an illustrated description and sketches of an ingenious plan for utilizing an outdoor cellarway as a plant pit. The ordinary outside cellarway is almost invariably made to face the south, and is thus in the right situation. All that is needed is to substitute glass for the wooden doors, and make everything snug and tight, banking with earth if thought necessary. The inner cellar door is left open and danger from freezing is thus avoided. The cellar steps serve as plant shelves. Many plants, such as century plants, oleanders, large cactuses, etc., that have grown too large to be accommodated in the sitting room or conservatory, can be wintered in any moderately dry, frostproof cellar. After placing these large plants in the cellar it will not be necessary to give them any water, the object being to keep them dormant all winter, which can be done by keeping the soil dry, but not so dry as to allow the plants to shrivel or become withered. Large geraniums, salvia, and heliotrope roots, and even tea roses and carnations can be kept moderately well in the cellar by trenching them in dry moist sand. The leaves of all deciduous plants should be removed before they are put away in this manner. The foliage should remain on the oleanders and carnations.

EXTERIOR OF THE PIT.

CROSS SECTION OF THE PIT.

Shelter the Stock.

That farmer spoke an everlasting truth that said in a Wisconsin farm institute: "My friends, one cold fall rain will injure my cows and sheep more than standing out a whole day, dry cold weather." He further said that it took a deal of time and preaching to jog him into the idea of putting his stock under shelter in the fall. "I am convinced," he added, "by the experience of only five years that I have lost money enough by neglect in this particular in my life time, to pay for my whole farm. It pays me a big profit to see that my stock is kept comfortable the year round." A breeder of high-class dairy cows lately set prices upon some of his surplus stock, but before the buyer accepted his offer he was induced to have his milk product analyzed. The result astonished him and led to a complete revision of his prices. One 1-year-old cow which he had placed at a low price was found capable of yielding sixteen pounds of butter a week, and another cow gave him a similar surprise, while one that he thought more valuable than either could not yield seven pounds a week. Test them before buying or selling.

Pumpkins Make Yellow Butter.

Many butter makers feed pumpkins to the cows, and the rich yellow color of the flesh of this food is due to the large quantity of deep yellow oil in this flesh. On the well-established principle that the fats of the food go directly into the milk, without change by digestion, it would only be reasonable to believe that the yellow butter made when pumpkins are fed is due to this yellow oil in the food. There is a common opinion to the effect that pumpkins are injurious to the cows, as tending to reduce the quantity of milk given. This is quite a mistake. This deep yellow color has been known to affect the fat of pigs that have been fattened on pumpkins so much as to make it unsalable, on the suspicion that the pigs have been diseased. The food is highly fattening, and one of the cheapest and most healthful, but as yellow bacon is not desired so much as yellow butter is, it will be desirable to feed pumpkins to pigs with buckwheat, which to some extent counteracts the high color of the former, and the addition of bran or shorts to the food will be a further help in this direction.

Ornament the Roadside.

The general appearance of the roadside can be much improved by clearing up the brush and loose fencing material, and by not using the roadside as a dumping ground for rubbish. Plant a few shade trees upon one side only, especially if the road runs north and south, as large trees on both sides shade the road so densely that it dries out very slowly after each rain. A few apple, or other standard fruit trees, with proper care, can be made to flourish and be as valuable along the roadside as in the cultivated fields. Weeds and bushes should be cut down each year, and it takes but a little time to make the roadsides so smooth that the grass along them can be cut with a machine. They look so much neater when thus trimmed, and the hay alone will compensate for all trouble involved in this road improvement.

Poultry Feed Rack.

To keep the poultry out of their food is a constant study with most feeders, but notwithstanding the care exercised much is wasted and more is soiled. A first-rate feed rack for fowls can be made with slats, but it is a slow job and therefore expensive. I have found a quicker way and one that is fully as effective. Let a good trough be made of boards, with board ends one foot high, and into these mortise a stick one inch square so its top will lie flush with the top of the end boards. Now tack a piece of bale wire to the right-hand end of one side of the trough and carry it over the inch stick, securing it in the same way on the other side. Use lath nails instead of tacks and do not drive them close in until the wire lacing is completed. Then they will carry the wire with them into the wood. A broad board nailed on top of the end pieces keeps the birds off the ridge and gives the wires an additionally tight fastening. Such a feed rack is lighter, stronger, cheaper, because the old wire costs nothing, more durable and cleanly than one made entirely of wood.—L. J. Simpson, in Farm and Home.

THE RACK COMPLETE.

About Bees.

The Progressive Bee Keeper says: "By careful watching, most beekeepers could save choice drones and rear queens enough for their own apiary, either between the summer and fall harvest, or after the fall crop is gathered in. We feed our nuclei and drone colonies when our queens are old enough to mate, so as to have all flying at once, and so lessen the chance of any mismating."

Farm Facts.

JUDGMENT must be used as to the depth of planting.

You get from the animal what was put into it—no more.

We must adapt our schools to teaching what is practical.

LEARNING to do one thing helps in learning to do another.

EXERCISE breeding stock and keep up the bone and muscle.

SHALLOW rooting plants are best adapted to shallow soils.

Sorghum as a fodder crop stands drought better than corn.

You cannot have the best crop unless you use the best seed.

LETTING an animal run down to save food is a double loss.

On the farm is where the laws of nature can be best learned.

BLUE grass, like other grasses, is valuable where it flourishes.

Do not be afraid of a little fresh air and sunshine in the house.

ROTTING manure before applying it is facilitating nature's processes.

A too concentrated fertilizer is like too concentrated food—injurious.

Be sure of your market before you go into any productive enterprise.

THE earlier grass is cut the sooner the second crop begins to come on.

Ripe or full-grown grass in the pasture is always shunned by animals.

THE farmer should know the needs of the crop and the lack of the soil.

PLENTY of grass with a little grain will keep pigs in good market condition.

KEEP your potatoes and apples in the coolest and darkest place you can find.

THERE is generally lime enough in the soil, but its presence is indispensable.

LAND plaster (sulphate of lime) is the best form of lime to use as an absorbent.

GOOD ROADS.

Comment of Exchanges on This Important Subject.

WHAT is needed is crystallization of opinion on the subject, both as to the character of roads desired and practical methods of securing them, such as raising the necessary money and superintendence of construction. It is not enough to petition the legislature for better road laws. Some well-digested plan should be suggested. The legislators, the majority of whom doubtless have given the subject little thought, cannot be expected to grasp it with intelligence unaided while their minds are busily occupied with a multitude of other things. This crystallization of ideas into practical form should be done in advance.—Portland Oregonian.

A MOVEMENT so clearly in the interest of the general welfare rises above all partisan schemes and appeals to the support of good citizens of all classes, irrespective of politics or party. Indeed, we seem to have passed the point where it is necessary to argue in favor of the necessity or benefits of good roads to all classes of community. These are now universally conceded by all whose opinions are worth anything, and the only question now is, How shall public opinion on the subject be organized and made effective.—Indianapolis Journal.

THE trackless forest belongs to the savage state; the foot-path to the barbarian; but a good road is a mark and triumph of civilization. It not only encourages frequent, perhaps constant, intercourse among the people; it also helps trade, and the interchange of commodities is as important as the interchange of opinion. There may be some who think this statement a little overdrawn, so far as the influence of good roads is concerned; but they must be of the sort who never make use of roads except railroads.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Good roads are not like great men. They are not born, they must be made. The fact that we have none is easily explained when it is remembered, first, that our country people do not know what a good road really is; second, that they would not know how to build one; third, that they do not realize its enormous direct commercial importance, and fourth (as follows quite naturally from the last), that they are unwilling to incur the expense of properly building and maintaining the highway.—New York Times.

It will strike a great many people, however, that training of road engineers is not as yet quite so essential as the education of the public with respect to the advantage of good roads and especially with regard to the economy of systematic and substantial construction. Before road engineers can find employment there must be roads to be built, and as a preliminary to this last there must be public sentiment demanding good roads and a public willing to be taxed for their construction.—Detroit Tribune.

It is "a good deal of a job" to make a really good, smooth durable wagon road. The Roman roads, constructed two thousand years ago, are good examples to-day of what the art of roadmaking can produce. Some of their roads, built in Great Britain in Christ's time, are good, solid roads to-day. The Scotchmen, always ahead of most other people in real force of character and achievement, have developed the macadam system of roadmaking; and the world will and can have no other.—Hartford Times.

THE petition for a Road Department at Washington is the formulation of a desire and an enthusiasm which has hitherto been somewhat nebulous. And it is one which would quite certainly be signed by every wheelman in the country; and which ought to be signed by every farmer, and everyone directly or indirectly dependent upon the prosperity of the farmer, and, indeed, by everyone who wants to go anywhere.—Omaha World-Herald.

THAT annual loot, the river and harbor bill, would be a mild-mannered and moral affair beside the scramble for road appropriations. The place to ask for good roads is not the lobby of Congress, but in the State Legislatures. Here in Indiana the present winter will give opportunity for the consideration of a better road law, and the Legislative halls of all States are the proper place for this. Good roads is a local question.—Indianapolis News.

Nor only would good roads attract to every part of the land a liberal and profitable pleasure travel, but in addition to all this the facility, in fact the pleasure, of communication among themselves would cause a social intercourse which would practically entirely overcome the isolation, selfishness, and ignorance of human nature that are so characteristic of country life.—St. Joseph Herald.

ENGLAND began more than 100 years ago to build up her present magnificent system of public roads. Her road system was then similar to ours of the present day, but when it was taken out of local control and a substantial turnpike plan was adopted it took only thirty years to build 30,000 miles of just such roads as the people of the United States are beginning to demand at the close of the nineteenth century.—Omaha Bee.

It was well known to the advocates of good roads that if the people could be made to look at the matter right, to give the subject of good roads proper attention and study, the reform would be quick and thorough. The farmer has been hardest to reach, although he is the party most in interest. It was so in regard to other reforms which touched him most closely.—Houston Post.

ONCE convince a man that $5 worth of labor spent on the road passing his farm means the saving of two or three times that sum in the transportation of his goods over the roads, and he will not only join in the movement himself but will see to it that his neighbors are interested. A Government Department could do no more and would do less.—Utica Observer.

Varieties of the Human Voice.

People of a cheerful nature and good physique generally possess deep-toned, powerful voices. The keen, metallic voice is the mark of a hard and selfish soul, and its possessor is an active, shrewd but cold-blooded person, capable in business, but unsympathetic in the home. The velvety voice is always associated with a reserved nature, and may be possessed by people of either large or small physique. In any case it implies a distrustful, shy disposition. Sometimes it shows deceit, and belongs to a hypocrite, although, in that case, a little oiliness is added to its composition. The plodding unambitious person has a monotonous, cheerless voice. Quick, sharply-defined tones denote the energetic man. They show the man of action, the born leader. The man with a husky voice is his opposite, is never sanguine, and goes through life with head down-bent and eyes full of tears. Calm, distinct, and direct tones indicate a clear and logical mind, and if these be mellowed by musical inflections they show talent and intellect. The supreme minds of the world have frequently had this type of voice. The nasal voice, the guttural voice, and the falsetto voice are all certainly disagreeable, and may be at least improved if the owners will take the trouble. But this can only be done by going straight to the root of the matter. "The shrill voice of the bad-tempered woman can never be modulated into accents that fall sweetly on the listener's ear until the shrewish temper be made lovely; the loud, harsh tones of the angry man will continue to be a source of terror and annoyance to his friends, so long as the violence of his disposition remains unchecked. The high-spirited treble of the frivolous school-girl will sadden and disgust more earnest natures until the lessons of life shall have broadened and deepened in her the channels of feeling and of thought." No amount of care can be too great to make the voice agreeable and sympathetic. It should be trained to fuller and richer tones, while yet it is tender and pliable. Then that which is at first a habit, will by degrees become second nature, and the qualities of gentleness and grace, as shown by the beautiful voice, will take firm root.

A Big Elm's Spectacular End.

Near L. S. Fowler's farm-house, at the foot of the Greylock group of mountains in Williamstown, stands an elm tree that has been famous for many years on account of its unusual size. Twenty or more years ago the late Prof. Albert Hopkins of Williams College took measurements which showed the first limb to be 105 feet from the ground. The trunk is twenty-five feet in circumference at the base. It is believed there are few, if any, larger elms in Berkshire County. Aug. 4 it was struck by lightning. It is thought a section of the tree is hollow, as the tree was set on fire and has been burning ever since. The night of Aug. 25 the tree was struck by lightning a second time. This seemed remarkable then, but much more wonderful is the fact that the tree is still burning, and has been constantly from that time. Most of the time it has been a slow, smoldering fire, but Mr. Fowler says that election night it broke out greater than ever before and sent a column of flame twenty-five feet above the top of the trunk, which has been gradually reduced until it is now not more than thirty-five or forty feet high. The illumination was such that Mr. Fowler's neighbors hurried to his place supposing one of his buildings was on fire. It made a light by which one could have read a newspaper twenty rods away. Mr. Fowler believes the tree will burn to the ground, and says his son is preparing to plant a young elm on the site next spring.

Lightning.

A noted German authority, contributes an interesting article on the treatment of persons apparently killed by lightning. He says that lightning comes in the form of a main bolt and several branches, and that if a person is struck by one of the branches he will recover if the method of artificial respiration, as applied to the apparently drowned, shall be adopted within a quarter of an hour after being struck.

THE coming man will fly when the coming broom is after him.

CHICAGO NEWSPAPERS.

Night Scenes to Be Studied in the City by the Lakes.

In the respective newspaper offices hundreds of men are working away for dear life. Reporters are writing up their "stuff," as the matter they write is technically termed; copy-readers are editing articles already received; the night city editor is taking another look at the assignment book to see that everything has been "covered;" the night editor is making a survey of what the paper will have the next day and how much space he can give to each department. In the telegraph room the instruments are clicking out the news from all parts of the world, and as the operators translate the dots and dashes into written English, the telegraph editors are putting these and other telegrams into shape for the printers. In the composing room hundreds of printers are setting type. The stereotypers are getting ready for the first "form" to come in. The pressmen down-stairs are making ready to run off the first editions.

At the stockyards there are many men who work all night. Long before the break of day Armour's "yellow wagons," and Swift's, and Morris', and Hammond's are traversing the streets between the rows of sleeping houses, carrying in huge masses the tenderloin and chop, which will smoke on the broiler that morning.

The bronze policeman at the Haymarket square sees another contingent of the night toilers. Before the midnight hour the wide square has begun to receive its quota of the business of the next day. Farmers and gardeners drive into the market place, their big wagons loaded with fruit and vegetables of all kinds. They come from the country all around Chicago. They bring tender lettuce, and succulent radishes, and pungent young onions, and cabbage, and potatoes, and squash, and pumpkins, and water-cresses, and fruits, and berries. Having arrived at the market the farmer unhitches his horses, places them with their heads at the front of the wagon, feeds them with hay in a box slung from the wagon, and then curls himself up on the spring seat, covers himself with blankets, and goes to sleep.

And then the street sweepers. There are hundreds of them. Each night they sweep the down town streets and cart away the refuse. They are queer shapes as they flit, hoe in hand, in and out of the lights and shadows. They are mostly Italians. Each has a tin bucket containing his lunch hanging at his back fastened to a strap around his waist. The night is kind to them. It hides their grimy features. They are not bad men, but they have never heard that "cleanliness is next to godliness."

And so this army of night workers toils on—journalists, printers, pressmen, police, firemen, postoffice, railroad and hotel employees; messenger boys, cab drivers, farmers, telegraph operators, car drivers and conductors, hospital employees and street sweepers—fully 20,000 of them labor to make life pleasanter the coming day for their million fellow citizens.

Americanized Chinese.

A writer in the San Francisco Call has discovered a Chinese family that is thoroughly Americanized. The head of the house Joseph Tape, is the interpreter to the Chinese Consulate and carries on an express business. Mrs. Tape, who came from China when she was 11 years old, was brought up by the Ladies' Relief Society of San Francisco. Their house is furnished with a piano and other musical instruments, the "Encyclopedia Britannica," a set of Shakespeare and other standard works, oil paintings, and a collection of stuffed birds shot by Mr. Tape, who is an expert with a gun. Mrs. Tape is an enthusiastic amateur photographer and has taken several diplomas for her work with the camera. She is also a telegraph operator, and there is a private telegraph line between Mr. Tape's offices and his house. The children are musicians, two girls playing the piano, while the only son performs on a French horn. Mr. Tape regrets that he is not allowed to vote, but comforts himself with the reflection that his boy will be able to do so when he grows up.

The Buchanan Memorial Window.

Leading in the way of truly rich and handsome memorials is the one to the memory of the late President James Buchanan in St. James' Episcopal Church, Lancaster. The records of this parish, in the keeping of the Rev. Percy L. Rowbottom, the Rector, are complete from the year 1745, and in the list of ministers appear the names of the Rev. William Augustus Muhlenberg, the author of the well-known hymn, "I Would Not Live Always;" Bishops White, Bowman and Knight. The Buchanan window is considered one of the finest in effect and beauty to be found in America. It depicts the scene where Christ meets the wise men in the temple and says to them: "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?"—Philadelphia Times.

BUFFALO BILL, at the zenith of his popularity and success, is not ashamed of the fact that he was once a scout. He scouts the very idea.

The National Women's Alliance Incorporated.

A charter for the National Women's Alliance was filed with the Secretary of State September 24, 1901. The incorporators are the wife of Senator Peffer, the wife of Congressman Otis, the wife of Secretary J. B. Francis, editor of the Topeka Farmer's Wife, and Mrs. Fannie McCormick, worthy foreman of the Knights of Labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION IS TO ESTABLISH A BUREAU FOR THE BETTER EDUCATION OF WOMEN ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS AND TO DEVELOP A BETTER STATE, MENTALLY, MORALLY, AND FINANCIALLY, WITH THE FULL AND UNCONDITIONAL USE OF THE BALLOT.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Fannie McCormick, president; Mrs. Emma D. Pack, secretary, and Mrs. Bina A. Otis, treasurer, with the following vice presidents:

- Mrs. M. B. Olund, of Alabama.
- Emma Ghent Curtis, Colorado.
- Annette Nye, California.
- Marion Todd, Illinois.
- Anabella McCann, Kentucky.
- P. A. Stanford, Missouri.
- Eva McDonald Vahsel, Minnesota.
- S. E. Y. Emery, Michigan.
- Elizabeth Rodgers, New Jersey.
- Anna D. Weaver, New York.
- L. D. Stillson, Arkansas.
- Allie J. Taylor, Mississippi.
- Mary M. Chedy, Texas.
- Anna L. Diggs, District of Columbia.
- D. F. Pierce, Washington.
- Mary E. Lease, Kansas.
- E. M. Wardal, South Dakota.
- Eleanor Goodrich, Iowa.
- Mary L. Jeffs, Ohio.
- Mame C. Bonham, Indiana.

The FARMER'S WIFE, published at Topeka, was designated as the official organ.

The committee on constitution and by-laws report the following:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

In view of the great social, industrial and financial revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the universal demand of all classes of our American citizens for equal rights and privileges on every vocation of human life, we, the industrial women of America, declare our purposes in the formation of this organization as follows:

- 1st. To study all questions relating to the structure of human society, in the full light of modern invention, discovery and thought.
- 2d. To carry out into practical life the precepts of the golden rule.
- 3d. To recognize the full political equality of the sexes.
- 4th. To aid in carrying out the principle of co-operation in every department of human life to its fullest extent.
- 5th. To secure the utmost harmony and unity among the Sisterhood, in all sections of the country.
- 6th. To teach the principles of international arbitration and, if possible, to prevent war.
- 7th. To discourage in every way possible the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or the habitual use of tobacco or other narcotics injurious to the human system.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Women's Alliance.

Sec. 2. The officers shall consist of a President, Secretary and Treasurer, also one Vice President from each state and territory represented, and an Executive Board of five.

Sec. 3. Officers shall be elected at the regular annual meeting in each year.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the organization.

Sec. 5. In the absence of the President, one of the Vice Presidents may preside, as the meeting may select. Each Vice President shall have charge of the work in her state until a state organization is perfected, and shall act as the general organizer of her state and report the progress of the work to the National Secretary every month.

Sec. 6. The Secretary shall keep a correct record of the proceedings of the Alliance, conduct the correspondence, keep the official seal and authenticate all documents, receive all moneys and turn the same over to the Treasurer and take a receipt therefor.

Sec. 7. The Treasurer is to receipt for all moneys and pay the same out upon the order of the President, countersigned by the Secretary.

Sec. 8. The Executive Board shall have charge of the organization when the Alliance is not in session, and shall examine the books of the Secretary and Treasurer at the annual meeting and report the condition of the same, and shall provide for the time and place of meeting of the Alliance when not otherwise provided for.

ARTICLE II.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. A state organization shall be chartered by the National President whenever seven local organizations are formed, in compliance with the National constitution.

Sec. 2. Each community shall be organized under the direction of the State Organizer, whenever ten members are enrolled.

Sec. 3. That each community shall have a representative in the state organization of one delegate for every twenty members or fraction thereof in excess of ten, provided each organization shall be entitled to one delegate.

Sec. 4. That each state organization shall be entitled to one delegate to the National Alliance for every 100 members in the state or fraction in excess of fifty.

STATUTORY LAWS.

SECTION 1. Any woman desiring to advance the social, moral, intellectual and financial condition of her race, can become a member of this Alliance by signing this constitution and declaration of purposes, and paying the fee of 30 cents and a monthly due of 5 cents to the secretary of their local assembly.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the local organization to send to the secretary of the State organization the sum of 15 cents for each member enrolled, and 5 cents each quarter out of dues paid in by each member during the quarter.

Sec. 3. That the secretary of the State organization shall send to the secretary of the local organization the sum of 5 cents out of membership fees received during the quarter, and one-half of all dues paid into the State secretary during the quarter.

Sec. 4. That all charters shall be issued from the National Alliance. State charters shall be furnished at $5.00 and local charters at $1.00.

Sec. 5. This constitution and by-laws can be amended at any time by a majority vote of the National Women's Alliance at any regular annual meeting.

(Mrs. M. E. LEASE, Committee.
Mrs. B. A. OTIS,
Mrs. M. C. CLARK,
The incorporators are the executive board for the first year.

Mrs. FANNIE MCCORMICK, Pres't,
Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, Sec'y.

Woman's Chronicle.

Published every Saturday.

MRS. KATE CUNNINGHAM, Editor.

MRS. MARY BROOKS, Associate Editor.

TERMS, $1.00 Per Year, IN ADVANCE.

Cor. 2nd and Louisiana Sts., Little Rock, Ark.

JOHN SPEAR,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

5 AND 10 CENT GOODS.

528 Kansas Avenue,

NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SILK DRESS FREE!

We will GIVEAWAY absolutely FREE, of cost, a large black or colored SILK DRESS pattern of 16 yards to any young lady in every town in America, who is willing to introduce the FARMER'S WIFE to her friends.

THE MODERN QUEEN, a large 16-page 61 column, illustrated magazine, one of the best published. Devoted to Fiction, Fashions, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decorations and everything pertaining to the household. Send at once 25 cents for the magazine one year on trial and a package of elegant silks to select from.

Address, THE MODERN QUEEN CO., 76-78-80 Center Street, NEW HAVEN, CONN. Mention this paper.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes. Medici Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enameled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each we will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE,

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla bin, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, Toronto.

"A vast amount of trust, orly matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manilla binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and gives information about these things which ladies particularly wish to know, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

SEEDS J. G. PEPPARD, 1400-1402 UNION AV.,

MILLET A SPECIALTY. Red, White, Alfalfa and Alsike Clovers, Timothy, Blue Grass, Orchard Grass, Red Top, Onion Sets, Tree Seeds, Cane Seed. KANSAS CITY, MO.

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., Publishers, 361 Broadway, New York City.

COMPLEXION WAFERS.

LADIES

If you desire to LOOK YOUNG and BEAUTIFUL, use CHARCOAL TABLETS. They bleach and brighten the complexion and sweeten the breath. Very popular with Society Ladies. Address, DR. SWENNEY, Allegheny, N. Y.

Perfectly harmless. Per box $1.

1840-1893.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOTTLE.

"TRUE" NATIONALIST.

Progressive, Fearless and Spicy.

SUBSCRIPTION, - $1.00 PER YEAR.

Advocates the Initiative, the Referendum and the Imperative Mandate as the best means of progress on the lines of human liberty. Commends its principles to MEN, all parties, parties, Corner Beaver and Pearl Streets, New York City.

500 PARCELS OF MAIL FREE

Including Sample Books, Novelties, Pictures, Magazines, Letters, Papers, etc., each with your address boldly printed on each wrapper. You will receive more choice reading and heavier mail of any one at your town. We will also insert your address for twelve months in our guaranteed directory, that goes circulating daily to Manufacturers and Publishers all over the world; and 500 of your body printed and gummed addresses, in two colors, for your personal use to elicit orders for books, etc.; also Lem Smith's famous 12-months (regular price $50 cents). All free and post-paid. Send no money. Address a postcard to GUARANTEED ADDRESS CO., 126 S. 3rd St., Phila., Pa.

HUMPHREYS' VETERINARY SPECIFICS

For Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Dogs, Hogs, AND POULTRY.

500 Page Book on Treatment of Animals and Chart Set Free.

Cures Fevers, Congestions, Inflammation, A.A. (Spinal Meningitis), Milk Fever, E.C. (Erysipelas), Lameness, Rheumatism, G.C. (Distemper, Nasal Discharges, D.D. (Bots or Grubs, Worms, E.E. (Coughs, Heaves, Pneumonia, F.F. (Colic or Griping, Hellyache, G.G. (Miscarriage, Hemorrhages, H.H. (Urinary and Kidney Diseases, I.I. (Eruptive Diseases, Mange, J.J. (Diseases of Digestion, Paralysis, Single Bottle (over 50 doses), .60

Stable Case, with Specimens, Manual, Veterinary Cure Oil and Medicator, .80

Jar Veterinary Cure Oil, 1.00

Sold by Druggists; or sent prepaid anywhere and in any quantity on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., New York.

FAMILY LEDGER

MODERN STORIES OF WESTERN LIFE AND ADVENTURE

10 WEEKS 10 CENTS

THE GREAT WESTERN FAMILY STORY PAPER

LARGER YET SIMILAR IN STYLE TO THE $2.00-A-YEAR NEW YORK STORY PAPER

ADDRESS-MAN OFFICE FAMILY LEDGER, STOCKTON, CALIF.

OFFER GOOD ONLY WHEN MENTIONED IN THIS PUBLICATION

EVERY Family Student School Library

S-H-O-U-L-D Own a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

THE INTERNATIONAL NEW FROM COVER TO COVER, IS THE ONE TO BUY.

SUCCESSOR OF THE UNABRIDGED. Ten years spent in revising, 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended

Sold by all Booksellers.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions.

Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and full particulars.

Unlike the Dutch Process No Alkalies

—OR— Other Chemicals are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper?

Do you wish to know what the eastern women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the Romanists?

Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work?

Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

Eliza Trask Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 9, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

ARE YOU AFFLICTED WITH CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION or any disease of the THROAT, LUNGS?

Send for a book of 100 pages, mailed FREE, describing treatment and its proper use in each disease. Treatment by inhalation.

THE SPECIFIC OXYGEN CO., Nashville, Tenn.

HATCH CHICKENS BY STEAM

With the Improved Excelsior Incubator.

Simple, Perfect, Self-Regulating. Thousands in successful operation. Guaranteed to hatch a larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other incubator. Lowest priced first-class Hatchery made.

Send for Circular. GEO. H. STALL, Quincy, Ill.

BEST IN THE WORLD.

SMITH'S PATENT BROODER.

HOLDER.

Sent to any address by mail for the silver of 1.00. In stamps by a few days, and you will be startled at the unexpected success that will reward your efforts. We positively have the best business to offer an agent that can be found on the face of this earth.

A. J. SMITH, Totoket, Conn.

WORK FOR US

$45.00 profit on $75.00 worth of business is being easily and honorably made by paid to hundreds of men, women, boys and girls in our employ. You can make money faster at work for us than you have any idea of. The business is so easy to learn, and instructions so simple and plain, that all succeed from the start. Those who take hold of the business reap the advantage that arises from the sound reputation of one of the oldest, most successful, and largest publishing houses in America. Secure for yourself the profits that the business so readily and handsomely yields. All beginners succeed grandly, and more than realize their greatest expectations. Those who try it find exactly as we tell them. There is plenty of room for a few more workers, and we urge them to begin at once. If you are already employed, but have a few spare moments, and wish to use them to advantage, then write us at once (for this is your grand opportunity), and receive full particulars by return mail. Address,

TRUE & CO., Box No. 400, Augusta, Me.

FREE TO YOU!

In order to introduce our mammoth story paper into new homes we will send free of cost to every person answering this ad, either of the elegant heavy and solid rings shown below. Guaranteed to be genuine gold filled and to wear well and give entire satisfaction. To each person who sends us $1 (cash or stamps) for a full year's subscription to our great Illustrated weekly family story paper, established 1857, 32 pages, 48 columns, we will send either of these massive and elegant rings by return mail free charges prepaid. Two rings and 2 yearly subscriptions $2. Near in mind, these rings are not cheap plated goods, but guaranteed to be genuine gold filled.

This wonderful offer is only made to introduce our paper. Just as represented. If you money cheerfully refunded.

Measure your finger with a slip of paper. Write to-day! Address, ROCK MOUNTAIN SENTINEL, 1636

Engraved Ring. Curtis St., Denver, Colo.

TA MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Or Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager

May, June, Sept. + Oct 1892 + Feb. 1893.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, MARCH, 1893.

TENTH YEAR. VOL. 11, NO. 8.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

He gazes in rapture on his fair bride,
The angel records his solemn vow
To "love, and cherish, till death do us part"—
He's sure he'd yield his life for her now.
The maiden, who oft hath prayed for sweet love,
Is sure that what in future betide,
He'll tenderly cherish, during her life—
This "nature's noblemen," by her side.

A score of years in eternity merged,
View mother, wife—that bride of the May,
Ah, who would think her cherished and loved,
So faded is she, so worn and gray!
And list to her prayer as she kneels alone:
"O God, some with love I know are blest;
But Thou sure canst give richer blessings now,
Vouchsafe unto me Thy sweet, sweet rest!"

They wreathed the word "Rest," in flowers on her bier.

O husband, perchance your faithful wife
Finds no recompense, no cherishing care,
And prays for rest, so hard is her life!

FANNY L. FANCHIER.

WHY DEMOCRATIC WOMEN WANT THE BALLOT.

As a woman, and a Kentucky woman,
I must say at the outset that it seems to me an impertinence for any man to require me to give a reason for wanting the ballot.

Men everywhere, and in Kentucky especially, pride themselves on their chivalry, their absolute devotion to woman.
Now when a woman makes a request of a man, it is not chivalric to demand the reason for that request, whether it be for a new spring bonnet or the right to vote.
It is not chivalric in the first place to allow her to ask for what she wants. Real chivalry would lead man to anticipate the wants of woman, and spare her proud, gentle spirit the pain, the humiliation of having to ask for what she wants.

"That comes too late which comes for the asking," says Seneca, and I've wondered how a man could have evolved such a thought, for it is the perfect expression of that exquisite womanly dignity which realizing its right to homage from men, is outraged by having to beg for that which should come without asking.

"Your wish is my law." "To anticipate your wish is my highest pleasure."
Such is the language of chivalry. And so, when we women ask for the ballot, instead of gruffly demanding "Why do you want it?" chivalric man should say:
"The ballot, my dear Madam? A thousand apologies for not having offered it to you before. If I had dreamed you wanted it, it might have been yours long ago. I doubt if it is a good thing for you to have, but your will is my law, so here it is." This would be proper conduct on the part of that chivalry whose theory is that woman is a "queen" and a "goddess" and man her loyal subject and abject worshipper.

However, as things are not as they should be in this "naughty world," since women have not only to ask, but give a reason for asking and get generally a curt refusal for all their pains, it becomes them to descend from their "thrones" and "shrines," and meekly give thanks for merely the opportunity to ask and explain why they ask.

Such an opportunity is mine in attempting to explain why Democratic women want the ballot, or rather why Democratic women ought to have the ballot; for I regret to say that, in the south at least, few women who hold to the principles of this party have any desire to vote, and this fact is a matter of congratulation to the party itself.

A Kentucky editor, commenting on the women delegates to the Minneapolis convention, said "Heaven be thankful that Democracy when it puts on its war-paint and feathers, leaves the squaws and papooses at home." The felicitous words were certainly not dictated by the spirit of chivalry, let me say in passing, and a Kentucky woman hardly feels complimented at being called a "squaw."

According to my observation the women who want to vote are found mostly in the People's party, or the Prohibition party, or any other party that champions some moral or social reform. This means that women, as a rule, do not want to vote unless there is some palpable advantage to be gained by it. Expediency is the keynote of all woman's protests against disfranchisement. There is one all-sufficient, all-embracing reason why women should vote, but in the extremity of their need, women have seldom been bold enough to urge this. They have taken refuge behind a score of minor reasons, and their appeals are more to the pity than to the reason of men.

I want prohibition, but that is not why I want to vote: I want a reduction of the tariff, but that is not why I want to vote;
I want municipal reform, but that is not why I want to vote; I want property rights, but that is not why I want to vote.

If every reform advocated by every party could be carried into effect tomorrow, I would still be a woman suffragist.
There are vantage grounds for a woman who wants to vote; one is on the shifting sands of expediency, the other on the solid rock of eternal justice. I choose the latter; and, standing here, I can always find a reason for the faith that is in me.

The Democratic party prides itself on being the party of broad, liberal principles, the sole representative of Jeffersonian Democracy, consequently in giving a reason why a woman of that party wants to vote we must give one that is broad and comprehensive enough to suit the men who advocate "The largest individual liberty consistent with the rights of others."

I am not optimistic enough to hope that the millennium will come as soon as women vote. Indeed I fear that with the help of women's votes it will be long, long before we bring to pass the reforms we so much desire. Nevertheless I want the ballot, because, as a citizen of a "representative government," and a republic that guarantees "universal suffrage" and as a member of a party that believes in
"the largest individual liberty," the right to vote is my right of which I am defrauded.
This is my sole reason: I want this thing because it is my own.

Do these words seem absurd coming from an obscure woman whose life is bounded by the four walls of home and whose days are filled with the homely duties of wifehood and motherhood?

Taxation without representation was the wrong that moved our forefathers to a bloody war. Doubtless in those troubled days there were some coward souls who preached peace and forbearance to the freedom-loving ones to whom Justice was so dear that they were ready to die in her cause. Why did they not drink their tea and be at peace with England?
Was not the taxed tea of England cheaper than the untaxed tea of any other country? What mattered a principle so long as they got their tea?

The blood of men who fought in that revolution flows in my veins, and when I hear men and women say "Why should you want to vote? What difference can it make to you personally, whether you are allowed to exercise your right of suffrage or not?" the spirit of my ancestors rises in me, and I can scarcely curb the indignant words that rush to my lips.

Have women no sense of right and wrong, no love for freedom, no patriotism, no self-respect, that they are expected to roll injustice as a sweet morsel under their tongues?

Two years ago I heard from the lips of a lovely southern woman a few words that I shall never forget. She was a typical southerner, exquisitely dressed, fair of face, gentle and refined in voice and manner. We were speaking of the progressiveness of the women of the new south and finally our conversation drifted to the ballot. "I don't know that I am very anxious," she said, in her soft, mus-tical tones, "but I don't exactly like being told that I cannot." This is the utterance of self-respecting womanhood, that will have right because it is right, that hates wrong because it is wrong, and chafes under even the shadow of a despotism.

"The largest individual liberty consistent with the rights of others insures the highest type of American citizenship and the best government." Therefore it matters not whether the majority of women want the ballot or not, they should have in this matter the same "individual liberty" that men have. If an honest man by any chance comes in possession of property belonging to another he does not wait for the owner to ask him for it; he goes straightway and restores it. It matters not whether women ever use their privilege or not, it should be theirs just as it is men's. It is useless to tell me that I have enough rights without this, and that if I had it I would not put it to good use. As well might the thief with his hands in the coffers of some wealthy man excuse his robbery by urging that the man he was robbing had enough money without that which he was about to take, and that if he did not take it the lawful owner would probably put it to some bad use.

In "Looking Backward," Bellamy says:
"It seems to me that women were more than any other class the victims of our civilization. There is something which even at this distance of time penetrates one with pathos in the spectacle of their undeveloped lives, stunted at marriage, their narrow horizon bounded so often physically, by the four walls of home, and morally by a petty creed of personal interests. * * * From the great sorrows, as well as the petty frets of life, they had no refuge in the breezy outdoor world of human affairs, nor any interest save those of the family. Such an existence would have softened men's brains or driven them mad."

Is not this a perfect picture of the average woman's life to-day? And what has been the consequence to herself and to man?

In the language of Shylock women may say, "If you wrong us, shall we not be revenged?"

Wronged of her educational rights, her social rights, her political rights, condemned to be a "keeper at home," "a heaver of wood" and "a drawer of water," she has revenged herself on man by her stupidity, by her childishness, by her frivolity, by her weakness of body, by her weakness of mind, by the thousand and one frailties springing from a case of "arrested development."

The varied objections to woman suffrage when sifted and analyzed resolve themselves into this, "Women must not vote because they are women."

On the contrary, if I were asked to give a second reason, it would be, "Women ought to vote because they are women," that is human beings, part and parcel of that "whole creation" which "groaneth and travaileth together in pain until now."

Once more paraphrasing Shakespeare we may say: "I am a woman. Hath not a woman eyes? Hath not a woman hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? Fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, heated by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same summer and winter as a man is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? If you tickle us, do we not laugh? If you poison us, do we not die? And if you wrong us, shall we not revenge?"

To hear the opponents of woman suffrage talk one would think woman some strange, unclassified creature, some rare exotic foreign to this world and totally unable to exist under its stern laws.

A certain Kentuckian was some years ago appointed to a Federal office in Wyoming. Writing home to a Kentucky paper he tried to show that woman suffrage was a failure. The only point he made was that woman had not purified politics there inasmuch as a large percent of a candidate's prospective salary was already mortgaged for campaign expenses. The writer did not assert that any of this money went into the pockets of the woman voters, so I fail to see how his statement had any bearing upon woman suffrage. I think he must have realized this, for facts failing him, he fell back upon metaphor and exclaimed poeti-cally, "Would you purify a cesspool by throwing a rose into it?" "Why of course not," exclaim the opponents of woman suffrage. "A cesspool cannot be purified by throwing a rose into it, therefore women ought not to vote."

This, you will observe, is the sort of thing that passes for logic with the anti-suffragists whether they be "most learned judges" or ignorant clowns. But suppose we drop metaphor and come down to plain speech.

Women are not roses.
Politics is not a cesspool.
Politics is the science of good government.

Women are citizens of this country and subject to its government.

Therefore women ought to vote.
I defy any logician to take this syllog-ism and show me a shadow of falsity in either its premises or its conclusion.

"The rose and cesspool style of argument is not the one I learned when I studied logic, and somehow it is not at all convincing to my feminine mind."

In the course of his graduating oration
I once heard a young man say, "Why should any woman want to vote in Kentucky, where every woman is a queen?"
"Every woman a queen?" There may have been some in that audience who were weak enough to feel flattered by such gallant words, but as for me, I had a vision of the "queens" who had gone from house to house begging their loyal subjects to consent to a petition that prayed the legislature of Kentucky to grant to married women the right to own and dispose of their own property. I saw the "queens" who had laid down youth, health and beauty at the feet of their kings, who by reason of "care and sorrow and child-birth pain" were but pale shadows of their former selves. I saw the wives of faithless husbands, the daughters of faithless fathers, the sisters of faithless brothers, and my soul sickened at the sound of such hollow flattery.

Whenever I hear men calling women queens and goddesses I smile to think how utterly dumfounded they would be if we should arrogate to ourselves the prerogatives of royalty. A man was once talking to his minister about "woman's sphere." "Don't you think, Brother B," he said, "that God created woman to be company for man?" "Company?"
snapped out a quick-witted little woman who was sitting by. Then why don't you treat us like company? Who ever heard of putting company to cooking and scrubbing and patching old clothes? If we are queens why don't you treat us like queens?

The language of mediæval romance is not applicable to women of the nineteenth century. Women nowadays are not leaving from their casements waving adieux to plumed knights. They are not sitting at castle windows listening to troubadours' serenades and waiting to be crowned "queens of love and beauty."

The "doughty deeds" that please "my lady" of the nineteenth century, are a lance thrust against prejudices that hinder women's free development, or a tournament against the injustice that robs her of the rights of humanity, and the crown she craves is the crown of a perfected womanhood won by the exercise of every talent that God has given her.

It is idiotically maintained by some that if women have justice they must relinquish chivalry. "Give me the luxuries of life and I will dispense with its necessaries," said a witty Frenchman.
Give women justice and they can dispense with chivalry. The chivalry of medieval days was a disgusting sham, and much of our nineteenth century chivalry is open to the same objection. The chivalry that leads a man to give a woman a seat in a street car, but at the same time does not prevent him from looking on with apathetic indifference while she is defrauded of her property rights, is not the sort of chivalry that self-respecting woman values.

"The profession of women is a hard one," said Victor Hugo. Everywhere she is the life giver, and as if maternity were not enough, the heaviest drudgery of domestic life falls to her share even in the most civilized countries. I once heard a good Methodist minister say with emphasis, "There is not a comfort that man enjoys that women do not suffer for." In return for all this vicarious and unavoidable suffering so patiently endured by women, it would seem that men, from the depths of their tender chivalry, would have said long ago: "If there is anything in this wide universe you covet, O woman, name it and it is yours, if my effort can obtain it for you. Go where you will, do as you please, 'the queen can do no wrong.' The right to perfect liberty is yours by reason of your humanity, and if it were not, you have earned it by reason of your womanhood."

This is the "chivalry of the nineteenth century," and it is the only utterance on the woman question that can consistently come from the lips of the political party that advocates "the largest individual liberty consistent with the rights of others."

In conclusion let me present two wise sayings for the benefit of all anti-suffragists:

"What is justice?" says Aristotle, "To render to every man his own." We call this "the land of the free," but "how can a people be free that has not learned to be just?"—A Kentucky Woman.

Agriculture is the Foundation of Civilization.

FOR THE FARMER'S WIFE.

The tillers of the soil lay the foundation of all other industries and the FARM-ER'S WIFE is an indispensable factor in in carrying out the details of the farm.

Without the farmer civilization would be a failure. The farmer takes more risks and is confronted by more disastrous casualties than men in any other occupation. He has to stand the chances of favorable or unfavorable seasons; the late frosts of spring and the early frosts of autumn, the extremes of wet and drouth, the lightning, the floods and tornadoes, the various diseases that prey upon his live stock, the blight, the ravages of insects and vermin, and pays more than his just proportion of tax, has to stand all railway enterprises and then divides his profits (if he has any) with the speculator and with all the disadvantages enumerated; he, with his untiring energy, feeds the world. It is a lamentable fact that agriculture unavoidably feeds and nourishes the most formidable enemy of mankind.

The liquor traffic is the greatest curse that ever fell upon the human race, far more to be dreaded than war, famine and pestilence combined. It has blackened the face of civilization with a darker, deeper shade than a midnight tornado.
It causes strife and violence, debases virtue and corrupts morals, robs society of some of its brightest jewels, thrusts its poisonous dagger into the hearts of doting parents, breaks up the family circle, digs annually thousands of drunkards' graves, peoples almshouses with dependent widows and fatherless children, and asylums with lunatics, prisons with criminals and a multitude of evils to numerous to mention. It adds to the tax already grievous, defrauds the ballot box, endangers free institutions and morality.
Where are the philanthropists and the followers of him whose moral precepts are the true rule of life and the only safe foundation on which to build the social structure? Christians, philanthropists, patriots, the call is to you.

Rally round the standard of moral reform and make haste to put the ballots into the hands of your mothers, wives, daughters and sisters, who would be a mighty power in subduing this fearful enemy and stamp out of existence this live reptile, the worm of the still. Methinks I see a mighty host with pure white banners waving in the breeze rapidly advancing to seize the dragon, that old serpent the devil, to bind him with the chains of infamy and cast him into the bottomless pit to trouble civilized society no more forever.

R. COX.

THE BEST HUSBAND.

Here Are Descriptions of Him From Many Points of View.

FOR THE FARMER'S WIFE.

The ideal husband is here described. It will be noted that tastes differ as to what sort of man makes the best life partner. The standard by which one good husband is measured would in no way fit another good husband, whose wife thought him quite perfection. Here are some of the definitions most recently received:

"The best husband most delights in his wife, ceaselessly cherishing mutual love, and honoring her by maintaining personal dignity and consistency of life."

"One who has mastered himself and the science of livlihood; loving, faithful, forgiving; ruling tenderly a weak woman and inspiring homage in a sensible woman."

"An ideal husband is one who loves his wife more than all else excepting his God; being strictly moral; regarding his wife as his dearest friend and companion."

"The man who thinks his wife can cook as good, if not better, than his mother used to; who always admires his wife's hats and gowns; and remains so in love that any criticism seems unnecessary."

"A man having mental and physical health, loving his wife for his wife's sake, living a life that honors her."

"He confides in his wife and merits her confidence. He is considerate, affectionate, constant, and discreetly indulgent, and is unequivocally the head of the family."

"The man who lives according to the best of his ability; up to all the sacred vows he has taken before God and man."

"One who is sympathetic and considerate; strong to protect and defend, yet gentle, tender and chival-rous, who loves passionately but without coarseness; a master of himself."

"A man who is noble and generous, who has a heart where envy and unthankfulness find no place, where love and gentleness are the presiding angels. The man that will smile a warm, genial, heartfelt smile when I please him, even though he may frown when I don't."

"Patient, kind, loving, tender and true, regarding his wife's honor and his own so that he respects the honor of all women."

"A gentleman who honors, loves, cherishes, ministers to and conducts himself toward his wife the same after marriage as before; granting her equal rights, liberties and privileges."

"A man of honor and probity, of intelligence and judgment, God fearing and temperate without fanaticism. One who knows his own weaknesses and never chides his wife with hers. Manly without affectation: decisive, but never cruel; gentle and affectionate, but never effeminate. With these qualifications any man is fully equipped to meet the yearnings of an honest heart."

"The loved and loving companion, protector and adviser of wife and children, the head of the house, a faithful and honored citizen."

"A husband who considers his wife the light of his domestic circle."

"Kind, confidential, good tempered;
to practice somewhat of self denial, and attentive to his wife, remembering that his wife's comfort will be his chief aim."

"He who reveres his mother, honors his fellowmen and loves his wife and children above all else, save his country and his God."

"A man who loves his wife better than when they were sweethearts and is kind, thoughtful, and considers her pleasure and happiness before his own."

"A true, loving, faithful companion and protector—a soul mate."

"One who loves and dailly woos his wife as his sweetheart, is mindful of her wants, generous, gentle and forbearing—her protector and true friend."

"One who always treats his wife as a lover treats his sweetheart, who is forbearing, kind and true, providing generously for all her wants."

"One who loves his wife unselfishly, treats her with courtesy, is loyal, tender and true to her as he expects her to be to him."

"The man who never to passion gives—
His wife's wishes his own,
And always of his family thinks,
And seldom leaves his home."

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA,

KANSAS.

THE LADIES' CORNER.

MEN ARE NOT EXPECTED TO READ THIS COLUMN.

The Charm of Womanhood Lies in the Ever Ready Thought for Others—Women as Druggists—Sourvenir Spoon Case—The Girl in Politics.

Gracious Womanhood.

So few very beautiful women consider it worth their while to be gracious. They rely so entirely on their charms of person to attract that they do not put themselves out or exert themselves to please other than by their beauty. This is a great mistake, for though they may rule for a season by the power that feminine loveliness always exerts, their court will soon be narrowed to the very few who are willing to serve out adulation with every sentence, with no hope of entertainment in return. The spell of gracious womanhood, however, lasts as long as life remains, and the charm depends not upon beauty of face or figure, but upon a grace of mind that puts self in the background and endeavors to bring out the best and brightest in all those with whom it comes in contact. The celebrated women who have been admired to their latest day were not renowned so much for their beauty as for their tact. Imagine some of the belles of to-day listening with apparent interest (whether feigned or real we cannot say) to the reading of a five-act tragedy or the impassioned rendition of some sonnet written by one of their adorers. They would probably yawn in the face of the aspiring genius and destroy forever his fond illusions. The woman who can become interested in the hobby of whoever is in her society, or who can make that other feel that his or her words are important and worthy of regard will be the one to whom her entire circle will swear allegiance. A regard for others' feelings and a gentle though not fulsome flattery that stimulates rather than inflates are the weapons which, when used by a clever, kindly woman, make her a power among any set in which she chooses to move, though never for one moment does she give any evidence that she is aware of the influences she wields through the all-conquering sceptre of her own gracious womanhood.

Novel Metallic Flowers.

Some sensitive-minded women object to wearing flowers on their hats in the winter time. Poor things! One would not wear a real flower just from vanity and let it freeze, and artificial flowers are so like real ones these days that one's heart aches to see them in the cold. But who can object to metallic flowers such as those pictured—flowers of delicate tinsel, gold, azure, ruby, emerald, etc., with shaded effects? The hat itself is gold satin or black velvet. The flowers are put on thickly and a bunch of them stands up in front. The strings are black velvet or gold satin, and on the side where they are tied a bunch of the dainty glittering flowers is tied in with them. Of course a woman must have very pretty hair to stand so gaily a bonnet. Black hair, dusky and crinkled, is just the thing, but brown hair is all right too. The blonde should not try it. Among the usual styles of ornaments must be reckoned large dragon-flies, with jet and tinsel bodies, four small cock's feather doing duty for wings. These are used in pairs for trimming capotes and toques.

A Model Woman's Society.

A "Ladies' Aid Society" is an important part of church organization, writes Mrs. Lyman Abbott in a carefully prepared paper on "Conducting a Ladies' Aid Society," in the Ladies' Home Journal. And it should not consist of a few exceptionally devoted or energetic persons. Every woman who is a member of the church, and a large proportion, if not all, of the women in the congregation, should be its efficient members. Every detail of attack upon evil, and every detail of work for strengthening the good, should be represented by a committee. Foreign missions, home missions, hospital missions, kindergartens, rescue work, working girls' associations, every phase of Christian philanthropy and religious activity which can possibly be employed in the church, should have its representative in this society. All the women members and, as far as possible, all those attending the services of the church, should be enrolled. A list as large as may be of the objects which it would be possible for them to consider as suitable for their work should be made. A chairman of executive ability should be elected for each object. Every woman in the congregation should be expected to attach herself to one of these organizations, and report to one of these chairman. Be it little or much, she should do something in its interests; even a "shut in" may send her word of suggestion, and add her mite of encouragement though she have neither silver nor strength to give.

A Case for Souvenir Spoon.

Soft chamolais makes the ideal spoon case, as it keeps the spoons so bright and shiny just as we like to see our treasures, each one with a history of a pleasant trip, or gift from a friend. The case herewith illustrated from the American Agriculturist, is made to hold one-half dozen after-dinner coffee spoons. The piece of chamolais should measure eight and one-half by ten inches before the end is turned over to form the pockets. Bind the edges with light green ribbon stitched on with silk of the same shade, and divide the pockets by rows of feather-stitched in green silk. The lettering is done in gilt, and the case folded and tied together with ribbons.

SOUVENIR SPOON CASE.

The Girl in Politics.

"Were you allowed to vote," said he, as through the sheltered lane they strayed, "What would you vote for—answer me—Protection or free trade?"

The gentle maiden hung her head, While to her cheek the color flew; "I would not care to vote," she said; "I'd rather pair with you."—Cape Cod Item.

Frances' Figures.

Frances Willard declares that the total amount of force used at any given moment to compress the waists of women by artificial means would turn all the mills between Minneapolis and the Merrimac, while the condensed force of their tight shoes, if it could be applied, would run any number of trains. The amount of energy yearly wasted in attempts to make women not follow the fashion for health's sake, would, if it could be concentrated, not only run all the mills, but all the trains in the new world.

Mrs. Blaine's Clever Pen.

To be one of Mrs. Blaine's correspondents is the desire of all who know her, writes Frank Woodberry in the Ladies' Home Journal. Her letters are remarkable for their beauty of expression, cleverness and originality. Not the least of her accomplishments with the pen is her rare facility of expression through the medium of telegraph blanks. Her dispatches of condolence or congratulation are unusual examples of brevity and meaning.

Women as Druggists.

Women are taking a prominent position in the drug trade of Illinois, a Woman's Pharmaceutical Association having been chartered, primarily to establish an organization of female pharmacists. There are now fifty-three registered women pharmacists in Illinois, and fifty-two assistants. The association is agitating a woman's pharmaceutical exhibit at the World's Fair.

The Conquests of Modern Science.

Surely I have established my thesis that dirt is only matter in a wrong place. Chemistry, like a thrifty housewife, economizes every scrap. The horse-shoe nails dropped in the streets are carefully collected, and reappear as swords and guns. The main ingredient of the ink with which I now write was probably once the broken hoop of an old beer barrel. The chippings of the traveling maker are mixed with the parings of horses' hoofs and the worst kinds of wollen rags, and these are worked up into an exquisite blue dye, which graces the dress of courtly dames.

The dregs of port wine, carefully decanted by the toper, are taken in the morning as scidlitiz powder, to remove the effect of the debauch. The offal of the streets and the wastings of coal gas reappear carefully preserved in the lady's smelling bottle, or are used by her to flavor blanc manges for her friends. All this thrift of material is an imitation of the economy of nature, which allows no waste. Everything has its destined place in the process of the universe, in which there is not a blade of grass or even a microbe too much, if we possessed the knowledge to apply them to their fitting purposes.—Lyvon Playfair, in North American Review.

WHEN a man borrows his wife's knife, he loses it, and when he wants it again, he asks to borrow it again, believing that she can find it.

GOWNS FOR THE HOUSE.

SOME VERY PRETTY DRESSES FOR INDOOR WEAR.

Simple and Becoming Jacket for an Invalid—Suggestions Concerning the Empire Suit—The Long Jacket a Relief from the Perpetual Corset.

Gotham Fashion Gossip. New York correspondence:

My initial illustration shows a dress of green cloth, with corselet and yoke of striped velvet, and full fronts and sleeves draped with old rose surah. The skirt is of the improved umbrella pattern. It is not trimmed in any way, but a balayage of the material should be placed inside to keep the edge out. The bodice is first cut out in lining from an ordinary pattern, and carefully fitted. The basque is one and a half inches long at the front and back, but only one inch deep on the hips, consequently the skirt must be made to fit around the waist, to prevent any gaps appearing. The yoke is of velvet, and reaches from the shoulders to the darts in front; while at the back it may be slightly longer. The seams of the back lining are first sewn, pressed and toned, and then the yoke is well stretched upon it. The fronts are sewn and boned, and fastened by hooks and eyes down the middle. Then the yoke is carefully pinned on to them. Great care must be taken that the stripes match at the shoulders, and are perfectly straight at the center of both front and back. When this is done the surah is taken and arranged in the pins, forming a turn-down collar for the neck. When this is finished measure six inches each way from the lower corners of the cape, mark with pins and turn the corners over, fastening with a stitch or two. Then put a button and loop on each, at the places marked by the pins, thus forming a cuff. Nothing now remains but to make three pleats just under the opening of the collar to form the shoulders, to put a false hem down each front, and to trim the collars and cuffs with lace. This jacket may, if preferred, be lined with thin washing silk, which, when turned over, forms a very pretty collar and cuffs; but when it is made of good flannel this lining is unnecessary, though the cuffs and collar look very pretty faced with light-colored silk. The collar is fastened by ribbons to match the color of the silk. The long jacket seen at the left in the next engraving opens from the waist, and is a pleasant change from the perpetual corselet bodice, and is besides, far more becoming to most people. The material of this costume is woolen goods in cream color with electric-blue stripes. Large mother-of-pearl or bone buttons fasten it and lend a chic appearance. The sleeves, although full, are only very slightly raised on the shoulder. The revers are of surah silk, in the same shade as the stripe, and the full vest is of coffee-colored surah. The same style would look equally well in any colored striped material, for instance, two shades of green, or dark-blue and red, or, for a raven-haired beauty, amethyst and old gold. For half mourning, black and gray or black and red would both be effective.

A RICH HOUSE GOWN.

The other gown, although so simple, is very becoming and fashionable. The yoke needs a word or two of notice, for it is a novelty, and any novelty in the way of yokes is welcome. The ribbon bow, placed at the side of the yoke, is very pretty, and also takes away from the upright bow which terminates the band the one-sided look this new fashion in sashes is inclined to give the wearer.

A tea gown of red plush trimmed with cream lace and straw-colored surah is to be seen in the fourth picture. The front is formed by lace insertions divided by stripes of finely pleated surah. The collar is also of the surah.

The little girl's dress is of cream cashmere, the skirt being strewn with small pink and blue flowerets. The bodice and sleeves are of the plain cream. The bretelles and flat flounces around the edge of the skirt are of cornflower blue velvet.

Either your gown must be draped in front and all outline of the figure about the waist line and between that line and the bust concealed, or you must particularly emphasize these lines. One way of doing so is to have the bodice fit absolutely without wrinkle or fastening. The high collar is made of a band of embroidered or beaded stuff, as broad as the neck will permit. Across the chest passes a similar band and just over the bust line another. Right above the waist line a band entirely encircles the body, and immediately below the waist line, marking the end of the bodice, there is another band about the body.

PART OF A TROUSSEAU.

The last garment shown is a stylish and novel blouse. It is suitable for afternoon or evening wear, and is decidedly dressy in appearance. It should be made in some soft, clinging material like bengaline, pongee, liberty silk, crepon, etc. It is shaped to the waist by an infinite number of pleats. If for afternoon wear, passementerie can be substituted for the lace. The collar and the lower half of the sleeves are pleated to match the corselet. This useful and pretty blouse will be found a charming factor of a small trousseau, and also forms a convenient addition to the one or two dinner dresses taken to wear when on a few days' visit to friends.

Copyright, 1893.

This an Old Turtle.

When Mauritius was ceded to Great Britain in 1810 there was a gigantic turtle in the court of the artillery barracks at Port Louis, which is there still, although almost blind. It is two feet high and measures eight and a half feet across. It is believed to be 200 years old at least; nevertheless it carries two men on its back with ease.

TRUMPET CALLS.

Ram's Horn Sounds a Warning Note to the Unredeemed.

NO MAN can be rich while he is discontented.

THE deepest gulf known is the one sin has made.

EVERY time a soul is saved an army starts for Heaven.

SALT and light never have to go about hunting for work.

MONEY that is saved by robbing God won't buy much.

DRIVE the devil out of the family, and he will soon be homeless.

SAYING yes to a sin is saying no to Christ, no matter how small it is.

EVIL thoughts always come from the devil, no matter who thinks them.

NOTHING can have a meaning until it has been discovered to have an opposite.

On the very day the first church was started the devil produced a hypocrite.

We do not have to be great in anything except faith to obtain great favor with God.

It is blessed to think that although we may lose everything else we can never lose God.

The only dark moments the Christian can have are those when he forgets that God is good.

PEOPLE who are noisy at a church entertainment are generally very quiet during a revival.

It is hard for God to do much for people who can't see that they have anything to be thankful for.

THE devil has never been able to throw stones enough to keep the Gospel from being faithfully preached.

KEEPING a church letter in the bottom of your trunk is a poor way of letting your light shine for Christ.

It would not take long for us all to become rich, if we would only be willing to do it in God's way.

NO MAN ever cares to know Jesus Christ who spends a good share of his waking time in admiring himself.

How much better is the man who will rob in trade than the one who will do it at the muzzle of a pistol?

THERE is no virtue in doing what we have to do, for even the devil will behave himself when he is chained.

THE truth that is aimed straight at the devil will be sure to make some highly-respectable people dodge.

THERE are people who think that if they behave themselves on Sunday, they have done more than enough.

THERE are people who honestly believe that the meaning of religion is to belong to church and wear a long face.

A Word for Cabbage.

First to avoid scenting the house, cut the cabbage, if small, into four pieces, removing the heart and the outer leaves. Have a large saucepan full of water, boiling furiously. Into this plunge your cabbage with a tablespoonful of salt and a small saltspoonful of soda. Put on the cover until it boils rapidly again, then remove it and boil for twenty minutes uncovered.

Remember the saucepan should be large, with plenty of boiling water. Cooked in this way the cabbage loses its strong taste and becomes delicate and easily digested. Indeed, persons who cannot possibly eat cabbage cooked with corned beef or bacon can indulge in cabbage boiled in salted water with as much impunity as in coldslaw or sauerkraut.

And it is better without vinegar. Turn the cabbage into a colander while you prepare in a saucepan a cream sauce of one tablespoonful of butter, one teaspoonful of flour, and half a cupful of milk, with pepper and a little salt. Return the cabbage to the saucepan and let all bubble up together once.

Or you can serve the cabbage with a simple dressing of butter if you prefer. Or you can add it in the proportion of one-third to two-thirds of mashed potato, moistening with butter or cream, making that good old standby, colecannon.—Evening World.

"The Socrates."

Thirty years or more ago, a well-known lecturer greatly added to his wide fame as a remarkably fine pulpit orator by delivering through the country a lecture upon Socrates.

A man who had heard the famous lecture in a neighboring town was speaking of it with much enthusiasm and pleasure to a group of friends in a public room of an hotel.

One of the class of self-satisfied ignoramuses, who looked as if he were a mine of wisdom, but who never lost a chance to make his ignorance fully evident, dispersed the group as effectively as if a bomb had exploded on the spot, by saying, with an air which was intended to show how wise he was—

"The lecturer, very likely, has traveled amongst the Socrates."

THE collapse of a real estate boom only means that the wind has been taken out of the sales.

A Soldier of the Plutocracy.

From the St. Louis Republic.

The treachery of Colonel Hughes, commander of the troops called out by the governor of Kansas, was explained by a telegram from Nashville, Tenn. According to this statement, Colonel Hughes is a son of Judge A. M. Hughes, of that state. "Colonel Hughes," it continues, "went to Kansas and entered the service of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad when only a boy. When he was elected colonel of the Third Kansas regiment he was the youngest officer in the service."

In his own defense Hughes says he would as soon have obeyed an order to burn down the Santa Fe offices as to clear the hall of the house of representatives of the men who had broken down the doors with sledge hammers.

It is true that no one in the army, in the militia, or anywhere else is bound to obey an unconstitutional and wrongful order, but there is no reason to believe that if this same Hughes had been ordered to fire into a crowd of laborers he would have stopped to reason out constitutional questions. The fact of his employment by the Santa Fe railroad makes it unnecessary to seek further for evidence on which to judge his conduct. If it was as a dependent of the railroad that he entered the militia, it was no doubt for the same reason that he was promoted so rapidly in spite of his youth. When the time came for him to choose between loyalty to the state and loyalty to the railroad, he went with his bread and butter and betrayed the trust he held under the state.

On him individually it is not worth while to waste condemnation. He illustrates a condition, however, and it is with this condition that the people of the United States have to deal. It is not a condition peculiar to Kansas; it is general—as general as the belief among plutocrats that their money entitles them to rule men.

When the issue is made on that question, they have not shrunk in Kansas from resorting to violence to maintain their affirmative. When the attempt is made to enforce the authority of the state against them it is found that they have had greater foresight than the people, and that having it they have stocked the militia with their dependents. No doubt this is true in many other states besides Kansas.

Thus prepared, the plutocracy can mobilize much quicker than the people; but unless there is a change, unless the right of the people to govern themselves is acknowledged, unless the rights of manhood are recognized as superior to the privileges of accumulated money, the people will mobilize at last, and when they do it will fare badly with the plutocrats who rely on the treachery of their dependents in the service of the state to secure them immunity in their defiance of the authority of the people.

[This article is clipped for its general application; but it is but fair to say that Colonel Hughes has not been in the employ of the Santa Fe, or any other railroad for several years.]

Senate Resolutions.

The Kansas senate adopted the following by a party vote:

"Resolved, That whereas we believe that at the election held on November 8, 1892, the electors voting at said election fairly and honestly elected a majority of the representatives of the legislature who were candidates upon the populist ticket, but by fraudulent, corrupt and illegal methods of certain township election officers, boards of canvassers and the state board, certificates of election were unlawfully issued to certain republican candidates clearly not entitled to them; and,

"WHEREAS, This senate, believing that the will of the people as expressed at the ballot box should be upheld, and that a majority of the representatives honestly and fairly elected by the qualified electors should be entitled to organize the house of representatives, and that they did so by electing J. M. Dunsmore as speaker and Ben C. Rich as chief clerk, we therefore recognized said house of representatives as the proper and constitutional body with which this senate should transact business pertaining to legislation; and,

"WHEREAS, The three co-ordinate branches of our state government are the executive, the legislative and the judicial, each separate from, independent of, and in no way answerable to the other; but the supreme court of this state, in a partisan decision, rendered by the two republican judges thereof, have presumed to consider the executive and legislative branches subordinate to it, and have attempted to sustain another organization, presided over by George L. Douglass, not recognized by the senate or executive, and have inferentially declared that laws enacted by the senate, the constitutional house of representatives, and approved by the executive will be held by them to be invalid, thereby preventing any needed legislation for the relief of our people and the appropriations necessary for the maintenance of our state government and the support of our educational, charitable and penal institutions. While we recognize the right of said court to pass upon the validity of and interpret the laws so passed, we most emphatically deny the authority of said court to pass upon any question pertaining to the organization of either branch of the legislature. We recognize fully that there is no peaceful appeal from such unwarranted decisions except to refer them to the power that makes courts—the people; and knowing that our constituents are peaceable and order-loving citizens, we have determined to temporarily submit to unjust and arbitrary exercise of judicial authority and remand the case back to the people for their approval or rejection of the said republican judges. Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate be instructed to message the bills, joint and concurrent resolutions already passed, or that may hereafter be passed by us, to the house of representatives presided over by George L. Douglass as speaker, and be it further

"Resolved, That we will do all in our power to redeem our pledges to our constituents and give them the legislation they demand and so badly need, and should such legislation fail we will let the blame rest upon the persons responsible therefor, and place them before the bar of public opinion."

A Protest.

Representative McAleney, of Wyandotte county, had the following protest spread upon the journal of the house:

"Believing that our county clerks and other clerical officers of our election machinery have neither right nor power to subvert the will of the people as expressed at the polls; and believing that no legislature has the power to enact laws or the right to enforce rulings legalizing the use of lotteries in deciding election contests, when the constitution expressly prohibits lotteries; and believing that no supreme court has the right or power to make members of the legislature out of men whom the constitution expressly states are 'not proper to be chosen' or 'qualified to be elected'; and believing that no man who by his sworn statement established his legal residence outside of the state subsequent to the election, has any right in law or justice to act as a member of the legislature, and that no supreme court or other body has the power to make him a member; and believing that the supreme court is only a co-ordinate branch of the state government, and that no co-ordinate branch has any jurisdiction over another, or legal power to coerce it; and believing, further, that no partisan court, or other body, has the power to make a legal or constitutional house of representatives out of illegal or unconstitutional members, we desire to enter our solemn and emphatic protest against the usurpation of power by the courts, and the anarchistic, revolutionary and treasonable actions of the corporations and their devoted friend an ally, the republican party, and we appeal to that court of last resort, the people of the state of Kansas, to right the wrongs imposed upon them by their enemies and oppressors by the use of that most powerful weapon known to mankind—the ballot."

We have heard of doctors who, for each increasing symptom of danger in the patient just prescribe "more quinine," "double the dose." They are classed "quacks." Our financial system is sick, sick unto death, and political quacks are still saying, "give more quinine, double the dose." More gold basis, more contraction, more bonds, more banks, more bankers' privileges. "More quinine, double the dose," and your patient will soon be beyond the need of medicine. The people's party proposes to change the treatment; expansion, no bonds, no banks of the present kind, no special privileges, the wealth, industry, intelligence, and integrity of the nation for a basis,

To Perpetuate Existing Conditions.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The following remarks by different senators are of interest:

Senator Pugh, of Alabama, on the appointment of Hilary Herbert: "I am constrained to believe the ruling motive for Mr. Herbert's appointment was for the courage he displayed in being the only member from Alabama who voted against 95 per cent of his constituents on the free coinage of silver. If it is Mr. Cleveland's purpose in making his cabinet unite against 90 per cent of his party, to disrupt or muster it into the service of the money kings, he is doomed to meet most signal failure."

"The populists," said Senator Peffer, "regard Mr. Cleveland as being in sympathy with the legislation that fattened the pampered classes, notwithstanding his committal to the doctrine of tariff reform, which is understood to be intended to correct the evils in that direction. Naturally such a man would select for his attorney general just such a person as Mr. Olney, who is a corporation attorney and identified with corporations in all he does and is." Continuing, Mr. Peffer said: "The president-elect has selected for his secretary of agriculture a man who is not in sympathy with western ideas on any subject, is thoroughly committed to class legislation, and is especially favoring the eastern view of the money question. He is under corporate influences generally. There is but one member of the new cabinet who is independent of party influences. I refer to Judge Gresham. Summing up the whole cabinet, I regard it as constructed especially to perpetuate existing conditions against which the populists propose to wage a war to the end."

The New York Populists.

From the New York Special Tribune.

It caused something of a surprise to see gathered in old Cooper Union a throng so large as almost to fill that spacious basement, who had come to hear and applaud General Weaver. The opinion has prevailed that the populists have but little strength anywhere east of the Alleghany mountains, and yet it was on the whole an intelligent-looking and seemingly representative body from the middle classes whom General Weaver faced as he began his speech. There is more of this sentiment in New York City than existed prior to the late election. Most of Henry George's followers are heart and soul with it, and a systematic and thorough organization will be made here so that at the next election the people can demonstrate a growth.

Some of them are not so ultra as the men who the other day proposed formally that the city build and run rapid transit systems free, just as benches are provided free in the parks or elevators are run without expense in public and private buildings. But all of them believe in government control of telegraphs and railways, in an enlarged currency and a curtailment of banks simply to the privilege of deposit and discount, and not all of these who have this belief are poor men either. This movement here is one of the logical results of the coalition between the populists and the democrats in the far west at the late election.

Weaver on the Kansas War.

WASHINGTON.—General James B. Weaver said of the actions of the Kansas republicans: "The republicans have so incensed the people of Kansas that it is the end of that party in Kansas. The rumpus was really a small rebellion against the constituted authorities of the state. It was suppressed by a great many that the republicans would defy the will of the people and inaugurate anarchy, and that is just what they have done. If a populist colonel of militia and his subordinates or a populist sheriff and his posse should undertake to resist the lawful authority of a republican governor, every patriotic journal would demand that he shot down."

Superstition.

From a Contributed Article in the Advocate.

In an address delivered by Judge Caldwell, of the United States district court, which will be found in volume 24, American Law Reviewed (page 229), he says:

"Ninety-five per cent of the disputed questions of law which arise in the trial of a lawsuit, and upon the decision of which the result of the suit depends, are determined by a species of law outside of your written statutes and constitution, and which you had no hand in making. The judge made it; it is judge-made law. A considerable part of it was made by judges in England about a thousand years ago, and the remainder has been made since that time by judges in that country and this, as occasion called for it. When judge-made law gets very old it is called 'common law.'"

There is a good deal more of strong medicine in Judge Caldwell's address, but there is not room to quote it here. He goes on to show that this law is printed in books that it would take over 200 years to read, and if you should read it all and remember a large part of it, you would gain nothing in the end, for the judges are making this law "at the rate of 16,000 cases a year." "Precedent," he says, "can be found to sustain either side of nearly every question. Where precedents are wanting, the decision makes the law, and not the law the decision." I don't see how I can make it any plainer, and I would like to have those who respect authority so much knuckle down to the authority of United States Judge Caldwell on this proposition.

In the very first case printed in the reports of the supreme court of Kansas, it is said:

"It is doubtful whether any uniform construction can be given the clauses of the constitution relating to the commencement and duration of the terms of the first officers and the election of their successors, which would not conflict with the letter or spirit of some one of those clauses."

But the court had to decide the case, and in the face of irreconcilable provisions in regard to the same matter, there was but one thing to do—to make the law, as Judge Caldwell says they do in ninety-five cases out of a hundred.

The courts are corrupt, not in the vulgar sense by personal considerations of money, or political preferment, or anything of that kind; but corrupted they are just the same, and prevented from rendering decisions that can be generally sustained as just and impartial, by education, by social position, by partisanship and by other associations.

Enough to say that no class of people accept as just and unquestionable court decisions that are against them.

Senator Peffer's Course.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Recent events in the west indicate that the democrats will have enough members in the next senate to reorganize that body without outside aid. If that aid should become necessary it is pretty well settled that the populist senators will vote with the democrats.

"On the question of the organization of the senate," said Senator Peffer, "as in all other things, I, for one, intend to be independent. While that is true, I regard it as my duty to put no obstructions in the right of way to which I regard the democrats to be entitled by reason of the popular verdict in the recent election."

I WANT to be quoted in making these two propositions, which no man can face me and deny: First, for twenty-five years the corporations and money power have not asked for a single thing from the national congress which they have not obtained; second, for twenty-five years the people, the toiling masses, have not asked a single law which has been granted.

Kansas was the scene of the first conflict for the liberation of the black slave, and Kansas is the first battle-ground for the liberation of the toiling white masses. The battle of Bull Run was temporary victory for the confederates; just so with the decision of the partisan supreme court; it is temporary victory for the corporations in this battle, but the end is not yet.—Secretary of State Osborn.

THERE is only one avenue of escape for plutocracy to prevent its final overthrow, and that is the abolition of the free school system and a censorship that would completely muzzle the press. The education of the masses and their advanced enlightenment are upsetting old-time theories, moss-grown precedents, and systems that belong to the barbaric ages. Sensible men—if they will take time to think—know that an educated, enlightened people will not long endure present conditions in this country.—ET.

"WHERE IS YOUR CASKET?"

Do You Wonder That the Fat Man Was Startled by the Question?

The station agent at a Nebraska town, says the Journalist, had fixed up a ticket for a dead body, by writing the word "Corpse" across the face, but the man for whom it was ordered proved to be only a case of suspended animation, and the order was countermanded by his undertaker. There the ghastly pass lay for weeks, collecting a coat of coal-dust and train smoke. Finally, one evening, a fellow as big as a skinned mule came puffing into the waiting-room just about full enough of champagne tanglefoot to believe he owned the controlling interest in the road. He stepped to the window and rasped out in a voice rough enough to saw a trench in a watermelon: "See here, young fellow, gimme a ticket for Chicago, first-class, and be sry about it."

The big traveler threw down the price, and the innocent-looking agent shoved the "corpse" ticket out, face downward, and began whistling with a slight tremulo in his bird-like notes, "I gather them in."

The fellow gathered up his bundles, waddled into the car and sat down with a sigh of satisfaction. The train had not moved far when the chipper conductor came through the car and blurted out "Tickets!"

When the fat man gave up his pasteboard, the conductor looked it over carefully, then cast a sympathetic glance at its owner, and asked, with a grievous streak in his voice:

"Where's your casket, my friend?"

"Casket?" the fellow said, with a look of surprise even broader than his big features. "If you mean my trunk, I haven't got any; these little packages are all I have with me."

"I mean," continued the conductor, with firmness, "that this ticket is intended to pass a corpse over the road, and unless the agent has made a big blunder, you left the station as a dead man."

By this time all the other passengers had scented the little serio-comedy, and began to prick up their ears for a unique incident. The fat man had shaken off his serenity, and a thirst for gore showed in every facial furrow. He rose up from his seat like a man who is stung by a pint of hornets, and roared out:

"Whoever says I started on this trip as a dead man is a liar."

The conductor wiped the approaching smile from his face, and replied, in a business-like way: "My friend, I don't wish any trouble aboard this train, but your credentials go to show that you are quite defunct, and the rules of this road are that such freight be properly encased, or the company will not be responsible for its safe delivery. Now, the only way for you to get to Chicago legally, on this ticket, will be to submit to being packed in an egg-case or carefully stowed away in a harness-box, and continue your journey as a corpse. What do you say?"

By this time the "corpse" began to exhibit an unusual amount of life, which diminished the smiles of the passengers and caused the conductor to shake with a different feeling.

"Gol bust you, I'm goin' to ride on this car as live stock, if the train has to go through with a dead conductor. I've paid my fare and, you uniformed cuss, I'm goin' through if I have to walk. Do you think I would have my family come to the depot in Chicago and find me packed up like a dried herring? No, my folks! meet me as a man, and not as a piece of salt pork. I'd feel meaner'n thunder to have the children claw'n' nails out of a harness-box in order to kiss their paternal dad. No, that's not my way, chappie."

The conductor saw that his defunct passenger was too much for him, and went forward to the smoker, winking his other eye at the porter as he passed out. The fat man soon took on a tranquil frame of mind and settled into a temporary death, which was only contradicted by his wheezy snoring which kept all other passengers awake.

No News.

The Boston Budget has a story of a colored man who went into a fish market in Richmond to buy a dinner for his master. After looking about for a few minutes, he stopped before a pile of shad.

Apparently his suspicions were aroused. He took up one of the fish and held it under his nose.

"What do you mean by smelling of that fish?" asked the dealer, indignantly.

"Didn't smell de fish nohow," answered the negro. "Only speakin' to him."

"Indeed! And what did he say?"

"I jes' ax him for de news at de mouf ob de ribber, and he say he done clean forgot, for he ain't seen no water for fo' weeks. Dat's all he said."

Cancelling Machine.

An ingenious machine has been invented for the use of the postoffice, which cancels the stamps, impresses the post-mark, and turns letters of any size round so as to come face upwards to receive the impression. If the stamp is in the wrong place the machine turns it round so as to bring it under the stamper. It counts the letters, and makes up into convenient bundles.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.
Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free.
If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Ah me! I wonder if I'm right!
I say, "It's wrong to do so!"
As though, without a soul in sight,
I ruled alone, like Crusoe.
Is it that I am partly wrong,
And partly right, my neighbor,
And that we get, who toil so long,
Naught for all our labor?

Now that the question of Woman's enfranchisement is going to be submitted to the people of the State of Kansas, to be voted upon in two years, at the next general election, we kindly ask every man if there be one who does not feel kindly of the proposition to study the matter well before deciding against it. Ask yourself these questions:

What right have I to keep from my wife that which belongs to her?

Is not my wife better than a criminal?

Is she not more intelligent than an idiot?

Is she insane?

Have women no sense of right and wrong?

Have they no love for liberty and freedom?

And last but not least, ask yourself if they have self respect? If they have, why they should be expected to roll in justice as a sweet morsel under their tongues and compelled to be silent?

My brothers, stop and consider that we are citizens of this country and subject to its government and that politics is the science of good government, and should not and would not be a dirty cesspool if properly managed. Also that the women of Kansas are not pleading for notoriety but that they are simply pleading for the power to build the walls of protection higher around the family altar. They are pleading for the power to help their husbands break the chains of slavery that they have welded and riveted upon themselves. If the women are capable of helping to solve the much vexed questions that are filling the minds of the people all over the country (and none will deny but what they have done their share of the work) then we ask, are they not capable of casting a ballot intelligently?

Do not for one moment doubt her ability to decide which side is right and which is wrong. Whether it be religious, moral or political. The majority of women will always be found on the right side. Our country, as we all know, is now in the throes of an evolution, struggling towards a higher and diviner civilization and no one can deny that women have been the greatest factors in the work ever since the birth of the reform movement, and victory can never perch upon the People's party banner without the help of the women. Loving the principles which that party represents as dearly as we do and knowing that without our political freedom we are powerless, almost, to assist in this great struggle for the freedom of humanity at large is why we are so persistent in pleading for the right that has been so unjustly withheld from us for so long, these many, many years.

OUTRAGE UNSPEAKABLY ENORMOUS.

"There are 40,000 little children in London who go to school every morning without breakfast. The workmen have asked the authorities to furnish a dish of porridge each morning, which will cost one penny each, $800 for the whole."—Ex. "In the name of all the Gods! 'Workingmen' have asked this. Workingmen? No. Slaves have asked it! There are a million stalwart workmen in London, if only they were worthy of the name, who stand idly by and allow the handful of parasites and plunderers of labor called the aristocracy and landlords, to plunder them of the fruits of their toil and to daily and slowly starve 40,000 of their little children, they only beg and whine for a penny bowl of porridge. What a spectacle. It is enough to make a man ashamed of his race. Did these workmen have courage or brains they would never allow such a thing. Why a dog would never allow itself and its young to be robbed and starved. But a million of British workmen submit to it cheerfully. God Save the Queen."—Ex.

Why need free, liberty loving America complain about the treatment of London's children? Are her children much better cared for? Have we not almost infants in the workshops and the factories? Do not the workmen of America stand idly by and allow the labor plunderers of America to rob themselves and families of the fruits of their labor? Do they not stand idly by and allow a class of people who are enthroned behind the money power to rob themselves and families of the homes that have had their consecrated toil and labor? Have the workmen of free America the courage or brains to resist? Let us not talk about slavery in London until we can boast of freedom in America, and that we will never have until men will suffer defeat rather than sacrifice principle. Better defeat than victory if gained by the help of unprincipled people, for you know not what moment they will prove traitor and go with the enemy. We have known of such cases even in Kansas.

THE KIND OF LEGISLATURE TO HAVE.

This concurrent resolution has passed both houses of the Wyoming legislature unanimously:

"That the possession and exercise of suffrage by the women in Wyoming for the past quarter of a century has wrought no harm and has done great good in many ways; that it has largely aided in banishing crime, pauperism and vice from this state, and that, without any violence or oppressive legislation, it has secured peaceful and orderly elections, good government, pure politics and a remarkable degree of civilization and public order, and we point with pride to the facts that after nearly twenty-five years of woman suffrage not one county in Wyoming has a poor house; that our jails are empty, and crime, except by strangers, in the state almost unknown, and as the result of experience we urge every civilized community on earth to enfranchise its women without delay.

Resolved, That an authenticated copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the governor of the state to the legislature of every state and territory in this country and to every legislative body in the world; and that we request the press throughout the civilized world to call the attention of their readers to these resolutions."

The same good results will follow the enfranchisement of the women in Kansas. When once women have their political freedom many wrongs will be righted. Then women will be ably equipped and armed, for who will say that the ballot is not the most powerful weapon that there is? And we have such confidence in the women of this state that we believe every ballot cast by them will be for the best interest of God, home and native land.

Died in Topeka, March the 4th, the infant son of Prof. and Mrs. Stryker. Mrs. Stryker was up from Great Bend and the little one was taken with the measles and later before his recovery from them he was taken with the pneumonia which proved too much for the tender frame. The stricken parents have the heartfelt sympathy of a host of friends in this their sad bereavement. That their loss is great and hard to bear none will deny. But as I folded the little hands over the lifeless breast of their idolized boy, from my heart there welled up a feeling almost of joy as I thought of what the little one had escaped. Instead of death it seemed more like the transplanting of a rare and tender plant to a more secure and choice garden spot. And so we hope that though our dear brother and sister's hearts are aching from their sad affliction they will feel that the little bud just started here will be a bright blossom in heaven.

I have a dream of the future. I have an enduring faith in the evolution of a perfect human government. In the beautiful visions of a coming time I behold the abolition of poverty. A time is coming when the withered hand of want shall not be outstretched for charity; when liberty, equality and justice shall have permanent abiding places in this republic.—Governor Lewelling's Inaugural.

Kansas and equal suffrage.

EDITORIAL COMMENTS.

I would say to all: Use your gentlest voice at home. Watch it day by day, as a pearl of great price; for it will be worth more to you in days to come than the best pearl hid in the sea. A kind voice is joy, like a lark's song, to a hearth at home. It is a light that sings as well as shines. Train it to sweet tones now, and it will keep in tune through life.

The chief thing to be done for those who are in trouble is to enable them to stand upon their own feet, to be brave and strong, to see the sun shining through the clouds, and thus to receive the education which such experiences are able to give. True friendship in calamity will spare no pains and leave no means untried to further these results.

A strong will, a patient temper and sound common sense, when united in the same individual, are as good as a fortune to their possessor. Barring untoward accidents, the man endowed with these qualities who starts on his career with a determination to reach a desirable position does reach it.

Just as it is not always easy to express our thoughts with simplicity and truth and in such language as shall convey their real meaning to others, so it is not always easy to translate our feelings correctly. Both must be the result of culture.

It is one of the maxims of Francis de Sales—and good men and women in all lands might well adopt it as their motto—that "a judicious silence is always better than truth spoken without charity."

One of the finest qualities in a human being is that nice sense of delicacy which renders it impossible for him ever to be an intruder or a bore.

You sometimes see people too old to read and too old to write, but did any one ever see a man too old to count money?

What seems to be virtue is derived from an innocence that ignorance is always blessed with.

Hypocrisy is a hard game to play at, for it is one deceiver against many observers.

It is ever to be noticed that in the race for precedence some one must take the dust.

Man's every motion serves either to express or repress his inner nature.

Men exist for the sake of one another. Teach them or bear with them.

We are haunted by an ideal life, and it is because we have within us the beginning and the possibility of it.

The defamer and denouncer is never trusted. Men may use him and his methods to accomplish ends, but they, like the burglar, despise and hide the tool.

An ideal social system is one that will operate smoothly without the aid of lawyers.

Susan B. Anthony is already making her orderly influence felt in the management of the New York Industrial school, and from her reforms in its discipline and control is proving herself to be in the right place.

The office seeks the man and the man seeks offices for his friends.

The women will vote in Kansas.

We know who our friends are.

Kansas appropriates $65,000 for the World's fair exhibit.

The submitting the question of equal suffrage to the voters of Kansas has passed both branches of the legislature and will be voted upon by the people in November, 1894. The vote stood 122 for and 22 against.

Any person that thinks honesty is the best policy had better keep out of politics.

The supreme court of Kansas is composed of one judge and two politicians.

We would suggest to Governor Lewelling that he discriminate carefully between the man who is willing to take an office when the people want him to take it, and the man who is after it whether the people want his services or not.

There is no sweeter repose than that which is purchased by labor.

In all things the middle course is best. All things in excess bring trouble.

Talk about a government of the people, by the people and for the people when the very best part of the people are disfranchised, and a few of the most unlawful ones of the other half run the affairs of the state.

Mrs. Ada M. Clark has been appointed one of the World's fair commissioners from the Sixth Kansas district. She will probably be elected secretary of the board. This is a splendid appointment. We will have more to say of her next month.

The highest office within the gift of the people is offered as a premium to the law breakers. Quite an inducement.

The south will be ready for suffrage in 1896, so says the Cotton Plant of Columbia, S. C.

You may shut up a man, but you cannot handoff a thought that has once got loose in the world; and the thought is abroad that man should not be the master and woman the slave. We understand already that in the enjoyment of rights all men should be equals, and by and by we shall understand that all men and all women should thus be equals.

The greatest of fools is he who imposes on himself, and in his greatest concern thinks certainly he knows that which he has least studied, and of which he is most profoundly ignorant.

Mrs. EDITOR:—I have just used the last of the fruit that I put up last summer. I did not heat or seal it, just put it up cold. Get fresh fruit, wash it clean, put it in common three or four gallon earthen jars and press the fruit what you can without injuring it. Take two ounces of powdered Comp. Bit of Salix, you can get it at any drug store, dissolve it in four gallons of boiling water and when cool pour in enough to cover the fruit. The Salix prevents fermentation and the water keeps the air away from the fruit. I put up twenty gallons of strawberries, twenty-three gallons of raspberries, forty gallons of peaches and seventeen gallons of grapes, and did not lose a gallon. Every jar kept perfectly fresh, the fruit looked and tasted just as it did when picked. I keep boarders and they all thought my fruit the nicest they ever ate, being much finer than canned fruit. I think it strange everybody does not put up fruit in this way, as it is certainly elegant and so cheap and healthy.

Mrs. C. D. BAKER.

Wheeling, W. Va., Feb. 25, 1893.

Many thanks to our friend for the above receipt and it affords us pleasure to put it in print, knowing as we do that the tired farmers' wives will hail with delight and welcome anything that will lighten their burdens.

Kansas Suffrage Bill Passed and Is Signed By the Governor.

THE BILL.

The State of Kansas hereby submits to the qualified electors of the State for their approval, or rejection, namely: That section one, article five, of the constitution of the State of Kansas, be amended so that the same shall read as follows: Section 1. Every person of the age of 21 years and upwards belonging to the following classes, who shall have resided in Kansas six months next preceding any election, and in the township or ward in which she or he offers to vote, at least thirty days next preceding such election, shall be deemed a qualified elector: 1st, citizens of the United States; 2d, persons of foreign birth who have resided in this State one year after they have declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States, conformable to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization.

This proposition shall be submitted to the electors of this State at the general election of the representatives to the legislature in the year 1894, for their approval, or rejection; those voting in favor of this proposition shall have written or printed on their ballots, "For the suffrage amendment to the constitution;" those voting against the said proposition shall have written or printed on their ballots, "Against the suffrage amendment to the constitution;" said ballots shall be received and a vote taken, counted, canvassed and returns made thereof, in the same manner and in all respects as provided for by law, as in the case of election of representatives to the legislature.

OUR CLUB RATES.

Thus it will be seen that the great fight in Kansas for the next eighteen months will be that of equal suffrage. The FARMER'S WIFE will be the great factor in this fight. Every true equal suffrage man or woman in every State should encourage and help us in this battle.

Try and send us a club. Have you not got fifteen, ten, or even five friends you can send it to and thus help the cause along. Brothers and sisters, let us hear from you. EMMA D. PACK, Editor, Topeka, Kansas.

ANOTHER POINT SCORED

On Behalf of Women's Claim for Equal Rights.

Husbands and Wives Do Not Always Work for the Same Interests.

As Prof. Straie's article on giving the right of suffrage to all women except those who are married has not been answered by many of the brilliant galaxy referred to by the editor of the Economist, I can no longer refrain from taking up my humble pen.

Every progressive American woman must feel grateful for even "half a loaf," but she, at least, knows only too well that man and wife do not always work for the same interest. Just here lies the strongest incentive for them to desire the right of suffrage. How many thousands of men work for the interests of somebody's saloon, instead of their homes and their children. It is universally conceded that there is more drinking done in mining towns than in any other. But from personal observation, I know that even in these places, if women had the right to vote, they could and would, in conjunction with the temperate men, overthrow the terrible power which robs them and their children of the actual necessities of life and even threatens their very existence. As to passing a law depriving drunkards of the right to vote—all know that is, at present at least, utterly impracticable.

Man has ever been woman's superior physically, she his superior morally. Men proudly say God created them the stronger that they might provide for their wives and little ones. Did God then give woman her moral power for nothing?

Today her hands are tied. She sees not only her husband, but her children, the jewels God has given her, and for which she cannot but feel responsible to that God, enticed at every corner by intemperance. And what do her tears, her cries, her rags, her prayers avail? When she uses every power on earth to obtain the only right which can rid the land of this curse, and then fails to obtain that right, she has rid herself of her responsibility to her Creator and that terrible and truly awful responsibility falls upon you, her brothers. At the Judgment Day you will answer for it!

There are other moral as well as educational questions she wishes to help solve with her clear, quick brain, untainted by tobacco and whiskey. It is foolish to say that even in those happy homes where love and morality rule, that "husband and wife will vote in the same way." It is very rare for two persons to have exactly the same idea upon a given subject. That they do not do so, does not in reality mar their happiness in living together; indeed if husband and wife were alike, their existence would be rather monotonous. That is a wise law of nature by which opposites are attracted together. When there are several candidates for a certain office, a man naturally says "to what party does each belong?" A woman, whether his wife, or nobody's wife, would ask, "who is the best man? Who will make the best officer?" You might as well attempt to take away her love for her children as to try to take from her that instinctive love of right and right doing.

But suppose husband and wife do vote alike and wisely, it is a strange kind of arithmetic which says, "for the wife to vote with her husband would constitute but one vote in the end, and just so much performance for nothing." If the wives, mothers and sisters of our laboring men (all honor to them) could vote with them for honest representatives who would legislate for the workers instead of against them, do you think their votes would be thrown away? It is numbers that count in an election. In fact, it seems strange that laboring men do not eagerly welcome, and all but compel their sisters to this fray of paper—the ballot—and so secure themselves from the real trouble which threatened our fair land.

Again, it is stated that "should a husband be an invalid the wife should have the right of suffrage." Why? Does a man lose his power to think and reason simply because physically crippled by accident or illness? Save the immortal Shakespeare, no writer is quoted so often as Alexander Pope; yet his spirit was clothed in a poor, deformed body. Elizabeth Browning was a life-long invalid, but no feminine pen has equalled her poetic one, and but few men have surpassed her. Innumerable instances might be given of those who have done grand work for God and humanity with bodies too frail to long hold the strong spirit here.

Nay, since it is called a "government by the people, of the people, and for the people," and let it be that in reality.

"As Milton pictures Adam and Eve departing from Eden hand in hand, so, if ever they return to Eden, they will do so hand in hand. Man and woman together build the home. Man and woman together may possibly build a better state than the world has yet seen. The broader the suffrage, other things being equal, the less easily is it corrupted as a whole. In politics, education and literature, as well as in moral reform and society and family life. Shakespeare's words have amazing truth: "He is the half part of a blessed man, left to be finished by such as she; and she is a fair divided excellence, whose fullness of perfection lies in him."

HETTY'S VENTURE.

An Illustration of How "A Little Child Shall Lead Them."

The Youth's Companion tells prettily a pretty incident occurring in an Eastern city.

The city was putting water-pipes through the street in front of a modest suburban home, and the little daughter of the house became very much interested in the process. The ground was torn up, and muddy coats and grimy shirts disfigured the trim fence. The gang on duty were a hard-working, harder-talking and an exceedingly thirsty lot of men.

A little girl, Hetty by name, watched them from the house with absorbing attention. It was cold autumn weather, and their voices were sharp upon the still air. One noon the child came to her mother in great distress.

"They are passing a black bottle around, and one man is talking very loud and saying wicked things."

"Perhaps they are drinking; you had better keep away," replied the cautious mother.

Hetty's face grew quite sad, and that night her mother noticed that she prayed for the "poor men who drank while laying the water." A little before noon the next day she approached her mother timidly.

"What do you wish, my dear?"

"Please, do you thing I may make some coffee for the men, mother? I think they would like it."

Then the thought flashed through the boy's mind: "There are many to sell them beer, and none to sell them coffee."

"Why, there are nearly thirty of them," she said aloud. "I don't think I can afford to give all of them coffee."

"O mother!" exclaimed the disappointed girl.

"Well, if you are disappointed, you have enough money in your bank," said the mother. "You can go to the grocery store and buy coffee, and sell it to the men at two cents a cup. If they want coffee at all, they would rather pay for it."

To the grocers then the child flew. "It isn't any use," said the grocery man, promptly. "The men will have their beer. They wouldn't take coffee if you gave it to them."

"I shan't give it," said Hetty. "I'm going to sell it."

And sell it she did. At first the rough men were greatly surprised at the girl's steaming pail and her pretty, business-like manner; but soon they bought and drank, and snatched their lips. Some of them declared that hot coffee like this was "better than beer."

The girl-peddler soon had all she could do. She took another girl as a partner the next day, and was successful beyond her most sanguine hopes. The neighborhood was all alive with interest in the new venture; but the most surprising thing of all was that the oaths and rude language were now seldom heard upon that street. A new gentleness seemed to have been born in the spirit of these rough men. Their foreman declared that from the time the little miss came he never had a better gang of laborers under him. He, too, had found it possible not to swear at his men.

But, too soon, the men passed on up the street, and Hetty could no longer serve them: but the incident, which took place in a Western town, recalls the fact that we all of us, by thoughtfulness and attention, can find little ways of serving and benefiting others that will make both them and us happier and better. It is because of our indifference that it is not done.

Swimming in Cold Water.

The Eskimos are dependent upon the sea for everything they eat and for all the clothes they wear, but none of them know how to swim. It seems strange at first, but becomes less mysterious when we take into account the fact that in the Arctic Ocean the temperature of the water is never above the freezing point. The natives of that region guard against the danger of drowning by making the covering of their boats so tight about the body of the fisherman that there is no leakage, even if they do happen to overturn.

When the Kite was in McCormick Bay with the party of Lieutenant Peary, one of the crew took a swim which is described by Doctor Keely.

"After we had returned to the ship Mr. Verkoef declared that the water looked so pleasant that he would swim from the ship to the shore and back again. Those who heard the assertion attempted to dissuade him, pointing to the numerous icebergs which floated about in every direction. Even when he stripped we all thought that a single plunge would serve to make him change his mind.

"Meanwhile a crowd of curious natives had gathered around, and were gazing at him in mild astonishment. Finally he took the plunge, and at once started, swimming vigorously for the shore.

"Alarmed for his safety, and fearing that a cramp might overtake him, I jumped into Mr. Carsten's little boat, which was moored alongside the ship, and followed him, being prepared to render assistance if it was needed. He reached the shore in safety, however, and turning resolutely around, swam back to the vessel, a distance of about two hundred yards.

"He received, of course, an ovation, but was almost at once taken with a chill which at one time looked serious. A vigorous rubbing restored his circulation to its normal condition, and a brief rest made him as well as ever. It was regarded, however, as a foolhardy feat, and one that none were anxious to emulate.

"The effect on the natives of a sight of the swimming man was most curious. They regarded him with constantly growing astonishment. In Greenland the only use they know for water is for drinking purposes. Probably many of them had accidentally fallen into the water, but they dread and hate its effects as much as does a cat."

Unlicensed Speaking.

Few of us have such real things to talk about that we do not at times discuss the petty and ignoble. We profess to be interested in "the good, the beautiful, the true," and yet we turn aside from considering such ideal topics for petty criticism of the affairs of others.

"I never speak ill of any one," said a lady noted, in her small world, for harsh personal onslaughts; "but of course I must tell the truth."

And so, if it be actually true that her friend has a physical deformity or moral defect, she feels quite at liberty to allude to it.

Rogers, the poet, won a reputation for caustic speech, but had a great distaste for the "small beer" of personal gossip.

"I wonder how the Blanks are able to keep a carriage!" a lady once said to him in his own house, and the poet at once turned to a servant to say, "Go to Blank Square with Mrs. Proctor's and my compliments, and ask how the family contrive to pay for their carriage."

It was a cutting reproof, but the object of it was a woman of good sense and good nature and she acknowledged the lesson to be a deserved one.

Unlicensed speaking springs too often from a desire to be clever or witty. "When I was young," said a man whose tongue was dipped in gall, "I used to say good-natured things, and nobody listened to me. Now that I am old I say ill-natured things, and everybody listens."

But to speak even from a low plane of morality, where expediency reigns, it does not pay. To wound one's own self-respect for the sake of a brief applause is a poor investment, a losing game.

"Yes, I did think of retorting," said a young man who had suffered in silence over a brilliant but brutal attack, "but somehow I didn't do it. I said to myself, 'You won't lose anything by remembering your own dignity.'"—Youth's Companion.

How Milk Is Analyzed.

The chemical analysis of milk is not complicated nor difficult. A small dish is accurately weighed and the weight noted. Into it is now introduced a small portion of milk, and both are weighed. By subtracting the weight of the dish from the weight of both, the weight of the milk is found and carefully recorded. The dish is placed over a steam jet and the water of the milk evaporates, leaving a residue. It is this residue which passes under the name of "solids." A last weighing of the dish with the milk residue, less the weight of the dish, gives the solids, and by a single calculation the percentage is found.

The solids of milk have been found by innumerable analyses to average about 13 per cent., and while the fat varies in the milk from different cows, the solids left after extracting the fat is a very constant quantity, hardly ever falling below 9 per cent. This gives the chemist a positive basis for his calculations, and enables him to state with great certainty whether or not the milk has been watered. The fat or oil in milk is determined by dissolving it by means of ether out of total solids, the residue remaining after the operation being termed "solids, not fat." The average fat or oil found in cow's milk is 3 per cent., and any amount less than this is commonly taken as showing that the milk has been skimmed. If analysis shows a decrease of fat, and solids not fat, it is said to be certain that the milk has been watered, while if the fat only is low that the milk has been skimmed.—Indianapolis News.

Magnifying Trifles.

People who are disposed to vex themselves needlessly over small matters may gain a hint from the following: Prof. Huxley was once sitting at dinner beside a lady who, in impassioned tones, asked him whether he did not think it a very terrible thing that the vicar should have adopted the eastward position in administering the sacrament. "My dear lady," he replied, "I am told by Sir John Herschel that to drop a pea at the end of every mile of a voyage on a limitless ocean to the distance of the nearest fixed star would require a fleet of 10,000 ships, each of 600 tons burden, all starting with a full cargo of peas. Now, do you really suppose that the maker of the fixed stars considers this new position of Mr. Jones a serious thing?"

INGALS ON HORTON.

The title by which I hold my seat in the senate of the United States has been five times vindicated. In the last popular election, the only question before the people was who should be my successor. It was discussed in the newspapers, on the stump, in the schoolhouses, at the cross roads, by every fireside in Kansas. There is not a candid man in the State who does not know that three-fourths of the Republican members elected to that legislature were originally favorable to my return. Long before the final ballot, I had received a majority of the votes of the Republicans of both houses of the legislature, and under the common law of politics was thus entitled to the unanimous support of my party. Seeing that my election was inevitable unless my forces could be broken, my adversaries who had for years been attempting to saturate the public mind with the most infamous and odious columnies, suddenly let loose a tempest of furious defamation, under cover of which, by threats, promises and purchases they formed the most formidable coalition ever known in Kansas politics. No such adulterous alliance was ever made before. Ex-senators and members of congress, marshals and ex-marshals, the chairman of the central committee, the speaker of the house, veterans and raw recruits, disappointed aspirants for office, inveterate enemies of twenty years standing, Republicans, Democrats and Greenbackers all assembled under the leadership of the venerable and saintly Pomeroy in one heroic struggle of devoted self-sacrifice to redeem and regenerate the State.

They selected as their facile instrument the chief justice of the State, a man who began his political career by writing editorials in favor of secession and drinking toasts to the health of Jefferson Davis. Persuaded to become a republican by the promise of preferment, he has been continually in office with an accidental hiatus of one year, from 1860 to 1880. During this long period he has habitually trafficked in justice, defrauded his clients, basely plundered his partner, and insulted society by his base and flagrant immorality. He has never made a promise he did not break nor had a friend whom he was not willing to betray.

In this political judge these frenzied conspirators found a willing accomplice.

Feebly protesting that he was not a candidate, though everyone knew that for five years he had trodden every device path that led toward the capitol, that he took his seat on the bench merely as a stepping-stone to the senate, he descended into the mire of personal politics, accepted the nomination in a columnious speech and then attempted to secure success by the open purchase of votes.

Much has been said about the purity of the Ermine. That traditional fur was never dragged through a fouler puddle. The very seat on the bench that was to be vacated was promised to two anxious aspirants, and the entire political wardrobe of the State was divided in anticipation of my defeat, like the apparel of Joseph among his brethren.

Had the chief justice of the supreme court withdrawn from the contest at its close, this indecent participation might have been condoned and forgotten; but he became the confidential adviser of the conspirators in their final effort to invalidate my election.

Whether he contributed thirty or sixty dollars to assist in defraying the expenses of the missionaries of his reformation is yet undetermined. Guthrie, who had already betrayed his constituents, says it was sixty on the 1st of April.

Horton, in a published letter, writes that he never contributed anything and was never consulted on the subject. In October he swears that he sent thirty dollars two months previously, which would be in August, several weeks after the apostles left Washington, and therefore could not have needed it.

This would be a dubious record for any one but a moralist and purifier in politics. Horton and Guthrie subsequently attempted to patch up the ragged discrepancy by writing letters to the committee in order to bring the dates nearer together, on the principle of the newly married couple who had their certificates dated back to cover accidents. It did not occur to these eminent lawyers that the most obvious method of determining both the date and

Will Be Commenced Next Month.

TOPEKA BUSINESS DIRECTORY

It has been intimated that Topeka business firms would not advertise in our paper for fear of aiding or supporting our cause. The following are not of that class, and we request our readers to trade with them and let them know your reason. Remember these columns are open to all persons that want your trade. Watch for them next month.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DEGREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUCHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURTON, KANSAS.

SAFE, DURABLE FENCE: ONLY $80 PER MILE. save one-half the cost avoid dangerous barbs LAND-OWNERS make $200.00 per acre Agents month and expenses Cash The best local traveling agents wanted everywhere. Write at once for circulars and choice territory; address A. G. HULBERT, Patentee, care of Hulbert Iron Works, 804 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo. Factory Catalogue with 200 engraved designs and prices, sent free to any who want fancy iron and wire work or city, cemetery and farm fences, etc.

amount would have been the production of the check or the entry on the books of the bank. It was mean and base enough to give the money for such a purpose. It was meaner and baser to lie about it. It was meanest and basest of all to apologize for it under oath, and swear to another falsehood about the date of the paltry contribution. No fouler exhibition of cowardice and mendacity ever disgraced the most degraded epoch of the English judiciary which witnessed the fall of Bacon, and the infamies of Jeffrys and Scroggs. Instead of sitting in judgment on the lives, the liberties and the estates of the people, this culprit should be summoned to answer for his crimes and consigned to a felon's cell.

My election was the triumph of decency over disorder. It was a victory of the people over the machine politicians. It was achieved against tremendous odds and the face of obstacles that seemed almost insurmountable. It ought to have ended there but the discomfiture of the opposition was too complete and their baffled rage found vent in an investigation before a committee of the legislature, which was packed by a perjured speaker for the purpose of convicting me.

COUGHS AND COLDS.

Humphreys' Specific Number Seven, cures coughs, colds and hoarseness. Never fails. Price 25c, at all drug stores.

A Word About Incubators.

The practicability of hatching chickens by artificial means is no longer a matter of experiment or dispute. The incubator and brooder has proved its efficiency beyond a shadow of doubt, and half the occupation of old Mrs. Hen is gone. Enterprising breeders long ago discovered that chickens could be produced by the incubator in greater quantities, with less time, trouble and expense, and there are but few poultry raisers to-day who are not using the incubator in preference to the methods of nature.

The advantages of artificial incubation are many. First, there is no waiting for a broody hen; an incubator is always ready to set, never deserts its nest, does not eat the eggs nor clumsily break them. Hens are certainly "kittencats" to deal with, for while one eats her eggs, another leaves them to become cold. Not so with an incubator. Then, too, the fuf and fraul manner in which a hen sits is often a cause of great anxiety to her owner, especially when she has been entrusted with eggs costing several dollars a setting.

Another advantage of the incubator is that it enables the breeder to always have his chickens ready early in the season, and obtain the best market prices.

The ever increasing demand for incubators has stimulated ambitious inventors and manufacturers to great efforts in the incubator line, and to-day there are so many different poultry raising machines, of every imaginable shape, principle and design, that the selection of the best is a matter requiring the most careful consideration and judgment.

If a person is not thoroughly acquainted with the advantages and objections of the many different machines a safe guide to follow is the experience and advice of those who know. It is a well-known fact that a majority of the oldest and largest poultry raisers in the country use the Improved Excelsior Incubator, manufactured by the patentee, Geo. H. Stahl, Quincy, Ill., and unanimously pronounce it the best. The writer, after careful experiment and investigation, knows of no better, and does not hesitate to add his endorsement.

The illustration presented herewith gives an excellent view of this machine. Any readers contemplating adding to their poultry profits, should investigate it. Mr. Stahl will take pleasure in sending (post paid) his book on this subject to all who mention this paper. Write him now.

Unlike the Dutch Process No Alkalies

Other Chemicals are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Office 830 N. Kansas Ave. Residence, 1129 Central Ave. (Over Postoffice.)

A. C. DAVIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon. TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Office Hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 1 to 4 and 6 to 8 p. m.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by

CLARA BEWICK COLBY,

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

TELEGRAPHY

taught, Graduates assisted to positions. Only exclusive School in Kansas. Only Co-operative School in the World. The best on earth. More advantages than is offered by all other Schools combined. $85 pays for "average course," including tuition, board, room and washing, for the first twenty answering this "ad." Write at once. For the past year we have been unable to fill orders for our graduates. Address, W. H. SKELTON, Mgr., Lock Box 561, Salina, Kansas.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND—TANSY PILLS Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail. If your Druggist doesn't keep them accept no substitute but send 4c. postage for "WILCOX'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Pills, Pa.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 4c. in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex. DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICSVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard. No druggist, no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail $1. Brown Bros. Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

GIRLS and boys make "S S" and friends sell. Headache Powders; perfectly harmless. Sample 12c. Big pay to Agents. F. G. STEWART & CO., 362 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

New Eyes Cataracts, scars or films can be absorbed; paralyzed nerves restored; diseased eyes or lids cured; a home treatment, "no risk;" hundreds convinced; pamphlet FREE. THE EYE, Glens Falls, N. Y.

24 Sea Shells in neat cabinet, name engraved (scientific) and illustrated catalogue of Nat. Hist. specimens, post paid, 30c. C. F. CARR, Madison, Wis.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR. Destroyed forever by the Electric Needle, at the office or by patient at home. Never fails. For terms, etc., address Dr. Daniel T. Ro Gan, 108 N. 11th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

PENNYROYAL AND COTTON ROOT BARK PILLS for female irregularities. Positive. Ladies, send direct to manufacturer and avoid compounds from irresponsible parties; sent, securely sealed, on receipt of $1, with plain directions. S. M. COLES, Chemist, 214 Delancey St., N. Y.

Humphreys' Specifics may well be called lucky numbers, and lucky, indeed, are the persons who use them. The thirty-five Specifics cover all diseases from infancy to old age.

J. W. O'BRYON, D. D. S.

DENTIST.

FIRST-CLASS WORK at REASONABLE PRICES.

Office over Davis & Sheetz store.

NORTH KANSAS AVENUE, TOPEKA, KANS.

When the Lord God overruled the discoveries which gave to civilization a new hemisphere, he provided for the laying of the foundation of his coming kingdom by causing the fathers of our country to pronounce the principle of liberty which, though set forth in the declaration of independence, has been most shamefully violated from the foundation of the government till the present time. The government belongs to the people. The people constitute the controlling power. Those elected to office are legitimately the public servants, and so soon as the people are educated to know the fact, measures will be instituted to restore the government to its first principles.

MEMORIES.

I'm not dissatisfied with life,
For I have more of joy than strife,
And for one smile of my sweet mate
Would render up a king's estate.
And yet hot tears suffused mine eye
When I reflect on days gone by—
Those days of childhood—happy days,
Obscured now, somewhat in the haze
Which time lays over all things past,
Yet living still, and like to last,
Within my memory, long as I
Can think and love I'll sadly sigh
For happy hours that ne'er again to me in life may come,
When mother was my confidante, and father
was my chum,
My troubles—how she smoothed them o'er!
Her smile alone healed sorrow's sore,
Her gentle hand upon my brow—
I think I almost feel it now—
Drove every single care away,
And brought sunshine where blank dismay
Was tyrannizing over me,
And now his cheery face I see;
His kindly voice I seem to hear
Still echoing softly in mine ear,
My cherished guide, in spirit, yet—
Ah, memory bleed I'll ne'er forget Those happy hours that ne'er again to me in life may come,
When mother was my confidante, and father
was my chum,
—Harper's Weekly.

A TWELFTH NIGHT RING.

Just those three letters, "A. V. E.," evidently cut with a diamond ring in the mirror, and staring out on him as Jack Smith stared into it. He had been staring into it, in a brown study, for the last half hour, before these three initials took form there and flashed out on him.

Of course he knew that they were cut in the glass all the time, only he had just happened to notice them.

But what one knows and what one feels are not always the same thing; and somehow Jack, in his dilemma, felt these letters a sort of message to him.

"A. V. E.," he repeated to himself. "All hail that ancient greeting; meeting me oddly enough here, when I am just looking for her."

And then! "All hail! How goes the charm of this very Twelfth-night? Then when one has won the Twelfth-night ring—and surely, though I have cut no Twelfth-night cake, I've found a certain magic little ring—when the one who has the ring looks intently into the mirror upon Twelfth-night—the face—comes and looks into the mirror over one's shoulder."

It was hardly the orthodox hour for spells, with the sun still slanting yonder on the icy lake under his windows; yet, for all that, a misty face, with faint illusive features, did seem to be gazing at him out of the glass. With a laugh at himself, he drew a letter from his pocketbook—a little letter, worn by the number of times it had been pulled out of its envelope during the last few days.

The envelope bore the post mark of this far north town of Plattsburgh. The letter said: "If not to this John Smith, give to some other of the name."

"I couldn't stay to meet you, Johnny. I know you will understand what it means when you find I am not there to meet you with the others. I enclose the little ring; we have both outgrown it since the day you took it off your finger to put it on mine. After awhile you will come up here and see me if you like, but now I am home. I am just writing this on my way that it may greet you on your arrival in New York, and tell you at once that you are free. But don't forget that I shall always be glad to see my Cousin Johnny, and that I am, as I used to be long ago, just your affectionate."

"LITTLE AMY."
A curious letter and a curious inclosure; a tiny ring with a mere spark of a diamond in it. "John Smith, Esq., New York Hotel, Broadway, New York," was the address.

It had been delivered to the wrong John Smith just as he was leaving the New York Hotel for a run up the Hudson. In the hurry of departure he had overlooked it, and afterward, though sure he was the wrong John Smith, he had not known what to do with it.

The small, empty circle had a pathetic air to him, as if little Amy's hand might look lost without it. Perhaps the girl was just putting a brave face on the matter, as slighted girls will when their lovers weary of them. Big, broad-shouldered Jack felt he should like to take the poor little thing's part and punch the head of faithless Johnny.

It was that feeling which had brought him on to Plattsburgh from his careless, sight-seeing stay in New York. He had said to himself that he might as well see something of winter, now that he was East, his idea of the yule season being the green one of the California coast. There was really nothing to keep him back from following up the very slender clue the postmark of that letter held out to him.

Up the Hudson, on to Albany, thence across the rocky verge of Lake Champlain; under a clear and sparkling winter sunshine, it was a charming journey, even without hope of adventure at the end of it. And now, here was Jack at Plattsburgh, at Fouquet's Hotel, which had beckoned him over from the railway station. And here the mirror in his room, overlooking the lake, had given him its message.

"A. V. E." The A. might stand for Amy. The diamond spark in the ring might have cut these initials here!

It was the very slenderest clue. But Jack presently found himself following it up. Amy had stopped in Plattsburgh on her way home, she wrote. Surely, nowhere in Plattsburgh could she better stop than at Fouquet's.

A moment later and Jack was turning over the hotel register. He had not far to look before he found the entry, "Miss A. V. Elliot, Cedar-cliff." Then he made good search to find if there were no other A. V. E. on this point; satisfying himself, he asked where one might find the village of Cedarcliff.

There was no village, only a country house. The Cedarcliff folks always stopped here from the trains till sent for. Yes, if the gentleman wanted a sleigh he could have one, with a driver who knew the way round by Cumberland Head.

So, presently, Jack was speeding out through the broad streets over-arched with elms, leafless, but sheathed in icicles, and flashing in a million jeweled points in the evening sunshine. The great white lake flashed too, the sleighbells clashed with a merry peal of marriage bells, and Jack found himself in the Cedar-cliff parlor before he had at all decided what he was to say.

Was Miss Elliot at home? and which Miss Elliot? Miss Verena was at home; would she do, sir, for the others were all out this afternoon.

The small maid who let him in went away with the reluctant assurance from Jack that Miss Verena would do. And then Jack reflected that Verena was the second letter in the magic mirror. The first might stand for Amy. But, then, just as well it might stand for Annie and Abigail. Jack had heard that one might find Abby in abundance among these Yankee girls. Well, Plattsburgh was not quite in Vermont, so perhaps it was not Abby.

It certainly was not Abby! When this dainty little creature, in some pale-gray fleecy drapery, like a soft evening cloud, came lightly in, Jack stood up with his lowest bow.

"Miss Amy Elliot, I believe?"

"Yes."

"And I am John Smith."

"Oh!" Her hand went out to him in eager greeting. "Johnny! It isn't possible!" And then more slowly, "No—it is not possible."

Jack was bowing over her hand.

"I don't think I'm Johnny. I might be, of course; only I never was; but—pardon me, but a letter I had no right to has fallen into my hands—and I didn't know what to do with it—I—I thought I ought to find you and return it."

Without a word she took the unsealed envelope he put into her hand.

The room was dim in the declining afternoon; she went away to the window with the letter.

Standing there, where the sunset streamed in upon her, she was revealed more fully to him. How wonderfully pretty she was! And was it only the sunset that made her cheeks glow and her eyes to shine so, as she turned to him?

"You have read this letter, Mr. Smith?"

He bent his head. He was beginning to think this quest of his a mere impertinence.

"I could not know it was not meant for me until I had read it," he said meekly. "But perhaps, Miss Elliott, as your name is Verena—"

He was holding out his hand for the letter, as if it could not be hers.

"My name is Amy Verena," she said, with an embarrassed little laugh. "Mamma was hoping I might turn out an 'Heir-of-Radcliffe' sort of girl, but I haven't," she said defiantly; "and Johnny knows I haven't; and I am only sorry the letter failed to reach him in time to prevent—"

As she paused abruptly, — Jack poured out a torrent of apologies. He would have gone to the ends of the earth to find her out before; he had the greatest desire to go to the ends of the earth, as has been said, to punch the true false Johnny's head for him. And, though Jack does not exactly say as much, he somehow betrays it all to Miss Amy Verena.

She stares at him, fairly puzzled for a moment. Then she breaks into a laugh, so merry that he has to join in it.

"Oh! so you have been sorry for the maiden all forlorn? But you needn't have been, for Johnny wrote, and begged—Oh, but I didn't mean to tell you that!" she cried, catching herself up quickly. "Only, you know, we were almost children when Johnny went away to Germany to college, and—"

"And his steamer was due in New York and he was to register at the New York Hotel? But this other John Smith arrived first—not from Europe but across the continent from California, on a first visit East. And—I beg your pardon, but you are not going to put on that ring, are you?"

The first part of that sentence of his was very positive, as he observed her turning the ring over on her open palm. The two last words were added hastily, upon the startled glance she gave him.

"I? No; certainly not," she answered, blushing.

She laid it down upon the mantel-piece as she came forward to the fire and she did not observe that as he leaned on the mantel and talked to her he slipped the bauble into his breast-pocket, whence he had taken it with the letter awhile ago.

As this was not Jack's last visit, however, she had many an opportunity to make inquiries for the missing ring, if she would.

But there was always so much else to talk about. California, the far east, China, Japan, even Australia, all of which this California Jack knew, if he were rather ignorant of Europe.

But one day—and January was barely out before that day came, everything of California being naturally of rapid growth—he asked Amy to come with him and show him Europe.

That was the day he laid the ring back on the mantelpiece before her eyes.

The two were standing on the hearth rug together. As he turned to put the ring on the mantel he met her eyes in the mirror looking over his shoulder. He held them fast with his.

"Miss Elliott, that first evening—it was twelfth-night, Amy, when we at home cut the twelfth-night cake for the wedding ring in it. This charmed ring had come to me by a strange chance and as I spelled out the A. V. E. it had cut into my mirror, I fancied two soft eyes glanced in, over my shoulder, and two rosy lips. Was it only a dream, sweetheart; or a true prophetic twelfth-night vision?"

Her hands were in his now; but the sweet eyes were held no longer—the dropped lashes veiled them.

"I—I don't think that it was only a dream, Jack!"—Waverley Magazine.

WHERE LICORICE GROWS.

It is to Be Found on the Banks of the Tigris and the Euphrates.

On the banks of the Tigris and the Euphrates the licorice plant is chiefly grown. These great rivers flow through flat, treeless prairies of uncultivated and nearly uninhabited land, says the Boston Traveler. For three months of the year hot winds blow, and the temperature reaches 104 degrees.

For six months of the year the climate is moderate and salubrious, and for three months bleak and wintry, and the thermometer going down to 30 degrees at night.

The licorice plant is a small shrub, with light foliage, growing to about three feet high, where its roots can reach the water. It grows without any cultivation. No lands are leased for the purpose and no objection is made to its being cultivated. It grows on red-earth soil, and also on light, almost sandy, where the wood is best, provided it has plenty of water and the ground is not more than fifty yards from the actual river or stream.

The wood, after once being dug up, grows better afterward. The time of collecting is generally during the winter, but it is possible all the year round. The root when dug is full of water and must be allowed to dry, a process which takes the best part of a year. It is then sawed or cut into small pieces from six inches to a foot long.

The good and sound pieces are kept and the rotten ones are used for firewood. It is then taken in native river boats to Russia, whence it is shipped in pressed bales to London, and again from there to America, where it is used largely in the manufacture of tobacco.

The black licorice sticks sold in drug stores come mostly from Spain, and are made of pure juice, mixed with a little starch, which prevents it from melting in hot weather. The word "licorice" is of Greek origin, and means "sweet root."

The Life of Niagara.

Concerning the wearing away of Niagara Falls, Prof. Le Conte says: The upper stratum of rock is Niagara limestone, a hard rock, but beneath it is a stratum of shale. It is the slow undermining of this shale that causes the limestone to break off from year to year and the falls to recede. They are receding now at the rate of three or four feet a year. What will be the final result? They may go back to the lake, but the limestone is growing thicker and thicker and may finally extend to the bottom of the falls. In that case the rock would not break off, but wear away and form a rapids. In any case, if the falls should recede to Lake Erie at the present rate, it would take at least 20,000 years.

Compulsory Insurance Against Illness.

Without making a "row" about them, as is the manner of so many people in the world, the Swiss nevertheless take a deep interest in social questions. One of their statesmen has just introduced a bill which makes it compulsory for all persons of either sex to be insured against illness and accidents. We are not told whether the insurance is to be effected by the employers of labor, by the workmen themselves, or to be contributed to by both parties. The last arrangement is the only fair one.—London Figaro.

Field-Crickets.

In Lisbon male field-crickets are sold in miniature cages by bird-fanciers at the rate of a penny a piece. They are kept in stock by hundreds together in open tea chests, lined for the first three or four inches from the top with slips of tin, and are fed upon lettuce. The natives like to have a "grillo" chirping in the room, and make it a pet.

EVERYTHING is all right until it belongs to you.

REAL RURAL READING

WILL BE FOUND IN THIS DEPARTMENT.

Benefit of Farmer's Clubs—Handy Arrangement for Taking Up Barb Wire—Selling Part of the Farm—Live Stock and Dairy—Horticultural Notes, Etc.

Reel for Taking Up Barb Wire.

According to a reader of the Practical Farmer a convenient reel for taking up barb wire may be made in the following manner: Take a pair of cultivator wheels, make an axle to fit, out of 2x4 oak, 30 inches long. Side pieces should be 1½ inches by 2 inches, 4 feet long, of hard wood. Bolt to axle securely. The uprights should be 2 inch by 4 inch pine, securely bolted to side pieces, and high enough to reach above wheels. The cross bar may be 1½ inches square, ends rounded for handles. The whole (see Fig. 1) should be well braced, as it must be strong. For windlass axle (Fig. 2), take oak, 1½ inches square, 26 inches long, fit crank on one end; for reel, take barb-wire reel, cut hole through it square to fit axle.

To take up wire, fasten end to reel, take cross bar in left hand, turn crank with right. The cart is propelled by winding wire on reel; when one reel is full, slip off and put on another.

The Farmer's Club.

Every town should have a farmers' club! Every farmer should attend it faithfully. A well-conducted school-house club stands next to the agriculture paper as a means of disseminating useful knowledge among the farmers. The club can deal with the local issues of the particular section of where it is held, while the paper must needs be more or less cosmopolitan. It is a simple matter to have a club. A few good, earnest, active members are all that is needed. There is very little need of a lengthy constitution, or of wasting time over obscure points of order. There needs to be a chairman, who shall preside at the meetings, and a secretary to give the required notices of the gatherings. Long papers, as a rule, are not desirable, but if every one will go prepared to bring forward a single subject, the program will be full, and the meeting an interesting one. Occasionally some one from another club may be invited to speak at some length, and it is a poor meeting that will let him sit down with all his ideas unchallenged. The club should be attended by the whole family, and not simply by the men folks. The women are as able as any to make the evening interesting, and often more so.

Removing the Gape Worm from Fowls.

When the gape worm becomes established in the throat of a chicken, according to the American Agriculturist, death will result, unless the worm is soon removed. One plan is to introduce some liquid substance in the throat that will kill the worm, or cause it to loosen its hold upon the membrane of the throat. For this purpose, kerosene or turpentine are the common remedies, being applied with a feather which is dipped in the liquid. The chicken's mouth is held open with one hand, and the feather introduced into the throat with the other, being given a twist between the thumb and finger, thus putting the oil on all parts of the throat. Such applications usually add to the inflammation of the throat, and death is often hastened thereby. A better plan is to loop a hair from the mane or tail of a horse. A simple loop is shown at A in the illustration. The three round dots are bits of wax to hold the hair in position. At B, several loops are placed in the end of a small split stick and held together by wax or thread. These loops are introduced into the bird's throat, when by twirling, the worms are loosened and as some of the mucus in the throat will attach to the loop the loosened worms are readily withdrawn. The operation takes about a minute and saves the life of the chicken.

HORSE-HAIR LOOPS FOR GAPE WORMS.

Keeping Apples.

I have had the care of 500 bushels of apples each successive season for forty years, says a correspondent in the National Stockman. I have found a cool, moderately damp cellar the best place to keep them. After rejecting all unsound fruit I store immediately in cellar, if it is a cool one; if not, in an out-building constructed of heavy lumber, the object being to keep them cool. They must be cool if expected to keep. Warmth hastens ripening, and eventually decay. When there is danger of freezing remove to cellar. I have kept them on shelves, in barrels, in small, medium and large boxes. I have succeeded best in using boxes holding about ten bushels, having kept them until May with a loss of only three bushels in 500. In a continued experiment of sixteen years I saved one-third more using the ten-bushel box than with barrels. The reason is obvious. The quantity is large enough to prevent them from becoming thoroughly cool, yet large enough to remain in that condition, while small boxes or barrels become warmed through with every mild change of atmosphere. In using large boxes it is difficult to get the fruit cool throughout.

Clover.

The farmers of the Middle States are accustomed to speak of clover seed as the cheapest fertilizer they can use. It is. Careful experiments have been made, showing that an acre of very good clover seed contains within six inches of the surface nearly 3½ tons of clover roots, which would contain nearly 100 pounds of nitrogen, fifty pounds of potash, and more than twenty-five pounds of phosphoric acid. While not much New England soil would grow such clover, yet the half of that amount would be a liberal manuring, and farmers who will sow clover with their spring grain and grass seed, upon the grass which was sown last fall, need have but little fear of their fields running out if the clover gets a good hold. It will also pay to sow some of the thin places in the old meadows, first scratching them with a light harrow, to allow the seed to reach the earth. Sow upon a light snow, or after the snow has gone and the ground is soft with the coming out of the frost. The spring rains will carry the seed down to the ground, and it will germinate and take root if the soil is good enough. Thus a welcome addition may be made to this year's hay crop, and at the same time the soil may be made richer for other crops.

All Around the Farm.

BUILD as few fences as you can get along with.

The sweet-brier is suggested as a hedge plant.

CLOVER, corn, and almost any kind of stock go well together.

SMALLER farms and intenser farming would bring more profits.

Try better feeding and see if your cows are doing their best.

THERE is more money in 150-pound pigs than a 300-pound old hog.

WHEN a calf is weaned other conditions should be favorable for growth.

Hogs grown under cleanly conditions make clean and wholesome pork.

GIVE plenty of food and a good chance to exercise to all domestic animals.

DON'T plant trees where they will not be wanted when grown to good size.

The best sheep produces not only better mutton or better wool, but both.

It is no advantage for the farmer to keep poor horses because they are cheap.

FEED a fair amount of grain and let the animal complete the ration on coarser food.

The animal, the feed, and the product are the same, changed only in form or combination.

CROPS must be made, not simply grown. The farmer's business is to combine the needed elements.

WHAT the plant draws from the soil will of course be found in the plant, and may be returned.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

MASSACHUSETTS INDIAN CAKE.—Three cups each of Indian meal and flour; one cup each of sour milk and molasses, sprinkle with salt; dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in milk; mix all together. Bake in a moderately heated bake-kettle or oven.

RICE CORN BREAD.—One cupful of rice, two cupfuls of sifted white meal, three eggs well beaten, one tablespoonful of lard or butter, as much milk as will make a stiff batter, a little salt. Boil the rice perfectly soft, and pour it hot over the meal; add the butter, eggs, and milk, beat it well and bake it in well buttered pans in a quick oven.

INDIAN BREAD.—Two cups of fine Indian meal, two cups of rye flour, two cups of graham flour, one cup of molasses, one-half cup of yeast, one teaspoonful of baking powder, two teaspoonfuls of salt. Mix as stiff as you can with a spoon, using tepid water, and when well mixed, turn into a well buttered bread pan and set to rise. Bake slowly three hours.

CUSTARD CREAM.—Boil half a pint of cream with a piece of lemon peel, a stick of cinnamon, and eight lumps of white sugar. Beat the yolks of four eggs, then mix the eggs and cream very gradually together. Simmer it gently on the fire, stirring until it thickens, but removing it the minute it begins to boil. The addition of a glass of brandy beaten up with it adds to the flavor.

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE.

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

New Argument Concerning the Crucifixion—Queer Features of the First Complete Bible Printed—The Last Moments of the Mother.

Christ Not Killed by Jews.

HISTORY is being rewritten in many instances. The historians of the past were not infallible, and it is a popular saying that history is more fiction than fiction itself. Aaron Hahn, a Cleveland, Ohio, rabbi, in a lecture recently delivered ably defended the proposition that the Jews were not responsible for the crucifixion of Jesus Christ, but that He died under the Roman law and at the hands of the Roman government. He makes the following defense of his position:

"In those days the Jews were under dire oppression from the Romans. Many deliverers appeared, and the people hailed with delight the idea of a Messiah. The Jewish country was swarming with enthusiasts who were eager to aid the people. Two of these became famous—Judah of Galilee and Jesus of Nazareth. Judah urged force; Christ urged humanity. He was tried before Pilate and put to death. His death was a misunderstanding between himself and the Roman government. The Jews admit that Christ was crucified, but deny that he was crucified by the Jews. Why should the Jews have crucified Jesus? They hailed Him with joy and delight. The country was swarming with proclaimed Messiahs, but none of them were put to death. How did the Jews inflict capital punishment? Crucifixion was unknown among the Jews. That was the Roman method. Then it is said that Jesus was sentenced at night. The supreme court of the Jews met only in the day. There were two thieves crucified with Jesus. Under Jewish laws it was provided that only one man should be executed in a day. Christ was crucified under Roman law."

It seems that there is a great deal of justice in what Rabbi Hahn says. Is it possible that the Jews have for eighteen centuries been persecuted for the commission of a crime which they did not commit?—Des Moines Register.

The Dying Wife.

There is a time when the plainest wife is a queen of beauty to her husband. She has done the work of life. She has reared her children for God and Heaven, and though some of them may for a time have wandered, they will yet come back, for God has promised. She is dying and her husband stands by. They think over all the years of their companionship—the weddings and burials, the ups and downs, the successes and the failures. They talk over the goodness of God and his faithfulness to children and children's children. She has no fear about going. The Lord has sustained her so many years that she fully trusts him now. The lips of both of them tremble as they give the parting words and encourage each other about their sure meeting in a better world. The breath is feeble and feeble, and stops. Gone! As one of the neighbors takes the good old man by the arm and gently says, "Come, you had better go into the next room and rest." He says: "Wait a moment: I must take one more look at that face and at those hands. Beautiful! Beautiful!"

The First Complete Bible.

The first complete Bible printed in England was issued in 1535 without any publisher's name. It was the work of the celebrated Miles Coverdale, who incorporated, with revisions, Tyndale's books of the New Testament, as well as his Pentateuch and Book of Jonah. It was thus only partially original as far as Coverdale was concerned, the remaining portion being a translation of a translation. No perfect copy of this edition is known to be in existence. A copy sold a few years ago in London for a sum equal to $600 had the title, nineteen leaves and the map missing. The Coverdale Bible is the one mentioned in these notes heretofore as the "Bug Bible" and the "Treach Bible," on account of two curious passages found therein. The passage in Jeremiah which we now read as "Is there no balm in Gilead?" is made by Coverdale to read "Is there no treacle at Gahadah?" The psalm which says "Thou shalt not be afraid of the terror by night" reads, "Thou shalt not need to be afraid for any bugs by night." The ninth psalm, in that portion which should say "Put them in fear, O Lord," Coverdale makes to say "Set a schoolmaster over them."—St. Louis Republic.

Religion.

Religion, whether natural or revealed, has always the same beneficial influence on the mind. In youth, in health, and prosperity it awakens feelings of gratitude, and sublime love, and purifies at the same time that which it exalts; but it is in misfortune, in sickness, in age, that its effects are most truly and beneficially felt; when submission in faith, and humble trust in the divine will, from duties become pleasures, undecaying sources of consolation, then it creates powers which were believed to be extinct, and gives a freshness to the mind which was supposed to have passed away forever, but which is now renovated as an immortal hope; its influence outlives all earthly enjoyments, and becomes stronger as the organs decay and the frame dissolves; it appears as that evening star of light, in the horizon of life, which we are sure is to become, in another season, a morning star, and it throws its radiance through the gloom and shadow of death.—Sir Humphrey Davy.

Comfort in Prayer.

The Christian while on his earthly pilgrimage has a storehouse full and overflowing, from which he may draw comfort, and supply his every need, and where he may find a channel through which to commune with the heavenly life. The key that unlocks for him the divine storehouse is prayer in its sense of petition, and the thanks of humanity to the giver of every good and perfect gift are expressed in worship and praise of eternity, the fruitage of seeds of petition sown in the earthly life.

Rams Horn Blasts.

The man who loves his neighbor as himself is not the one who smokes on a street car platform.

The religion that never goes away from home to do good is not the kind that Jesus introduced.

The Lord never depends much on the church member who can, but will not pay his honest debts.

The Devil never gets very far from the man who is trying to lead a religious life without giving.

The devil is not much alarmed about the preaching in any church where he can run the music.

The only kind of good that is good is the kind that doesn't shrink when brought to God's standard.

It doesn't take much talk from a theater-going professor to choke the life out of a prayer meeting.

A good thing to do on dark days is to try to push the clouds away from the windows of other people.

One of the hardest times to love an enemy is when he seems to be prospering like a green bay tree.

The real lover of Christ is always willing to follow Him at his own expense, but he never has to do it.

The man who is not willing for the Kingdom of God to come into his own heart is opposing it everywhere.

The only man who really succeeds is the one who gets where God wants him to be, and then stays there.

A good way to find out how much religion people have is to watch them when they can't have their own way.

If you want to have plenty of coal in your own cellar, do something to keep your neighbor's fire from going clear out.

The Value of Accuracy.

It is the result of every day's experience, that steady attention to matter of detail lies at the root of human progress; and that diligence, above all, is the mother of good luck. Accuracy is also of much importance, and an invariable mark of good training in a man. Accuracy in observation, accuracy in speech, accuracy in the transaction of affairs.

What is done in business must be well done; for it is better to accomplish perfectly a small amount of work, than to half-do ten times as much. A wise man used to say, "Stay a little, that we may make an end the sooner."

Too little attention, however, is paid to this highly important quality of accuracy. As a man eminent in practical science lately observed to us, "It is astonishing how few people I have met in the course of my experience who can define a fact accurately."

Yet, in business affairs, it is the manner in which even small matters are transacted, that often decides men for or against you. With virtue, capacity, and good conduct in other respects, the person who is habitually inaccurate cannot be trusted; his work has to be gone over again; and he thus causes endless annoyance, vexation, and trouble.

New Way to Save.

Positively the "closest" man has been found. Some one asked him what time it was one day, and he answered:

"Well, it's half-past three by my watch, but I guess I'm about a quarter of an hour slow by this time o' day."

"Why don't you keep your watch right?"

"Well, I can't afford to. I let it lose about half an hour a day."

"What do you mean?"

"Why, you see, I let it run a little slow so it won't wear out the mainspring so much!"

MONEY, matrimony, and alimony make nearly all the business for the courts of justice.

KANSAS STATE NEWS.

Randall grain dealers are short at least eighty cars at this time, and not one in sight.

At Centralia fire destroyed the North elevator and contents of grain. Total loss, $5,000.

Since the Lawrence High school was organized there have been 421 graduates, and their average age has been 18 years.

An Elk county doctor has been present at the births of 878 babies in twenty-two years. Score another world's record for Kansas.

The engine house of the city water-works at Girard is burned. The stand-pipe and reservoir were greatly damaged and the court house considerably scorched.

Thomas county claims to have shipped 1,200 car-loads of the last crop of wheat, and yet her people claim there are upwards of 500 car-loads remaining.

Topeka Capital: The total enrollment in the city schools for the first month of the first term of this year was 5,353; for the first month of the second term it shows a slight increase, being 5,359.

It is said that a person can stand on section 29, township 9, range 25, in Graham county and see seven different towns, viz.: Wa-Keeney, Buffalo Park, Collyer, Quinter, Hill City, Grainfield and Hoxie.

At the Pittsburg encampment of the state G. A. R., Hon. Bernard Kelly, of Topeka, was elected department commander to succeed Hon. A. R. Greene. Colonel W. H. Coulter, also of Topeka, was the next leading candidate.

Lawrence Jeffersonian: L. J. Worden again got off his mental balance and has been taken to the asylum at Topeka. This was a surprise to his friends, as he had been feeling quite well and his mind seemed entirely clear.

Parsons special: Masked robbers entered the little town of Chouteau on the Cherokee division of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas south of this city, and robbed the station, securing about $30. They afterwards robbed a number of stores and fled.

Lawrence, February 28: The big ice gorge in the Kaw river, just above Lawrence broke last night and all went out the river without doing and damage. There is a feeling of relief on the part of large property-owners along the river, who have seen the possibility of much loss from another lodging of the ice.

Arkansas City Traveler: Daily we are besieged with inquiries for houses to rent. There is a very large demand for houses just at present, and rent has been going up. In some instances houses are let to the highest bidder. We know of one case where the rent of a cottage was bid up from $10 to $16 per month.

Manhattan Nationalist: Mr. Maxwell, of Zeandale, was the victim of bold highwaymen. As he was going home his attention was attracted by a couple of men, who permitted him to gaze into the muzzles of a shotgun and a revolver while they relieved him of $18 and an Odd Fellow's pin. They have not yet been captured.

Marquette Tribune: A farmer named Brainard, living a short distance from town, had a wolf that he brought up from infancy. The wolf last week became mad, got loose, and bit one of Mr. Brainard's children, and he at once took the child to Chicago for treatment. The wolf is still at large and has probably bitten several dogs by this time. Everybody should keep their dogs tied up.

W. Y. Morgan, who was elected commander of the Sons of Veterans at Pittsburg, is a graduate of the State university, president of the Strong City & Cottonwood Falls Railway company, and editor of the Emporia Daily Gazette. Colonel Morgan has been an active member of the order of the Sons of Veterans for ten years. In 1890 and 1891 he was a member of the commandery-in-chief, S. V., U. S. A., and in 1888 he was a member of the division council.

Topeka Journal: A well-known contractor said to-day: From what I am able to judge I think the chances are that there will be more building done in Topeka this spring than there has been since '89. I have heard of more improvements that are contemplated than any spring since I have been in the city except during the boom. Why is it? It may be because Topeka is a better town than it used to be: it may be because times are not so hard as they have been. The dam may have something to do with it. I do know, though, that the architects and we contractors will have all the business we can attend to.

Independence Tribune: J. H. Brewster is a rustler. While our city has been halting and waiting about boring for natural gas, Mr. Brewster, without any blow, has, on his fine farm east of town, been sinking a well. Yesterday, we learn, the drillers struck a big flow of gas, superior, it is said by Mr. Bloom, to anything at Cherryvale. Orders have been issued keeping all parties from near the derrick, for fear of fire and an explosion. All parties are greatly elated, and we heartily congratulate Mr. Brewster on his find, and hope he may be able to supply our city with that unsurpassed fuel.

Stockton News: Mrs. J. T. Locke, accompanied by her two daughters and Mrs. Frank Martin and baby, came to Stockton to do some shopping. About 4 o'clock they started home, and while on the north approach to the river south of town the team became frightened and began backing. Before the ladies hardly realized their danger the rear wheels of the wagon rolled over the side of the approach and the ladies were all thrown out, falling a distance of about fifteen feet. Fortunately, the horses stopped, so that neither wagon nor horses left the bridge, or the ladies would certainly have been killed. As it was they were all bruised, but no bones were broken. Mrs. Locke was injured internally, but it is hoped not seriously.

STOCK AND FARM.

Mankato Monitor: A fruit-grower of Jewell county informs us that he has examined his peach buds and that on some trees he finds every bud in healthy condition; on other trees in the same locality he finds every bud killed.

North Topeka item: John Brown, who lives on the Peck & Johnson ranch, is bragging over a cow on the place which has given birth to two pairs of twin calves and a single calf within the past two years. The whole fire are living and doing well.

Arkansas City Traveler: The man who sends his cattle to the strip to avoid assessment loses more than if he had kept his cattle at home and paid the tax. There is no grass as yet on the outlet, and cattle will starve unless feed is hauled and given to them.

Hill City Republican: Farmers will soon begin sowing small grain in Graham county. It will astonish some of our eastern friends and readers to learn that the amount of small grain that will be sown in this country this year will be at least 25 per cent more than that sown in the past year.

Stockton Record: I. N. Pepper and Frank McNulty have closed a deal with a wealthy citizen of Detroit, Michigan, for eight sections of land in Graham county, belonging to a company. The land is listed at $6.50 per acre. In the deal horses to the value of $12,500 are exchanged, all of which will be bought out here.

Arkansas City Traveler: The cattle seized by Sheriff Nipp last week and now quarantined south of the Arkansas river near the south bridge, belonged to the Tipton brothers, who supposed they had until the first day of March in which to get them into this state from the state of Arkansas. Cattle south of the Indian territory line can come into Kansas only in December and January without permission from the live stock sanitary commission.

The manner in which the cattle receipts at the Kansas City, Kan., yards keep up in the face of the general reports of the short supply of cattle in the country is a puzzle to the "boys" at the yards. For the four weeks in February there were 18,932 more cattle marketed there than in the same time last year, and 5,541 more sheep, and in the face of this increase in the supply, prices are fully 50 cents per cwt. higher, which would indicate that the consumption had increased even faster than the supply.

KANSAS RAILROADS.

The Grand Island road will build an elegant round house and depot at Hanover in the near future. They are getting plans and specifications for it now.

A meeting of Santa Fe employees was held at Wichita to discuss the formation of a federation of the organized branches of brotherhoods. About sixty delegates were present from the different division points of the system, representing the orders of engineers, firemen, conductors, trainmen, switchmen and telegraphers. A committee was appointed to draw up articles to govern the federation, the same to be submitted to the different orders for adoption. The men insist that the meeting was not called for the purpose of organizing a strike, but to effect a consolidation which will be effectual in supporting the grievances of the men without resorting to strike methods.

KANSAS CHURCHES.

The Wichita association of Congregational churches holds its semi-annual meeting in Wellington, March 6, 7 and 8.

Rev. Dr. A. H. Tevis, founder of the People's church of Kansas City, Kan., has resigned pastoral charge of it on account of ill-health.

Emporia Republican: Work on the Baptist church was resumed after a short suspension. The structure is now rapidly nearing completion.

At Kirwin Rev. L. A. Marcum, of the Methodist church, was given a purse of $50 by the people of that town on his departure for the annual conference. A farewell reception was tendered him at the residence of F. H. Quintard, and over 250 guests were present.

Fairy Godfather.

One of the odd occurrences which we call improbable when we meet them in books, but which are every day coming to light, was related not long ago by the Neue Wiener Tagblatt. Two gentlemen, one an American and the other a Viennese, met at an Austrian watering-place, and after a short but delightful acquaintance, the Viennese discovered that the American, who had given his name as H—, was a banker.

"Are you, then, the head of the house of H— in New York?" he asked, in surprise and interest.

"I am."

"How very strange!"

"Why strange?" inquired Mr. H—.

"I cannot give you a very satisfactory reply without telling you a sad story," was the answer, and he went on to relate the following incident:

Two years before a charming girl who was under his guardianship had married a man who had at once set up in business on his wife's capital, and had then become bankrupt. The next step was his disappearance, and so discouraged had he been over his ruined hopes that every one believed him to have committed suicide.

Within a few months, however, his sorrowing wife had received a letter from him written from a town in one of the Western States of America.

He begged her to forgive him for leaving her, and promised to send for her as soon as fortune should once more favor him.

Letters continued to come, now from one city and now from another, until he wrote from New York, saying that he was in the banking house of H—, at a salary too small to allow him to send for her, though if industry and perseverance could advance his interests, she should not have long to wait.

"And now," said the Viennese, "do you know a clerk of yours named P—?"

"No," was the reply. "I left home months ago. But your story is so interesting that we ought, if possible, to spell out the sequel. I will cable home this minute."

"Have we clerk P— in our service?" ran the message, and next day came the answer:

"Yes."

"What salary?" ran the next message. "Is he satisfactory?"

The reply to this was a condensed certificate of character of which any clerk might be proud, with the additional information that P—'s exceptional virtues were paid for at the rate of seventy-five dollars a month.

"P— promoted," cabled Mr. H—.

"Quadruple his salary."

A day later the forlorn young wife in Vienna received a message from her husband, delightfully hinting at good fortune and urging her to come to him at once.

Mr. H— of course heard the news, and no doubt congratulated himself on his ability to play fairy godfather himself at the right moment.

Education for Farmers.

Many farmers, says an educational journal, erroneously suppose that a business training is not necessary for them, and that it is useful only for those who are to become clerks, bookkeepers, bankers, or commercial men.

There is no occupation which demands method, system and the correct application of accurate business principles more than does farming.

Those farmers who add to their knowledge of farming that of business are generally successful.

A leading farming journal says: "Bookkeeping is the groundwork to success in trade; and in no industry in life is it more necessary than to the farmer, and no farmer's son should be considered competent to manage a farm until he understands this important part of farm economy."

A farmer is a better farmer when he can transact business in a business way. Business education inculcates system, order, and method, and without which no farmer can expect to realize the full benefits of his labors.

We would urge every young farmer in this country to attend a business university at least one term and learn principles that will prove of inestimable value to him. The time has come when the farmer must step to the front. It takes a better head to manage a farm now than it did years ago. It is one thing to raise good crops, but quite another to convert them into money. Industry, brains, and good judgment will secure the former, while a good business education will suggest methods to accomplish the latter.

Sailors Fear Bridal Couples.

A gentleman who has recently returned from Europe tells of an odd superstition in vogue among the more ignorant classes of seamen. They are of the opinion that the presence of a young couple on their bridal tour aboard ship portends a violent storm. The Canadian, an Inman steamer, had a young couple aboard, and sure enough the ship was caught in a hurricane. A number of the sailors were intent upon throwing them overboard and only the courage of the captain, who opposed the mutineers with a revolver in each hand, saved the lives of those who were enjoying the first weeks of their honeymoon.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

The National Women's Alliance Incorporated.

A charter for the National Women's Alliance was filed with the Secretary of State September 24, 1891. The incorporators are the wife of Senator Fetter, the wife of Congressman Otis, the wife of Secretary J. B. French, of the State Farmers' Alliance, Mrs. Emma D. Pack, editor of the Topeka Farmer's Wife, and Mrs. Fannie McCormick, worthy forerunner of the Knights of Labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION IS TO ESTABLISH A BUREAU FOR THE BETTER EDUCATION OF WOMEN ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS AND TO DEVELOP A BETTER STATE, MENTALLY, MORALLY, AND FINANCIALLY, WITH THE FULL AND UNCONDITIONAL USE OF THE SUFFRAGE.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Fannie McCormick, president; Mrs. Emma D. Pack, secretary; and Mrs. Bina A. Otis, treasurer, with the following vice presidents:

- Mrs. M. B. Cloud, of Alabama.
- Emma Ghent Curtis, Colorado.
- Amelia Nye, California.
- Marion Todd, Illinois.
- Amelia McCann, Kentucky.
- P. A. Stafford, Missouri.
- Eva McDonald Vahls, Minnesota.
- S. E. V. Emory, Michigan.
- Elizabeth Rodgers, New Jersey.
- Anna D. Weaver, New York.
- L. D. Stillson, Arkansas.
- Allice J. Taylor, Mississippi.
- Mary M. Clardy, Texas.
- Anna L. Diers, District of Columbia.
- D. F. Pierce, Washington.
- Mary E. Lease, Kansas.
- E. M. Wardal, South Dakota.
- Eleanor Goodrich, Iowa.
- Mary L. Jeffs, Ohio.
- Marne C. Bohman, Indiana.

The FARMER'S WIFE, published at Topeka, was designated as the official organ.

The committee on constitution and by-laws report the following:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

In view of the great social, industrial and financial revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the universal demand of all classes of our American citizens for equal rights and privileges on every occasion of human life, we, the industrial women of America, declare our purposes in the formation of this organization as follows:

- 1st. To study all questions relating to the structure of human society, in the full light of modern invention, discovery and thought.
- 2d. To carry out into practical life the precepts of the golden rule.
- 3d. To recognize the full political equality of the sexes.
- 4th. To aid in carrying out the principles of co-operation in every department of human life to its fullest extent.
- 5th. To secure the utmost harmony and unity among the Sisterhood, in all sections of the country.
- 6th. To teach the principles of international arbitration and, if possible, to prevent war.
- 7th. To discover, in every way possible, the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or the habitual use of tobacco or other narcotics injurious to the human system.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Women's Alliance.

SEC. 2. The officers shall consist of a President, Secretary and Treasurer, also one Vice President from each state and territory represented, and an Executive Board of five.

SEC. 3. Officers shall be elected at the regular annual meeting in each year.

SEC. 4. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the organization.

SEC. 5. In the absence of the President, one of the Vice Presidents may preside, as the meeting may select. Each Vice President shall have charge of the work in her state until a state organization is perfected, and shall act as the general organizer of her state and report the progress of the work to the National Secretary every month.

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall keep a correct record of the proceedings of the Alliance, conduct the correspondence, keep the official seal and authentic all documents, receive all moneys and turn the same over to the Treasurer and take a receipt therefor.

SEC. 7. The Treasurer is to receipt for all moneys and pay the same out upon the order of the President, countersigned by the Secretary.

SEC. 8. The Executive Board shall have charge of the organization when the Alliance is not in session, and shall examine the books of the Secretary and Treasurer prior to the annual meeting and report the condition of the same, and shall provide for the time and place of meeting of the Alliance when not otherwise provided for.

ARTICLE II.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. A state organization shall be chartered by the National President whenever seven local organizations are formed, in compliance with the National constitution.

SEC. 2. Each community shall be organized under the direction of the State Organizer, whenever ten members are enrolled.

SEC. 3. That each community shall have a representation in the state organization of one delegate for every ten members, or fraction thereof in excess of ten, provided each organization shall be entitled to one delegate.

SEC. 4. That each state organization shall be entitled to one delegate to the National Alliance for every 100 members in the state or fraction in excess of fifty.

STATUTORY LAWS.

SECTION 1. Any woman desiring to advance the social, moral, intellectual and financial condition of her race, can become a member of this Alliance by signing this constitution and declaration of purposes, and paying the fee of 30 cents and a monthly one of 5 cents to the secretary of their local assembly.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the local organization to send to the secretary of the State organization the sum of 15 cents for each member enrolled, and 5 cents each quarter out of dues paid in by each member during the quarter.

SEC. 3. That the secretary of the State organization shall send to the secretary of the national organization the sum of 5 cents out of membership fees received during the quarter, and one-half of all dues paid into the State treasury during the quarter.

SEC. 4. That all charters shall be issued from the National Alliance. State charters shall be furnished at $5.00 and local charters at $1.00.

SEC. 5. This constitution and by-laws can be amended at any time by a majority vote of the National Women's Alliance at any regular annual meeting.

(Mrs. M. E. LEASE, Committee.)
(Mrs. B. A. OTIS, Secretary.)
(Mrs. E. M. CLARK, President.)

The incorporators are the executive board for the first year.

Mrs. FANNIE MCCORMICK, Pres.
Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, Sec'y.

Woman's Chronicle.

Published every Saturday.

MRS. KATE CUNNINGHAM, Editor.

MRS. MARY BROOKS, Associate Editor.

TERMS, $1.00 Per Year, IN ADVANCE.

Ctr. 2nd and Louisiana Sts., Little Rock, Ark.

JOHN SPEAR,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

5 AND 10 CENT GOODS.

338 Kansas Avenue, NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SILK DRESS FREE!

We will GIVEAWAY absolutely FREE of cost, an elegant black or colored SILK DRESS pattern of 16 yards to any young lady in every town in America, who will introduce among her friends "THE MODERN QUEEN," a large 16-page 61 column, illustrated magazine, one of the best published. Devoted to Fashion, Flowers, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decorations and everything pertaining to the household. Send at once 25 cents for the magazine one year on trial and a package of elegant silks to select from.

Address: THE MODERN QUEEN CO., 76-78-80 Center Street, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mention this paper.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes, Meets Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enamelled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each we will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA OF HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,600 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong vanilla tin box, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents. It will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, N. Y.

"A vast amount of trust, orderly matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cents for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manila binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive contribution, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and gives information about those things which ladies particularly wish to know, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; charming and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

SEEDS J. G. PEPPARD, 1400-1402 UNION AV., KANSAS CITY, MO.

Red, White, Alfalfa and A. Alfalfa, Clover, Timothy, Blue Grass, Orchard Grass, Red Top, Onion Sets, Tree Seeds, Cane Seed.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 Broadway, NEW YORK.

Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American.

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No advertising man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

COMPLEXION WAFFERS.

LADIES

If you desire to LOOK YOUNG and BEAUTIFUL, use AINSIE'S CHARCOAL TABLETS. They Bleach and Brighten the Complexion and Sweeten the Breath. Very popular with Society Ladies, Actresses, etc. Perfectly harmless. Per box, $1. DR. SWEENEY, Allegheny, N. Y.

1840-1893.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, always all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhea.

Twenty-five cents a bottle.

"TRUE NATIONALIST."

Progressive, Fearless and Spicy.

SUBSCRIPTION, - $1.00 PER YEAR.

Advocates the Initiative, the Referendum and the Imperative Mandate as the best means of progress on the lines of Human Liberty. Commends its principles to MEN of all political parties. Corner Weaver and Pearl Streets, New York City.

500 PARCELS OF MAIL FREE

Including Sample Books, Novels, Pictures, Magazines, etc. Send 6c. for our new 16-page Catalogue. Address us a postal card to-day.

ADDRESS US A POSTAL CARD TO-DAY

GUMBLIE ADDRESS CO., 126 S. 8th St., Phila., Pa.

HUMPHREYS' VETERINARY SPECIFICS

For Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Dogs, Hogs, AND POULTRY.

500 Page Book on Treatment of Animals and Chart Sent Free.

CURES: Fevers, Congestions, Inflammation, A.A. (Spinal Meningitis), Milk Fever, B.B. (Strains, Lameness, Rheumatism, C.C. (Distemper, Nasal Discharges, D.D. (Bots or Grubs, Worms, E.E. (Coughs, Heaves, Pneumonia, F.F. (Colic or Gripes, Bellache, G.G. (Hiccups, Hemorrhages, H.H. (Urinary and Kidney Diseases, I.I. (Eruptive Diseases, Mange, J.J. (Diseases of Digestion, Paralysis, Single Bottle (over 50 doses), .60

Stable Case, with Specifics, Manual, Veterinary Cure Oil and Medicator, .87.00

Jar Veterinary Cure Oil, 1.00

Sold by Druggists or sent prepaid anywhere and in any quantity on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., New York.

FAMILY LEDGER

MODERN STORIES OF WESTERN LIFE AND ADVENTURE

10 WEEKS FOR 10 CENTS

THE GREAT WESTERN FAMILY STORY PAPER

LARGEST YET SIMILAR IN STYLE TO THE 1300-A-YEAR NEW YORK STORY PAPER

Address: FAMILY LEDGER, STOCKTON, CALIF.

OFFER: SEND ONLY WHEN MENTIONED IN THIS PUBLICATION

EVERY Family Student School Library

S-H-O-U-L-D Own a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

THE INTERNATIONAL NEW FROM COVER TO COVER, IS THE ONE TO BUY.

SUCCESSOR OF THE UNABRIDGED.

Ten years spent in revising, 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended.

Sold by all Booksellers.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U.S.A.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions.

Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and full particulars.

A MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Fast Road, Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, AND PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, APRIL, 1893.

VOL. 11, NO. 9.

Written for the FARMER'S WIFE.
CLING TO VIRTUE.
(An original poem composed by Miss Gladie, a little reform worker only thirteen years old.)

In passing down life's rugged path,
And meeting with trials of earth,
Cling, cling to virtue! all who hath
A true knowledge of its worth,
May know that one whose life is true
Would not change wealth for that virtue,
Which raises in the soul of man
A pure, divine, a noble plan.

Ah, yes, true principle! the world
Shall honor through eternity
This banner which is e'er unfurled,
And say to it, I cling to thee.

For 'tis the wealth of man, his goat;
Oh, sons and daughters of this earth,
Aid us in teaching e'en one soul
To know of virtue and its worth.

So may we progress, onward climb,
Until all souls shall be divine,
And we shall seek a higher aim
Than earthly riches, earthly gain.

And we may know where'er we go,
That God is with us here below,
And guiding us in daily walks,
Inspiring us in all our talks.

So shall we ever happy be
In knowing we are from sin free,
And growing in our hearts the tree
Of virtue; we shall cling to thee.

LITTLE GLADDIE.
Deatur, Mich.

TO SUB-ALLIANCES.
Mrs. M. C. Clark, Vice President of the Kansas State F. A. & I. U., gives a timely warning to the sub-Alliance. She advises them to be more diligent. The work of the Alliance only just begun.

DEAR BROTHERS AND SISTERS—I wish first of all to state I am always happy to meet with you in your place of meetings. The little school houses of Kansas are becoming historic through the alliance. They have been and must continue to be the beacon light to guide our footsteps on to the paths of knowledge; it is in our school houses that the farmers gather to study and discuss questions of importance, and to devise ways and means to better our conditions. We have long been toilers, but not many of us students. We have produced and others have enjoyed the fruits of our labor. From the products of our labor have sprung up school houses and colleges all over the land. While the favored ones' children have been receiving the college education, our children have had to be content with the district school, and are inferior in education. We slept too long, so long that we are fearful our rights are trampled under foot and our once proud boast of free Americans are things of the past. But at last we are awake, and we are asking each other how and why these things can be. Is this not a government of, for and by the people? Yes, but as I told you, you have been doing the work while the other fellow has been profiting by that work. It is needless for me to elaborate on this theme; enough for me to say is, that I think we all can acknowledge that it pays to do our own thinking and studying.

At our last State Alliance the subject of rebuilding our sub-alliances received much earnest thought and was freely discussed, and all seemed to think that every subject of a partisan nature must be eliminated from our meetings, and that if we would make our financial and business interests successful, we must co-operate. The necessity is apparent.

I often wonder why the farmers cannot see (it is purely a business feature) that by neglecting these meetings they sustain a loss. All other classes organize to protect their interests, and well they know the necessity for earnest, active, faithful membership. Can it be that the farmers feel so secure of their rights that they do not feel the need for keeping up this organization? Ah, may we not become weary of well doing too soon. The feeling of fraternity and brotherly love that is ours through our order, has made itself felt, and we feel we are a mighty factor in this land. In our hands and by our power must the peace and perpetuity of this government exist, and do you think for one moment this can be accomplished by neglecting the task we have undertaken? The alliance is an order that we can look upon with pride. We boast of its power, of its pure motives, its unselfishness, its faithfulness, the uplifting and refining influences we can all see. The social and educational features can never be fully estimated. We build not for today alone, nor all for self, but for all time and for future generations. The knowledge we possess we may share with others, and they in turn impart to others, and so the good work goes on, thus our children's children may be the inheritors of that which cannot be wrested from them. I repeat, we are builders, and while we build let us see to it we do our work well, make the foundation of our children's character pure and unselfish, that the structure of our government may be built upon a foundation deep and strong, for it will be founded upon the eternal rocks of justice, truth and liberty.

In looking over the past we view with sadness our mistake. We have been too trusting. We have been sleeping while thus engaged. Shrewd business men have been wide awake, looking after our affairs, to our utter ruin. But perhaps, brother and sister, if we arouse from our lethargy we may yet save our country and home. Our alliances were created that we might become educated on all subjects that can possibly be of interest to us—subjects of an economical nature—co-operation, transportation, insurance, establish exchanges, the money question, labor exchange, all these subjects and many more of an interesting character are and should be thoroughly discussed, not in a hasty, violent manner, but earnestly, carefully and charitably. It will be almost impossible to talk on some of the subjects, especially those that are of an economic nature, without touching on politics, but in doing so refrain from remarks of a personal or partisan character. Get out of every meeting all the good you can, be attentive to the order of exercises and discussions, try to follow the thoughts as expressed, and then form your conclusions. Do not allow prejudice to blind you to facts. I know facts are not always pleasant to contemplate, but it is best to be candid with others and ourselves. Each member should consider it a duty to take part in the exercises. It may be to read, to discuss or sing; all are essential to success. I know many think that they cannot do this, but duty makes it obligatory upon all to try to make each meeting a little better than the last. It was duty that made that grand and noble man, Abraham Lincoln; broke the shackles from off human limbs, and so we should consider it a sacred duty to be active, earnest useful members of this, the grandest order the world ever knew, having for its object the uplifting and refining influence of God's children. Do not make this sad mistake and say, as I heard a Brother say, "the alliance has done its work." Ah, no. Accomplished its mission when little ones go hungry to bed; when little bodies are famishing with cold and hunger; when men and women are bowed down with weary heart-aches, and when doubt and despair, destitution and starvation are their only portion; when from these and other causes men are forced to take up the life of a tramp, forced by so doing to the cruel sneers and ridicule of those who ought to be more compassionate, but whose hearts are hardened and refuse to help their unfortunate fellow-men? I say forced to become tramps to try to get employment, even begging for work that he may provide for those who are dear to him. Ah, when stern necessity separates men from their loved ones and they know not how or when they may meet again, it makes men almost doubt of the goodness of God. They feel that every man's hand is raised against them, and that in all this broad land they have not where to lay their heads.

When I hear men say the alliance amounts to nothing now it has accomplished its mission, I say, not so. Not yet have we accomplished the grand work we have undertaken, nor will it be so until peace and prosperity throw their glad and joyous beams upon and over this fair land of our own beloved country, America. Did I say ours? Perhaps I may be a very little, just a little bit mistaken when I make that remark.

Just at present, it might well seem as though a few thousand people owned this country; instead of the many millions. But the time is not far distant, if we do our duty, when brains not money will command the respect it deserves. Just so long as we bow to money, money will dictate to us. Just so long as we cringe and fawn, just so long will the iron heel of despotism grind us down. Our little band of ten stood firm on the silver question, and knocked out the gold bugs, for the battle for right and justice has begun, and on you, Bro., and on every laboring man depends our hope of success. There is anguish and dread in thousands of brave hearts today. Men look in each others faces and talk of the trouble brewing, and wonder how it will all end, I pray not by the sword and bullet, but by reason and the ballot. Men are governed by reason. Reasonable men love peace and harmony, they are willing to be governed by law. They should be perfectly willing to hear both sides of the story, and accord to others the same privileges that they enjoy. They will stand for the right against wrong. They love justice, hate oppression. They are willing to trust to the ballot rather than the bullet. My friends, this is the age of thinking and studying, we dare not remain idle or indifferent, we must keep posted on all national affairs, we must be watchful, vigilant, earnest, active workers, in the alliance work, for this is the farmer's school. I notice an article in a Texas paper stating that they are informed that there is a movement on foot to break up the Alliance, and caution the Brotherhood to be very careful and watchful. If they intend to preserve the non-partisan principles of the organization they must be up and doing. Bro. Loucks, president of the supreme council, asserts that there is a movement on foot to divide the Alliance. If this should be true, and the Bro. states that it is true, why, then, it surely demands fidelity and watchfulness on the part of the membership. Keep in the middle of the road, and all will be right. I do not think we can be too particular in doing our duty, what if you personally, do not feel the crushing weight of the hard times, try and remember that there are thousands who do, and you ought to do all you can looking to their relief. These questions that are prominent today before the people, are questions that are of vital interest to us, as a people and as a nation, it behooves us to watch the actions of the members of congress, and see if they are fulfilling their pledges. We feel sure of our little band for we have tried them, and know they can be depended upon. We know they have our interest at heart and will do what they can. The actions of men here in our own state, this past winter, proves conclusively that the people must work and never rest until right shall triumph.

REFORM BY POLITICS.
AN ESSAY READ BEFORE THE SHAWNEE CO. ALLIANCE APRIL 7TH 1893, BY MRS. L. M. FURBECK, AND ORDERED PRINTED IN THE TOPEKA POPULIST.

BROTHERS AND SISTERS: It has come to be acknowledged even by our own people, and by some of our zealous workers, that we must eschew politics or leave it out of public work; well, so let it be! But let me urge you brothers and sisters that you never cease from this time on to enquire, and study into the questions of right and wrong, the true complements of politics. It rests with men and women, not with officers or corporations whether our government is such as to foster the highest growth of character, which constitutes the true wealth of a nation. How eminently highest and greatest is the nation which can boast that hers is an educated, high-minded honest people, lead by the geniuses of the science of philanthropy, equity and justice, rather than the science of trickery and cunning, which has been cultivated until it stands first in the high arts of our political economy. I say it rests with men and women not with societies, for there the responsibilities are delegated to committees. Societies and organizations are good and it augurs well that society is organizing; it shows that men and women are beginning to awaken to a sense of their duty as well as their needs.

But as yet this grand organizing movement is largely the outgrowth of a stinging conscience, the effort of humanity to throw off responsibility rather than bear it nobly on to fruition.

Do you disagree with me? Take our own order which all concede to be the greatest educational order the world has ever seen in that line. Many came into its ranks saying: "I had made up my mind that something was wrong, and when a society should be formed for the betterment of existing conditions, I would give it the aid of my name and support as a member." They had great faith in the organization. But how can the body work but by its members? Committees must be appointed, they are composed of men and women who often find the duties unpleasant and tiresome, and too many object to committee work. For instance, our com. on program often finds it hard to get willing workers on that line, each one would rather listen to someone else.

Our Lecturer may tell us, and truly, that if we would profit by our educational order, we must employ the means of learning, which is study, by personal and continued application; and so many drop out of the work when they find that joining themselves together and paying their dues in an organization does not constitute a reform, but only opens a field of hard work, and unrequited labor, for in reforms the most faithful worker is seldom the one to receive the benefit. This is natural, for atoms if they reach a high plain must be carried there by a wave and the creator of a wave cannot ride thereon, he must be and stay at the bottom, for the wave depends on his constancy and faithfulness to the cause.

Thus the world has many martyrs whose stories have never been written but on the memory of the great leader of all reform.

In a back number of the Farmer's Wife I read a trite saying, "This life will mean more when we realize that it is the pathway to the next." Just now much is being said on the subject of road building. I believe all such bodies as this are occupied in path-finding and road building, seeking the way out and building a for generations to follow.

And I for one hope that our work will be such as not to betray them. We find bogs and pit-falls for the unwary. One horrible pit that has swallowed up the hope of many a home and fortune may be marked in glaring letters to be read by all future assemblies of congress, and to be heeded by them, if they would avoid destruction on the rock of public sentiment.

This "pit" was demonteization, and many who are wallowing in the despair caused by this act are so blind as not to know where they are at or what is the cause of their trouble.

Oh, if we have any faith left or heart for prayer let us never give up our work, though it may be but as the dropping of water on stone, which if constant tells in the end, until it shall culminate in honest legislation for the masses.

Kansas Suffrage Bill Passed and Is Signed By the Governor.

THE BILL.
The State of Kansas hereby submits to the qualified electors of the State for their approval, or rejection, namely: That section one, article five, of the constitution of the State of Kansas, be amended so that the same shall read as follows: Section 1. Every person of the age of 21 years and upwards belonging to the following classes, who shall have resided in Kansas six months next preceding any election, and in a township or ward in which she or he offers to vote at least thirty days next preceding such election, shall be deemed a qualified elector: 1st, citizens of the United States; 2d, persons of foreign birth who have resided in this State one year after they have declared their intentions to become citizens of the United States, conformable to the laws of the United States on the subject of naturalization.

This proposition shall be submitted to the electors of this State at the general election of the representatives to the legislature in the year 1894, for their approval, or rejection; those voting in favor of this proposition shall have written or printed on their ballots, "For the suffrage amendment to the constitution;" those voting against the said proposition shall have written or printed on their ballots, "Against the suffrage amendment to the constitution;" said ballots shall be received and a vote taken, counted, canvassed and returns made thereof, in the same manner and in all respects as provided for by law, as in the case of election of representatives to the legislature.

THE GREAT FIGHT.
Thus it will be seen that the great fight in Kansas for the next eighteen months will be that of equal suffrage. The FARMER'S WIFE will be the great factor in this fight. Every true equal suffrage man or woman in every State should encourage and help us in this battle.

OUR CLUB RATES.
Club of fifteen - - $5 00
Club of ten - - - 3 50
Club of five - - - 2 00
Single sub. - - - 50
Try and send us a club. Have you not got fifteen, ten, or even five friends you can send it to and thus help the cause along? Brothers and sisters, let us hear from you. EMMA D. PACK, Editor, Topeka, Kansas.

Jenness Miller Illustrated Monthly For April.
The April issue of Jenness Miller Illustrated Monthly offers a fine feast of good reading. Mrs. Miller discusses many interesting topics in her department. There are some good stories, poems, fashion news and gossip, finely illustrated, and also a story of a wonderful Hindoo woman. There is plenty of good reading on all topics of the day, and many fine illustrations. Published at 927 Broadway, New York. Subscription price, $1.00 a year.
JENNESS MILLER CO., 927 Broadway, New York City.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

THOUGHTS FOR WOMEN OLD AND YOUNG.

What Different Colors in Hair Indicate to an Observer—Bridal Blushes and What Causes Them—Girls and Money—Notes on the Fashions.

Character in Hair.
DID YOU ever know a woman's character can be read by her hair? Palmistry having gone out of date among fashionable people, the unveiling of the disposition may be done by a close examination of my lady's locks. If her hair shows much care, being glossy, well-kept and every pin in its place, you may rely upon it that she is a lady, born and bred, whether her own or the deft fingers of a maid arrange it. Gloss only comes from constant attention, and the woman of innate refinement is the one who lingers over her toilet, revels in baths and adores shampoos. Therefore, sign number one reads truthfully. Coarse hair shows humble birth. Brown hair as a rule, if of the peculiarly fine character that makes it seem very thin, will indicate a good disposition. Hair that splits in the ends is a representation of the owners tendency to quarrel and have bickerings and differences on all occasions. Black, glossy hair shows treachery; blonde, fluffy hair, weakness and vanity, and red hair temper but truthfulness. The sort of hair known as drab, the kind so hard to match, and awfully high-priced when one wants a false bang, reads thus—highly sensitive and touchy. Either dye your locks or expect to be read of all men, for though hands sometimes lie, hair never does.

Crinoline.
The main question now being agitated as a fashion, and one which greatly influences the coming modes, says the Domestic Monthly, is that the coming in or the keeping out of crinoline. There is actually so much stir as to have created what may be called the crinoline and anti-crinoline parties. When one thinks of the women of taste, prominent dressmakers and ladies' tailors, who have vowed that crinoline shall not return, the opposite faction seems to have but a poor chance of success. It must be admitted, the objections to crinoline are many, and were fully recognized when to be without a hoop-skirt or a crinoline petticoat argued the incompleteness of an outfit. But the tendency abroad is already indicated by the adoption of a small short bustle and the prospect tends much more toward the realization of the return of inflated skirts than is the case with us. Many cry out about the absurd appearance presented by a be-hooped and be-crinolined woman when getting into or coming out of a carriage, or even a car, while others talk of the "lightness" and the "coolness" of this fashion and so on. One thing, however, is certain. If the final conclusion of those who create the modes should be in favor of inflated skirts, there will be that abject following which proves that fashion sways a scepter having the power to obtain submission whenever it is extended in the direction of her willing subjects. It does not matter how inartistic may be the result; obedience follows her behest.

Bridal Blushes.
When you see in the paper a nice little story about blushing brides, don't think the blushes are always caused by the emotions of the occasion. I thought so once, but I discovered a secret the other evening at a wedding that is really too good to keep. The wedding party was in the vestibule of the church awaiting the strains of the wedding march, when they should advance to the altar. Then it was that the bride, anxious about her hair, her veil or her train, was very pale, says the Boston News. Her maid of honor noticed this, and playfully, as I thought, pinched the fair one's cheek. But what seemed a careless action was evidently premeditated, for no sooner did the bride's cheeks show a tinge of pink than the maid of honor proceeded to manipulate her own fair features, and her action was imitated by all the bridesmaids. Then the organist played and the party proceeded to the altar.

Don't Forget the Mothers.
The Boston Journal rather admires the frankness of the Barnstable woman who sends a communication to the Patriot of that town relative to the monument which it is proposed to raise there in honor of the Pilgrim fathers. She writes: "I sincerely hope that not a woman on Cape Cod will give a dollar for any monument which does not fully, openly, and cordially recognize the Pilgrim mothers as joint sharers in the fame of the Pilgrim fathers." If that spirit prevails to any extent among the women of the cape, it may be pretty safely set down that the Pilgrim mothers will get their full meed of recognition.

The Girl Who Is Liked.
The girl who doesn't think every other pretty one "makes up horribly."
The girl who doesn't pinch her feet into shoes a size and a half too small for her.
The girl who is not in the least ashamed of a healthy appetite.
The girl who doesn't want to stop and stare into every other shop window she passes.
The girl who will sing under a trifle less than three-quarters of an hour's persuasion.
The girl who can receive a little polite attention from a man without at once jumping to the conclusion that he is in love with her.
The girl who doesn't tight lace.
The girl who prefers a cookery book to a penny novelette.
The girl who can purchase a packet of pins and a yard of calico without turning over everything in the shop.—London Half Holiday.

Girls and Money.
Would it not be wise if some exercise in the mysteries of money were added to the curriculum of every girl's studies? A boy finds it all out by actual contact with the public as soon as he is out and a part of it; but a girl may become a mature woman, shrinking then through the habit of long protection, and be thrown on the mercies of the world with her money to fall the prey to the first cheat and cozen. She is taught at school the spectra of the stars, and the map of Mars; what pity that she should not be instructed in the workings of life on the planet where she lives!—Harper's Bazar.

What Women May Do.
Remembering that men not yet gray have seen the colleges opened to women, with nearly all the professions beyond those of schoolmarm, seamstress, and saleslady, is it not rather too early to determine finally what are their meagre abilities and large limitations? Give them a chance to get used to their new and partial enfranchisement, to practice their untried powers awhile, to throw off the long burden of contempt, disparagement, and repression; and then—perhaps within a century or two—they will show us what they can or cannot do.

Glimpses of Fashion.
Long skirts on the street are a thing of the past.

Bands of narrow velvet, with rosette bows, trim the skirts of semi-dress and evening costumes.

The vogue of wearing bodices contrasting in color and material with the skirt has a constantly increasing popularity.

New cushions and sachet bags are made in saddlebag fashion and are of plush, silk, or brocade. They are tied together with ribbons with large bows.

For young women the fashionable silks for evening wear are extremely delicate in coloring, pink and heliotrope in their palest tones seeming to predominate.

Bands of velvet are worn around the neck inside the collar of the gown. These are of any color to suit the dress, and are fastened with fanciful stick pins.

The return of the shawl is prophesied. A suggestion of it has appeared in long scarfs of lace or of velvet, that encircle the shoulders and hang to the foot of the gown.

Small girls wear party dresses, with slips of silk covered with crepe de chine or chiffon. Platings of lace around the skirt, over the shoulder and as a finisher for the sleeves, are a favorite trimming.

The three-cornered hat is in high favor, as are also all kinds of odd shapes. Those who have soft felt hats may, with confidence, crush them into any shape that is becoming, and be quiet sure that they are wearing fashionable headgear.

Jet is popular and much used on black silks. Jet belts also enrich black silks. They are very narrow or else fancifully wide and shaped to the figure. Fine jet is used to embroider silk and velvet. Long fringes of jet are in vogue for waists. They are known in Paris as "jet rain."

Engraved Eggs.

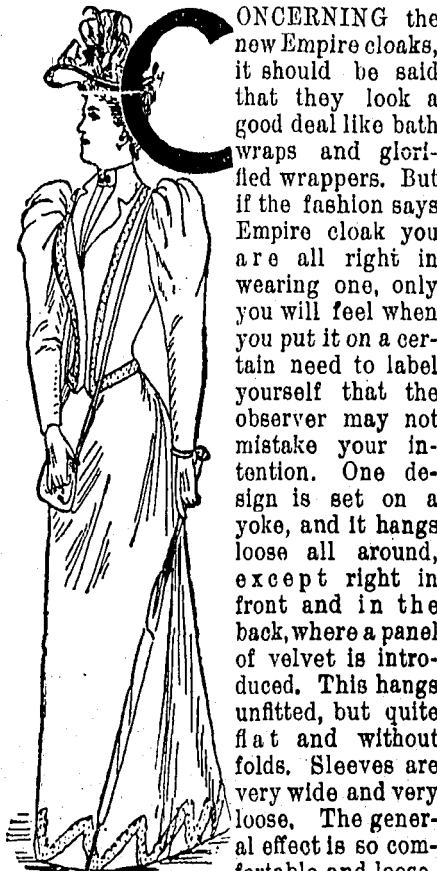

The engraved eggs that are exposed for sale are very puzzling to those who do not know how easily the engraving is done. The writing is done on the shell with wax of tallow, and then the egg is soaked in a weak dilution of some acid; even vinegar will answer the purpose. The shell is eaten away by the acid wherever not protected by the wax, and the writing appears in bold relief. The art was discovered in England about two hundred years ago, and the inventor came near being burned for sorcery, as he tried to pass off some of the inscriptions for prophecies.

MODES FOR THE MONTH.

SOME LATE NEW YORK FASHION IDEAS.

If Fashion Says to Wear a Certain Style Garment You Are Justified in Doing So, Even Though It Does Look Hideous—Even the Dreadful Whisper Chignon Is Heard.

Gossip from Gotham.
New York correspondence:

CONCERNING the new Empire cloaks, it should be said that they look a good deal like bath wraps and glorified wrappers. But if the fashion says Empire cloak you are all right in wearing one, only you will feel when you put it on a certain need to label yourself that the observer may not mistake your intention. One design is set on a yoke, and it hangs loose all around, except right in front and in the back, where a panel of velvet is introduced. This hangs unfitted, but quite flat and without folds. Sleeves are very wide and very loose. The general effect is so comfortable and loose-looking that one wonders if there is a dress beneath after all.

A loose Empire mantle of another sort is portrayed at the left in the first illustration. It is made of black diagonal and black bengaline, and is lined with black silk, showing a design in tiny red flowerets. At the bottom the mantle is wide and flaring, but at the top it is pleated to a square yoke. The yoke has a linen lining to stiffen it. The leg-of-mutton sleeve is made of bengaline and is very full at the top. There is a standing collar, which is partially hidden by a ruffling of black ribbon that continues down the front in two long ends. The yoke is edged with black silk cord passementerie about three inches wide. The garment can be made tight-fitting in the back if desired by a ribbon sewed to the fabric at the waist line and tied with a bow in front.

BECOMING OUTDOOR WEAR.

The costume of the companion figure has a wide, flaring sailor collar, which lends a dashing, youthful air. Heavy dark-blue chevrot and dark-blue braid in widths from one to two inches, are respectively the material and trimming. The skirt is in the usual bell form. At the waist the chevrot is draped loosely over the tight lining to form a blouse. The front shows a plastron, made separately and lined with satin; it is sewed to the collar and to the front underneath the sailor collar, and there hooks over. The sleeve is the old-fashioned full blouse sleeve with a narrow cuff. A large, flaring straw hat, trimmed with ribbon bows and wings, is worn with it. The pointed crown survives curiously in this season's hats. It can be seen carried out in a pagoda effect of jeweled wires that rise gloriously in curved and glittering lines over where the crown of the hat is supposed to be. Through the spaces the hair shows. The brim of such a hat may be either solid, or wired lace, or mere jeweled wire. Most often the brim is solid, and when of green felt, edged with a rampant row of grasses, the pagoda rising from the center, it has the general effect of a Chinese landscape, architecture, vegetation, and all. Straight brims are seldom seen in big hats. The brim is very wide, but it is flared straight up, and this often right in front. The chip used is so fine and soft that on either side of the flare the brim droops gracefully, and the upright effect does not give awkwardness. A rich rose seems to hold the brim up, and is half crushed under the edge of the hat. Quite as if it were worn in the hair, and not a part of the hat.

ODD SLEEVES AND VEST EFFECT.

Two very stylish spring costumes are the subjects of the next sketch. One is of tan-colored woolen suiting, trimmed with dark-brown velvet and satin ribbon in different widths, and has the skirt of the fashionable form which flares from hip to hem, and a cape made separately; the other is of coffee-brown diagonal cloth, and consists of skirt, basque, and jacket, the latter having a shawl collar of darker velvet. The sleeve of the costume is entirely new. It is cut very full at the top and bottom, and the space between wrist and about half of the lower arm is tucked lengthwise. These tucks must be so close and deep that the lower part of the sleeve can be closed with hooks and eyes which will prevent it from falling over the hand.

The odd, vest-like garniture of the other is made of light-colored, figured silk, and brightens the gown effectively. The skirt is untrimmed so as to conform to the tailor-made appearance of the costume. The jacket is open, and its revers are of the diagonal, about five inches wide at the top but only one and a half inches at the bottom. The jacket flares somewhat at the bottom, and the back is laid in a pleat from the waist down.

MILD AND VENTURESOME.

The puffs made to sleeves a little while ago seem quite inadequate now, and the effect can be added to in many ways. A ruffle of color and material contrasting with the rest of the dress, can be stiffened and put on like an epaulet. In case of a plain dark gown, these shoulder ruffles may be the only touch of color. They may be made of the material doubled, or may be lined with silk or satin either to match or contrast. Another way is to make a puff that originally came to the elbow, push up to just a shoulder puff, thus getting the full value of all the stuff. Make new lower sleeves, and these may match or contrast according to your cloth.

To look at her you wouldn't think it, but this gentle-looking young woman has defied legislatures and anti-crinoline leagues and permitted her dressmaker to line her skirt with hair cloth. In a few months she will pretend to wonder how she ever endured those flimsy skirts. Her costume can be reproduced in any desired material, but care should be taken to have the bands of embroidery and feather trimming a few shades darker than the dress. The blouse is cut very full and closes at the shoulder and under the arm. A wide, embroidered belt finishes the waist, and the front of the blouse has three rows of like embroidery. The sleeve is tight and has a large puff at the shoulder.

IN LARGE CHECKS.

The rage for plaids of two seasons ago has subsided in a large degree and plaids are now mostly worn in silk for waists with plain skirts, but occasional handsome costumes are seen composed of plaid throughout, and the squares are invariably large. A correct example is here given. It is very light tan-colored cloth plaided in large squares by tiny stripes of pale-blue and tan, somewhat darker than the ground color. Hercules braid forms the sole trimming of the gown and is a light tan. It runs around the bottom and down the front. The fronts are a trifle biased at the outer edge and the second deeper dart is altogether on the bias; this is rendered necessary by the large plaid in order to make a more slender waist. In joining the seams of the basque the greatest care must be paid to the evenness of the squares. The sleeves are leg-of-mutton and hook on the outer seam near the wrist. The skirt is three and a quarter yards wide. The initial picture shows another pretty model for street wear. It would look well made up in Bedford cord and trimmed with braid.

Copyright, 1893.

A LOAD of sorrow doesn't wear one so much as a swarm of annoyances.

THE EMPIRE HAT.

New-Style Hat and Old-Style Streamer Make a Pleasing Combination.

A new style of hat with an old style of streamer has come into fashion, and it must be conceded that the velvet streamer and Empire hat harmonize. The Empire hat, shown in our illustration, is made of yellow Etruscan straw, with the crown and edge of black chip. The inside of the flaring brim is covered with black straw lace, which shows a suggestion of yellow beneath. The edge of this brim is finished with yellow Etruscan straw in a fancy pattern. Shaded roses in ombre tints nestle against the brim and rest their petals on the hair. Toward the front is a large Alsatian bow of many loops, composed of wide ombre ribbon, which reveals blended shades of old rose, black, cream and dull blue.

THE EMPIRE HAT.

Above the loops of ribbon is a wavy coronet of black ostrich tips. The black velvet streamer starts from beneath the petals of a rose at the left side. It hangs gracefully and is caught on the dress with another rose.

Jocularities of Speech.

How tiresome are these would-be funny folk who never dance, but "trip the light fantastic," who seem to find it impossible to speak of an unmarried man except as "a gay bachelor," with whom the sea is always "the briny," or the "herring pond," and a horse "a fiery steed," who eternally talk about "Sunday-go-to-meeting" clothes, and who have such phrases as "no extra charge," "the noxious weed," "the pipe of peace," and "braving the element," forever on their lips! It is difficult to say whether these cant phrases—that is a perfectly proper description of them—are more odious when used consciously or unconsciously—that is, by people who believe them to be funny and intend that their hearers should consider them funny, or by those who have merely caught them up and repeat them like parrots, and without any intention, good or bad. In our own opinion, the use of common jocularities is most offensive in those who think of them as wit, and expect to be applauded after each offense. We feel that those who try to force a laugh out of such expressions as "my downy couch," or "committing matrimony," and who squirm into a smile as they ask if "there isn't room for one more," or who speak of their "great heads" or "eagle eyes," deserve to be shot at sight.

Always Raining.

It is a curious fact that a cloud is always raining. Even in summer, when the cloud over our head is white, the drops are falling from it. But they are very small, and evaporate before they reach the earth. In evaporating they pass from the cloud-particulate stage; from saturation to simple condensation, or the dry dust particles on which the condensation takes place may be perfectly dry. It is a general truth that when a cloud is formed it begins to rain. The minute particles of water come down in millions. The distance they fall depends on their size. If the air the cloud rests on is dry and warm they do not get far. If it is chilly they collect in masses and form drops of rain that reach the earth.

Substantial Rewards.

Physical strength is highly rated in Switzerland. In several cantons the custom still prevails of holding wrestling matches. The champions taking part in these athletic sports belong to the most diverse ranks in the social scale. Thus, at a recent festival at Grenchen, a little town in the canton of Soleure, a wealthy property owner and his tenant, a carpenter, stepped into the arena to wrestle according to the rules of the art. There were to be four rounds, or "falls": the stake for each "fall" was one quarter's rent. After the carpenter had thrown his landlord four times the victor's prize was awarded to him, and he found himself entitled to live in his house rent free for a whole year.

A Ghastly Relic.

A relic of one of the most extraordinary surgical cases ever heard of is preserved in the military hospital at Plymouth, England. This is the heart of a soldier who died in that hospital on Jan. 30, 1809, sixteen days after he had been shot through the heart.

JOHN MARTIN.

The Recently Elected United States Senator from Kansas.

Owing to the overthrow of the Republicans in Kansas in the recent election through an amalgamation of the Populists and Democrats in that State, more than usual interest attaches to the gentleman whom the Kansas Legislature has elected to fill out the unexpired term of Mr. Plumb in the United States Senate—John Martin.

Mr. Martin is a native of Tennessee and is 59 years old. His father died when the subject of our sketch was only 15 years of age, and left him the main support of his mother and six younger children. His education was received in the common schools, aside from that which he gained by hard study at night while working as a clerk. At the age of 22 he removed to what is now Shawnee County, Kansas. The same year he served as Assistant Clerk of the first House of Representatives organized in the Territory. He also served as County Clerk and Register of Deeds in 1855, '56 and '57. In '56 he was admitted to the bar and two years later was elected County Attorney. After holding other offices he removed to Topeka in 1861 and has resided there ever since. In 1873 he was elected to the Legislature, succeeding himself in '74. In 1876 he ran for Governor, but was defeated, though running about 10,000 votes ahead of his ticket. In 1880 he was chairman of the delegation to the National Democratic Convention, and supported Gen. Hancock.

JOHN MARTIN, OF TOPEKA.

In 1882 he declined the nomination for Governor, but was elected Judge of the Third Judicial District by 4,500 majority in the face of a natural Republican majority of 5,000. In 1886 he ran for Congress, but the overwhelming Republican majority was too much for him. In 1888 he ran 5,000 votes ahead of his ticket for Governor, but was defeated. During the recent campaign he was largely instrumental in bringing about the amalgamation of the Populists and Democrats and taking the State from the Republican column.

The Domestic Catechism.

The other day a thin, tired-looking man entered the office of a printing house, and, approaching the proprietor, said:

"I want to have a list printed. Suppose you write it down as I tell you."

The proprietor made ready, and the man said: "Yes, I'm sure I locked the front door. Have you got that?"

"Yes; but I don't understand."

"Never mind; don't interrupt me till I have finished. Are you ready?"

"Yes."

"I turned out the light in the bathroom."

"All right; I've got it."

"The kitchen windows are fastened."

"Yes."

"The dog is in the cellar."

"Yes."

"The servants are all in."

"Yes."

"The stable door is locked."

"Yes."

"The kitten is out of doors."

"Yes."

"I turned off the draughts of the range."

"Yes."

"No, I do not smell smoke."

"Yes."

"No, the water is not running in the bath-room."

"Yes."

"I do not think I hear anyone trying to get into the house."

"Yes."

"No, that is not our dog barking; it's the one next door."

"Yes."

"It is not necessary to go down and see if the cellar door is fastened. I know it is."

"Yes."

"That is nobody—it is only the wind rattling the shutters."

"Yes."

"Well, I think that's about all. You see, my wife asks me certain questions every night just as I am getting into bed, and if I had a printed list I could show to her it would save lots of trouble. Besides that, it injures my lungs to answer them. Have the lists printed as soon as possible, please."

His Early Life.

So far, research has failed to reveal just how Shakespeare's youth was spent. Whether, after leaving the grammar school, he went for any time to college, as many sons of such fathers then did, and merely went a begging in vacation time; whether he passed his hours with books and solitary walks in woods, or riding away over the breezy hills surrounding his home, on his father's business selling wool, or buying sheep and oxen. Whether he superintended the leather-dressing, or looked after the workmen generally as foreman, who can say? Conjectures are numerous enough, and some of them are curious enough. Some suppose he became a clerk to one of the seven lawyers who lived in the old town; others that he was assistant master at the grammar school, as, indeed, he may have been; others again believe that he was a butcher, and made skewers and spouted poetry in—of all places on earth—the slaughter-house! Blades, the printer, concluded that he was a printer, because he used such words as "printing kisses," and "prints of hoofs," a literal man, Blades. Physicians have claimed him as one of themselves, because he knew so much that they are proud to know. Hugh Miller, who had once been a stone mason, traced out reasons in his plays for believing that "our pleasant Willy" was also one. Botanists have given reasons for their belief in him as a botanist, and gardeners theirs for assuring us that he must have been a gardener, as in a certain amateur fashion he probably was. Thousands have conjectured, as thousands will conjecture in a thousand other ways, and still know exactly what we know positively, and that is nothing.

Swimming in Salt Lake.

The experience was not altogether a pleasant one. Having waded out far enough to do so, I scaled a boulder and dived. As it is my custom to open my eyes under water, I did so as soon as I was fairly immersed. In an instant it seemed as if vitriol had been poured into them. Springing to an upright position as soon as possible, I tried to get the salt out of them, but the more I rubbed the more it seemed to get in. Nature relieved the smart after a while by pouring through the tear ducts enough of milder solution of salt to clear the irritated cornea of the fluid, and I took pains not to let the water into my eyes again. After that the bath was more enjoyable. There was a singular sensation of lightness, and it was easy to float; yet a bather who is not a swimmer will fare as badly here as anywhere, for the head, being heavier than the lower extremities, has a tendency to sink, unless one has the skill to keep it above the surface. On emerging from the lake I found that every inch of my skin sparkled with salt crystals, which were sharp enough to create discomfort and to suggest an undue intimacy with thistles. My hair was full of them, and they even adhered to my clothing, so that a vigorous shaking of raiment and a fresh-water bath were in order on reaching my hotel. When I told the people in town of my swim and the manner of it I was laughed at and informed that it was not the correct thing to swim, except at a bathing pavilion, where one has fresh water to shower away the salt.

Codfish Mining in Labrador.

An old sailor to the Arctic regions has been telling how he really misses cold weather this way: "Tain't the kind of air I'm used ter," he said. "I don't believe I'll ever get what I want this side of Labrador. You don't have to fish for cod down to the Labrador. You just gets a pick and shovel and mines 'em; just mines 'em out of the icebergs. They're frozen in fast. Some of 'em have been there for 1,000,000 years, more or less. They got caught up some time and just froze in."

"A whaling man 't knows his business can tell offhand where h'd strike a paying lead. He lands a crew on a berg, and they cut a level piece to stand on, and then just open galleries into the ice. You find the cod in seams like coal. I never worked in a coal pit, but I've had the thing explained to me, and it's about the same. The cods were swimming around, and a layer of them got frozen."

"Then would come a layer of plain ice underneath, without any trimmings, and afterward another layer of cod. It's colder work than fishing, cod mining is, but the returns are quicker. There are mines down to the Labrador that have been worked for years and years, and still they have never run out. The Yaks—them's the Eskimos—know where the best cod mines are, and they won't tell, but the whalers know a thing or two. I'm a whaler myself."

Two Puzzles.

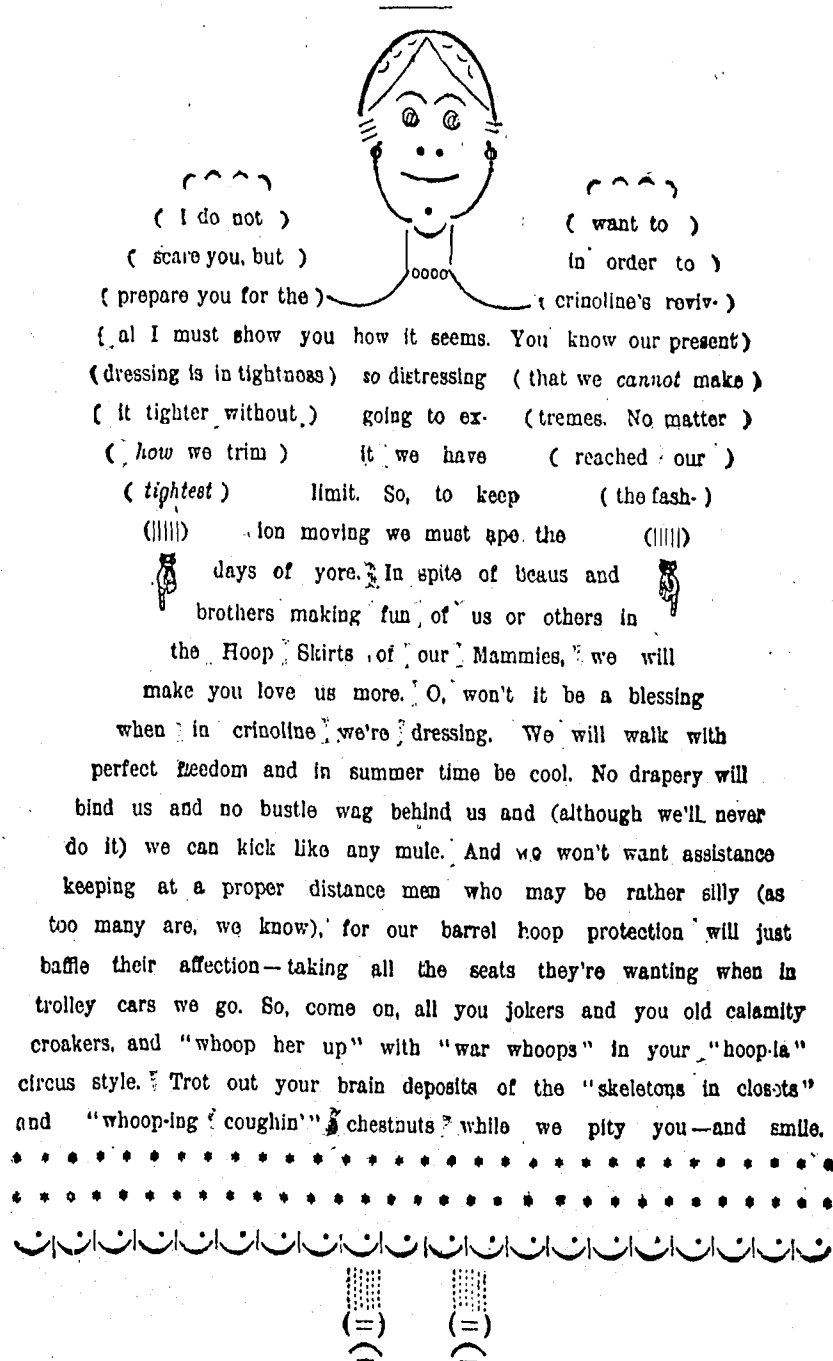

Here are two puzzles for some lively young heads to work out: First—A man had two watches, each watch he sells for $12 apiece. On the first watch he loses 50 per cent. On the second watch he gains 50 per cent. How does he come out on the entire transaction? Does he gain, lose or stay even?

Second—A man died leaving a will giving one-half his property as he left it to one son, one-third to another son, and one-ninth to the third son. His entire possessions were found to be seventeen cows. How were they divided so that each son got his share without killing or dividing a cow.

Is That All?

Paris actresses wear paper lace.

THE HOOP SKIRTS.

PETE HAD KILLED THE ELK.

He Thought He Had Failed, Though, and Went Home and Beat His Wife.

T. S. Minott, of Marshfield, Ore., the center of the elk, bear, and cougar country, though a business man, is at the same time one of the most noted sportsmen of the wild mountains of Western Oregon. He had just been on an elk hunting expedition to the Humtulpis River. "I went up on the Humtulpis," he said to a San Francisco Examiner man, "with Ben Foss, who is a noted hunter of Marshfield. There are two ways of hunting elk and deer there—by a still hunt, and with hounds. We choose the former. We followed the trail which we had found and soon came in sight of a quiet band. Then we just shot—that's all—and brought down an elk apiece. It was something like killing a cow in a barnyard—no frills to it, nothing dramatic, but easily done. About this time along came an old Indian known as Humtulpis Pete, who lives at the mouth of the Humtulpis. He saw the band of elk and began blazing away. The elk were rounding a ridge and as one got to the top in the clearing he would fire. He kept this up until he had fired eight shots and he didn't stop one. They all ran on and disappeared. The Indian looked at his rifle, sighted it again, and then examined it all over carefully. Mr. Foss and I, who had by this time came up, saw he was much disgusted and told him he had better go on over the hill, for we believed he had killed some of the elk and he would do well to go and see anyway. He shook his head; appeared more put out than ever, and finally left us and went toward his cabin on the Humtulpis. We were busy skinning the two elk we had killed, chopping off their heads and saving some meat, so that we didn't think of him again for some time. When we got through we went down to the Indian's cabin."

"As we approached we heard an awful shrieking and sounds of somebody beating somebody else. We rushed in, and there Indian Pete was hammering the life out of his squaw. She was almost killed. We hauled him off, and finally got from him a story that she had bewitched his gun. He said that was the reason he hadn't killed the elk. We explained to the superstitious Indian that he was nothing in that and that he had probably shot some of them, and, if he would go over there, we would go with him. We finally got him to consent to it. All of us went back, and just below the hill we found eight elk lying dead. He had hit one every time—shot it in the punch—and they had run a long way before dropping. They'll do that when they are shot that way. It was such a killing as I never saw before. There the elk were, all scattered out in a row in a distance of an eighth of a mile."

Georgia's Big Prehistoric Mound.

About twelve miles below Fort Gaines is a mound which is said to be the largest known in the United States, and undoubtedly the work of the mound-builders of former generations. Its base covers more than two acres and, running up at an angle of about 45 degrees, it stands about 100 feet high. Large oak trees several feet in diameter cover the sides and stand as witnesses to the great age of the mound. Many years ago a gentleman had a small-sized well dug from the top down into the heart of the mound, and among other things found the jawbone of a man that would easily slip over the head of an ordinary man of this generation. His explorations were very meager, and since then nothing like any systematic search has ever been made.—New York Times.

Steam Launches.

The steam launches or cutters for the United States naval vessels are built strong enough to be raised and lowered with bunkers and tanks full, and steam up. They are thirty feet long, seven feet nine inches beam, four feet deep, two feet five inches and two feet ten inches draught forward and aft. They have a speed of seven and one-half to eight knots. They are fitted with compound vertical inverted engines, intended to run at 300 revolutions per minute, with a boiler pressure of 160 pounds. The cylinders are three and one-half by five inches, and seven by five inches. The valves are of the three-port slide valve type, with one and five-eighths inches travel, and driven by the ordinary link motion. The crank shafts are of wrought steel, with two thrust rings forged on. The screws are true helices, twenty-seven inches diameter, and forty-eight inches pitch, or thirty-six inches pitch for twenty-eight feet cutters; the helicoidal area is three and nineteen-hundredths square feet, and the projected area two and twenty-three hundredths square feet. The boilers are of the Towne pattern, having a rectangular grate, surrounded by a water box, with water tubes running diagonally from side to side above the grate, with a top steam drum connected to the water box by tubes. These boilers have been in service for some years, and are found to steam freely with natural draught, to be economical in coal consumption, and to have a low center of gravity. Their working pressure is 160 pounds per square inch. The condenser consists of a copper pipe along the keel. The boats carry thirty-five gallons of water on each side of the engine space, and 300 pounds of coal on each side of the boiler, or seventy gallons—640 pounds—of water and six hundred pounds of coal. The weight of machinery is 850 pounds; boiler with water and attachments, 2,295 pounds; bunkers, tanks, etc., 570 pounds; total weight, fully equipped for service, 4,955 pounds.

Get Away From the Crowd.

The advice which Robert Burdette gives to boys may well be taken, not only by them, but by older persons—"Get away from the crowd," he says, "for a little while every day, and think. Stand on one side and let the world run by, while you get acquainted with yourself, and see what kind of a fellow you are. Ask yourself hard questions about yourself: find out all you can about yourself. Ascertain, from original sources, if you are really the manner of man you say you are; and if you are always honest; if you always tell the square, perfect truth in business deals; if your life is as good and upright at 11 o'clock at night as it is at noon; if you are as good a temperance man on a fishing excursion as you are at a Sunday school picnic; if you are as good when you go out of the city as you are at home; if, in short, you are really the sort of man your father hopes you are, and your sweetheart believes you are. Get on intimate terms with yourself, my boy, and believe me, every time you come out from one of these private interviews, you will be a stronger, better, purer man. Don't forget this, and it will do you good."

TO WIN SUCCESS.

Do That Well for Which You Are Best Fitted.

Success in marriage, business and in the affairs of life generally does not come by chance. There are certain elements which, properly combined, as certainly produce success as the combination of certain gases produce water.

That old and yet generally accepted notion that success is a matter of luck, or a special gift of Providence, has not a leg to stand on any more. In a sense, it is a special providence, because all blessings come from Providence, and when success comes specially to any person it is in a sense a special providence.

The successful business man is a specialized creature. Some of his schoolmates may know more about mathematics, others about astronomy, and others about language than he does, and all because their tastes and inclinations differ from his.

Likewise he differs from them and possesses something they never had, and probably can never acquire. His tastes run in a certain direction, and run so strongly that his vital energy flows in that same direction. The result is that he becomes a successful business man, while his classmates follow their tastes and drift into various callings, but a lack of vital energy, or something, prevents them from achieving success.

A combination of certain elements produces a definite kind of character, and this determines a man's place in life. Some of these elements are natural and others are acquired, so that it is as much the fault of the individual, or his ancestors, that he does not succeed as it is the fault of nature.

There are some persons born into the world so out of balance, or made up of such poor material, that they never can succeed in anything; but these are so few and far between that they may almost be ranked with freaks.

The average failure in life is owing to improper training or neglect to make the most out of the material.—Pittsburg Commercial-Gazette.

FAMOUS GERMAN BANDS.

Two Now Rehearsing in Berlin Preparation to Coming to the Fair.

Two of the most famous military bands in Germany are coming to the World's Fair. These bands are to appear in the German village, on Midway Plaisance, and give concerts frequently during the day. They are the flower of the German army. Before any of the musicians were accepted they had to submit to a rigid examination, conducted by the royal army band inspector, G. Rossberg; the royal court musician, J. Kosleck; the royal musical director, E. Ruscheweyh; cavalry band master, G. Herrold, and other eminent musicians. The last two named gentlemen were engaged as leaders of the bands.

In the brilliant uniforms of the German army these famous musicians will give frequent concerts at the Fair. E. Ruscheweyh, one of the conductors, is famous beyond the frontiers of Germany.

He has conducted the Tivoli concerts for fifteen years. Herr Ruscheweyh looks back upon a military career of more than thirty years. Herr Herrold, master of the cavalry band, has served in that capacity for twenty years. From 1881 to 1885 he was attached to the Royal Music Academy at Berlin. Royal Court Musician Kosleck, who is also coming, has taken charge of the exercises of the old historic trumpet music upon the antique valveless trumpets. This sort of music was, by special order of the Emperor, introduced in several cavalry regiments of the Prussian army.

Herr G. Herrold.

Herr E. Ruscheweyh.

Hartford's Old Men.

There are some old men in Hartford, Conn. Hubbard Hollister is now nearly 88 years old, yet he takes care of the horses, barn, and stable as effectively as ever. Dr. David Cray, 13 Seyms street, is now in his 88th year, yet he goes out with the Fox Hunters' Club occasionally and bags a fox or two on Talcott Mountain. Deacon Morgan Lewis, 905 Main street, is also 88, and he still drives about, more or less. There are in the town a number of other old people of 88 or along there who keep tolerably lively for that age.

A Pretty Custom.

The pretty custom of drinking to the health of loved ones is skill kept up in the ward-rooms of the vessels of our navy. At 9 o'clock in the evening the captain or commander will cause glasses to be filled, and, raising, will deliver this sentiment: "Gentlemen, I ask you to drink to sweethearts and wives. May the sweetheart become the wife. May the wife always remain the sweetheart." The assembled officers drink this toast in silence.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAUK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THIS POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Oh, when we get to voting,
How proudly we will stand
Right close beside our husbands
With the ballot in our hand.
We'll vote for home and children
And against intemperance, too;
Then we'll place in every office,
Brave men and women, too.

In the municipal election this spring there were nearly twice as many women voted as ever before, still some old croakers say they don't want equal suffrage and don't want to vote.

Two years ago the women of Topeka elected Mayor Coffey, a Democrat, and in a speech at the equal suffrage association Maj. J. K. Hudson of the Capital, said "You women by your action have set equal suffrage back five years." This spring the same women elected a Republican mayor. Of course this advanced equal suffrage five years. Poor rule that don't work both ways.

An obscure Populist legislator by the name of Dougherty, in his speech on equal suffrage in the Kansas legislature last winter, said "If the women want the ballot, why don't they come up here in a body and ask for it." Silly man! why don't the counties that want a local measure come up in a body; or any organization or railroad or State institution come in a body. Get the whole world before these level-headed gentlemen (level means flat) before they can concede right from wrong. Go home, thou —, and let the people elect some one that advocates equal rights to all and special privileges to none. You are not a Populist and never were.

KANSAS ALWAYS TO THE FRONT.

Again Kansas has stepped to the front in behalf of the people. President Hanna of the State alliance, has just returned from Chicago where he has completed arrangements for caring for visitors to the World's fair at about one half what is asked by other associations. He is president of a F. A. and I. U. association which is indorsed by the State alliance, the State grange and the State officers of Kansas, and invites alliance people from all other states to stop with his association while in Chicago. Headquarters on and after May 1st, will be at 6825 May street, Chicago, Illinois. It is about three miles west of Jackson park and has direct communication with the Exposition. The association is not exclusive and invites all who desire cheap board and lodging to take advantage of the low prices it offers. For further information address the secretary, S. H. Stevens, at Topeka, Kan., until May 1st, and after that date at headquarters in Chicago.

AGAINST UNIONS.

The Topeka Daily Capital, the official organ of the Republican party of Kansas, comes out in its Sunday morning issue with the following startling headlines which show conclusively that the Capital is in favor of scab labor and is against union labor. The dispatch dated at Chicago, is in favor of dishonest labor and against union labor. When, oh when, will our laboring men get their eyes open?

"Strikes and Boycotts—A labor organization which does away with them.—American Railway Union.—The first steps taken in one of the greatest labor organizations ever contemplated.—To elect officers next Monday."

"Chicago, April 15.—The men who for several days have been laboring on the formation of the American Railway union, today completed the first step in the enterprise, and have issued a lengthy document setting forth the outline of one of the greatest labor organizations the world has ever seen.

The union proposes to enlist as far as possible all railway employees of every description, and its avowed object is the abolishment of the strike and boycott as a means of settling difficulties.

The founders of the Railway union claim that the new organization will in no sense conflict with existing organizations of railway employees, its design being primarily, they say, for the great number of men who belong to no organization whatever. There are to be no secret meetings or ballot, no grand officers or grievance committee. A meeting will be held on Monday for the election of officers.

AFTER THE ELECTION.

It is Conceded on All Sides That the Women had much to do With the Kansas Election.

The complete returns from the municipal elections held Tuesday show that the women all over the State took advantage of the opportunity to vote, and it is universally conceded that the woman's suffrage movement has received a great impetus. Republican politicians and newspapers are claiming that the returns show a great victory for them and an endorsement of the course pursued by the Republicans in the legislature. The Populists, on the other hand, declare that the election results have no political significance, and are even more eager than the Republicans to give the women an opportunity to vote for state officers. They contend that the farmers' wives will turn out en masse, and that their vote in the State would be easily doubled by conferring the right of suffrage on women.

The women of Topeka polled the largest vote, in proportion to the total vote of any of the first class cities, and Kansas City, Kansas, came in a close second. In this city the women polled 2,961 votes and of these 2,254 were cast for Dr. Jones, the Republican nominee for mayor. The negro women voted solidly for the Republican nominee, and the Universal Suffrage society was pledged by its promise to the State Republican committee to vote the Republican ticket. In Kansas City, Kan., the women succeeded in polling 3,065 votes, with only 3,500 registered. No political party has ever succeeded in bringing out such a large proportion of the votes registered as did the women of Kansas City, Kan. In some precincts every woman voter registered cast her ballot.

The smaller towns show a larger percentage of female voters than the cities. In Fredonia the women cast more votes than the men, and in Russell nearly the entire population voted. The election returns show that the women of the cities are less inclined to take advantage of universal suffrage than the women of the smaller towns, and that there will be even a greater difference between the women of the country and the women of the towns.

"Every farmer who goes to town to vote will be accompanied by his wife. The country women will be glad of an opportunity of taking a day's recreation and election day will be a universally observed holiday in the rural districts. The women have made the Populist movement. They arranged the picnics and urged their husbands to stand firm. Women speakers did the most effective work in the Populist campaign, while they have always proven flat failures in Republican and Democratic strongholds."

MRS. LEASE AND THE STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES.

Mrs. Lease is very much enthused over her new work on the State board of charities and told some of her experiences, she said: "I have just finished my second visit to all the State institutions since my connection with the board and I find them all in splendid condition, but of course you know, we only see the best side. I find some wonderfully interesting things about these institutions. I was particularly impressed with the work of the institutions for the deaf and for the blind and the Girls' Industrial school at Beloit. I have just come in from the Topeka asylum. That is indeed a great institution. I was very much surprised on my first visit to the asylum at the large number of patients who recognized me. They knew who I was when they first saw me. I remember I had just arrived at the asylum and was passing through one of the halls when an elderly man stepped up to me and grasping my hand shook it warmly, saying, 'Why, Mrs. Lease, I am so glad to see you.' I hesitated a moment, then said: 'I hardly recognize you; where have I met you?' To which he replied:

'Oh, I know you; you are the great American orator. I am a great orator myself.' Then I knew I was talking to a crazy man." And Mrs. Lease laughed heartily as she recalled the incident.

Continuing, she said: "I was surprised at the number of patients who had my picture. They read the papers and had cut out and preserved my picture like a holy relic. One day as I was passing from one building to another with Dr. Eastman, I heard a voice from an upper window calling, 'Mrs. Lease, Mrs. Lease.' I stopped and looked up at an old gray-headed man who was peering out of a third story window. Dr. Eastman told me he was an old soldier, and when he saw I stopped he said, 'Mrs. Lease, won't you please come up here, I want to see you.' I told him I would, presently. When I finally went to his room, I found on the wall framed the full page picture of myself cut out of March 16th Frank Leslies. You may imagine I felt flattered, but I feel so sorry for some of those poor people."

Changing the subject back to business Mrs. Lease said: "The appointment of officers to take charge of the several State institutions should be made at once, in order to give the present officials time to arrange their affairs before turning over their offices at the end of the fiscal year June 30th, but for several reasons these appointments will probably not be made until the next meeting of the board, which will be in May."

"I wish you would say in this connection, that I am not considering this matter of appointments myself, but have turned all of that business over to Senator Householder, and he is giving his special attention to appointments. My duties as president of the board consume my time."

POPULIST WOMEN ORGANIZE

The progressive women of Kansas are awaking to a realization of the work that must be accomplished and the education that must be advanced on economic and reform ideas to members of their sex before the submitting of the question of equal suffrage. In view of these facts about seventy-five women met at the residence of Dr. Mrs. Harding, corner of Harrison street and Sixth avenue, last Tuesday, and formed an organization to be known as the Woman's Progressive Club, whose objects and aims are as above stated.

Mrs. Brina A. Otis was elected president; Mrs. J. W. Breidenthal, vice president; Mrs. G. C. Potts, recording secretary; Mrs. Belle K. Hopkins, corresponding secretary; Mrs. D. J. Furbeck, treasurer. The committees were not all arranged at this meeting. Mrs. Potts was chosen chairwoman of the committee on constitution and by-laws; Mrs. Furbeck on labor exchange, and Mrs. Emma D. Pack on invitations. A general meeting is fixed for Tuesday, May 9th, when a State organization will be perfected and a charter filed. The work of organizing the State will then begin and be pushed forward with rapidity. Our women throughout the State are requested to take hold of this matter at once and get ready to effect an organization in their town or city. For further information address Mrs. Belle K. Hopkins, corresponding secretary, Topeka, Kansas.

THE New York Herald of Saturday says of the women voting in Kansas:

"The women of Kansas are satisfied with themselves, and the women of the country are satisfied that the women of Kansas are in the forefront rank of human progress. Kansas has always looked with favor on woman suffrage. The people out yonder are radical in almost everything else and there is no reason why they shouldn't be equally radical in this matter. They embody the rushing, hustling, elbowing spirit of western enterprise when it most resembles a blizzard, and if they tear up a good many of our old fashioned and conservative eastern notions they like it all the better. Women have had the right to vote in municipal elections there for quite a time, but curiously enough they didn't avail themselves of it. For some reason they grew diffident and bashful; a large proportion of them kept away from the polls and let the men work their own sweet will. But in the recent campaign they woke up and took matters into their own hands. They became a political factor which the bosses of that section must reckon with. And it is only fair to say—at least that is the report—that they voted as intelligently as their brothers and sweethearts."

ALL ABOUT WASHINGTON.

Mrs. Brina A. Otis, Wife of Congressman Otis, Has Returned to her Home in Topeka, After Two Years of Washington Life. She Reads an Interesting Letter Before the Last Meeting of the Shawnee County Alliance. It Was Requested to be Published in the 'Farmer's Wife.' Every One Should Read It.

It gives me great pleasure to meet with you again and I am very thankful for the many cordial greetings received from our friends since we returned. The sixteen months' absence from Kansas has taught me to more fully appreciate the enterprise of the west and to realize how the south is bound to precedent and the struggle through which it must pass to triumph in this reform movement. This is the first Alliance meeting that I have had the opportunity to attend for eighteen months, but I feel that my interest in the movement has not abated in the least; in short, I have many times felt as much of a longing for one of these gatherings as ever a hungry harvest hand has for his dinner. You have been meeting together and been progressing along the line of the Alliance movement but I can at the present time only speak of the scenes and events that I have witnessed during my absence and give you some of the thoughts they have suggested to my mind, scenes that are of historic interest and familiar to you by reading if not by sight.

Washington is said to be more like Paris than any other American city, it is supported directly and indirectly by government and on every hand one sees the advantages of being in the employ of "Uncle Sam." One-half of the taxes of the District of Columbia are paid by the government and it seems to be a doubtful question whether the residents of Washington realize the advantages they are receiving and whether the tax payers of our nation realize how much they contribute to the ease and comfort of its citizens. It is beautifully laid out and its well kept parks are a great attraction, nearly all containing a statue of some great man who lived some time in the past and suggested to my mind that when congress appropriated money to erect so many statues it was more willing to honor the nation's dead than it was to bring a condition about whereby all citizens could be occupied with remunerative employment.

The inauguration of the president is the great event of our nation's capital and as I stood in the porch of the senate wing and saw the grand pageant I wondered how any one could imagine that the same place had ever witnessed Jeffersonian simplicity. It has been estimated that exposure on inauguration day costs the people fifty thousand dollars in doctors' bills and that the deaths after President Harrison's inauguration numbered two thousand, four years ago. The fourth of March it rained all day and were I a political prophet I should say that the storm of the fourth of last month was indicative of the storm that the political party in possession of all branches of our government might expect to encounter during the next four years.

The pension office was decorated at an expense of eight thousand dollars for the inaugural ball. We are told that "it gave the poor people work," but who among the poor could buy the elaborate costume and pay the ten dollars admission for a couple to the pleasurable part. Commissioner Raum says in his letter on the cost to the people of the inaugural ball "that the use of the pension office retarded business of that bureau not less than eight full days for the entire official force and that the salary account of those immediately employed in the bureau amount to eight thousand dollars per day, making a total amount of sixty-four thousand dollars." Perhaps some one might say it gave the employees a rest but what about the old soldiers who are waiting and hoping that their pension claim may be allowed, some who say in their piteous appeals to their congressman to assist them to hurry up their claims, that they are old and sick and in great need, have given the best of their lives to their country and that it is but justice that they should be cared for now.

A sacred concert on the following day (Sunday) was planned at a price to admit people of moderate means, the proceeds to go for the benefit of the poor, but under protest of some of the ministers of the gospel of the lowly Nazarene it was postponed. I could only ask why they were not consistent enough to make a wholesale protest and forever abolish such a parade over a servant of the people who are the only true sovereigns in a republican form of government, lessen the risk to life and health and remove a great temptation of intemperance from the soldiers who were standing on the street in the inclement weather under order of the officers to take part in the parade. Among those near our house were those sent to Homestead at the time of the strike and we had an opportunity to see Streeter who has gained a national reputation for his cruelty to lambs. One poor old colored woman seemed to have more wisdom than all others when she said, "the Lord never bless dis government for spending so much money when there is so many poor people."

Visits to the halls of congress were not as interesting as I expected. The house does not seem to have any order but very much resembles a Chicago board of trade, plenty of noise and tobacco smoke. The senators pride themselves on being a little more dignified, but I have seen them when they did not give respectful hearing to one who was making a speech.

The White house is rightly named and looks as if the green blinds were forgotten when it was built, but were the only things now needed. The east room where Abigail Adams had her clothes hung to dry now has its gold trimmings and carpet and furnishings to match, and looks as if it ought to bring rest and comfort to its occupants. The blue room was redecorated by Mrs. Harrison, is now papered with silk and is the room in which the presidential party stands at receptions. The attractions of the green room is the picture of Mrs. Hayes, put there by the Woman's Christian Temperance union. The red room is furnished according to President Arthur's taste and is used by the president's family to receive callers.

The treasury building is just east of the White house. I had the privilege of walking around ninety-three and one-half millions of silver dollars and see the door of a vault that contained twenty-six million of silver and fifty-six million of gold. I could but wish that idle men could be employed and other cities enjoy some of the improvements of Washington. On the other side of the White house is the War, State and Navy department. Appearances would indicate that more had been done to prepare for war than to advance the interests of an agricultural nation and to make her people a happy, prosperous nation.

The Washington monument, 555 feet high, gives one a good view of the city and the thought comes to one of the immense amount of brick and mortar in sight.

MONROVIA, CAL., March 8, 1893.

MY DEAR MRS. PAUK:—Your paper comes regularly and is always welcome. And now we must say without further delay, hurrah for Kansas and equal suffrage! "Poor bleeding Kansas" is determined to lead us all in reforms. She elected the first People's party governor and will, I fear, be the first place to wet its soil with the blood of the enemy. For it does look as if the plutocrats do not mean to give up their grip peacefully.

We read of you women feeding our men while the contest was on in the house; but the Republican court has counted out the People's party it seems. Well, I suppose there will come a day of reckoning. Where is Mrs. Lease? I want to write to the dear soul. I wonder how much more the press will have to say about her? We enjoyed Mrs. Diggs very, very much, and we all went to see and hear General Weaver and Mrs. Lease last summer. They had immense audiences here, in fact all through the west. Of course you have read of Marion Cannon being elected to congress and then helping to get a Democrat (White) to the senate from southern California. There was great dissatisfaction over this at first, and as time goes on it grows greater. Our people believed there was considerable hope of getting Cator (People's party) but even though they failed in this, they knew they could show the people of California that they had some strength in the State. Cannon was determined they should not vote once for Cator. Wardall, State chairman of the People's party, was there and was quite as determined to make the trial for a week at least, then give it up if they found it necessary. Cannon got one People's party man, Kerns, to vote for White on the first ballot, which was the vote which elected him. So to our shame it is written that the People's party elected a Democratic senator without having so much as given their candidate one vote. Cannon won that game, but it killed him in California so far as the Populists are concerned. He will go to congress disowned by his own party.

At first the people felt stunned at what had so unexpectedly happened. Then Cannon came out with a letter to vindicate himself, but it was so egotistical, so abusive, so unjust and very ungentlemanly, that the tide set in stronger than ever against him. Chairman Wardall replied in order to set the executive committee right before the people. And now there is a feeling that all must gather themselves together and work harmoniously for the cause they have espoused.

The weather is fine here. Have had a good deal of rain this winter, and crops look accordingly fine. How are you all, my dear? How I wish I could see you and have a good long visit. The cause has grown much since we met a year ago in St. Louis, has it not? Much has been accomplished and a foundation built for a splendid edifice in the near future. Do you not think so? Now, with much love, and hoping for a letter ere long, I am,

Fraternally, ANNETTE NYE.

Everybody needs, after the exhaustion of the day, a stimulant that is nourishing as well as warming. Neither tea nor coffee is so well suited for this purpose as Cocoa or Chocolate. That prepared by Walter Baker & Co., has the highest reputation of any in the market. For more than one hundred years this establishment has made all its preparations absolutely pure, using no patent processes, alkalies, or dyes.

Unlike the Dutch Process No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely

pure and soluble.

It has more than three times

the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or

Sugar, and is far more economical,

costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and easily digested.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WHY ARE FARMERS NOT PROSPEROUS?—THE PURCHASING SYSTEM.

By J. R. Detwiler, President Fourth Congressional District Alliance.

It is assumed that farmers are not prosperous, and that no argument is required to establish that proposition in the minds of the farmers of the country. We feel a self-consciousness of that unpleasant fact. We have been forced by repeated and disastrous losses to realize the unfavorable conditions that confront us. Mortgage renewals and increasing interest burdens warn us of impending disaster.

I am only expected to indicate how our present purchasing system has operated to the detriment of the farmer. How it has contributed together with other causes to bring about the unfortunate conditions of which we so justly complain. Let it be remembered that the degradation of the agriculturist is never accomplished by a single cause and cannot be averted by a single remedy.

Since the total cost of supplies must be deducted from the total receipts of the farm before a balance can be ascertained and the profit or loss determined, it is evident that the purchasing system is an important factor in the problem under consideration. Economy in purchasing supplies is quite as important as tact in marketing. Under our present system the farmer usually runs a book account at the store. Many keep no trace of this account and are often surprised at the annual settlement to find that the cost of supplies exceeded the receipts of the farm. The balance is usually settled by note and interest is then added to the expense account already large.

Under the credit system the cost of all necessary supplies is not only increased but the purchase of superfluous articles is stimulated. Hope paints an optimistic view of waving fields of growing grain and we are often induced to make purchases and incur obligations not justified by the actual yield at harvest time or the prices prevailing when we reach the market. Whatever the necessity that forced the farmer to accept the credit system, it has ever been a curse to him. The debtor is a mere vassal, while the creditor is the real lord of the manor, and the reign of this vassalage ever increases with the growth of the debt. Farmers never seek relief through the polluted sanctum of bankrupt courts, but toil on like beasts of burden in submissive obedience to their masters.

To the farmer's losses through the credit system must be added the wanton waste occasioned by the employment of an excessive number of middlemen or distributors and an innumerable army of voracious speculators. This band of cormorants infest the high seas; they swarm about the market places; they blockade the highways of commerce and exact tribute to the utmost extent of our ability to pay.

That a limited number of middlemen or distributors are required for the convenience of producers and consumers alike, is freely conceded; that under the present system we are supporting too many is equally apparent. All speculators are not only superfluous but they are an actual menace to both producer and consumer. The speculator produces nothing but uncertainty, confusion, violent fluctuations and financial disaster and ruin.

The profits of the speculator are unknown quantities entirely independent of and in addition to the cost of production and distribution. These profits are extracted from the general public by means oftentimes as disreputable as the methods of the highwaymen. I therefore conclude our present purchasing system augments the cost of supplies. First, through the wasteful, extravagant and burdensome extension of credit; second, by the employment of an excessive number of middlemen or distributors; third, by the vicious speculations of speculators.

The remedy for these particular evils may be stated in the single sentence: Pay cash and co-operate.

If the farmer's alliance can succeed in learning farmers to avoid debt and co-operate in the purchase of supplies and the sale of the product of the farm it will be the means of elevating the farmer to a position of exalted independence. He can then enjoy the comforts of an elegant home, ride in an easy carriage, and exercise his political rights in defiance of the city dude who looks wise and chirps about injuring the credit of the State.

There is Work for All to Do.

Written for FARMER'S WIFE.

We are approaching a critical period in the history of our nation and in order for justice, truth and liberty to prevail it will take the combining effort of every true, loyal man and woman of our land to lead their aid in the true channels of reform.

The world is once more in bondage, slavery and the concentration of wealth caused by class laws is alarming, yet we are joyful to see the grand work done to elevate humanity by the noble men and women of our land: yet we truly believe justice cannot reign supreme until the women of America exert their power through political action. The example for national freedom of the civilized world must be set in America. Think ye divine workers of reform, our great task at hand. Let all the nobility of man and womanhood be exerted to save our republic from monarchy and disgraceful ruin. There is grand work for all to do and no time to lose.

O. S. McGOWAN.

Corwin, Mich.

Number 7.

Humphrey's Specific Number Seven, cures coughs, colds and bronchitis. The relief is quick, the cure perfect. Price 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Mrs. Diggs' Postscript.

Letter from Washington to the Advocate.

P. S.—How hard it seems for the old party newspapers to be pleased with the customs of the Simpson family. At the first poor Jerry was berated of his sockless state, and now that he has attained that degree of prosperity which enables him to suitably clothe his family he is again the target of the dissatisfied press. This time he is struck at through his wife. That little woman's "black velvet and diamonds" which she wore to the inaugural ball are the offending items. I can bear testimony that the one little brilliant in a very modest, plain finger ring was earned by Mrs. Simpson, who has saved her husband the expense of a private secretary, and has done a large share of his typewriting. The black velvet dress could hardly be plainer than it is, and was really a good investment, since it will serve as best gown for that lady's outings for many years to come. No doubt Mrs. Simpson would have arrayed herself in these extravagances had she attended the inaugural ball, but as she did not attend the point of the joke is turned upon her critics. But suppose Mrs. Simpson were to purchase some good, substantial gowns, and even a pretty ring, it might be remembered to her credit that many years of hard work on a farm, raising good things for other people to eat, have earned for her a right to indulge in some of the pretty clothes which every woman as good and industrious as she ought to have, and would have if that era of justice and fair opportunity for which Jerry Simpson stands were ushered in. ANNIE L. DIGGS.

From Our Dear Quaker Sister.

Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, respected sister and co-worker:

I have sent thee $1.00 to pay my subscription for the FARMER'S WIFE and with it my earnest prayer that thee may be successful in thy efforts for the enfranchisement of women, and in behalf of poor, down-trodden humanity who are suffering so many deprivations and hardships that are caused by "legalized robbery" which has taken from our wealth producers the proceeds of their toil. There is no one class that feels the direful effects of that robbery more than the farmers' wives. Go on with the noble work that thee is engaged in—procuring justice for women.

Thine fraternally,
ELIZABETH A. ROGERS.
Crosswicks, N. J.

The other day, we heard a good g. o. p. brother singing, "We are tenting on the old camp ground." You are mistaken, brother; we are not camping any more; that's what ailed you last fall; while you were "tenting on the old camp ground," the procession moved on and left you with your tent pitched in the graveyard of dead issues. Better fold your tent and move on, my brother; thirty-five years is long enough to tent on one camp ground; the accumulation of filth is apt to give you the cholera.—Kansas Agriculturist.

We note with regret the suspension of the Arkansas Woman's Chronicle, at the end of its fifth year. It was bright, witty, wise and sweet tempered, and has been an ever welcome visitor to our sanctum. The health of the over-burdened editor has failed, and rest and change have become imperative for her. The Chronicle has "fought a good fight." May it be able to return to the field with renewed vigor!

Free Literature.

The "great plain people" have the gold gamblers on the run. Organize, educate and complete victory is bound to come. For ten cents in silver or stamps your name will be placed on the list of reform press circulators and the leading reform papers of the United States will send you sample copies free for distribution among your neighbors. Write your name and address plainly. Address your letter to

FARMER'S TRIBUNE Co., Des Moines, Iowa.

The Keeley cure is administered in Kansas only at the Keeley Institutes at Kansas City, Leavenworth, Wichita and North Topeka.

What Shopping Means to Women.

Two men occupied a seat in an open car the other morning, and as they reached the shopping district, the car stopping at every block to drop passengers, one of them freed his mind after what the New York Times calls the usual masculine fashion:

"Odd, isn't it, how women can shop all day and all the year around?"

The other laughed. "Yes, it would be, only you get used to it; they all do it. Now, I go to my tailor's twice a year and get all I want."

"So do I," said the other indulgently, "but then they like it and it takes them out."

The other acquiesced, and the subject, thus satisfactorily settled, was dropped.

It probably never occurred to these complacent minds that a man's shopping is a molehill to the mountain needed in a household, and it is not believed that twice a year at his tailor's satisfied either of these well-dressed men. How about shirts, shoes, and neckties, hats, gloves, and underwear? Perhaps their wives "shopped" for some of these things? Certainly they did for the chairs, carpets, the hangings, and pictures, and all things, little and big, which made their homes comfortable, and for little Jane and big Tom and the baby and all the rest. But a man never sees a woman turn on a street which holds a dry goods shop that he does not assume with more or less flippancy that she has gone to buy a bonnet for herself.

A FORTUNE IN A PUZZLE.

The above is a picture of our greatest African explorer, and in it can be traced the forms of two wild animals. Any one can readily see the face of the explorer, but it is difficult to distinguish the two animals.

The proprietors of STANLEY'S PRIZE MEDICINES will give an elegant UPRIGHT PIANO, valued at $500, to the first person who can make out the elephant and giraffe, to the second person will be given $100 in gold; to the third an elegant GOLD WATCH; to the fourth a handsome CLOCK; to the fifth a SILVER WATER PITCHER, and to the next fifty $5 in gold. Every competitor must cut out the above picture and outline with a lead pencil the forms of the two animals, and enclose same with 15 U. S. two-cent stamps or 10 three-cent Canadian stamps for one sample bottle of the following prize remedies: "STANLEY'S PRIZE RHEUMATIC CURE," "STANLEY'S PRIZE CURE FOR CHRONIC AND ULCERATED SORE THROAT," "STANLEY'S PRIZE CURE FOR DYSENTERY, DIARRHEA AND CHOLERA-MORBUS," or "STANLEY'S PRIZE CURE FOR CATARRH." Select any one of the above remedies or as many as you desire, by enclosing 3c. for each one.

Address THE STANLEY MEDICINE CO., 308 Brush St., Detroit, Mich.

The person whose envelope is postmarked first will be awarded the first prize, and the others in order of merit. To the person sending the last correct answer will be given an elegant GOLD WATCH; to the next to the last a handsome SILVER WATCH; to the second to the last a handsome CLOCK; to the third to the last $10 in gold; and to the next ten to the last $5 in gold. We shall ALSO GIVE AWAY 100 EXTRA PREMIUMS (should there be so many sending in correct answers). The names of the winning prize winners will be published in the U. S. and Canada. The object in making the foregoing extraordinary offer is to place our Medicines in the hands of the many sufferers. THIS GREAT AND ONLY POSITIVE RHEUMATIC CURE has cost the proprietors an enormous amount of money, the ingredients of which are imported from Africa, where they are secured with great difficulty and expense. It is purely herbaceous, and put up in two compounds, one to be used externally and the other internally. All other remedies are equally valueless. As to the reliability of our Company, we refer you to any leading wholesale drugist in Detroit, and will also furnish you with the names and addresses of parties who have been entirely cured by this most wonderful Medicine. All prizes will be awarded strictly in order of merit and with perfect satisfaction. No charge is made for premiums in any way, they are absolutely given away to introduce and advertise our Medicines, which we are bound to do regardless of expense. Medicine is sent by mail, post paid and duty free. When you answer the picture puzzle, please mention this paper. Address Stanley Prize Medicine Co., DETROIT, MICH. Branch Office, Windsor, Ont., Canada.

The man who is not giving anything to God is stealing from himself.

With a man more money means more to eat; with a woman more to wear.

NO MAN can fully respect himself as long as his ways do not please God.

The man who willfully continues in sin is conscious that he deserves no help.

The man who does his best in his present place is on his way to a better one.

The hardest kind of repentance to bring about is repentance for popular sins.

FOLLOW the man who believes the Bible and you will find that he is living it.

The devil never gets tired of setting traps for people who have faith in God.

The man who conquers himself has God for a helper, whether he knows it or not.

The only people who are discontented are those who are not doing their whole duty.

The devil likes to be around when a wicked man is preached into heaven at his funeral.

The devil never gets tired of shooting where he can now and then make a doubt stick.

If men were sure they could get to Heaven by hard work every loafer would soon be busy.

WHEN you find that your yoke is not easy it means that you are not close enough to Christ.

God can do much for a man on Sunday who has been working for the devil all the week.

The worst the devil can do against the Christian is to make him cling to God a little closer.

THERE are so many reformers who want to go as far away from home as they can to begin work.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

Pointers for World's Fair.

Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While walking may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.

Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited; or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stansfield, North Topeka; or W. C. Garvey at depot.

Will Be Commenced Next Month. TOPEKA BUSINESS DIRECTORY

It has been intimated that Topeka business firms would not advertise in our paper for fear of aiding or supporting our cause. The following are not of that class, and we request our readers to trade with them and let them know your reason. Remember these columns are open to all persons that want your trade. Watch for them next month.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUGHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURTON, KANSAS.

SAFE, DURABLE FENCE; ONLY $80 PER MILE. LAND-OWNERS save one-half the cost avoid dangerous barbs. Agents make $200.00 per month and expenses. The best local and traveling agents wanted everywhere. Write at once for circulars and choice territory; address A. G. HULBERT, Patentee, care of Kellogg Bros. & Co., 204 OLIVE STREET, St. Louis, Mo. Factory Catalogue with 200 engraved designs and prices, sent free to any who want fancy iron and wire work or city, cemetery and farm fences, etc.

Office 830 N. Kansas Ave. Residence, 1129 Central Ave. (Over Postoffice.)

A. C. DAVIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Office Hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 1 to 4 and 6 to 8 p. m.

J. W. O'BRYON, D. D. S.

FIRST-CLASS WORK at REASONABLE PRICES.

Office over Davis & Sheetz store.

NORTH KANSAS AVENUE, TOPEKA, KANS.

J. M. KNIGHT, Furniture, Carpets, Curtains, Glassware, Queensware, And Stoves, SOLD ON EASY PAYMENTS.

404 Kansas Avenue.

PHONE 52.

UNDERTAKING AND EMBALMING. FINE CHAPEL SEATING 400, FREE. Morgue in Connection.

406 Kansas Avenue.

PHONE 52.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.

Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.

Send for Circulars and Prices.

J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

B. L. CRANS, to Spruce St., N. Y., Room No. 4.

Newspaper Advertising.

Attractive advertisements prepared and placed in all news.

Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr. B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

ALL FOR 12 CENTS.

AMUSEMENT, FUN AND INSTRUCTION. OUR A MAMMOTH GAME PACKAGE contains all the following and will be sent for 12 cents (stamp): Game of Authors, 45 cards, full instructions; Set of Dominoes; Chess and Checker Board, with men; Fox and Geese Board and nine men; Morris Board, with men; 11 other parlor games; Magic Music; 13 Magical experiments; Mind Reading; Sleight of Hand Tricks, etc.; 50 Conundrums with answers (new); The Clairvoyant, how to become a medium; Parlor Tableau; Game of Letters, and others equally as pleasing. If you cannot write to-day, cut this out and send some other time.

HOME GAME PUB. CO., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ART EMBROIDERY.

Why not save money by decorating your own home? You can do this by using THE HOME EMBROIDERING MACHINE. Price complete, with full instructions, $2.00. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal rates. Send stamp for terms.

Address, The Home Embroidering Machine Co., (Mention this paper.) Kansas City, Kas.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 4 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex.

DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail $1. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

PENNYROYAL AND COTTON PILLS for female irregularities. Positive. Ladies, send direct to manufacturer and avoid compounds from irresponsible parties; sent, securely sealed, on receipt of $1, with plain directions. S. M. NOLES, Chemist, 214 Delancey St., N. Y.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND—TANSY PILLS

Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail. If your Druggist doesn't keep them, send for them. Send 4c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy on earth. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Pills, Pa.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by

CLARA BEWICK COLBY,

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

HUMPHREYS'

This PRECIOUS OINTMENT is the triumph of Scientific Medicine.

Nothing has ever been produced to equal or compare with it as a CURATIVE and HEALING APPLICATION. It has been used 40 years and always affords relief and always gives satisfaction.

Cures PILES or HEMORRHOIDS—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding—Itching and Burning; Cracks or Fissures; Fistula in Ano; Worms of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.

WITCH HAZEL OIL

Cures Burns, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant. Cures Boils, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Scirrhus, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Fertility or Scald Head. It is infallible.

Cures INFLAMED or CACKED BREASTS and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable. Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.

Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price. HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

COMPLEXION WAFERS.

LADIES—If you desire to LOOK YOUNG and BEAUTIFUL, use ASHES OF CHARCOAL PASTES. They cleanse and brighten the complexion and sweeten the breath. Very popular with Society Ladies, Actresses, &c. Perfectly harmless. For box, N. Y. DR. SWEENEY, Albany, N. Y.

HUMPHREYS' VETERINARY SPECIFICS

For Horses, Cattle, Sheep, Dogs, Hogs, AND POULTRY.

500 Page Book on Treatment of Animals and Chart Sent Free.

CURES (Fever, Congestions, Inflammation A. A. (Spinal Meningitis, Milk Fever, B. B. (Strains, Lameness, Rheumatism, C. C. (Distemper, Nasal Discharges, D. D. (Bots or Grubs, Worms, E. E. (Coughs, Heaves, Pneumonia, F. F. (Colic or Gripes, Bellsch, G. G. (Miscarriage, Hemorrhages, H. H. (Urinary and Kidney Diseases, I. I. (Eruptive Diseases, Mange, J. J. (Diseases of Digestion, Paralysis, Single Bottle (over 50 doses). .00

Stable Case, with Specifics, Manual, Veterinary Cure Oil and Medicator. .75

Jar Veterinary Cure Oil, . . . 1.00

Sold by Druggists or sent prepaid anywhere and in any quantity on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., New York.

BEST IN THE WORLD. SMITH'S PATENT BROOM HOLDER.

Sent to any address by mail for 10c, silver or 12c, in stamps by

A. J. SMITH, Totoket, Conn.

HATCH CHICKENS BY STEAM

With the Improved Excelsior Incubator.

Simple, Perfect, Safe, Reliable. Thousands in successful operation. Guaranteed to hatch a larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other hatchery. Lowest priced first-class hatchery made.

Circulars free. Send 6c. for illustrated Catalogue.

GEO. H. STALL, Quincy, Ill.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE FARMER AND HOUSEWIFE.

Few Crops That Pay Better Than Potatoes—Dairy Cows Should Be Liberally Fed—A Straw-Stack Stable—Care of Trees—Notes About the Farm.

Mineral Manures for Potatoes.

There are but few largely grown crops which pay better when successfully grown than do potatoes. The crop requires a good deal of labor, and it must therefore have rich land. But if stable manure is used to make the land rich its fermentation in the soil increases the bacteria which produces the rot if the season be at all wet. In a very dry season the manure does not rot, and by drying up under the furrow it often injures rather than helps the crop. Potatoes are so largely composed of water that no manure should be used in growing them that can tend to make the land dryer. It is desirable to have the soil as mellow as it can be got. This is accomplished by sods. Any further fertilizing that is needed may be given with commercial manures, especially those rich in potash and nitrogen. It is a crop that needs comparatively little phosphate.

Probably the best compound for growing large potato crops is a mixture of nitrates with wood ashes, or if ashes cannot be easily obtained, with potash salts. Manured thus, the crop grows vigorously, and its foliage keeps a dark, healthy green, which it could not do if stimulated by fermenting manure. The potato crop needs cool and moist ground. Mineral fertilizers tend to keep soil both moist and cool.

Although the phosphate itself is not largely used in the composition of the potato, the making of superphosphate requires the use of sulphuric acid or oil of vitrol. This is a powerful germicide or destroyer of the bacteria which causes fungus, blight, and rot. Hence some portion of phosphoric acid should be in all potato manures. The potato manures that are made especially for this crop are, we believe, better adapted to potatoes than are any other, and their use will allow the application of stable manure to crops on which it will probably pay better. This subject of adapting manures to the crops to which they will do most good is one of great importance. It is a matter on which there is great need of thought, and which needs also not less the tests of practical experience.—American Cultivator.

Liberal Feeding.

There seems to be a strange lunacy in the minds of a great many farmers in regard to feeding cows liberally, says Hoard's Dairyman. As a square proposition no dairyman can afford to let a herd of good cows get in a low condition. He not only robs himself of a chance for present gain but he seriously cripples his future. It is just this constant tendency to hold a penny so close to the eye that a golden eagle cannot be seen on the other side of it, that cuts the sand from under the feet of the average dairyman. If we look around we can see everywhere evidence enough to satisfy a reasonable man as to the best policy to pursue. In all places it is the liberal feeder who makes the most money. His skeptical neighbor will say: "I can't see how he does it; he pays so much for feed." Nevertheless, he does it. There has not been a day the past year that feed has been so high but what a dairyman with a cow that would yield three-fourths of a pound of butter a day, could richly afford to give her all she could economically consume. The trouble with the men who talk differently is that not one in a thousand has any figures to show for their belief. They have nothing but mere guesswork to stand on.

Care of Trees.

A correspondent in Meehan's Monthly inquires whether branches which are now too low for convenience will get higher in time when the trunk of the tree lengthens. "It is a general impression among those not familiar with botanical gardening that the trunks of trees lengthen, but this is not the case; the trunk of a tree, being once formed, does not lengthen a fraction, no matter if it lives to a hundred years. A branch from a trunk that is now, say six feet from the ground, will have the center of that branch still six feet from the ground, no matter how many years elapse. If branches are, therefore, now too low, they had better be cut off at once. Again, it is worth remembering in cutting off branches that they should always be cut close to the trunk or to any main branch, so that the wound may heal over. If the branch is very large, so that the wound is likely to take several years to heal over, it is better to paint it, in order to keep the water from rotting the wood until it is properly healed. More good trees are spoiled through leaving an inch or two of stump to a cut off branch than people have any idea of."

Marketing Facilities.

The value of land for farming purposes must always depend largely on its nearness to market. The increase of railroads has brought for the staple grain products Western farms as near to market as are the best located Eastern farms. Not nearly so much progress has been made in improving country roads as there should be. The necessity for good roads becomes more pressing as farming is intensified, growing each year larger products per acre than were once thought possible. The American Cultivator thinks a market gardener or small fruit grower cannot well afford to be more than three or four miles from his market, nor that unless he has good roads at all seasons. A piece of bad road, especially if it be a hill, lessens the value of land lying farther away, and the better the land the greater will be the difference in price. It is this that makes it so difficult to improve some land. Roads are so poor or the distance from its market is so great that after it is made capable of greater productiveness its marketing facilities will not warrant pushing it for all that it might be made to produce.

A Straw-Stack Stable.

In grain-growing localities the cheapest and most comfortable stable for stock is made by building the straw-stack at the threshing time on a platform supported by posts standing about 10 feet above the barnyard level. The posts may be made lower if it is calculated to throw out the manure. Left to run over it at will, cattle, horses, and sheep will trample down a good deal of straw, which, with their droppings, will make an excellent manure. The trampling will keep it from heating to any great extent, and the liquid excrement will also be saved. When thrown out in spring the manure will accumulate to a depth of three or four feet. The stable straw-stack may be indefinitely extended by putting other posts near the stack, and covering with straw the spaces between them. No man who has plenty of straw need let cattle suffer from cold. Exclude the outside cold, and the internal heat from breathing and from food will keep animals warm.

The Horse.

Horses like skimmed milk and it does them good.

FAMILIARITY with objects is the only remedy for shying by a horse.

STRAW will do for horse food, but it is constipating. Look out for it.

GIVE the horses a few potatoes frequently; it will help rid them of worms.

NEVER be satisfied with your horses if their coats stare and they appear dull.

It is better to give stallions regular, but not hard work to develop vitality and energy.

PROFESSOR SANBORN'S experiments "seem to show that a rather large ration of grain for work horses is an economical one."

HAVE soft, good-fitting harness. Be firm but kind in your treatment and the horse will become attached to you and do good service.

Points About Poultry.

"LUCK" in the poultry yard is a rarity—it needs another letter, for it is "p-luck" that wins.

The editor of Farm-Poultry says, "I don't care a penny for 'points' if my fowls will only lay eggs."

NEVER be in a hurry to get young chickens to go upon the roost; let them make a sufficient growth to fly well.

MEAL, bran, and potatoes or turbot and mashed in about equal proportions makes a good feed for breeding ducks.

SEPARATED and raised by themselves pullets will be worth more for use than if allowed to run with the cockerels.

DUCKS confined to yards will lay more eggs, and there will be better fertility, than when they have an unlimited range.

AS DUCKS do not roost it is not necessary to have high houses, yet at the same time if they are too low they will be inconvenient to clean.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

EGG DRINK.—One quart of cold water, a cupful of sugar, an egg, a teaspoonful of tartaric acid. Beat the egg to a froth, beat in the sugar, add the other ingredients, stir well and drink at once.

CREAM CANDY.—Two cups of sugar, a cup of water, a tablespoonful of cream of tartar. Boil without stirring until it will harden in water like spun glass. Add a small piece of butter, and work in a little vanilla as you pull it.

NET CANDY.—Two cups New Orleans molasses, three-fourths cup of sugar; boil until it will harden quickly in water. Add a piece of butter and a coffee-cup of walnut meat just before taking from the fire. Pour in shallow pans and check off with a knife.

CURRENT JELLY.—Stem ripe currants, scald them in a porcelain kettle, do not let boil; strain through a coarse jelly bag and then through a flannel bag; allow a pound of sugar to a pint of juice. When the juice has boiled fifteen minutes, add the heated sugar and cook five minutes longer. Take from the fire, let cool slightly, pour in glasses and set aside until cold.

FROM A QUIET CORNER.

Virginia True Moralizes Entertainingly In the Free Press.

There is a clever sketch which was written some years ago and still bobs up serenely in opportune places. It was headed "The Total Depravity of Inanimate Things," and is usually attributed to the trenchant pen of Gail Hamilton. But Gail did not write it; another woman did; and it commends itself to everyone who has experience with fractious implements of daily use, that seem at times possessed with an unruly spirit. Take umbrellas, for instance. You stand yours in a certain corner of the room and expect to find it there when you need it, a few moments later. But it has moved, apparently of its own volition, and after a long search you discover it behind the door. Or you need the scissors and seek them in their native haunts. Do you find them? Yes; when you have given up the search in despair and seize a pile of newspapers to sooth your mind with light literature, you jab the point of the scissors into the ball of your thumb.

Ask a man—that is, if your life is insured—where his collar button loses itself when it flies from his fingers as if invested with life.

There must be a reservation somewhere for these eloping objects, where the tack-hammer that vanished so mysteriously hob-nobs with the discontented bootjack, and the button-hook and scissors cease to wander and get lost.

I have heard of a good woman who never used a new broom until she had recited a shibboleth to it that would prevent it from going out at night on a lark with witches. Maybe there is more in this than we understand, Horatio.

The occult tendency of the age is manifesting itself in the day of small things. It is a fashionable fad now at a ladies' tea for the guests to read one another's teacups and decipher from the grounds the good or ill-luck that is coming to them. There is always one in the company that is more expert at fortune-telling than the rest, and it is amusing to see the gravity with which they will begin proceedings.

First, the holder of the cup containing the grounds must turn it around three times with her index finger on the handle, at the same time making a wish. Then she hands it to the social fortune-teller, who keeps it slowly moving as she recites with due solemnity the scenes outlined in the tea grounds. There are usually tears—a disappointment, then a letter with money in it, a present and a visitor. The last is in the shape of a black tea stalk. The expert reader of the cup takes this out and snaps it on her thumb. If it flies off it is a man, but if it is soft and crushes it is a woman. Many very amusing things are told by readers of ready wit, and, as only a few cups furnish grounds, the pastime does not become tiresome.

It is said that ridicule is a strong weapon, and I sincerely hope it is and that it will send the hoop skirt back to the limbo of the past where it has hid these many years in dust and ignominy. This is a case where lovely woman stoops to folly, and should be dealt with accordingly. There is no need of reciting specific hindrances, such as the street car entrance, church pews, etc., because these could be avoided or changed. But the ridiculous appearance of a woman in a cage trying to walk gracefully or enter a carriage with ease and dignity, or do anything without making of herself a spectacle for men and gods, is the question that should be carefully studied. If woman is so capricious in her tastes and instincts as to change her style of costume every few months to suit the commercial world, when will she be fit to make laws and govern States? Greek models and angels represent the harmonious drapery that clings to the line of the human figure in classic folds. Try to imagine a celestial being in a hoop skirt! But a woman must march with her regiment, says Mrs. Grundy, who should be laid on the shelf herself as an old fogey. March with her regiment, indeed! Fine marching a body of women in hoop skirts would make, even if the cage did keep their gowns out of the mud. I grow ashamed of my sex at times like these, and wish the men would take to some equally barbarous and fantastic garb, so that we could talk back with some show of propriety. Just when we had reached the ultimatum of sensible suitable dressing to go and act like the historic cow—it's a shame to woman-kind!

Chlorobrom.

A combination of which the name of chlorobrom has been given—a solution containing thirty grains of chloralamide and a similar amount of potassium bromide, in an ounce of menstruum—has come into considerable favor, according to some of the foreign journals, as an efficacious preventive of sea sickness on short voyages. The passenger is recommended to take a podophyllin pill for one or two nights before the date of sailing, and when on board to remain for a time, before rough water is reached, in a horizontal position with eyes shut, and to take no food on short trips.

Too Fast a Pace.

Current history is studied through the public press and its students cannot but be impressed with the number of suicides and disappearances explained by financial embarrassments, or the crimes of defalcation, forgery, or embezzlement for which it was responsible. Speculation and gambling are frequently given as the causes of these misfortunes and irregularities; but there is a more potential and wider spread influence that is growing in its extent and its disastrous results. It is the fast living that carries its victims beyond their means. Thousands have traveled this rapid road to ruin, and the number that succumb to its allurements is constantly on the increase. The men who yield are not always dissipated in the usual acceptance of the term, but their habits and associations lead them into the expenditure of more than they make and ultimate disaster is the result.

Too many young men step into positions of trust without the willingness to follow the examples of their fathers in pursuing the slow but sure road to success. Too many restraints and self sacrifices have to be imposed. They accept positions of trust but want to meet the demands of society and keep the pace set by the flusher young man with whom they associate. They will "keep up their end" regardless of cost and a time comes when they cannot foot the bill. Fast living has them and they too often take the fatal step which means dishonor and disgrace. They are not sordid nor greedy, but "generous, whole-souled fellows." And in that is often the secret of their downfall. Society and companionship reach out for them, and the very qualities that attract are those that lead on to ruin. They suffer from the influence of a bad example. Many a family lives beyond its income, whether it be small or large, and with this thing going on all around them it is not surprising that young men on salaries fall in with the more attractive part of their surroundings.

But with the evil exposed it is difficult to suggest or apply the remedy. The terrible example is before the world day after day. He has, in fact, become so common as to be almost disregarded. The pulpit frequently deals with the problem, but if it leads to improvement in some directions the increase of the evil is greater in others. The press warns and exposes and the higher moral sentiment of the country shows its disapprobation, but the influences fail of their purpose. It seems one of those deep-rooted iniquities that can only be uprooted by bringing the entire race to a higher moral plane and holding those who violate its tenets to a stricter accountability.

General Grant's Name.

In respect to the changes in Gen. Grant's name, the following facts on the subject were communicated to the public during the first year of the Civil War by his father, his mother, his three sisters, and his brother, Simpson: His name was, when he entered West Point, Hiram Ulysses, and the H, which stood for Hiram, was dropped, and S inserted by mistake. While in school, prior to graduation, he always wrote it U. H. Grant. How came he to write it thus, if his proper initials were H. U. G.? The reason is that when he was a boy at school in Georgetown, Ohio, the boys gave him a nickname spelled by his initials, and not liking to go by the name of "Hug," he transposed the order of his given name, and, therefore of his initials, and this with the consent of his parents for the purpose of getting rid of the nickname. When his name was given at the time of his nomination as cadet, it was given in this order, and in the register S was substituted for the H, by mistake. He signed his name U. H. Grant till after he received his commission in the army, which commission was made out according to the register, with an S in place of the H, and then he found it necessary to sign his name officially to correspond with his commission, and of necessity began to write it U. S. He never took the name of Simpson. That was the name of his younger brother, who was the merchant in Galena for whom U. S. kept the books, and who died of consumption in the summer of 1861.

Spanish Incongruities.

A traveler says: Curious contradictions are occasionally found in the higher ranks. I remember sleeping at the house of a decayed noble, who received me with the utmost hospitality. My sleeping apartment, however, was destitute of the most common conveniences of life. My bed had no curtains, there was not a looking-glass, there was not a chair in the room. Such being the case I was surprised and somewhat amused at seeing a menial attired in a faded livery of green and gold enter my apartment with much state, bearing a basin of massive silver, which he was himself compelled to hold, because there was no table on which he could place that ponderous relic of the departed splendor of the house.

EVERY man has his "worthless" days, but if he does not fight them, every day will finally become a worthless day.

A PHOTOGRAPHIC GUN.

A Snap Shot Will Portray the Swiftest Movement of Any Living Thing.

Recent years have seen great improvements in photography, and it is daily becoming more and more indispensable in many fields of science, art, and industry. The camera now does work that was deemed impossible only a generation ago, and does it without exciting very much comment. People have become so accustomed to the wonders of instantaneous photography that nothing now seems to surprise them. The latest contrivance for this purpose is a photographic gun, which, it is claimed, will secure pictures at the rate of a dozen a second of any object aimed at, no matter what its position or how rapid its motion. The gun is the invention of a Frenchman, and is a breech loader. The enterprising amateur may now go forth in quest of his game looking like a sure-enough sportsman, a gun on his shoulder and a belt full of cartridges about his waist—only the cartridges will contain extra-sensitive dry plates, which, though sure enough on snap shots, will not prove deadly.

USING THE PHOTOGRAPHIC GUN.

AGES AT WHICH MEN MARRY.

The Era of Matrimony Governed by the Various Occupations of Men.

Statistics show that a law of chances governs in the vast majority of cases the ages at which men marry who are engaged in certain occupations, says the New York Ledger. Workmen and artisans take unto themselves wives at an earlier age than those whose vocations are of a more intellectual kind. Thus miners, textile-factory hands, laborers, and artisans marry at an average of 22 years. Of these the miners are first in the field, more than 100 of every 1,000 of them securing wives before they become of age. Workers in textile factories run them close; then come shoemakers and tailors, and they are followed by artisans and laborers. Farmers and farmers' sons consider 25 early enough. Commercial clerks seek the pleasures of matrimony at 26. Shopkeepers and shopmen postpone the rapture a little longer. Professional men and gentlemen of independent means rarely care to encumber themselves even with so delightful a burden as a wife until they have toed the line of over 30 years. Though the rich marry at a more ripe age than the working fraternity, they continue marrying until long after the last named have ceased to wed. Whereas fourteen miners and twenty-five artisans in every thousand marry between the ages of 25 and 40, nearly 100 of the professional and independent class do. It is explained in this way: The rich like to see something of the world and its pleasures before settling down to sober matrimony. A laborer has neither desire nor opportunity for it.

GRESHAM'S SUCCESSOR.

Judge Jenkins, of Milwaukee, Named for the Circuit Court.

Judge James G. Jenkins, of Milwaukee, is Secretary Gresham's successor to the bench of the Seventh Circuit Court, which was made vacant by his accepting the portfolio of the Secretary of State. Judge Jenkins has latterly been Judge of the Eastern District of Wisconsin. JUDGE JENKINS. Judge Jenkins' appointment was recommended not only by the Wisconsin bar, but by the Senators and Democratic members of the House from Wisconsin. Judge James G. Jenkins, who is a cousin of General Worth, of Mexican war fame, was born at Saratoga Springs, New York, Jan. 18, 1834. His mother was the eldest child of Reuben H. Walworth, the last Chancellor of New York State, and a jurist of national reputation. Mr. Jenkins was educated for the bar in his own State, and in 1855 was admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the United States. He went to Wisconsin in 1857, and for many years was a successful practitioner there. He succeeded Judge Andrew J. Miller, on his death, on the bench of the United States District Court in 1885.

She's in Luck.

A Salisbury, N. C., woman is reported to be cutting her third set of teeth.

DOLEFUL WOMEN.

Their Conversation Always Brings Sorrow to the Sick Room.

Do you know the doleful person? askt the Omaha World-Herald. She, for the doleful person is always a woman, is always a good neighbor in good health, and tries to be neighborly in sickness. But she makes a miserable failure at the latter. You know how she acts.

Don't you remember the last time the baby was sick? After you had watched by the little one's bed day after day, and night after night; had watched the roses fade from the loved one's cheeks, and saw the little form waste away? And don't you remember that just at the time when you had about given up hope the doleful neighbor came in? And don't you remember how she tried to cheer you up with a one-sided conversation something like this:

"Why, Mrs. B., how much worse the baby looks this morning. She looks just like Sarah Jones' baby did the night before it died. Gracious, I never saw a child so wasted away as Sarah's was, except yours. We just done everything for that child, but it wa'n't no use. I never will forget how Sarah took on at the funeral."

And then the doleful neighbor suddenly remembers that she has to run back home to "set a sponge," and when she goes you hope she will never return. You look again at the suffering babe and feel that your heart must surely break. But suddenly there is a knock at the door and in comes the—well, sunbeam neighbor is as good a name as any. She was over the evening before and quietly and unobtrusively helped to do so many needful things, and when she left she left a word of cheer; and when she comes this time she says something like this:

"Why, how much better the baby looks this morning?"

And don't you remember what a bright gleam of hope crossed your mind?

"I never saw a child improve so much in so short a time before. I am sure the baby will soon be well."

And then the sunbeam neighbor rearranges the bed, adjusts the blinds, tells you she will call again in a few hours and hurries home. Honest, now, didn't she leave a confident feeling behind her?

You felt better and more hopeful. Baby even seemed to rally under the words, and when at last the little one was playing around your knee again, didn't you think of the words of the sunbeam neighbor?

The doleful neighbor has frightened more mothers to death, buried more babies and caused more tears than all the plagues combined. She should be suppressed.

Senator Morgan's Story.

Senator Morgan attributes his success in life to an accident. When he started out in his native town to practice law he could not get a case, and was on the verge of starvation. He decided to go to Texas and grow up with the country, packed his trunk, locked his office door and stepped into the street, where he found himself face to face with a countryman, who was looking at the signs.

"Say, stranger," the farmer asked, "kin yer tell me if thar's a feller 'bout yeres named Morgan, John Morgan?"

"That is my name, sir," Mr. Morgan replied, pausing in his flight.

"Air you in er hurry, young man?"

"I'm just off to Texas."

"Texas, eh? Can't Texas wait a day or two? I've got er case I want looked after an' I kinder thought you'd do the job."

The prospect of having a case at last was sufficient to cause the young lawyer to turn back and hear what the farmer had to say. It had something to do with the recovery of a piece of land.

"I took it up and won it," said the Senator, in recounting the incident, "and from that day to this have never known what it was to want a dollar."

How He Told.

When Coleridge was staying among the Quantox Hills, he was fond of riding over to Taunton whenever he could find a sober steed. One day, on a familiar route, his horse cast a shoe, and he stopped at a village to have it replaced.

"What time is it?" he asked the smith, chiefly with the desire of making conversation.

"I'll tell 'ee present, sir," said the man. Then he lifted a hind foot of the horse, looked across it attentively, and added, "Half-past eleven."

"How do you know?" asked Coleridge.

"Do 'ee think as I've shoed horses all my life, and don't know by sign what o'clock it is?"

The poet went away puzzled, but he returned that evening, and offered the blacksmith a shilling to show him how he could tell time by a horse's hoof.

"Just you get off your horse, sir," said the smith, with a twinkle in his eye. "Now do 'ee stoop down, and look through the hole in you pollard ash and you'll see the church clock."

WHEN Christ sees some of the men He die'd for, He must regret it.

Special Privileges in Regard to Land.

By Charles Hardon in the Concord, N. H., People and Patriot.

"God is no respecter of persons."—Acts x, 34. This is sufficient warrant for the motto, worthy to be engraved over the portal of every hall of legislation in the American government, "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none." There is no more democratic doctrine than this.

To give men equal rights is, not to give them equal portions of land, nor portions of land of equal value; neither is it to divide up the wealth that one has produced or accumulated among those who may be destitute of such wealth.

All men have an equal right to the use of the earth. To secure them this right is the greatest problem of democratic government. The government that fails to secure it is so far undemocratic, for it allows special privileges in the earth to some which it denies to others.

I have a natural right, not to a living, but to earn a living. In order to do this I must work in the employ of someone else or apply my labor directly to the land. If no one were willing to employ me I should be reduced to the latter alternative; but though I should find all the land already owned by others I should still have a right to earn a living. No one is under any obligation to hire me, therefore a law which permits ownership in the earth in effect takes away my natural right to earn a living and consequently my right to life itself. Men cannot take away my right of access to the earth. It cannot be sold or given away from me. Laws may be made, and we are all now living under them, but no number of men has a right to make such laws.

If every foot of the surface of the earth were sold or given by individuals or government to a certain number of persons, the next child that was born would nevertheless have an equal right to the earth with those who preceded him, and no selling or giving on the part of others could deprive him of it. I know of no law, however, that recognizes this right. Our existing laws are the source of special privileges in land, and this, I take it, is the bottom reason why we have 1,000,000 millionaires and 2,000,000 tramps, and why a very large proportion of the population of every city is ground down by the iron heel of a degrading and hopeless poverty.

A tariff is essential injustice, but a law permitting private property in that which is furnished by the Almighty free and common to all is more than injustice, it is essential murder. Laws that permit the original resources of nature to be held as private property are worse than all tariff laws: for while the latter derange the just and natural distribution of wealth already created, the former destroy all just and natural relations between man and the fountain of life itself.

To embody in law every man's equal right to the soil, it is not necessary to divide up land; it is not necessary to disturb any man's title to land or his permanent occupation and possession of it, it is only necessary that every man holding land should pay as his tax to the state what the annual value of his land is, irrespective of improvements.

Under this system there would be no such thing as buying or selling land, either on the part of the individual or the state. The occupier of land would pay its annual value as his tax or rent; and so long as this was paid his title to it would be secure. There would in that case be no speculation in land nor any such thing as holding land for a rise in value, for all such increase in value would be added to the tax, and justly so, because it would be caused by the growth of the community, and not by the idle holder of the land, while on the other hand the man who improved land, either by buildings or cultivation, would not have his tax increased as a fine on his enterprise and labor.

Don't Like Their Medicine.

From the Advertiser.

The plutocratic, boodle corporation party is wonderfully worried over the reorganization of the militia in Kansas. During the recent trouble here the boast was openly made that Governor Humphrey had been for two years weeding out the populists from the militia of the state, and that it could be relied upon to refuse to obey the orders of Governor Leavelle. That kind of an organization in the interest of plutocracy of course was all right. Indeed, the militia of the entire country has been organized and officered upon this precise basis and with a view to difficulties that have been expected to arise; and, during the late session of congress, the effort was made to nationalize this force, in order to place it at once under the immediate command of United States officers. When it is found by actual experience that the militia of Kansas has been so organized that it cannot be relied upon to obey the orders of the legally constituted officers of the state, because these officers do not happen to be the obedient servants of the corporations, and when it is proposed to so reorganize this force that it can be relied upon, the corporation press makes a terrible howl. These fellows don't like the medicine they have been preparing for administration to others.

Middlemen and the Idle.

By George B. Dorr in New England Farmer.

Farmers in general are not prospering as they should, and there is an almost universal feeling among them that this is not due to lack of effort or good management on their part, but to unjust and unfavorable outside conditions.

It is often said: "If farmers are not doing well it is their own fault; they have not learned their trade. It is the men, not the conditions, that are at fault." There is some truth in this, but it is not the whole truth. The hardships of which farmers complain are not wholly imaginary; they are not getting their share of the good things of this life.

To my mind the trouble is due mainly to too many middlemen, too many idle rich men, and to our competitive system, which places us almost wholly at the mercy of these classes. The result is the middlemen and capitalists (including speculators and transportation companies) are taking the lion's share of the farmer's earnings, thus keeping him poor and dependent.

As men increased in knowledge their wants also increased. To supply these to the best advantage a division of labor was found necessary; hence the industrial arts began to flourish. This naturally led to the founding of cities and to commerce.

All this is well and good so long as the fact is not lost sight of that agriculture is the basic industry and is entitled to the place of honor and of profit. The present is a commercial age. Trade, commerce and manufactures insist upon taking first rank.

In the economy of agriculture (which should always be considered first) the only use for middlemen is to distribute its products. Beyond the number necessary to do this, all persons engaged in the produce business are an actual injury to the farming interests. If in Boston 20,000 persons are engaged in distributing the produce sent them, while under a proper system 10,000 could do it just as well, the surplus 10,000 must live out of the farmers.

At the present time farmers receive for their products on an average less than one-half the price paid by consumers. The rest goes to the middlemen and transportation companies. This is not right nor expedient. The farmer should receive at least 80 per cent of the retail price. In one way or another the non-producing classes, whether they be idle-rich or idle-poor, are supported by the farmers. The idle-rich pretend to be living upon the earnings of their stock, bonds, mortgages, or real estate. This is nonsense. In reality, these can earn absolutely nothing, except through the labors of farmers.

An Off-Colored Victory.

From the Lawrence Jeffersonian.

With its solidly republican colored vote of 800, Lawrence has always been safely counted as a republican city, although a decided majority of the white vote is often cast for the opposition. But in the city election of Tuesday the colored vote was practically doubled, the colored women voting to a much larger extent than the white ones. Estimating the total colored vote at 1,500, and Simmons' majority at 120, less republicans in a minority of the white vote of 1880. We doubt if much crowing will be done over this kind of a victory.

Kansas Populists and New England Misinformation.

From the New Nation.

The New York Times prints a letter from Kansas which has created no little comment in the east. The correspondent declares that the populists are stronger than ever before and that the new party contains about all the worst elements of the state. The Boston Transcript cannot understand how the populists can grow "considering the anarchical proceedings of the populists during the late legislative session. They now threaten to take possession of the state government without regard to judicial decrees, so soon as opportunity offers." It is beyond us to conjecture what manner of excuse or palliation the Transcript will urge for such dismal inaccuracies. The populists do not threaten to take possession of the state government of Kansas, for the simple reason that it is unnecessary, the state government being already in the hands of the populists. Moreover, the "anarchical proceedings" in Kansas referred to by the Transcript cannot be laid at the door of the populists. Certainly the populist returning boards did not reject ballots of an opposing party to the extent of changing the political complexion of the legislature, as the republicans did. The populist house did not break the furniture in the legislature as the republicans did. A populist commander of militia did not refuse to obey the orders of a superior officer, as a republican did. And, moreover, when the courts decided that they had no power to go behind the returns and examine the grounds upon which republican judges of election threw out populist ballots, every populist in the state, while knowing that a fraud had been practised upon them, quietly accepted the result. We would be willing to submit the bills passed by the "populist house," as it was called, to any intelligent jury for comparison with the bills passed by any New England legislature this winter. Such a comparison would convince any unprejudiced man that there is a reason for the continued growth of the people's party in Kansas.

But One Way to Put It Down.

From Mrs. Digges' Washington Letter in the Advocate.

The Washington Star, in an editorial, calls down anathema and black plague upon poor Mrs. M. E. Lease, charging her with having "aroused in the Kansas mind what has been mistaken by many for a sense of wrong, and with having stirred up the evil passions of a multitude that would, had it the opportunity, be as cruel as any aggregation of human savages ever was." The affrighted Star frantically exclaims: "Who taught the people to read Ignatius Donnelly's anarchistic, murder-inspiring novel? Who stirred up discontent in every hamlet and home? Let Mrs. M. E. Lease ask herself these questions."

It is difficult to say which is the more ludicrous, the dime novel story of David Overmyer (about reorganization of the militia), or the picture of Mrs. Lease teaching the Kansas "savage" to read Ignatius Donnelly's murder-inspiring novel.

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Lease's "ob-jurgatory adjectives," which she did indeed use over freely in the old days before she learned better than to speak in public of ex-Senator Ingalls as an "infamous scoundrel," played a very small part in determining the conservative and sensible Kansas farmers to cut loose from their old party affiliations and seek a remedy for their declining prosperity. In the days when Mrs. Lease in her "anarchistic" talk as to the pleasure it would afford her to "pull at one end of the rope," her talk along that line carried little weight, and served rather to alarm and repel than to convert. 'Twas not by such "argument" as epithet that the farmers of Kansas were led in their righteous revolt against the tariff and other humbuggery which had been practised upon them.

It was by reason of that educational organization the Farmer's alliance, and its systematic study of conditions, that the great change was wrought. Hence the Star should retract its blighting paragraphs regarding Mrs. Lease. That lady did not contribute to the educational work of the alliance. She was not even a member thereof until after the intellectual and political revolt was an accomplished fact.

Not so easy may the organs of plutocracy shirk responsibility for the political changes in Kansas and elsewhere. Right here at the capitol, under the dome which sustains the goddess of liberty, the rights of the people were wrested from them. Here is where the supreme mischief was done. Here is where the crime of '73 was perpetrated. Here is where the fostering paternalism which has upbuilt princely fortunes for a favored few, resides. And the people have located the mischief. All this shallow attempt to make out the people of Kansas as ignorammuses who have been wrought upon by some sort of nonsensical twaddle not worth the time and type to put it into print.

There is but one way to "put down this uprising of the people," and that is to do justice, to cease legislating in the interest of money and attend to the interest of men.

The Ethics of Fusion.

From the National Spectator.

Political parties stand for something or nothing. Political platforms are either right or wrong. Voters either believe in a platform or they do not. There is but one logical course for a voter who believes in a principle, and that is to vote for a candidate who believes in that principle. A belief in a principle and vote for a candidate who believes in an opposite principle places a voter in a ridiculously inconsistent position.

Men who profess to be reformers should keep within reform lines. Reform parties are not instituted for the purpose of furnishing positions for ambitious office-seekers. Office is but an incident of party success. Two things are wrong for a professed reformer—first, voting for the candidates of a party opposed to reform ideas; second, to compromise on principle for the sake of opposition voters.

With this preface let us consider fusion in the concrete. The first case at hand is that of the Hon. Marion Cannon. Mr. Cannon was a populist leader of national repute. He was his party's candidate for congress. To him the party looked for wisdom and guidance. That he would keep "in the middle of the road," no one doubted.

The election passed, and Mr. Cannon was elected to congress. The populists were delighted. Eight populists were elected to the state legislature. A candidate for United States senator was nominated. Surely Mr. Cannon will do all he can for the election of a populist. So thought the people. But it turned out that Mr. Cannon's influence was promised to Stephen M. White, a democrat. It was a mutual affair. Two ambitious politicians wanted office, and they formed a combination for that purpose.

Well, our readers know the sequel. A populist legislator for votes had pledged himself to White. Mr. Cannon's influence kept him in line for democracy. For a two years' position for himself he granted a six years' position to a democrat. If nothing else was involved, it was an unfair bargain for his party. For six years the populists are shut out of a position that we might have captured in two years.

In Kansas the democrats endorsed the populist state ticket. For this endorsement they claimed and secured a United States senator. In the same state the populists endorsed a few democratic candidates for the legislature, who were elected. In the trouble between the populists and the republicans, the democrats showed their gratitude by going over to the republicans. In Wyoming the populists endorsed the democratic candidate for governor. Did the democrats concede them a United States senator for their endorsement? Not much. They refused to elect, and the governor appointed a millionaire democrat. In Nebraska alone, where each party stood on "its own ground in the campaign, the democrats and populists combined and elected a populist United States senator.

When people or parties hunt together they must divide the game. Moral: Do not hunt together.

The Principle Back of It.

"The Omaha platform," says Editor R. B. Hassell, of South Dakota, "was a nationalist one—nothing more, nothing less. It declared for government ownership of railways, telegraph lines and banks. This is a time when every good citizen has his thinking cap on. He is determining for himself where duty calls. The great political struggle for which the armies are gathering is between the nationalist idea and that of the private monopolist. One million and eighty-four thousand voters have already arrayed themselves on the side of the people. Millions more belong there, if they but lay prejudice aside and follow conviction."

The National Women's Alliance Incorporated.

A charter for the National Woman's Alliance was filed with the Secretary of State September 24, 1901. The incorporators are the wife of Senator Peffer, the wife of Congressman Otis, the wife of Secretary J. B. French, of the State Farmers' Alliance, Mrs. Emma D. Pack, editor of the Topeka Farmer's Wife, and Mrs. Fannie McCormick, worthy foreman of the Knights of Labor.

THE OBJECTS OF THE ASSOCIATION IS TO ESTABLISH A BUREAU FOR THE BETTER EDUCATION OF WOMEN ON SOCIAL AND POLITICAL QUESTIONS AND TO DEVELOP A BETTER STATE, MENTALLY, MORALLY, AND FINANCIALLY, WITH THE FULL AND UNCONDITIONAL USE OF THE BALLOT.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Fannie McCormick, president; Mrs. Emma D. Pack, secretary, and Mrs. Blina A. Otis, treasurer, with the following vice presidents:

Mrs. M. B. Cloud, of Alabama.
" Emma Ghent Curtis, Colorado.
" Annetta Nye, California.
" Marion Todd, Illinois.
" Anabella McCann, Kentucky.
" P. A. Stafford, Missouri.
" Eva McDonald Vales, Minnesota.
" S. E. V. Emery, Michigan.
" Elizabeth Rodgers, New Jersey.
" Anna D. Weaver, New York.
" L. D. Sillison, Arkansas.
" Alice J. Taylor, Mississippi.
" Mary M. Clardy, Texas.
" Anna L. Diggs, District of Columbia.
" D. E. Pierce, Washington.
" Mary E. Lease, Kansas.
" E. M. Wardal, South Dakota.
" Eleanor Goodrich, Iowa.
" Mary L. Joffe, Ohio.
" Marie C. Bonham, Indiana.

The FARMER'S WIFE, published at Topeka, was designated as the official organ.
The committee on constitution and by-laws report the following:

DECLARATION OF PURPOSES.

In view of the great social, industrial and financial revolution now dawning upon the civilized world, and the universal demand of all classes of our American citizens for equal rights and privileges on every vocation of human life, we, the industrial women of America, declare our purposes in the formation of this organization as follows:

- 1st. To study all questions relating to the structure of human society, in the full light of modern invention, discovery and thought.
- 2d. To carry out into practical life the precepts of the golden rule.
- 3d. To recognize the full political equality of the sexes.
- 4th. To aid in carrying out the principle of co-operation in every department of human life to its fullest extent.
- 5th. To secure the utmost harmony and unity among the Sisterhood, in all sections of the country.
- 6th. To teach the principles of international arbitration and, if possible, to prevent war.
- 7th. To discourage in every way possible the use of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage, or the habitual use of tobacco or other narcotics injurious to the human system.

CONSTITUTION.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. The name of this organization shall be the National Women's Alliance.

Sec. 2. The officers shall consist of a President, Secretary and Treasurer, also one Vice President from each state and territory represented, and an Executive Board of five.

Sec. 3. Officers shall be elected at the regular annual meeting in each year.

Sec. 4. It shall be the duty of the President to preside at all meetings of the organization.

Sec. 5. In the absence of the President, one of the Vice Presidents may preside, as the meeting may select. Each Vice President shall have charge of the work in her state until a state organization is perfected, and shall act as the general organizer of her state and report the progress of the work to the National Secretary every month.

Sec. 6. The Secretary shall keep a correct record of the proceedings of the Alliance, conduct the correspondence, keep the official seal and authentic all documents, receive all moneys and turn the same over to the Treasurer and take a receipt therefor.

Sec. 7. The Treasurer is to receive for all moneys and pay the same out upon the order of the President, countersigned by the Secretary.

Sec. 8. The Executive Board shall have charge of the organization when the Alliance is not in session, and shall examine the books of the Secretary and Treasurer prior to the annual meeting and report the condition of the same, and shall provide for the time and place of meeting of the Alliance when not otherwise provided for.

ARTICLE II.

STATE ORGANIZATION.

SECTION 1. A state organization shall be chartered by the National President whenever seven local organizations are formed, in compliance with the National constitution.

Sec. 2. Each community shall be organized under the direction of the State Organizer, whenever ten members are enrolled.

Sec. 3. That each community shall have a representation in the state organization of one delegate for every twenty members or fraction thereof in excess of ten, provided each organization shall be entitled to one delegate.

Sec. 4. That each state organization shall be entitled to one delegate to the National Alliance for every 100 members in the state or fraction in excess of fifty.

STATUTORY LAWS.

SECTION 1. Any woman desiring to advance the social, moral, intellectual and financial condition of her race, can become a member of this Alliance by signing this constitution and declaration of purposes, and paying the fee of 30 cents and a monthly due of 5 cents to the secretary of their local assembly.

Sec. 2. That it shall be the duty of the secretary of the local organization to send to the secretary of the State organization the sum of 15 cents for each member enrolled, and 5 cents each quarter out of dues paid in by each member during the quarter.

Sec. 3. That the secretary of the State organization shall send to the secretary of the national organization the sum of 5 cents out of membership fees received during the quarter, and one-half of all dues paid into the State secretary during the quarter.

Sec. 4. That all charters shall be issued from the National Alliance. State charters shall be furnished at $5.00 and local charters at $1.00.

Sec. 5. This constitution and by-laws can be amended at any time by a majority vote of the National Woman's Alliance at any regular annual meeting.

Mrs. M. E. Lease,
Committee.
Mrs. B. A. Otis,
Mrs. M. C. Clark,
The incorporators are the executive board for the first year.

Mrs. FANNIE MCCORMICK, Pres't.
Mrs. EMMA D. PACK, Sec'y.

Woman's Chronicle.

Published every Saturday.

MRS. KATE CUNNINGHAM, Editor.

MRS. MARY BROOKS, Associate Editor.

TERMS, $1.00 Per Year, IN ADVANCE.

Cor. 2nd and Louisiana Sts., Little Rock, Ark.

JOHN SPEAR,

Wholesale and Retail Dealer in

5 AND 10 CENT GOODS.

525 Kansas Avenue,

NORTH TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SILK DRESS FREE!

We will GIVE AWAY absolutely FREE, of every object black or colored SILK DRESS pattern of 15 yards to any young lady in every town in America, who is willing to introduce to her friends "THE MODERN QUEEN," a large 16-page 61 column, illustrated magazine, one of the best published. Devoted to Fiction, Fashions, Jewels, Fancy Work, Home Decorations and everything pertaining to the household. Send at once for the magazine one year on trial and a package of elegant silks to select from.

Address, THE MODERN QUEEN CO., 76-78 30 Center Street, NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mention this paper.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes. Medic Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enameled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each we will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE,

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, compared type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla bin, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, Toronto.

"A vast amount of trustworthy matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass, a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified: will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

Our Offer. By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manilla binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuits, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers, looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and gives information about these things which ladies particularly wish to know, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a poetic and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra-fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

JOHNSON & FIELD CO.

RACINE, WISCONSIN. MANUFACTURERS OF

"THE RACINE" FARM AND WAREHOUSE FANNING MILLS

DUSTLESS GRAIN SEPARATORS AND LAND ROLLERS.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly, have greater capacity, built stronger and heavier, and better finished than any other Mills.

Six different sizes, two for Farm use, four for Warehouse, Elevator, and Millers use.

The Land Rollers are the BEST and CHEAPEST for the money.

ALL MACHINES WARRANTED. Write for Circulars and Prices before buying.

We can vouch for the reliability of this firm.—Editor.

These Mills and Separators have long been used by the Farmers, prominent Millers, Grain and Seed Dealers throughout the United States, who highly recommend them as being the BEST MACHINES ever made for cleaning and grading Wheat, Barley, Oats, Corn and Seeds of every description.

They do the work more thoroughly,

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, MAY, 1893.

VOL. 11, NO. 10.

MRS. M. C. CLARK,

Vice President of Kansas F. A. I. U.
Lectures Before the Osage County Alliance.

She Entreats the Brothers and Sisters to be More Diligent in the Discharge of Their Duties.

This Lecture Should be Read Before Every County Alliance.

MADAME PRESIDENT, BROTHERS AND SISTERS:—I am extremely glad to be with you this day. I am pleased to see a worthy sister filling the important position of presiding officer. It is seldom indeed that the mantle of honor is thrown upon the shoulders of woman, but today I do find that such is the case here and it gives me great pleasure to congratulate the sister on the important position she so ably fills, and you members of the order on the spirit of unselfishness and generosity which prompted you to place her there. I feel sure you will be proud of her ability to sustain her position. The Alliance will not go down while earnest men and women strive to build up the order, rather than let it fall to pieces by inactivity.

The little school houses of Kansas are becoming historic through the Alliance; they have been and must continue to be, the beacon light to guide our footsteps on to the paths of knowledge. It is in our schoolhouses that the farmers gather to study and discuss questions of vital interest and importance to them, and to devise ways and means to better their condition. We have long been toilers, but many of us have never been students. We have produced, and others have reaped the benefits of our labor. From the products of our labor have sprung up churches and school houses and comfortable homes all over the land, and after they have spent the very best years of their lives to accomplish all this, we find them today meeting together to talk over the present conditions of our country, and trying to see how they can save their homes from the hands of the spoiler, how they can make the future bring back to them the comforts and peace and happiness that they have thoughtlessly allowed to slip from them. We have been asleep, and slept I think too long; so long that we are fearful our rights are trampled under foot, and our once proud boast of free Americans is numbered with the past. But perhaps we have awoke before it is too late; perhaps we may by interchange of thoughts and ideas, see wherein we may regain our lost independence and rights. Men are asking each other, why should these things be, what has caused the hard times, why are so many losing their homes after all these years of toil and self-denial? Is not this a government of, for and by the people? Why, yes, but then don't you see, while you toiled day after day, refusing to spend a part of your time in study and recreation, always maintaining you had not the time now but may be you would have in the years to come. I say while you were thus toiling, there has been a certain class of men who have been profiting by your labor. Had you taken a little more time to read and study and in meeting occasionally with your neighbors to discuss and talk about various questions pertaining to good government, you might have saved much of the sorrow, trouble and unrest that seem to be occupying the minds and hearts of mankind to-day.

In view of all these facts, knowing that on you depends the perpetuity of our government, and that it will require wisdom and determination to do so, how dare you for one moment neglect your duties to your order? To me it seems passing strange that knowing the necessity that brought the Alliance into existence, and that affairs are still as they were, why you do not stand by your obligations and never cease trying to build up the organization that was created to better your condition. The Alliance is a child of necessity, born to purge and purify our country of all the vices and corruption that are fast making our America a laughing stock of other nations.

On you, brother and sister, will devolve the duty of making our country better than it has ever been, and in order to be successful in this it is necessary to keep up and sustain our sub-alliances, to be ever at our post of duty. See to it that we do our utmost to make our order what it should be. We are builders not alone of character, or for to-day, but we build for future generations and for good government, not for to-day only, but for all time. How necessary then that we do our work well. Let me tell you, brother and sister, that staying at home, absenting ourselves from our meeting, allowing vacant seats to take the place, or to be as silent witnesses of a careless, disinterested member. I ask you in all confidence, do you think you can afford to do this, are you so secure in your rights, are your brothers and sisters all prospering, do you all fully understand what we were born to do and how best to do it? In other words, do you know and understand what our system of government should be? If not, then see to it that no meeting shall take place that shall find your place vacant, and while there give the members the benefit of your thoughts and ideas. It is by this method that success will be yours. Make it a point to be always punctual, come prepared to read or sing or take part in the discussion. "Oh," I hear some one say, "I just cannot talk in public, I am not a good reader, I cannot sing, so what can I do?" You can help to encourage others by your presence. Every effort we make to better ourselves and thereby better mankind, we are doing grand work. I trust we may not become weary of well doing too soon. The feeling of brotherly love that is ours through our order has made itself felt and we feel that we are fast becoming an important factor in this land. In our hands and by our powers, rests the peace, prosperity and ultimate happiness of our beloved country, and do you think for one moment that we can accomplish this labor of love by neglecting the task we have undertaken. The Alliance in an order that we can look upon with pride; we boast of its power, of its pure motives, its unselfishness, its faithfulness, its uplifting and refining influence. We can all see its social and educational features can never be fully estimated.

I repeat again we are builders, and while we build let us do our work well; make the foundation of our children's characters pure, noble and unselfish that the structure of our government may be built upon a foundation deep and strong, founded upon the eternal rocks of justice, truth and liberty. In looking over the past, we view with sadness our many mistakes; we have been too trusting; we have allowed shrewd business men to look after their interest and ours to our detriment, and it will be only by a long pull, a strong pull and a pull all together, that we can get back that which we have lost, our liberty and just rights, and a careful selection of pure, upright, honest men to represent us in our halls of congress. The women of this country have their eyes on your actions, brothers, and look with doubt and dismay at the results of your recent elections. You have been, or I think tried to be prudent in this matter of late, but we have not yet reached the standard that we dare to do what we know to be right. Now it is necessary that we keep our lights burning, that we get on our armor and battle for the right, and cease not until victory is ours. We ought to do our own thinking and not allow ourselves to blindly follow after others without counting the cost or knowing the results.

There has never been a time when literature could be had at so little expense, and if those who are able to would see to it that none go hungry for want of something to read, all would be in a position to take part in the discussions that make our meetings of so much interest and benefit to us. Much reading induces much thinking and reasoning and thus you qualify yourselves to vote intelligently, and I wish that our laws were so adjusted that no man could vote that could not read. But I digress; I wish to confine my talk to the need of Alliance work in all its various methods.

Mr. Clark and myself visited Dover alliance a few weeks ago, and though the night was very dark and the roads in a bad condition, we met a goodly number of earnest, active, enthusiastic members. I was very agreeably surprised at their manner of conducting their meetings which were so different from any I had ever attended that I attributed their good attendance to it. I was told they usually had a house full. It did me good to look into their faces and note their earnest, thoughtful expression; it spoke volumes. And oh, how I wished that all of our sub-alliances could feel the same interest in this grand work. But too many are so willing to throw their share of the work on some brother or sister or that they know will do it rather than let it lag or go down. This is all wrong, this spirit of selfishness. Pardon me if I speak too plainly on this subject. It is not pleasant to be reminded of duties unperformed, but I feel I am justified in this instance, for I would plead with you in behalf of our order. "Oh, no need of that," some one says, "I am a true blue alliance man, but I am so tired when night comes that I do not feel like going out, or when I go to town I have so much to do I cannot get the time to attend our county Alliance." Well, may be so, but all might make the same plea, and with as much truth as yourself; then whom shall the duty devolve upon? Are you willing to pay some one to do your thinking, and do you think it would be a successful way to do? Again, you often hear the remark that the Alliance has accomplished its mission. Can that be true, when on every hand we hear the cry of distress when little bodies are famishing with cold and hunger, when men, wild-eyed and haggard from starvation, look each other in the face and give expression to thoughts not pleasant to hear, and when mothers look with weary heartache and despair on their children and long for the bare necessities of life to give them and deny self, that they may prolong life in those who are dear to them, when men are forced by circumstances to take the life of a tramp, trying to prolong a miserable existence? Is it any wonder that men become skeptical and deny the existence of a Supreme Being? Is it any wonder that men look with distrust on their neighbors and think it is useless to try for an honest living when the signs of the times would be, get a living somehow no matter how.

Brother and sister, this much we must do, follow the divine injunction, do unto others as we would have them do unto us; stretch out a helping hand to those in distress; lift up the fallen; put into daily practice the precept of our order. We are too apt to forget it outside of our halls, never try to get an advantage of a brother or sister in a business transaction. If we strictly follow the instructions and obligations of our ritual we are good Christians; when we do not do this or fail to do it, then we have violated our obligations and are fit subjects for censure. It is not necessary for me to say more on this subject, but I would like before I close to say a word to the sisters. I am so pleased at your positions in your Alliance, and I have no doubt of your ability to honor the position you occupy. But there are some Alliances in which the women receive very little notice. I am sorry to make this statement, but a short time ago I received a letter from a good sister, a stranger to me, asking for information to start a woman's alliance. She said that the women had become tired of going to the Alliance and sitting there as mere figure heads; that they were never given any part of the work, in fact did absolutely nothing. Now the thought has occurred to me, it might be well for us to send some of our papers written by some of the sisters over the state, and have them read in the county sub-alliances. It might make them see their errors and help them to get started aright, for I maintain that the sisters did do a good share, and are still doing a good share of the work in the Alliance, and in no instance can the brothers afford to overlook or ignore their assistance.

Now the busy season is once more upon us, let me urge you to be regular in your attendance. See if we cannot rebuild our organization upon a more solid and permanent basis; take a deeper interest. You do not know how much good can be accomplished by so doing. Sisters, insist on doing your part; let the brothers understand that you know and understand what you think is right. Brothers, you have so studiously endeavored to keep woman in the background, get out of that old rut of selfishness and prejudice that has so long had its grip upon you, and yield to wife, mother and sister her just rights; bring into your politics the mother element, it will elevate and dignify and bring a purer, a more refining influence in the atmosphere that surrounds our voting places.

You need not fear the results, for a woman will not do that which will bring doubt or ridicule upon her party. She will scorn a bribe—scorn any system that would crowd her principles to the background. How different the outcome of the last election! How humiliating the cry, "Oh, I told you so!" Brothers, stand by your colors; be honest; stand shoulder to shoulder and the result will be victory.

Contributed to the "Farmer's Wife."

Success to the noble band of philanthropists who have left their political fathers and their political brothers for the cause of humanity. Comrades, hold the fort until reinforcements come to the rescue. When woman's suffrage shall have become an established fact, conquest will be in sight. Victory won, your noble deeds will take a prominent place in the bright galaxy of humane endeavor.

R. Cox.

TO ALLIANCE SECRETARIES.

We want to increase our circulation to

20,000 BY JULY 1ST.

In order to do this, we propose to place the subscription so low that every one will take it.

ONLY 25 CENTS FOR A WHOLE YEAR
In Clubs of Ten or More.

Now, Brothers and Sisters, here is your chance to help us get them.

Will You Do It? This offer does not apply to sections alone, but to everyone.

READ

Mrs. Clark's Lecture to your Sub or County Alliances, and then announce that you are prepared to send in a club at 25 cents each, or try and get a club in your neighborhood.

Mrs. Otis Answers Mrs. Johns.
TOPEKA, KAN., April 25, 1893.
Mrs. Laura M. Johns, President K. E.
S. A., Salina, Kansas:

DEAR SISTER:—Your welcome and interesting letter of the 21st inst., has been received and read before our club as you requested. It gives me great pleasure to know that you are pushing the work of this progressive period along the line of equal suffrage, even though it be under serious embarrassments, owing to the very active part you are reported to have taken in the legislature muddle of last winter; and rest assured that anything this club can do to promote the cause of equal suffrage will be cheerfully performed. But you will pardon me if I suggest to you that our organization is not a "suffrage association," but a political club that endorses equal suffrage and temperance, and is intended as its name would indicate, to include within its scope of education every progressive idea along the lines of Political Economy, Industrial Improvement, and Social and Domestic Sciences, in other words it is political, industrial and literary in character, thus giving encouragement and opportunity to progressive workers along all these lines of action. It is true that we endorse the Omaha platform of the People's party as the most progressive type of political thought yet brought to public attention by any National party, but by so doing it is not to be understood that our field of progressive research is to be confined to the platform of any political party.

Our membership are free to circumscribe the globe in search of truth along the three distinctive lines marked out in the constitution.

The Initiative and Referendum in legislation will claim a large share of attention as one of the progressive reforms that will popularize our present methods, make students of political economy of all our citizens and help to eliminate partizanism from politics. I regret that we do not agree on the temperance policy. As brave and progressive women, we cannot afford to sacrifice principle upon so vital a question. All anti-temperance people know full well the danger to the open saloon and the liquor traffic when women are once enfranchised, and they will fight us just as hard if we are silent upon this question as if we are bold and outspoken, and by such a course we forfeit the genuine respect of the strong temperance people. It is my opinion that public control and the elimination of the element of profit from the liquor traffic is the true position for the Woman's Progressive Club. In view of the name we have adopted, it would be hardly consistent for us not to place temperance along beside of woman suffrage. I am not able at the present time to name any women speakers from the Democratic party on the subject of woman suffrage; but so far as our club is concerned, we stand ready to join hands in the equal suffrage cause with the women of all parties, and will do all in our power to influence the action of all public journals and party conventions of any political faith.

The women suffrage question is in our State politics to stay until it is settled, and settled justly. I assure you of the most friendly feeling on the part of our club, and the exercise of a charity so broad that no difference of opinion, political or otherwise, will prevent the members from cheerfully cooperating with all who are striving for the emancipation of the women of our State and Nation, the improvement of society and the advancement of the race to a higher and better civilization. Permit me to be frank and say that I think the reason that the many of the People's party folks have been led to believe that you were organizing Republican suffrage associations, is because of the active part you have taken in partisan politics while you were holding the highest office in a non-partisan organization.

With most friendly greeting and good wishes for the future, I am very truly, BINA A. OTIS.

The Labor Exchange Work.

The progress of the Labor exchange is yet mostly in an educational line, but we can truthfully say it is making more rapid progress than any other industrial organization in the history of past ages. The intelligent mind need only to have this system of true reform properly presented to grasp many important features peculiarly adapted to the Labor exchange plan, which are of the greatest importance to genuine co-operation. The news of our work is rapidly spreading throughout most of the states from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the Gulf to the Lakes. Organizers are being called for in every direction. At points where branches are in working order the result is more than satisfactory to those interested. At different points a different method of operation is usually selected. At the Olathe Branch No. 6, they have instituted an employment bureau to find work for hands and hands for employers. They also set in operation an overall and shirt factory, employing about a dozen hands the first week with many more applications for situations, and as rapidly as the manufactured goods can be disposed of more help will be employed. They may soon put in a plant to make brooms. The friends of fair exchange should remember Olathe Branch No. 6, when buying anything in their line. Address J. H. Clyde. Fraternally yours, Olathe, Kan. E. J. ERNST.

State Meeting of Kansas Women.

A general invitation is extended to all women interested in our work, to meet with us in Representative hall at Topeka, June 13th, at 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of perfecting a state organization. Sisters, let us work and see if we cannot do something to better the condition of the many less fortunate brothers and sisters. In other words, let us try to bring sunshine into the hearts and lives of our careworn people.
BINA A. OTIS, Pres.

DEAR MRS. PACK:—My paper bears the blue mark, and I hasten to renew my subscription as I cannot afford to do without your paper.

Yours truly,
- CORA A. MORSE.

The Farmer's Wife.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Ed.
TOPEKA, KANSAS.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER

THOUGHTS FOR WOMEN OLD AND YOUNG.

One Striking Case When Meanness Was Exhibited by a Lovely Woman—Women Are Not Timid—Give the Baby an Air—Remedy for Earache.

She is Not Always Generous.

SOVELY woman can be mean, sometimes, observes a writer in Kate Field's Washington. The other day a young, pretty, and well-dressed lady was walking down the avenue, evidently enjoying to the full the delicious Spring sunshine. Suddenly she seemed in distress. For awhile the cause was not obvious, but as she began to make frantic efforts to reach her untied shoe the passers-by recognized the source of her discomfort. Before she had succeeded in reducing the flapping shoestrings to order a ragged little colored boy stepped forward, removed his tattered hat, knelt in the muddy street, and tied the shoe with grace and dexterity. In the woman's hand were a card case and a chubby looking little purse, but she walked away with merely a "thank you," and that not very graciously given. The boy looked slightly astonished as he got up and brushed the mud from his ragged trousers.

On the edge of the sidewalk stood an observant man, very plainly but decently dressed. He had watched the entire performance with quiet enjoyment; and as the boy rose he took from his pocket a bit of paper, and pencilling a word or two on it called to the disappointed young Raleigh, who was turning away: "Here, boy, run after that young lady whose shoe you tied and give her this. Here's a quarter for your trouble. There's no answer."

The boy went in one direction, the man in the other. I am not curious above the average, but I would have liked to see that bit of paper.

Are Women Timid?

Women timid, forsooth? writes Junius Henri Browne in a pertinent article entitled "Are Women Timid?" in the Ladies' Home Journal. Much as we may talk of their being so, our talk is not an echo of our reason. Every man of us relies on their courage measurably in the ordinary affairs of life, and entirely in most of its crises. We usually begin with our mothers, and end with our wives. But whatever their relation, they are an inestimable help to us in every great trial, by their calmness, strength, decision, and helpfulness. Unhappy he who at such a time has no feminine counselor, sustainer, and friend. How many men have borne testimony to the invaluable aid of woman, when the future blackened, and fortune seemed inexorable! How many more might bear such testimony, were they but willing to speak! Is woman not constantly upholding weakness, inspiring morality, stimulating higher motives? Not a hundredth part of her efficiency in this way is known, nor ever will be known. She is rarely conscious of it herself; it is regarded by her as a part of her duty, as a matter of course, and he who is supported, lifted to a loftier level, often chooses, through self-love, to ignore her assistance. Her acts, under such conditions, are the result of moral courage, the essence of all courage, and of the kind of which men have so plentiful a need.

The Baby's Arring.

It is well to send the babies out for an airing every day, if they are confined to competent hands. But often baby's tender little body is jarred and wearied by being rattled over a rough road, bounced into and over gutters, and thumped over crossings at head-long speed, until it receives more harm than good from its outing. Almost every one knows what a difference there is in drivers: how one man will, however easy the carriage, take you to your journey's end feeling that you are black and blue from jolting about, while another will avoid every loose stone and moderate his speed at the rough places. Be sure that babies suffer quite as much as their elders from unskillful charioteers. It is perfectly easy to guide a child's cab over a gutter without a jar, but it is seldom done by a servant, and often not by mothers themselves. Not only are the little ones jerked and bumped along in this tiresome fashion, but they are kept hours in their carriages without change of position, getting benumbed and cold in consequence. This is quite wrong. Young infants should take the air in the arms of an attendant. Very serious evils result from subjecting their tender bodies to jar.—Hail's Journal of Health.

Consequences of Female Nerve.

The Saunterer has a friend on the staff of a Western newspaper with whom he often exchanges interesting clippings. The latest bit received at this office was the following, cut from a small paper published in North Dakota: "The many friends of Mrs. E— will be pleased to learn that she is not in serious danger, as supposed. The particulars of the unfortunate affair are interesting. It seems that Mrs. E—, while going up-stairs, saw a mouse run behind a barrel. Her cries were heard by the hired man, who hastened to the scene, armed with his gun and followed by his faithful bull dog. Mrs. E— then took courage and poked the barrel with her broom. The mouse ran out, the dog started in pursuit, the hired man fired, the dog dropped dead, Mrs. E— fainted, and the hired man thinking he had killed her and that he would be arrested for murder, took to his heels and has not been heard of since. The mouse escaped."—Boston Budget.

Remedy for Earache.

"I am afraid I have greatly interfered with my own practice," said a celebrated aurist, "by giving the following advice to my friends. At the first symptoms of earache let the patient lie on the bed with the painful ear uppermost. Fold a thick towel and tuck it around the neck; then with a teaspoon fill the ear with warm water. Continue doing this for fifteen or twenty minutes; the water will fill the ear crifice, and flow over on the towel. Afterward turn over the head, let the water run out, and plug the ear with warm glycerine and cotton. This may be done every hour until relief is obtained. It is an almost invariable cure, and has saved many cases of acute inflammation. The water should be quite warm, but not too hot."—Housekeeper's Weekly.

The Cup That Cheers.

If you are going to give an afternoon tea, first of all you have got to have good tea, the kind that hasn't a bitter taste and doesn't shatter your nerves—the cup that really cheers; then you want to put in, in the form of the very best cream, the milk of human kindness, and after this a square cut of the sugar of good will. Tea a la Russe, with its bit of lemon, inclines one to biting speeches; tea taken with a glass of rum as an addition gives one the courage to be bold, but tea taken properly, as I describe it, will make women amiable, kind and considerate. At least it ought to, for there is nothing in this wide world as good as a cup of tea, except a true lover and a faithful dog.

Wicked Wits.

FORTUNE and women are partial to fools.—Piron.

He knows little who will tell his wife all he knows.—Thomas Fuller.

For whom does the blind man's wife adorn herself?—Spanish Proverb.

NEVER ask a woman her age; ask it of some other woman.—Jerrold.

He who trusts women draws water with pitchers full of holes.—Fleming.

WOMEN detest the serpent through a professional jealousy.—Victor Hugo.

WOMEN are afflicted by trifles; but they are also consoled by trifles.—Victor Hugo.

It is said that friendship between women is only a suspension of hostilities.—Rivarol.

THREE things never trust out of your hands: your horse, your gun, and your wife.—Anon.

BRILLIANTS of the first water are those given to stay the wife's first flood of tears.—Scarron.

IDEAS are like beads—men never have any until they grow up, and women none at all.—Voltaire.

WOMEN will sometimes confess their sins, but I never knew one to confess her faults.—Hali Burton.

WOMAN is a most charming creature, who changes her heart as easily as she does her gloves.—Balzac.

THE music at a marriage procession always reminds me of the music of soldiers entering upon a battle.—Heine.

A WOMAN too often reasons from her heart; hence two-thirds of her mistakes and her troubles.—Bulwer Lytton.

I do not know that she was virtuous; but she was ugly, and, with a woman, that is half the battle.—Heine.

WOMAN is mistress of the art of completely embittering the life of the person on whom she depends.—Goethe.

A Long Monday.

In the Galtee or Gaultie Mountain, situated between the counties of Cork and Tipperary, there are seven lakes, in one of which, called Lough Dilveen, it is said St. Patrick, when banishing the snakes and toads from Ireland, chained a monster serpent, telling him to remain there until Monday. The serpent is reputed to call out every Monday morning in Irish, "It is a long Monday, Patrick."

Those who go for berries should not retreat from briars.

STYLES FOR THE SICK.

GOWNS THAT ARE PECULIARLY BECOMING.

Colors that Harmonize with the Delicate Complexions of Invalids—Soft-Colored Satees and Short-Waisted Dresses Are the Thing.

Worn by Weak Women. New York correspondence.

O doubt it seems a good deal to expect that the invalid in a house shall help the well ones to enjoy life and the sunshine of health, but it is what many a bed-ridden woman has done, and in doing it the invalid often finds her best release from pain. There is a certain beauty that often belongs to the one who is denied strength. Delicacy of complexion, a softness of skin, and a gentleness of expression often render such a face really lovely. The usual invalid is slender, too, and has about her a suggestion of frailty that adds to the picture she may so easily make. But too many fancy that "dress" is not for them and that anything will do. I am not going to say a word about how much real use an invalid may be in a house, but I will talk dress to her a little. For those who may not leave the bed there are such dainty soft-colored satees, made short so that they will easily tuck down in the back. They have big sleeves and plenty of soft lace about the wrists and falling over the poor thin hands, which so relieved only look white and delicate and the envy of many a well visitor. The neck should fasten snugly and at the side rather than in front, thus giving a younger and fuller look to the face, and softening the worn lines of the throat. The jacket may be made of rose-colored China silk and must be absolutely crisp and fresh-looking. Wrists and throat can tie closely by ribbons run through the lace.

BLACK BENGALINE.

Of course, the hair is carefully brushed; better cut it to a pretty childish length; it will be more becoming so, and easily cared for, and if it does not curl it must be put up every night, or curled with the irons often enough to keep it looking pretty. The locks about the front and sides should be trimmed so they will keep out of the eyes, and those in the back, perhaps, left a little longer and held loosely in place by a knot of fresh ribbon. You will hardly believe how much better you will feel all dressed up, with a flower tucked in the button of the jacket and your hair prettily in curl. Indeed, even the invalid, too weak and ill to sit up in bed, will feel better for having her nightgown pretty close about the throat and wrists, and a fresh flower tucked into a buttonhole! Try it and see. The sufferer who will never be any better and whose only change is from bed to couch may look so sweet and pretty when she is up and on the couch. Her nightgown is soft, fine stuff, and white as only fine wash goods can be. It has a double ruffle of lace all down the front.

ROSE-PINK CREPON.

On the couch, before she is laid upon it, there is spread a silk garment, made very wide between the shoulders, and full at the neck, with great sleeves.

With plenty of length to spare and a ruffle all down the opening, it is all so loose that the invalid can tuck her arms into the sleeves and draw the fullness about her when she is laid down. How "dressed up" she will feel and how fresh and sweet she will look. Of course, soft elder down stuff may be used instead of silk, or even a rich, warm brocade.

The beauty of the invalid should be always consulted. Rich scarlets sometimes make a brunette seem to have almost a touch of color in the pale face. Blue, the soft baby blue, must be used carefully, because it is apt to emphasize pallor. For the invalid not quite so helpless it will be a great comfort to get out of those gowns into something that seems trim. Gowns made to fit in the back and over the hips, and with just the front loose, are pretty. Let them be of crisp fine wash goods whenever possible. She is so tired of soft things! Another pretty style fits close to the natural lines of the figure. Not close enough, of course, to bind anywhere, but at least without folds. A very wide ruffle passes over the shoulders and down each side, not to a point at the waist line, but narrowing a little. The space between is lined with ribbon set to imitate a pointed yoke. This gives narrowness to the figure, and the width of the ruffles on either side of the yoke really conceals the width of the waist.

PINK NUN'S VEILING.

The accompanying sketches set before you five costumes which are suitable for the woman who is compelled to remain indoors. The model of the initial is in hazel-brown woolen poplin, trimmed with brown and green shot velvet. The waist hooks behind, and at the neck there is a pointed yoke of pleated poplin. The loose velvet jacket is finished with bretelles of velvet, and edged with a jet fringe. It fastens invisibly in front. The front of the skirt is cut sufficiently long to allow the end to be laid in folds and be hooked to the jacket in front, thus giving the toilet the appearance of being cut princess.

Black bengaline is the material of the second dress, and it is trimmed with jet passementerie and black lace. The costume is cut princess style, and has two pleats behind that take away the fullness, but the front has an inserted piece that falls in folds from the bust downward. The fronts are edged with passementerie, which also goes around the bottom and the square yoke at the top in the manner indicated. The yoke of plain bengaline is trimmed with a lace flounce put on plain and having the points resting on the yoke. A wider flounce falls over the shoulders, and from the armholes to the waist is an arrangement of the lace. The sleeves are of bengaline and require the whole breadth of the silk. They are pleated into the armhole instead of being gathered. The gown is lined with silk.

FICHU OF ROSE CREPE DE CHINE.

A lovely gown of crepon in a delicate shade of rose-pink is next shown. The skirt is quite plain but very full, and around the waist is a band of satin ribbon, terminating in front in two loops and long ends. The bodice has large revers of crepon, edged by a frill of deep guipure in cream. The vest and lower part of the sleeves is of rose satin covered with guipure.

A pretty wrapper is seen in the fourth illustration. Its Watteau pleat hangs away from the gown at the waist and the belt which confines the fullness at the back passes beneath it. The front is loose and buttons beneath the draping. The sleeves are puffed and trimmed with silk.

The last example is a pretty fichu of rose crepe de chine with insertions of black silk. The crepe is laid in folds and sewed to a lining of rose faille. The collar is also of faille and is pointed in the center but round in back where a clasp is placed.

Copyright, 1903.

EPIDEMIC SMALL-POX.

Something About the History of This Loathsome Disease.

It is a singular fact that epidemics have a sort of periodicity. After an outbreak and extensive spread, a disease generally disappears for a term of years, for while it remains here and there endemic, it shows no tendency to become epidemic. Then at length it starts afresh, and sweeps perhaps from nation to nation.

About twenty years ago there was a severe epidemic of small-pox in England and America. In recent months the disease has been causing alarm in many parts of England and Scotland. Up to the middle of January it was prevailing—though in general the cases are of a mild type—in about fifty localities, including Liverpool, Manchester, Edinburgh and Glasgow. In the last city thirty-four new cases occurred within ten days previous to the report.

The Lancet says: "The story is a serious one at this especial season of the year. No newly improvised hospitals can be expected to stay the spread of the disease."

England contends with the pest at a disadvantage. Many persons of influence do not believe in vaccination, write against it, and oppose it in every way they can. The opposition has grown greatly during the long absence of the epidemic.

According to the Lancet the vaccination laws are practically in suspense. In some districts many children have never been vaccinated. Even where the letter of the law has been complied with, vaccination has been done in a very lax and untrustworthy way, and there has been an almost entire absence of revaccination.

Again, the large class of tramps and the many filthy lodging-houses into which they crowd at night greatly aid in the spread of the disease.

At Manchester a man was found suffering from small-pox at a large lodging-house. The inspector made arrangements for his removal, but as soon as the officer's back was turned the patient bolted from the house, and when he was captured some hours later, he was believed to have infected a considerable number of his fellows.

If the epidemic reaches this country we shall not expect it to spread extensively, for the laws respecting vaccination are intelligently carried out. Still, the large immigrant population will need looking after, and lodging-houses will need rigid inspection.

Revaccination should be properly attended to. The authorities also should promptly provide means for the isolation of patients.—Youth's Companion.

NAPOLEON'S DREAM.

How the Great Emperor Proposed to Invade England.

Napoleon frequently spoke of the invasion of England; that he never intended to attempt it without a superiority of fleet to protect the flotilla. This superiority would have been attained for a few days by leading ours out to the West Indies and suddenly returning. If the French fleet arrived in the channel three or four days before ours it would be sufficient. The flotilla would immediately push out, accompanied by the fleet, and the landing might take place on any part of the coast, as he would march direct to London.

He preferred the coast of Kent, but that must have depended on wind and weather. He would have placed himself at the disposal of naval officers and pilots to land the troops wherever they thought they could do so with the greatest security and in the least time. He had 1,000,000 men, and each of the flotilla had boats to land them. Artillery and cavalry would soon have followed, and the whole could have reached London in three days. He armed the flotilla merely to lead us to suppose that he intended it to fight its way across the channel. It was only to deceive us.

It was observed that we expected to be treated with great severity in case of his succeeding, and he was asked what he would have done had he arrived in London. He said it was a difficult question to answer, for a people with spirit and energy, like the English, was not to be subdued even by taking the capital. He would certainly have separated Ireland from Great Britain, and the occupying of the capital would have been a death-blow to our funds, credit and commerce. He asked me to say frankly whether we were not alarmed at his preparations for invading England.—Century.

Ventilation Needed.

Alexandre Dumas, the father, loved his little joke, and was fond of having it at the expense of his son, who had not so keen a sense of humor.

At one time the father visited the son, and was invited into the garden, which was but little larger than a pocket handkerchief. There they sat under the one little tree, and fanned themselves.

"I am suffocating," said the elder, at length.

"What shall I do, father?" asked Alexandre.

"Open your chamber window," said the father, mischievously, "and let a little air out into your garden."

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free.

If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Give us the ballot!
The small, mighty ballot we need.
Brothers, our homes are endangered,
'Tis to save them, for the ballot we plead.
Little children are shoeless and hungry,
Poverty pinches the dear little ones;
Through laws you have made, my dear brothers,
The land shark has robbed them of homes.

But if you will give us the ballot,
We'll forgive all mistakes of the past;
The wrongs we have suffered by your voting
In our memory, instead of first, shall be last.
We will bury quite deep and forever,
The people who dare to oppose
The giving of homes to the homeless—
Haunts of vice, from our children, we'll close.

REMEMBER those who are not for equal suffrage are against the great reform movement.

We think of running a "Man's" column in our paper, as many of our exchanges have so generously donated a column to the "women."

It is said that the railway managers of Holland have found it impossible to get men to work the switches who can be depended upon to let liquor alone, and have therefore substituted women.

If the mortgage company cannot devise any other plan by which to beat the people out of their homes, they call on the real estate men, and they always find some one to do the dirty work.

Don't forget to read Mrs. Clark's lecture on first page and get us up a club. Only twenty-five cents a year. If you can't get ten, get what you can. Small favors always thankfully received.

THOUSANDS of the most notable women in the world will visit Kansas during the next eight months. The FARMER'S WIFE will keep you posted on the great petticoat campaign, as our exchanges please to term it.

The amendment giving women the right to vote at all State, county and municipal elections finally passed the Minnesota senate, March 21st, by a vote of thirty-one to nineteen.—Ex.
Hurrah for the senate!

A NEW law in Japan confines the publishing of newspapers to men over twenty-one years old, and forbids it to women altogether. We expect the next law they pass will prohibit the women reading the papers published by their "lords."

An exchange says, let the women vote and they will be under the influence of the preachers, as a majority of them belong to the church. Supposing the above is true, would it not be a thousand times better than to be under the influence of the hoodle politicians?

If the governor and attorney general will keep up good courage and keep the liquor element under control until the women get the ballot, they will show their appreciation of the good work by voting against every man who is in favor of the liquor traffic.

If there is one of our readers who does not read the Corner Stone, published at Lansing, Mich., and edited by "Mother Emery," as she is known all over the world, do not wait but send at once and subscribe for it. While reading, if you have ever had the grand treat of visiting with her, you will imagine you are in her presence and listening to her appeals in behalf of suffering humanity.

THE Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union was a child of necessity, born of the exigencies of the times, and yet is destined to be the Moses of the oppressed, and in spite of the combined efforts of plutocrats and demagogues will yet lead the wage-slaves of the United States into the sunlight of financial freedom even if it necessitates the filling of the deep ditches surrounding plutocracy's citadel with the lifeless bodies of designing demagogue from its own ranks.

ELLEN BATTELLE DIETRICK says that it is a fact that Anne Ella Carroll originated the plans for Grant's campaign and that Lincoln urged her to secrecy until they were put into execution, the plea being that American soldiers would not obey orders coming from a woman. That is only one of the many instances where a woman's plan proved successful. Some of the most successful enterprises we have to-day the plans were formulated by a woman, and yet we are classed with idiots.

Our readers will be pained to learn that Sister Annie Diggs is not enjoying the best of health. In the last campaign her strength was over-taxed. She saw the need of work and refused to sit with folded hands, thus responding to many a call when for her own good she ought to have been resting. But her loyal heart was filled with pity for the over-burdened, over-taxed people, and she felt she could not rest until rest and relief came to them, and she hoped to be able to say something to cause them to investigate for themselves.

We wonder if our patrons have treated themselves to a yearly subscription to the National Spectator of Fresno, California. We are well acquainted with the editor, Bro. M. W. Wilkins, and we can vouch for his having a considerable amount of good sense, considering that he is an old "bach," and has thus been deprived of a wife's advice and influence. Nevertheless he says many a good, sensible thing occasionally, if not often. Listen to some of his wise sayings. "If I had a daughter she should be the wife of no man who would love her less washing dishes than playing the piano." And we remember reading in one of his papers once upon a time, this: "No man shall work in my office who thinks he is woman's superior." We need more just such men. Its too bad though that he will insist on being an old "bach" when he could make some nice girl happy.

We are one great family in this world, to be sure we are divided by the laws of society into small groups, still we are one family just the same. The interests of one are the concern of all, and if each one of us would appoint ourselves a committee of one to look around and see whom we could help and in what way we could best help our fellow creatures, instead of cultivating the only talent that some people (unfortunately) are gifted with, that of doing or saying something that will dim the eye with a tear, burden the mind with an extra care, or pierce the heart with a pain, how much more beautiful would this world be. Where thorns adorn the pathways to-day, by a little act of kindness, a word or a smile, perhaps to-morrow the same pathway might be strewn with flowers. Oh! let us do all we can to lighten the cares of our less fortunate brothers and sisters and do not forget, that sometimes it takes a braver heart to live than it does to die.

We call special attention to the circular letter of the W. P. P. C. in the columns of this number and the committee do most earnestly entreat all women "white" or "black," who can conscientiously enforce our by-laws and constitution (and we can not see how any woman could refuse to endorse them) to join us, for the time has arrived when the welfare of our country, our homes and of our children are endangered as never before, and it behooves every woman who is a lover of good morals, good principles, good government, sobriety, integrity and honor, to come to the rescue and make their demands known. And furthermore, to say to any who have not the above qualifications, who attempt to run the ship of states or nation, that we, the moral, sober, Christian and intelligent (if you please) half of this nation, declare that none but the best men and women shall guide the ships, and that we demand a fair representation of our sex in all proper places.

Mrs. JOHNS, in a letter to the president of the W. P. P. C., said that many Republicans, who had always been strong suffragists, opposed it now, fearing that if the ballot be given to women, the farmers' wives would vote for the People's party and thus defeat the Republicans. Right they are. The Republicans would not even have a road overseer. Every woman would vote for the Populist ticket, provided they were good men on the ticket. If the Republicans thought they could handle the votes of the women they would, every man, be in favor of enfranchising them; but they need not expect any favors from the women, for the women know the only hope of saving their homes lies in the success of the People's party. They have worked hard, waited patiently, endured much and are tired of promises made that were never intended to be fulfilled by the heartless plutocrats that have had possession of this state for half a century. But thanks be to the Ruler of the Universe, their doom is sealed, and the over-worked, worn-out men and women shall die in a home and justice shall no longer trail in the dust.

REPUBLICAN SIMPLICITY.

The Republican National convention placed in their platform the following plank and the dispatches say that Mrs. Foster was actually proud of it:

"We recommend to the favorable consideration of the Republican clubs of the United States as a matter of education, the granting to the women of the state, and nation the right to vote at all elections on the same terms and conditions as male citizens."

Recommend equal suffrage as a matter of education. Well, well, that's strange. We supposed the Republicans were well informed on all these questions. Got to educate, have you?—pass word, grip, barred doors—better get a hayseed fellow to give you a few pointers on economic questions. Say, you had better get a few ideas on money, land and transportation. Yes, educate by all means and when you are sufficiently well informed you will be, if not too much of an office seeker, a desirable member of the great reform party, but don't take thirty years more time educating. Send and get a library of reform books and let in the light, perhaps many of you can redeem yourselves yet.

KANSAS' HOME IN CHICAGO.

In answer to the many letters we have received in regard to a notice which appeared in the columns of the April number of the FARMER'S WIFE, setting forth the benefits that the people who contemplate visiting the fair could derive through taking the advantage of the liberal offer extended to them by the members of the lodging organization started in Chicago, with W. H. Hanna as president, we have this to say: That whoever places themselves in the hands of this company to take care of their interests and look out for their comforts while attending the fair, will have no reason to complain of the treatment and accommodations they will receive. We have not the good fortune of being one of the number who are engaged in this enterprise and will reap no benefit from the proceeds of their success or failure, whichever it proves to be, other than do all we can to look out for and guard the interest in every way possible, of a class whom we represent. A class of people like ourselves, who would like to see the grand productions of this nation, but who have no money for the soulless, heartless money grabbers of which Chicago is, at this time, overrun with. Hence we advocate the advisability of all labor organizations and societies corresponding with this company before starting to the fair.

Brother Hanna is president of our State Alliance, an old Granger, a brother Knight and in fact, a member of every organization that the word labor is attached to. You will always find him with his countenance beaming and radiant; always happy, and what is better still, he is the possessor of that rare gift of making every one else happy. Possibly his hair may be full of "hay seed" but he will have a warm, hearty welcome just the same for all who come. While Sister Clark, our vice-president of the State Alliance, you will always find beaming over with happiness and joy, and best of all, always faithful and ever watchful for the comforts of her guests, a very entertaining and interesting conversationalist, and so she welcomes you in her own genial, happy way. You will at once feel though in the great city of Chicago, filled as it will be and must be with the good and bad, the rich and poor, from all countries, that you have indeed found a haven of rest and safety, for you will at once have that feeling of safety and protection, after having met Bro. Hanna and Sister Clark.

We hope those who have honored us by writing and asking our opinion of this association, will kindly accept this open letter through the columns of our paper, and please consider it a personal answer to your own letters, as it will save us much time, and at present we are devising some plan by which we may be able to manufacture a little time, and this is one of the many plans thought of.

ERROR.

TO THE WOMEN OF KANSAS.

Kansas has always been in the vanguard of political progress; and, in view of the fact that an amendment for equal suffrage is now pending at our next state election, and in view of the fact that a new political organization is now a dominant factor in our state politics and will soon assert its power in national affairs, and needs the molding influences of the patriotic and progressive women of this and other states to assist in directing its course aright, the Woman's Progressive Political Club of Topeka (recently organized) publishes this circular and bespeaks for it your candid and careful consideration.

We urge upon you the importance of forming a local club wherever one can be effected throughout the state, at the earliest date possible, and request that your local club send two delegates to a state meeting to be held the second Tuesday in June next at Topeka, Kan., to form a state organization, and take steps toward securing a national organization of the Woman's Progressive Political Club of America, at as early a date as seems practicable. To assist the women of each locality to speedily organize, we attach hereto a copy of the constitution and by-laws of our local club, which can be so modified as to suit each locality. By reading this constitution you will see that the main object of this movement is to carry on a vigorous campaign of education along the lines of political economy, industrial co-operation and domestic science. We recognize that the great industrial and social problems of the day, demanding solution at the hands of the American people, can only be solved by intelligent and prompt action at the ballot box. The intelligent exercises of the franchise implies correct education; and, to aid in this education, the W. P. P. C. is organized. We are not only anxious for equal suffrage, but are more anxious that suffrage be enlightened and purified; that the politics of our state and nation be made more than a mad scramble for office, or muddy whirlpool of corruption; and that the sciences of government be made an earnest study. It will be our aim to discuss the requisites to abundant production, equitable distribution and economic consumption, and to show that land ought not to be monopolized, that labor is the most important factor in creating wealth, and its steady, remunerative employment is essential prosperity. That money and transportation, as factors of distribution, must be under public control. In short, it will be our aim to teach the present and rising generation that life ought to be more than a mad, competitive struggle for a bare existence; that concentrated wealth becomes a menace to free government and popular institutions; that every human being has an interest in the welfare of every other, and that "an injury to one is the concern of all;" that war is legalized murder and a relic of barbarism and ought never to be resorted to among civilized nations; that it costs too much suffering, anxious, continued watching, and patient labor to rear a child to manhood to have him exposed to wholesale murder on the battle field; that the maternal as well as the paternal element should pervade all human statutes. It is in vain for us to shield our children from evil influences during childhood if, in later years, the open saloon and gambling hall exist to make moral and physical wreck of their manhood. It is in vain we practice rigid economy in our domestic household if the "mortgage fiend" absorbs our earnings. It is in vain we toil from dawn to dark, from youth to old age, if the tax gatherer garners all our savings, and the railroad king demands the lion's share of the earnings of a lifetime.

It is to help right these and other wrongs that the W. P. P. C. has been organized, and we invite all sisters for reform to join us. "Honest toil" and not the "gold dollar" ought to be ruler of America.

CONSTITUTION OF LOCAL CLUB.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1. This organization shall be known as the "Woman's Progressive Political Club" of Topeka, Kansas.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1. The object of this organization is to assist in educating women in pure, progressive politics, in the broad field of human labor, and in the social and domestic problems of the ages. This society is political, industrial, literary and educational in character.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1. The officers of this club shall be president, vice president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer and chaplain, and an executive board, which shall be elected annually.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1. This club shall have the following standing committees, viz.: Committee on progressive politics, committee on social and domestic problems, committee on labor exchange, committee on printing and circulation of reform literature.

SEC. 2. Each committee shall have a chairman and secretary, whose duty it shall be to report their actions in writing, at each meeting, and make suggestions for advancing the work of the club.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1. At each meeting of the club there shall be two special committees appointed, viz.: (1) Committee on programme for next meeting; (2) committee on invitation and reception.

SEC. 2. The regular meetings of this club shall be held upon the second and fourth Tuesdays of each month. The meeting on the second Tuesday in May of each year shall be the annual meeting for the election of officers. Special meetings may be held as the club shall direct, or may be called by the president and secretary by giving five days' notice.

ARTICLE VI.

SECTION 1. At the annual meeting of the auxiliary for the election of officers, there shall be elected three members of the club as an executive board, who, together with the president and secretary, shall have charge of the society when the club is not in session, and shall report at each meeting.

ARTICLE VII.

SECTION 1. This constitution may be amended or repealed by a two-thirds vote of the members present, provided such change does not conflict with the state constitution. Notice of such proposed changes shall be given one month in advance, except at the regular annual meeting in May of each year.

ARTICLE VIII.

SECTION 1. There shall be no membership fee, but members shall pay ten cents monthly dues.

BY-LAWS.

1. Nine members shall constitute a quorum for doing business.
2. The secretary shall keep a list of the members, and shall call the roll at each regular meeting.
3. No person shall be admitted as a member of this club, who is opposed to equal suffrage, or to the control of the liquor traffic or suppression of the liquor saloons.
4. The Omaha platform shall be the basis of the political action of this club.
5. The order of business of each regular meeting shall be, viz.: Calling to order, devotional exercises, roll call, reading minutes of last meeting, reports of officers, reports of standing committees, reports of special committees, miscellaneous business.
6. These by-laws can be amended, altered, suspended or repealed at any regular meeting by two-thirds vote of members present.

Miss EVA HARDING, M. D.,
Chairman.
Mrs. J. G. OTIS,
President W. P. P. C.
Mrs. GRACE POTTS,
Secretary W. P. P. C.
Mrs. M. H. McLALLIN,
Mrs. D. I. FURBECK,
Mrs. I. W. PACK,
Mrs. R. E. HELLER,
Mrs. H. A. WARNER,
Mrs. L. L. HOPKINS,
Committee.

A Lovely Letter.

BALDWIN, KAN., May 9, 1893.
MY DEAR MRS. PACK:—Your most excellent April FARMER'S WIFE was duly received and duly tucked into the bottom of a paper holder, by some one who did not know its value. Had it not been for my semi-occasional impulse to empty the overflowing receptacle, it might have lain an undiscovered mine. I assure you I did not have the least further desire to straighten out things until I had read every word of your side of the paper. I see by the blue pencil mark that my subscription is due. Enclosed please find fifty cents. My dear sister, Mrs. Pack, my whole life is wrapped up—reputation, all I have and all I am, is given over to the welfare and uplifting of, first, my own sex, and then humanity. Your beautiful entreaty in your letter I have just read, for my co-operation in the grand work ahead in the W. P. P. C. club meets my hearty amen, more so, as you say, because of "non-fusion." I am glad you give me credit of being in the "middle of the road." I have used all the influence I have had to prevent fusion, from the little township elections to those of the state and national. I shall begin my first work for the W. P. P. C. in my own subordinate Alliance, of which I was the first woman to join years ago, and to which many women now belong.

Lovingly and fraternally yours,
MRS. I. C. BAIR.

Malaria.

Humphreys' Specifics Nos. ten and sixteen speedily and permanently cure malaria and bilious fevers. Price, 25 cents each at all drug stores.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—or—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely

pure and soluble.

It has more than three times

the strength of Cocoa mixed

with Starch, Arrowroot or

Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

REAL RURAL READING

WILL BE FOUND IN THIS DEPARTMENT.

Cattle Breeders and Feeders Are Building Silos—Drill Manure with Seeds—Pruning Orchards—Horseshoes Will Be Cheaper—Cleaning the Cellar—Recipes, Etc.

Silage for Cattle.

Every year broadens the field of intelligent cattle feeding. Step by step, perhaps slowly some years, cattle breeders and feeders alike are building silos and are coming to a true approach of this method of farm economy. The testimony is now about uniform in behalf of silage. The period of mistakes, which prejudiced so many, seems to be about past. Mr. C. S. Barclay, a well-known Shorthorn breeder, briefly alludes to his own experience in the Breeders' Gazette as follows:

"I built me a big silo last fall and put up about 18 acres of heavy corn after it was fairly glazed—in fact I cut and shocked a part of it for fear of frost. It was very dry and it got pretty well dried out before we put it in the silo. It did not save quite so well as that we cut and put in green; but mixed with bran it makes a good feed for cows and young cattle as I think I ever fed, and it is so easily handled and fed. Unless my experience is different from now until it is fed out I think it will be a long time before I will be without silage.

We have now 100 head of Shorthorn cattle in the herd, and "nary a grade or scrub. Pure breeds are cheap enough for me now. We are milking some Cruickshank cows, also some Lady Sale Princesses, and from anything we can see the milk is good to use and the butter will sell for as much as scrub butter and tastes first-rate on buckwheat cakes.

We were weighing some short 2-year-old bulls the other day and they brought down 1,570. We thought that pretty good for silage bran with oat straw for desert. Hay is too high-priced to use much of it for Shorthorns. With snow 20 inches deep and all feed in fields covered for over three months even straw stacks are a luxury, but for all that the cattle are coming through the winter in good shape."

Mr. Talcott, the old Dairy Commissioner of Ohio, whom we have before quoted, gives the following advice in the Ohio Farmer:

"Some of the farmers who have said so much against silos when they knew so little, or nothing about them, never could live long enough to fairly express regrets for their self-imposed waste of a golden opportunity to make farming pay. In any good, fair country where corn can be raised to good advantage, $15 will provide ample feed annually for a dairy cow. My herd of 40 head did not cost me more than that for the average of the last five years, and farming on this basis does pay."

Cleaning the Cellar.

In no part of the house is it so important that the cleaning be thoroughly done as in the cellar, writes Maria Parloa, in a practice article entitled "When Cleaning House," in the April Ladies' Home Journal. Not a corner should be slighted. Begin with the furnace. Have the registers closed in every room. Remove all the cinders and ashes and clean out all the flues and pipes. Many housekeepers have the pipes removed, but the smoke pipe is really the only one that it is necessary to take down. This pipe is liable to rust, because of the moisture it gathers from the chimney; nevertheless, if there is no way of heating and drying the house during a cold, damp period in summer except by building a fire in the furnace, it would be cheaper to renew this smoke-pipe every few years than run the risk of having the family made ill from receiving a chill. While the men are in the house to clean the furnace it would be economy to have them clean the flues in the range and also the chimneys. Open the cellar windows, to bring everything into the light. Have the coal bins cleaned. Brush everything free from dust. Now sweep the ceiling and walls as well as the floor. Brush the walls once more. Wash the windows and any closets, shelves, or tables there may be in the cellar. Now have the walls white-washed. Before the various articles stored in the cellar are put back in place, brush them again. Sweep the floor once more.

Horses Will Become Cheaper.

The sooner the farmers in the United States realize the fact that the ordinary and commonly bred horse is likely to deteriorate in value year by year the better it will be for them. The use of cables to drag street cars has already reduced the service performed by horses in the cities, and the extension of the trolley system in the suburbs and the perfection of electric motors, will relieve many other thousands of horses from such service. It has not been so long since nearly all the threshing was done by horses: now only a very small percentage of even the threshing-machines are worked by horsepower. Practically all of the ploughing is now done by horses; but a cheap and practical steam-plough will be shown to visitors to the World's Fair, and it is not improbable that in ten years from now quite a large percentage of ploughing will be done without the aid of horses. The need in the cities and on the farms for fewer horses will tend more and more to reduce their market value. Commonly bred horses will be the first to deteriorate in price; indeed, it is doubtful whether finely bred horses will suffer at all. There is no reason why they should.—Harper's Weekly.

Drilling Manure with Seeds.

It is quite a common experience that concentrated manures if put in with the seed with the drill help crops, especially grain, while if broadcasted on the surface they apparently do little good. This has caused much surprise as the narrow spaces between the drills are quickly filled with roots of the growing grain, and presumptively, there the manure should do more good than just at the point where the seed germinates. May it not be that this difference in favor of drilling with the seed is due to the effect of the germination in keeping the mineral from reverting into insoluble form? Large amounts of carbonic acid gas are given off whenever seed grain sprouts. This is the best solvent. The first roots take hold of the prepared soluble phosphate that they have themselves prepared, and thus make a solid, vigorous growth. There is some carbonic acid gas present wherever young roots penetrate, but is much less in amount than that given off in the germination of seed. Hence less of the mineral element is put in soluble condition where it has been broadcasted, and, so only a small part comes in contact with the seed.—American Cultivator.

Hard Work Pruning Orchards.

The gray-headed old man soliloquized after a half-day's work at pruning a long-neglected orchard: "If any body thinks that Adam had a soft snap in the garden of Eden, with nothing to do but to trim and dress the garden and its trees, I wish he would try what I have been doing all this forenoon, sawing off the large limbs that should have been cut away years ago." But the old man forgets, as complainers are apt to do, that work is usually easy or hard, according as it is timely or untimely. In primeval innocence Adam probably had a fair chance to begin even with his work. Whoever takes the neglect of either others or himself to make good is certain to earn his bread and fruit by the sweat of his brow. Yet as we are finding out how to prune easily by doing it always on time, it may be made as Eden-like as the liveliest imagination can conceive.

Sheep and Swine.

Don't try to fatten too many of all sorts and sizes in one pen. The strong rob the weak. Give all an equal chance.

The properly fattened animals marketed the moment they reach the point where further feed will entail a loss, are always profitable to the feeder.

A hog, when properly fed, makes more meat in proportion to the food consumed, and more also in proportion to the waste material, than any other animal.

Good oats are far preferable to corn for pregnant sows. Oats form the bone and muscle, hence their value for prospective mothers and growing pigs.

The successful stock breeder is one who breeds for excellence, and who endeavors to put upon the market something better than the market contains.

Hogs are at all ages more nearly a cash commodity than any other stock upon the farm. They can find buyers at any time from the day they are littered until they are ready for the pork-barrel.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

CREAM SAUCE.—Beat one-quarter cup of butter, add slowly one-half cup of powdered sugar. Then add two tablespoonfuls each of wine, and cream or milk very slowly just before serving; stir over hot water until smooth.

HORSERADISH SAUCE.—Cook in a double boiler for fifteen minutes one-half cup of cracker crumbs, half a cup of grated horseradish, and one pint of milk; add one large tablespoonful of butter, and salt and pepper to taste. The horseradish should be freshly grated.

CUSTARD PIE IN FIVE MINUTES.—Add two three well-beaten eggs two even tablespoonfuls of flour, three large spoonfuls of sugar, half a teaspoonful of salt, a little nutmeg, and enough sweet milk to fill a well-buttered square pie-tin. Let it stand five minutes and bake till a light brown.

TAPIoca NUT CREAM.—Soak one-half pound of pearl tapioca over night in one and one-half cups of cold water. Cover with three cups of cold water and cook in a double boiler until transparent, then add one-half cup of sugar, and the juice and grated rind of a lemon; turn into small molds. Chill and turn into a glass dish garnished with apricots and whipped cream, sweetened and flavored with chopped walnuts and vanilla.

AGRICULTURAL TOPICS.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

The "Farming-Doesn't-Pay" Farmer—Seed Corn Should Be Carefully Selected—High Cost Not Necessary in the Construction of a Ice House.

Complaining Farmers.

One of the jolly kind of farmers who is always happy, in writing to an agricultural paper, expresses himself as having no sympathy with that class of farmers who are all the time complaining that "farming doesn't pay," and claims that the difficulty lies with the complainant rather than with the business of farming. He said that of the class that complain, you can usually find them and their families at the circus and indulging in matters of pleasure from which no benefit can be derived; and further, that the complaining class are those who spend from fifteen to twenty-five cents per day for tobacco. There is much truth in the writer's remarks. Given health, strength and an energetic disposition, there is little occasion for complaining on the part of farmers. One great trouble is the change in conditions from what existed fifty or seventy-five years ago. Then the labors of farmers, as well as of others, were blessed by some increase and there was a gradual saving. There was less disparity among the masses of the people. While there might occasionally be found one more successful than the mass, there were few that were really wealthy; but in more recent times, by means of booms and speculation, men have become wealthy in a day, and wealth appears to be more concentrated. This has caused a feeling of discontent—a desire to grow rich without labor, and there can be found many who are waiting for something to turn up whereby they may be safely landed in the lap of luxury and ease. But this is wholly incompatible with the business of the farmer; it is necessary that he should prepare the soil and tend the crop if he hopes for any returns. And it makes no difference in what department his efforts are directed—fruit culture, cattle raising, the dairy or general crops—it means the "putting forth of effort, and with that there will be sure to come a moderate increase of wealth. The process of saving must of necessity be slow, but it will be sure, and with care in the investment there will be an accumulation ample for all necessities; with a surplus for pleasure and ease in old age.

The Use of Bran in the Dairy.

As a plant makes all its substance from food, and it is necessary for the production of a crop to supply it with every element of its substance in due proportion, so with animals, every element of the body and the expected product, is to be supplied in excess of those needed to sustain life. Bran, in the opinion of the American Agriculturist, is a valuable food for certain purposes. It supplies the material for making bone, and this is needed by old animals as well as young, for it is known that the bones of an old animal are replaced to some extent during the whole of its existence. It is also an excellent flesh-producing food, and it provides the elements of milk except the fat. Bran has all the needed elements of nutrition for the sustenance of life in the proportion required, but it is deficient in the fat needed for butter. Thus, alone, it is not a suitable food for the dairyman. To furnish the quantity of fat for a pound of butter, a cow must eat forty pounds of bran, allowing for the unavoidable waste. But twenty pounds of corn meal would supply the needed fat, if no other food were used. In practice it has been found that six pounds of bran and the same of corn meal is a good ration for a cow that may be expected to give one pound of butter a day in addition to good clover hay. But as bran is an excellent food for making bone and flesh it is one of the best for growing animals or for sheep rearing a lamb, and making a fleece. An excellent food for calves consists of cut hay, wetted and mixed with—for ten pounds of it—one pound of corn meal, and three pounds of bran. This, with as much good clover hay as will be eaten clean, is enough for two calves per day.

The Selection of Seed Corn.

We should all bear in mind the fact that there is a general law that seems to pervade nature, that "like produces like," and yet there is a difference to degree of quality which, when applied to seeds, should have a governing influence in this selection. In all kinds of cropping, especially of annual crops that come only from the seed planted, selection should be careful, and especially is the case with corn. There is no question but that the yield of the crop may be very much influenced by the seed planted; increase or improvement may result, or deterioration and a diminishing.

What is desirable is to select those ears for the seed that appear to be most productive, have grown upon normal but vigorous stalks, and this can be best done in the field before the corn is cut, and so marked as to be readily distinguishable at the time of husking, and then should be put away in a dry, airy place for keeping till the next year. If selection can be made from stalks bearing two or more ears, we much prefer it, as that tendency is favorable to large production. We much prefer two well developed, medium sized ears upon one stalk to one ear enormously large and imperfect in the matter of being capped out. We consider it a mistake in the selection of seed corn to pick out abnormal ears—monstrosities—in the hope of improving either seed or crop. It is the best specimens of stalks of normal growth, fully matured and perfected in all that goes to make up model ears, that should receive attention. As a rule, little good can be hoped for from attempting to reproduce the freaks which from some unknown cause are liable to occur.—Germantown Telegraph.

Curing Hams.

The Northwestern Agriculturist gives a rule for the curing of pork hams that may prove useful to our readers. Well cured hams are a luxury in every family, while poorly cured hams are likely to become spoiled and so lost, for which reason it is best to exercise a good degree of care. The rule is as follows: For every 100 pounds of meat take five pounds of sugar, five ounces of salt-peter and six and one-fourth pounds of salt, and water enough to cover all the hams when packed down. The hams should remain in the brine thus made until they are completely pickled, which will require longer time in cold weather. After being sufficiently pickled they may be taken to the smoke house and smoked to the taste. Pork hams are frequently spoiled by being taken from the brine before they are pickled through. If even a small portion of the meat around the bone lacks the effect of the salt, if kept into warm weather, it will become tainted.

A Cheap Ice House.

Once more we say that high cost is not necessary in an ice house. The essentials are ground from which the water will run away, sides stiff and tight enough to securely hold the fine packing with which it must be surrounded, a roof good enough to turn rain and free ventilation over the top of the material with which the ice is covered. "Any shed which will furnish these requisites and eighteen inches of chaff, sawdust, fine charcoal, cut corn, fodder, or straw packed hard and tight under, on all sides and above the ice, with both gable ends wide open, will keep the ice better than a $250 stone building," says one who has tried it in the Philadelphia Farm Journal. A pile of ice 8 by 10 feet and 6 feet high will hold enough for any ordinary farm family, with a dairy attachment.—N. W. Agriculturist.

The Best Feed for Horses.

Oats is the best grain to feed horses in good health. Barley is next best. For a steady diet, corn is not wholesome and, if fed alone for any length of time, is certain to produce ill effects from indigestion. Oats have about the right proportions of nutritious and coarse matter to be healthful, while corn has a very large percent of strong food, a good mixture being four bushels of oats to one of corn. Twelve quarts per day of this ground mixture will prove a good feed for any horse while plowing or doing other heavy farm work. Whole corn should be soaked in warm water six hours before feeding. Once a week give horses a feed of wheat bran. An occasional feed of potatoes, apples or roots will prove beneficial, and the animals will relish the change of diet.

Small Farmers' Specialties.

One of the advantages of the small farmer is that he is obliged to get out of the usual ruts. He cannot afford to grow on a small scale the grain and other staple crops that must compete with like products grown by the hundred or thousand acres. But this disadvantage of the small farmer in the end helps him. Selecting some specialty and devoting his attention mainly to that, he soon earns more from a few acres than those who go in the old ruts get from their larger farms.

Miscellaneous Recipes.

LIGHT FRUIT CAKE.—Four eggs, two-thirds of a cup of butter, one cup of milk, one cup of stoned raisins, three cups of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder.

ORANGE JELLY.—Soak a half a box of gelatin in two teacups water, and the juice of three lemons, the grated rind of one and one quart of boiling water. Strain and stir into three cupfuls of sugar. Remove the skins and seeds from eight or ten oranges, cut them into a dish and pour over the jelly and orange juice. Set in a cool place until next day.

PUMPKIN PIE.—For three pies take a quart of sifted cooked pumpkin, one and a half teacupfuls sugar, one-half teacupful molasses, one quart of milk, three eggs, (or less egg will answer if two tablespoonfuls of flour or cornstarch are well scalded in the milk.) a pinch of salt, one and one-half teaspoonfuls each of cinnamon and ginger and a little nutmeg grated on top as placed in the oven. Bake in a moderate oven.

LABOR AND ENTERPRISE.

Progress and Co-Operation—Queer Things from Everywhere.

LONDON has 9,000 sailors. MEXICO needs immigrants. FARM hands are organizing. THERE are 5,000 union barbers. SALT LAKE has a coal inspector. CHICAGO gasfitters want $4 a day. BUFFALO machinists are organizing. ENG' AND has 1,000,000 union men. UNCLE SAM has 5,000,000 Welshmen.

UNIONISM is expanding at Salt Lake.

BOSTON bakers will abolish Sunday work.

BROOKLYN painters get $3 for eight hours.

CINCINNATI bricklayers want eight hours.

LANCASTER, Pa., has a nine hour league.

THERE are said to be 20,000 union bakers.

BOSTON marble cutters are getting together.

NEW YORK has 1,000,000 tenement residents.

CHICAGO has 2,000 Brotherhood engineers.

MEW ZEALAND K. of L. will try co-operation.

CINCINNATI has twenty union barber shops.

WASHINGTON prohibits the sale of cigarettes.

LOGANSPORT stonecutters have just organized.

FLINT glass workers have a surplus of $100,000.

BOSTON cooks have $700 in the benefit fund.

THE eight hour movement is dead at Cleveland.

SYRACUSE shoe workers struck against a cut.

OTTAWA electric companies have amalgamated.

FRERICH miners have formed a national union.

CHENEDE (Col.) silver miners struck for $3.50 a day.

IN Paris one-fourth of the people live in apartments.

A PROPOSED Tennessee law will label convict goods.

NEWBURYPORT (Mass.) textile workers won an increase.

SOME Fall River weavers struck against $7.50 a week.

PARIS has 150 butchers who sell horseshoes exclusively.

A GLASS factory and flour mill will be located at Tacoma.

CHICAGO pattern makers won 25 cents per day advance.

BUFFALO unions want an eight hour day for policemen.

GRAND RAPIDS (Mich.) masons demand 45 cents per hour.

SKAGIT COUNTY, Washington, has co-operative shingle mills.

HEBREW carpenters have separate unions in the Brotherhood.

BUFFALO polishers, platers, and buffers have formed a union.

BUFFALO stove molders kick against working fifteen hours a day.

CONVICT labor will be inaugurated by Idaho under a recent law.

NEWSPAPER writers' unions are cropping up throughout the country.

THE largest boiler plant in the West is to be erected at Milwaukee.

GROELUND believes that socialism will be tried during the next century.

BELLEVERNON (Pa.) window glass blowers will establish a co-operative mill.

DETROIT German printers were granted an advance of 2 cents per 1,000.

A DETROIT dealer was fined $25 for using a counterfeit of the union cigar label.

IN New Mexico the Atlantic and Pacific railroad discharged all union hands.

THE San Francisco Water Committee recommends a reduction in water charges.

WHEELING carpenters want 20 per cent. advance. Employers offer 10 per cent.

A BILL to establish a bureau of labor is before the New Hampshire Legislature.

PROF. SPEIRS of Milwaukee says labor unions are good for employed and employer.

TACOMA commission merchants have organized and demanded cheaper railroad rates.

LONDON (Ont.) tailors want an advance of $1 on coats. They receive 10 cents an hour.

CENTRAL CITY (Ky.) miners struck against a screen that takes 20 per cent. of their coal.

A LAW making fifty-eight hours a week's work is before the Rhode Island Legislature.

TORONTO union tailors want contractors on municipal work compelled to pay 15 cents an hour.

A LAW making fifty-four hours a week's work in factories is before the Massachusetts law-makers.

THERE are 1,400 German union printers and $122,000 has been disbursed by the organization in eight years.

PUBLISHER'S NOTICES.

The appointment of the editor and publisher to a position at the State Insane asylum will not in any way change the management of this paper editorially, and otherwise it will remain the same.

The Topeka Daily Capital, the leading Republican paper of Kansas, has the following to say regarding Mrs. Pack's appointment:

A NEW ASYLUM MATRON.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, editor of the FARMER'S WIFE, has been appointed matron of the Insane asylum, a place occupied by Mrs. Warren for the past eighteen years. Mrs. Pack will fill the position of supervisor of the women's department of the stone building from July 1, 1893, to July 1, 1894, when she will take the position of matron for three years. Mrs. Pack was born and raised on a dairy farm in Pennsylvania, and graduated in the Elmira, N. Y., Female college in 1869; was married to I. W. Pack by the Rev. Thomas K. Beecher in January, 1870, and came west to Iowa the following fall, locating in Boone county on a small fruit farm, where she soon became prominent in the Grange movement. On account of ill health of her husband they sold out in Iowa in 1880, coming to North Topeka, where they have since resided. In 1892, they established the Farm Record, changing the name to the FARMER'S WIFE in 1891. The willing pen of Mrs. Pack as a literary writer in eastern journals has been in keeping with a woman of true western type, an ardent equal suffragist and prohibitionist. Her whole life has been spent in woman's work. She is an earnest advocate of the reform movement from honest motives. The kind wishes of her many friends go with her in the new work.

[From the Daily Press.]

I. W. Pack has received the appointment of supervisor at the Insane asylum. Mrs. Pack will be assistant supervisor until July, 1894, when she will be appointed matron. Mr. Pack and family will move to the asylum the last of June.

DEMOCRATS AND EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

New York, April 27, 1893. To Editor of the FARMER'S WIFE:—The many testimonies to the admirable effects of woman suffrage in Wyoming, by governors and others, have been given almost entirely by Republicans. As the country is now in the hands of the Democrats, testimony from Democratic sources is very valuable. The writer has therefore obtained from the present governor, a strong Democrat, and from the secretary of the Democratic State committee, the letters inclosed, indorsing most strongly the resolutions of the state house of representatives, which advises all other states to enfranchise their women forthwith. These very important statements should receive the widest publicity possible. The resolutions to which they refer are also inclosed.

HAMILTON WILLCOX,
Chairman State Committee,
54 William St., New York.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Cheyenne, Wyo., April 11, 1893.
Mr. Hamilton Willcox, Chairman State Committee, New York City.

My DEAR SIR:—Replying to your inquiry, it is quite true that I agree with the resolution passed by the house of representatives of the legislature of Wyoming, advising the legislature of New York and other states to enfranchise their women. Our experience in this state for nearly twenty-five years, is highly satisfactory in every way. Not one of the objections in the East has proved true, and great good has been done in many directions by the possession of the suffrage by our women. I cordially hope that New York and other states will soon follow our example.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN E. OSBORNE,
Governor of Wyoming.

April 14, 1893.
Mr. Hamilton Willcox, Chairman State Committee, New York City.

My DEAR SIR:—Replying to your inquiry, I have to say that the result of nearly a quarter of a century's experience in this state is correctly expressed by the resolution passed unanimously by the Democratic house of representatives of the legislature lately, which strongly advises the legislature of New York and other states, to enfranchise their women. Our experience in this state is favorable, and I cordially hope my fellow Democrats in New York and elsewhere, will do as our house of representatives has advised.

Yours respectfully,
JOHN CHARLES THOMPSON,
Sec'y Dem. State Com. of Wyoming.

Resolved: By the House of Representatives of the State of Wyoming, That the possession and exercise of suffrage by the women in Wyoming for the past quarter of a century has wrought no harm and has done great good in many ways; that it has largely aided in banishing crime, pauperism and vice from this state, and that without any violent or oppressive legislation; that it has secured peaceful and orderly elections, good government and a remarkable degree of civilization and public order, and we point with pride to the facts that after nearly twenty-five years of woman suffrage not one county in Wyoming has a poor house, that our jails are almost empty and crime, except that committed by strangers in the state, almost unknown, and as the result of experience we urge every civilized community on earth to enfranchise its women without delay.

Adopted unanimously, February 17, 1893.
M. E. BARTLETT, Clerk.

The central link of Odd Fellowship is the essence of all religion—love. Love of God—love of man. Those two loves are inseparable—one is incomplete without the other. A complete fulfillment will bring the millennium.

From Mrs. J. B. Weaver.

DEAR MRS. PACK:—Your circular just received and as requested, hasten to answer. I assure you I heartily approve the idea. Such clubs are a necessity if we desire to vote intelligently and not be swayed by just partisan influence. I have long felt the necessity for such subjects to be discussed by the women. There is a large enthusiastic Suffrage society here, but it seems to me the ladies are fearful of losing their identity to the Republican party if they discuss any question outside of that party. I regret to know the fact that women, after all these years of discussion as to the right of the ballot, are not really willing to inform their minds, at the risk of alienation from old party ties. We must "go up higher" if woman's influence is to assist legislation to that broad plain which we know it should. It was a good stroke, sending the FARMER'S WIFE to the members of the Suffrage society. Mrs. Thomas said: "See what a good thing in this paper." God bless you.

Yours most sincerely,
CLARA V. WEAVER.

Jenness Miller Illustrated Monthly for June.

The June issue of Jenness Miller Illustrated Monthly is replete with entertaining features. There is an endless amount of good reading for both men and women. One of the most interesting articles describes a visit to Sir Frederick Leighton. There are stories, poems, fashions and articles describing dainty work for women in summer. Ten cents a copy, $1.00 a year with premium. JENNESS MILLER CO., 927 Broadway, N. Y. City.

HARTFORD, KAN., May 11, 1893.

Mrs. R. E. Heller, Topeka, Kan.
DEAR MADAM:—Circulars in regard to the W. P. P. C. duly received. I shall take pleasure in calling the attention of the county Alliance to the matter, and also in presenting circulars to some of our active women who are not in the Alliance. Woman is destined to be an active factor in the politics of the future and her influence is needed now, more than it has ever been in the history of our country.

Expressing the hope that the movement inaugurated by the liberty loving mothers and daughters of Shawnee may find foothold in every county, in every township, in every hamlet in the state, I am
Most respectfully yours,
W. B. GASCHIE,
County Secretary.

REMOVAL

Of Keeley Institute at Kansas City, Kansas.

[Kansas City Journal.]
The Keeley Institute at Wyandotte, or Kansas City, Kan., was installed in its new quarters in the beautiful Portsmouth building at the corner of Minnesota avenue and Sixth street, last week.

On March 1, 1893, Dr. Keeley opened the doors of the Kansas City Keeley Institute, and during the year the increase of business has been so great that it has entirely outgrown its old quarters. A little over a year ago three local physicians were operating imitation institutes in Wyandotte, but after the genuine Keeley Institute commenced operations the comparison between the results obtained by the imitators and the genuine were so unfavorable to the former that they closed their doors and went away. Since that time the reputation of the Kansas City Institute has spread all over the State and beyond its confines, and its capacity for taking care of the patients who offered themselves for treatment has been greatly overtaxed. This spring the management, in its search for more commodious quarters in a central location, found what it needed in the Portsmouth building. The cars of the Elevated and the Fifth street cable lines stop at its doors, and it takes but twenty minutes to reach the Institute from Kansas City, Mo. The offices, treatment hall and club rooms are on the second floor with a south and east exposure. All the rooms have been beautifully papered and decorated, and furnished with new and handsome oak furniture. The club rooms of the Keeley League are connected with the Institute offices, and may be freely used by the patients. They are large, cool rooms, facing the south, with no buildings to interfere with the free passage of air. These rooms are furnished with card and writing tables, and supplied with writing materials, papers and magazines.

The medical director of the Institute is a physician of ten years standing, who has received a course of instruction directly under Dr. Keeley, and gives his whole time and attention in caring for the wants of the patients. The business manager is a man of large acquaintance and experience, who is ever ready to answer inquiries and give desired information.

The Kansas City Keeley Institute is one of the best of its kind in the country. The results obtained have been practically perfect. It does not rely upon mineral waters or any outside influences, the treatment being the same as that given at Dwight, where no mineral waters are used. Patients are treated carefully and sympathetically, and are looked after as they would be by their family physician in their homes.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER To All Wanting Employment.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want Live, Energetic and Capable Agents in every county in the United States and Canada, to sell a patent article of great merit, on THE MERRITS. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house-owner, it might not be necessary to make an "EXTRAORDINARY OFFER" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $3000 a month clear, and this fact makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial and fail to clear at least $100 in this time, ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all goods unsold to us and we will refund the money paid for them. Any agent or general agent who would like ten or more counties and work them through sub-agents for ninety days and fail to clear at least $750 ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all unsold and get their money back. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such offers, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making more than double the amount we guaranteed; and but two sales a day would give a profit of over $125 a month, and that one of our agents took eighteen orders in one day. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and these we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage. Send at once and secure the agency in time for the boom, and go to work on the terms named in our extraordinary offer. We would like to have the address of all the agents, sewing machine solicitors and carpenters in the country, and ask any reader of this paper who reads this offer, to send us at once the name and address of all such they know. Address at once, or you will lose the best chance ever offered to those out of employment to make money.

RENNER MANUFACTURING CO., Pittsburg, Pa.

How's This!

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligation made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX,
Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN,
Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.
Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Testimonials free.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

Pointers for World's Fair.
Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While walking may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.
Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited; or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stansfield, North Topeka, or W. C. Garvey at depot.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful Sea Shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address, CHAS. HUNTING, Pensacola, Fla.

Don't Lose Your Health by using dangerous and unreliable medicines. Just what to do is told in a Descriptive Treatise by MRS. LUCILLE DE MOREL, M. D., until lately matron in one of the best known female hospitals in France. Married Women should send for it. It's free and contains information upon the vital subject of a healthful married life.

THE LUCILLE DE MOREL MED. CO., Female Medical Dispensary, Lock Box 733, Denver, Colo.

BUSINESS, MANNERS, KNOWLEDGE.

BROWN'S CORRESPONDENCE and BUSINESS Manual of DICTATION for the use of Teachers and Students of Stenography and Typewriting, containing selected letters of actual correspondence in Banking, Insurance, Railroad and Mercantile business; a chapter on Punctuation, Spelling, and use of Capital Letters; together with a full and complete Spelling List of 27,000 words. Also Special Exercises for Dictation, etc. Cloth, $1.00.

CORRECT A Complete Hand-Book of ETIQUETTE, quiet, by J. B. This book gives much valuable information regarding modern etiquette, rules, usages, manners and customs of polite society, together with a department under the head of "Etiquette in a Nut Shell," being 15 concise rules; also "George Washington's Life Maxims." It is one of the best hand-books of the kind ever offered to the public. Flexible Russia, 50 cents.

EXCELSIOR WEBSTER SPELLER AND DEFINER of the English Language, over 25,000 words and definitions. The illustration gives a fair idea of the shape of the work, which is smaller, more convenient and easier to use. A ready-reference lexicon, a veritable "giant," and has no superior in the publishing world. Of value to all. 320 pages, double column, weight 2 oz., size 5x2 1/2. Bound in Russia leather and indexed. Postpaid, 50 cents.

Any of the above books sent postpaid on receipt of price. Agents wanted. Terms and prospectus FREE.

EXCELSIOR PUB. HOUSE, 29 & 31 Beckman St., N. Y.

Will Be Commenced Next Month.

TOPEKA BUSINESS DIRECTORY

It has been intimated that Topeka business firms would not advertise in our paper for fear of aiding or supporting our cause. The following are not of that class, and we request our readers to trade with them and let them know your reason. Remember these columns are open to all persons that want your trade. Watch for them next month.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUGHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURTON, KAN SAS

SAFE, DURABLE FENCE! ONLY $80 PER MILE. LAND-OWNERS save one-half the cost of other fences. Agents make $200.00 per Cash. The best local and traveling agents wanted everywhere. Write at once for circulars and choose territory; address A. G. Hulbert, Patente, care of Hulbert, Schaff & Co., 304 OLIVE STREET, ST. LOUIS, MO. Factory Catalogue with 300 engraved designs and prices, sent free to any who want factory and wire work or city, cemetery and farm fences, etc.

WE WANT RIGHT AWAY Reliable men in every section of America to represent us, advertise and keep our show cards tacked up in towns, on trees and fences along public roads. Steady work in your own county. $75 A MONTH. SALARY AND EXPENSES PAID EVERY TWO WEEKS WHEN STARTED. J. H. SCHAAF & CO., CINCINNATI, O.

Office 330 N. Kansas Ave. Residence, 1129 Central Ave. (Over Postoffice.)

A. C. DAVIS, M. D., Physician and Surgeon.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Office Hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 1 to 4 and 6 to 8 p. m.

J. W. O'BRYON, D. D. S.

DENTIST.

FIRST-CLASS WORK AT REASONABLE PRICES. Office over Davis & Sheetz store, NORTH KANSAS AVENUE, TOPEKA, KANS.

J. M. KNIGHT,

Furniture, Carpets, Curtains, Glassware, Queensware and Stoves. SOLD ON EASY PAYMENTS. 404 Kansas Avenue.

UNDERTAKING AND EMBALMING.

FINE CHAPEL SEATING 400, FREE. Morgue in Connection. 406 Kansas Avenue. PHONE 62.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC. Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State. Send for Circulars and Prices. J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

B. L. CRANS, 10 Spruce St., N. Y., Room No. 4. Newspaper Advertising. Attractive advertisements prepared and placed in all newspapers and magazines.

Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr. B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

ALL FOR 12 CENTS. AMUSEMENT, FUN AND INSTRUCTION. OUR MAMMOTH GAME PACKAGE contains all the following, and will be sent for 12 cents (stamps): Game of Authors, 48 cards, full instructions; Set of Dominoes; Chess and Checker Board, with men; Fox and Goose Board and nine men; Morris Board, with men; 11 other parlor games; Magic Music; 13 Magical experiments; Mind Reading, Sleight of Hand Tricks, etc.; 50 Conundrums with answers (new); The Clairvoyant, how to become a medium; Parlor Tableau; Game of Letters, and others equally as pleasing. If you cannot write to-day, cut this out and send some other time.

HOME GAME PUB. CO., Brooklyn, N. Y.

ART EMBROIDERY. Why not save money by decorating your own home? You can do this by using THE HOME EMBROIDERING MACHINE. Price complete, with full instructions, $2.00. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Agents wanted everywhere. Liberal rates. Send stamp for terms. Address, The Home Embroidering Machine Co., (Mention this paper.) Kansas City, Kas

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 4 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex.

DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICSVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard baby needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail St. Brown Bros. Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

PENNYROYAL AND COTTON ROOT BARK PILLS for female irregularities. Positive. Ladies, send direct to manufacturer and avoid compounds from irresponsible parties; sent, secured on receipt of $1, with plain directions. S. M. SOLES, Chemist, 214 Delaney St., N. Y.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND—TANSY PILLS. Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail. If you draggists don't sell, send for prospectus and send 4c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX'S SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

HUMPHREYS'

This PRECIOUS OINTMENT is the triumph of Scientific Medicine.

Nothing has ever been produced to equal or compare with it as a CURATIVE and HEALING APPLICATION. It has been used 40 years and always affords relief and always gives satisfaction.

Cures PILES or HEMORRHOIDS—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding—Itching and Burning; Cracks or Fissures; Fistula in Ano; Worms of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.

WITCH HAZEL OIL

Cures Burns, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant. Cures Boils, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Scirrhous, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Fistulas or Scald Head. It is infallible. Cures INFLAMED or CAKED BREASTS and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable. Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.

Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price. HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS. CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 Broadway, New York. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

GLITTERING GOLD

FREE! To every reader of this advertisement who desires to possess Gold in its natural state, just as it is taken from the Rich Mines of the Rockies, we will send a Scientific American Free, 6 Specimens of Gold Quartz, direct from our own mines, which assay $100.00 and over per ton. Each set of specimens carefully packed in a neat box and sent by return mail, all charges prepaid. Offer is in making this Great Offer is to introduce into new SENTINEL, containing 6 large pages, 48 long columns, and Published Weekly, at only $1 per year (former price $2, and 11 views of scenery, along the lines of the Denver & Rio Grande R.R., just "Scientific Line of the World," and "and Ky., the Route." Also, Sketches, Poetry, Etc. ESTABLISHED 1867. To each person sending us $1, for a year's subscription to our paper, we will send the above Handmade Specimens free of charge. No free copies. Don't miss this. Cut this out, as it may not appear again. Mention this paper. Write to-day. We refer to all of the leading business men of Denver and Colorado. Enclose 2 dollars in your letter and address, Rocky Mountain Sentinel, 1838 Curtis St., Denver, Colo.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by CLARA BEWICK COLBY.

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

HATCH CHICKENS BY STEAM

With the Improved Excelsior Incubator. Simple, Perfect, Self-Regulating. Thousands in successful operation. Guaranteed to hatch a larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other hatcher. Lowest priced first-class hatcher made. GEO. H. STALL, Quincy, Ill.

ARE YOU

AFFLICTED WITH CATARRH, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION or any disease of the THROAT and LUNGS? Send for a book of 191 pages, mailed FREE, describing treatment and proper use in each disease. Treatment by inhalation. THE SPECIFIC OXYGEN CO., Nashville, Tenn.

A MISPELLED TAIL.

A little boy said, "Mother, dear,
May I go out to play?"
The son is bright, the hair is clear,
Owe, mother, don't say no!"

"Go fourth, my son," the mother said,
The cat said, "Take over said,
Your guinea knew shot, and painted road,
But do knot lose your weigh."

"Ah, know," he cried, and sought the street
With hart sov full of gloe—
The whether changed—and snow and sleet,
And reign, fell steadily.

Threw snowdrifts grate, throw watery pool,
Ho flue with mite and mane—
Said he, "Though I wood walk by rule,
I am not rite, t's pluse.

"I'd like to meat sum kindly sole,
For hear gun dangers weight,
And yonder stairs a treacherous whole—
Two sloe has been my gate.

"A pence of bread, a nice hot stake,
I'd chews if I were home,
This crowl fete my hart will brake,
Eye love knot thus to roam.

"I'm weak and pail, I've mist my rode,
But here a carte came past,
He and his sled were safely toed
Back two his home at last.
—St. Nicholas.

SAVING THE EXPRESS.

"Well, Kent, I guess we can spare you for a couple of weeks, if you would like to take a vacation," said the general manager of the C. D. & P. Railroad.

Kent Ballard was night telegraph operator for the C. D. & P. road, in the big terminal station at Chicago. He was 18 years old, and as bright, capable and faithful an employee as the company had in the entire system. As the general manager came and leaned over the window shelf of the telegraph office, with his pleasant announcement, Kent looked up gladly and gratefully.

"I would like a little outing, sir," he said, "if it is perfectly convenient. It's been pretty steady work the past year, and I confess that I am a bit tired. When can you spare me, sir?"

"Day after to-morrow, if you wish. We will have a mar at our disposal then, and can put him on your work for a couple of weeks. Have you any idea what you would like to do, or where you would like to go—any vacation plan in which I could be of any assistance to you?"

Kent hesitated a moment. "I have had a plan in my mind for some time, sir," he said, at length, "but I hardly dare to mention it even now. It would be asking a great favor of the road."

"Out with it, my boy!" cried the general manager. "If it doesn't involve us too deeply in financial embarrassment—and he laughed good humoredly—"I can promise you it will be granted."

"I want to make a trip over the road on a locomotive," said Kent. "I should like to go clear to the Pacific coast if there is time. If I could venture to ask you for permission to go out and back with the engineer of one of the overland express—"

"Why of course you can, my boy!" exclaimed the general manager. "Say no more about it. Make all your preparations, and come to my office to-morrow for your pass and written permit, in case anybody should dispute your right of way. I will speak to Mr. Faley, the engineer of the midweek overland, and he will be ready for you on Thursday's out-bound trip."

"Thank you, sir,—ever so much!" cried Kent. "It will be a great pleasure to me, and I shall never forget your kindness."

Kent Ballard told his mother next morning that his pet vacation project was to be realized. "I have always longed to cross the Rockies and see the Pacific," he said, "and now, if you can spare me for a couple of weeks, mother, I am off. Fred and George will take care of you. They have had their vacations already, you know."

On Wednesday Kent went up to the general manager's office and got his pass and permit. "I have also reserved section twelve in the sleeper for you, said the manager. "You will want a good comfortable bed at night, you know. Here is your ticket. And as for your meals, get them in the buffet car regularly. The steward understands."

"Oh, sir, you are too kind!" cried Kent.

"No, I am not!" laughed the manager. "A man can't be too kind—it's impossible. You must remember, too, that you have served us faithfully, in a difficult and responsible position for three years. You deserve a favor now and then, according to my way of looking at things. Well, good-by to you and a pleasant trip."

The midweek overland express pulled out at ten o'clock on Thursday morning with Kent Ballard in the cab of the big Mogul locomotive.

"Our first run will be express for fifty miles," said Mr. Faley, the engineer, "and you will have a good chance to see how No. 312 behaves."

It was a trip full of profit and delight to the young telegraph operator. He was very fond of all kinds of machine, y and the mechanism of the engine proved a most fascinating study as they whirled along over the rails. Then the ever-changing scenery, the bustling cities and towns along the routes, the big rivers over which they steamed on spider-web steel bridges, the wide level prairies, across which they raced at whirlwind speed, occasionally sighting a herd of deer or frightening up a flock of prairie chickens—all these things made an endless program of interest and pleasure for Kent Ballard. Then what a thrill passed through him when at last they came in sight of the towering Rockies, with their terraced foothills, like nature's doorstep to the threshold of the mighty range.

So far the overland express had whirled on its long Western trip without the slightest adventure, had not been an hour's delay. The train was sharp on time, and if everything went well its journey would be completed in twelve hours. They had now reached the ascending grade over the foot-hills, and were slowly crawling upward toward the pass between the great snow-capped peaks, through which they were to gain the Pacific slope. The scenery was indescribably grand, and Kent's eyes never wearied of feasting upon it.

"Oh, if mother could only see these grand mountains!" he thought. "And if I ever got promoted to a good salary, she shall!"

Nine hours passed, and at length the great engine, with an almost human sigh of relief, stopped, panting, on a side track at the Summit station of the "divide." A train of flat cars, loaded with stone and drawn by two locomotives, was slowly puffing up the western grade. The express had to wait on the siding until this freight train should pass and leave the main track clear. While they were waiting, Kent Ballard left the engine and took his seat on the rear platform of the last car, where he could look back at the grand snow-capped mountains they had just passed.

The heavy freight train struggled up the grade until it had reached the lower end of the siding, and then stopped at the water tank on the main track. A few minutes later the express pulled out, and the switchman again set the main track open. Kent remained on the train, looking back at the mountains. Presently he saw the freight train endeavoring to start up again. The engines backed a trifle, and then as the car brakes were released went forward with a jerk.

Kent Ballard suddenly jumped to his feet. What could it mean? The freight train seemed to be backing down the heavy grade after the express, instead of going straight ahead. But no! the engines and the main part of the train were going the other way. Then the startling truth flashed upon the young man. The jerking start of the heavy engine had broken the train in two, and the rear part of it, without a brakeman aboard, was running wild down the steep grade after the express.

What was to be done? Fortunately, Kent Ballard was not one to be easily confused in an emergency. He was noted for always "having his wits about him." Plainly, the first thing to do was to warn the engineer of the express. But this must be done without alarming the passengers and tarowing them into a panic. Some persons would have been just foolish enough, on making the discovery which Kent had, to run back through the train, crying, "Get ready to jump for your lives! There's a runaway freight train on the track behind us!"

But Kent did not even hurry through the cars on his way forward to the engine, lest he should thereby excite the suspicions of the passengers. Even the brakeman did not suspect any danger from his actions as he passed through the train. But as soon as he reached the baggage car, where the conductor was sitting, he motioned the latter to follow him. Rushing to the forward platform, he climbed on top of the tender and shouted:

"Faley!"

The engineer did not hear him at first.

"Faley!"

The man turned quickly.

"Crowd on steam! That freight train has broken in two, and is chasing us down the grade!"

"Good God!" exclaimed the conductor, who had followed Kent out on the platform of the baggage-car. "Let her out, Faley! I will go back and signal you from the rear car."

The conductor disappeared, and Kent crawled over the tender into the engine-cab.

Faley had already "let her out" as much as he dared on so steep a grade. Presently, however, came the clear signal of the conductor's bell, "More steam!" Faley's hand was on the throttle, but he hesitated. "It's worse to jump the rails than to get overhauled on the track," he muttered. "But here goes! I'm in this cab to obey orders!"

He threw the throttle wider open, and the great engine rocked and plunged at most terrific speed down the steep incline.

"Those stone cars must be terribly heavy," exclaimed Kent.

"Yes; how many of them broke loose—do you know?" said Faley.

"Not exactly," replied Kent; "but I should say four or five."

"Enough to smash the whole express to bits!" muttered the engineer. "It's curious how much faster a loaded freight car can travel on a down grade than a locomotive, even. Seems to get a greater momentum.

Good Heavens! he wants more steam!"

The conductor's bell clamored its signal twice. Faley threw the throttle wide open. "There!" he exclaimed, "if that doesn't save us, it will smash us."

Kent Ballard had been thinking very hard for a few minutes. A project was forming itself in his mind. Suddenly he grasped the engineer by the sleeve and asked, eagerly:

"How far ahead is the next station?"

"About five miles."

"Siding there?"

"Yes."

"Telegraph operator?"

"Yes."

"Good! I have a plan. Let me work the whistle. I'll signal them! What is the name of the station?"

"Mineville."

Kent Ballard grasped the whistle cord. In sounds corresponding to those of the Morse code when ticked out by the instrument he signalled.

"Mineville! Attention!"

After a few seconds' pause he repeated the call. "How far are we from the station now?" he asked.

"Between three and four miles," answered the engineer. "You can calculate a little more than a mile to the minute."

Kent repeated the call once more, and allowed a pause of ten seconds. Then he telegraphed by sounds:

"Open the siding, quick."

Then a pause of ten seconds, and again:

"Open the siding."

The station was now in sight. Men were running to and fro in front of it.

"I've telegraphed them to open the siding!" shouted Kent in Faley's ear, for the train was roaring and thundering on at terrific speed.

"And sure enough they've done it!" exclaimed Faley, shutting off steam and setting the brakes. "The signal says, 'Siding open.' You've either killed us or cured us—depends on how close behind the freight cars are."

It was a minute of terrible suspense. The express, its speed slackened just in time by the wonderful air-brakes, glided on to the siding. Would there be time to throw open the main track again before the runaway freight cars came on?

"Jump! We've done everything we can," cried Faley to Kent and the fireman, as the express stopped on the siding. Even as they jumped there was a roar like a thunder peal on the right side of the engine, and a dark shadow passed with the swiftness of lightning.

It was the runaway freight cars thundering by on the main track. The station master had thrown open the switch rod and closed the siding just in time.

It was not long after this experience that Kent Ballard got his promotion; and the next time that he visited the Rockies it was as assistant general passenger agent of the C. D. and P. Railroad. On this trip he brought his mother with him in a Pullman car.—The Independent.

Largest Filter in the World.

The largest filter plant in the world is in New Orleans, and has a guaranteed capacity of 20,000,000 gallons daily. The plant consists of thirty horizontal sectional washing filters, each eight feet in diameter by thirty feet long, and filters the entire water supply of the city. These filters consist of a cylindrical steel shell, built to withstand any desired pressure. The water is introduced along a conduit running the entire length of the filter, just beneath the crown. It filters through four feet of coke and sand, and passes out by cone valves. These valves are imbedded permanently in the cement floor and flush with it. They are filled with screened quartz gravel. In this sectional washing filter the entire force of the reverse current used in washing is directed against one-third of the bed only for about five minutes; then it is shut off and then central one-third of the bed is scoured in the same manner, and finally the remaining one-third is washed. By this system of washing the filter bed thorough attrition and scouring of particles is accomplished, as the entire supply of water and pressure is directed against the one-third of the bed that is being washed, and no partitions are necessary to divide the bed, as the current is forced up nearly in a straight line. All of the impurities are carried off by a waste-pipe, and thus by the use and loss of a small amount of filtered water—usually 3 per cent. of the entire amount filtered is adequate—the washing is effected.

A Room Papered with Stamps.

J. W. Palmer of London, England, than whom there is no postage stamp collector more famous, has a room in his home which is papered entirely with forged postage stamps. There are 70,000 of them on the walls and they are counterfeits of every known stamp. If genuine and uncanceled the collection would be worth at least $5,000,000. The stamps were placed upon canvas and the work occupied four pairs of hands three months. In this room there is also a desk whose top is inlaid with 1,440 genuine stamps, and a screen five feet high and six feet long both sides of which are covered with stamps.

GIVEN UP BY THE SEA.

A Strange Craft of Many Years Ago Flashed by a Volcanic Upheaval.

The Norwegian bark Elsa Andersen came into port a day or two ago with a strange-looking vessel in tow, says a dispatch from Galveston, Tex. This was a small brig of English build, dismantled and in need of repairs, which had been sunk more than fifty years ago, judging from its ancient appearance and awkward rigging, so sailors who have looked at it say.

On the afternoon of Feb. 17, off the coast of Faroe Islands, where the Elsa Andersen had been blown by a recent gale, there was a violent upheaval of the sea about two miles distant from the spot where she was riding, that sent several waves sweeping over her which did much damage and threatened to submerge her entirely. When the alarm caused by this sudden sea had subsided there was seen about a mile off a wreck which had not been there before the upheaval of the bottom of the sea, a phenomenon corresponding to an earthquake on land.

The wreck excited much interest among the officers and passengers of the Norwegian vessel, and an order was issued to approach the strange craft, when it was seen that the remains of her rigging, stumps of masts, and the hull itself were covered by thousands of sea shells, causing the wreck to present the appearance of the miniature ships of shellwork to be purchased at any seaside town. The leaks which had sunk the vessel were now stopped by an accumulation of barnacles, and the derelict now rode the waves like a duck.

A boat load of sailors was dispatched to board the wreck, and they found the hold and the under decks water tight save for a few feet of water which, covering the cargo, had sunk her. But this cargo and the other contents of the ship were entirely destroyed. In what had evidently been the captain's berth were found several iron-bound chests, which had resisted to some extent the ravages of time and the sea, but on being opened the contents were found to be reduced to a sort of pulp, with the exception of a leather bag. This had become hardened until it was necessary to break it open with an ax, when from it poured a quantity of rusty discs, which, being cleaned, proved to be golden guineas of the year 1809, and amounting to the sum of £1,005.

There were also several watches of gold and a stomacher of pearls; these, however, are valueless, having been blackened by the action of the water. This wreck was attached to the Elsa Andersen by a cable and towed to this port, where it is attracting crowds of visitors.

On the fourth day after its detachment from the bottom of the sea by the quake, the water was all pumped out of the derelict, when it was found to contain three skeletons, two of them men and the other a woman's, this last being of a person of gigantic build, and in life of nearly seven feet in height. About the neck of one of the male skeletons was a chain of gold, to which was attached a silver crucifix and evidently a rosary.

A HEROIC GIRL.

Bertha Morton, Who Conducts a Ferry in Southern Connecticut.

Miss Bertha Morton, a 19-year-old girl who has charge of the Flat Rock Ferry on Eight Mile River, in the southern part of Connecticut, is a heroine and has demonstrated her courage on many occasions. At the point where the ferry is established the river is nearly a mile wide and in time of storms is very wild. The ferryboat is a heavy craft built on the plan of a scow. It is propelled by sail and in mild weather is manned by the girl alone, who only calls on assistance when the river is very wild.

One act of her heroism occurred last October. One evening a commercial traveler drove to the ferry and asked to be set across. He drove a spirited horse that after much difficulty was placed on board and secured to the rail running along the deck. When in the middle of the river the horse became frightened, broke his fastenings and jumped overboard, dragging the wagon with him. The commercial traveler, who was standing at the horse's head with his hand on the bridle, was struck by the wagon and knocked into the water. He couldn't swim, and he called to Miss Morton to save him. The brave girl was overboard in an instant, and being an accomplished swimmer, soon had hold of the drowning man, and after a hard struggle got him on board of the boat. Meantime the horse was floundering around in the water. As soon as the man was on the boat Miss Morton took a rope and swam to the horse. She fastened the rope around the animal's head and drawing the horse close to the craft secured the rope to the rail. In this way she towed the team ashore.

BERTHA MORTON.

A few weeks ago she plunged into the river and saved a man's life. Miss Morton has been familiar with the river since infancy, and last fall took charge of the ferry.

CLEVELAND'S SUMMER HOME.

Belvoir, at Washington, Where Other Presidents Have Lived.

President Cleveland has selected his summer home at Washington. The house is the Middleton House on Woodley Lane Road, and attached to it are forty-five acres of well-wooded land. The estate originally consisted of 101 acres, and was known as Belvoir, and this is the name by which it will be known during the four years of Cleveland's administration. Belvoir is within four miles of the White House, and commands a beautiful view of the capital. The country around abounds in squirrels, the hunting of which was the favorite pastime of the President during his former administration. The building itself is old-fashioned and roomy, and everything about it suggests the antique.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND'S SUMMER HOME.

Belvoir has had as guests many illustrious men, and it is related that President Washington once stood on the steps of the old portion of the house and remarked that the capital should either be built upon that spot or upon the spot which was afterward chosen. Gen. Winfield Scott had elected the spot as the site for the Soldiers' Home, but owing to some misunderstanding with the owner at that time it was not taken. Several Presidents have summered at the place. Van Buren spent several summers there, as did Tyler and Buchanan. It was at one time the summer residence of the Baron Geroult, the German minister to Washington about the time of the Mexican war.

It is not known definitely whether the house as it stands now was built by John Plater or Philip Barton Key. They were brothers-in-law, and both of them owned the estate about the year 1800, when the additions were made. Francis Scott Key, composer of "The Star Spangled Banner," spent the greater part of his youth there, and to-day the name of the author of the famous air can be seen carved on one of the window-panes in the front hall. Secretary of the Treasury Robert J. Walker owned the estate twenty-eight years ago, and from him it passed into the hands of the Middleton family.

Conflict of Brains.

A novel method of knocking out an enemy's brains is described by a gentleman who was camping some years ago in the Transvaal. Everything had been made snug for the night, and before turning in he was sitting with some of his companions about the fire. Soon an altercation sprang up between two of his attendants, a Mashoana and a Makololo, who were standing not far off. The object of discussion was a piece of meat they were broiling.

One word led to another, writes the traveler, till both men became extremely angry, and although I did not understand, they were doubtless using the choicest billingsgate that they could command. At length both rushed to the wagon. My servant whispered in my ear, "Assagai, boss!" so I sprang up to prevent them from obtaining these weapons, of which an abundant supply was fastened on the outside.

Frustrated in their attempt to arm themselves, they rushed upon each other. I would have interfered but that my countryman quietly said, "Let them fight it out, or you will have no peace." I let them do so.

Immediately they clasped each other and commenced butting their heads together like a pair of sheep. The blows were terrific, and sounded almost as loud as a well-executed clap of the hands. There was no attempt at boxing, only butting, and so effectively was it performed that blood began to flow from both of the antagonists' noses. After a lapse of five minutes, employed in this kind of exciting work, both sat down to recover breath in order to renew the encounter.

Then I interfered, and about half an hour later I saw the combatants sitting at the same fire and chatting to each other most cordially, as if the recent fight had no place even in their memories.

The World Needs and Must Have a New Deal all Around.

The Flaming Sword.

Year by year clothing costs less, and coal ought to cost the consumer less. The main reason why it does not cost less is that trade in coal is not strictly free; nearly every ton that comes to market is loaded with a tax that is imposed upon it by the necessity of paying somebody interest on the par bonds that were sold from 90 per cent. all the way down to 30, to raise money to pay schemers' prices for coal mines, coal, and to form companies and worthless branch railroads. Over the great anthracite deposits of Pennsylvania has been erected, during the slow years, a rickety mass of corruption, reckless financiering, insolvency and ultimate conspiracy against the rights of the public. To attempt to reconstruct this tottering edifice would be useless; and the efforts of syndicates and bankers to lift it up into symmetry and strength resolve themselves into mere stock-jobbing tricks, with cupid-ity as the jack-screw. But the deposits themselves are perfectly honest and healthy. There they repose under the earth's surface, untainted by fraud, and the firm friend of the people. The state should own them, and should farm them out to those people who will distribute them to dealers and consumers at the lowest competitive prices.—Henry Claws.

What the great banker says of the coal business is just as true of every other business, including primarily—as the sustainer and promoter of all the others, especially his own—the banking business.

Jesus made no mistake when he overturned the tables of the money-changers and spilled out the money.—the instrument and object of every oppression under the sun. That is what he will yet accomplish; its utter destruction and leaving out from the new and righteous adjustment of human affairs, the new heavens and new earth—new church and new state—where-in dwelleth righteousness."

Objections to National Ownership of the Railroads.

The New Nation.

A communication from a New York economic club asks a reply to the following objections to nationalizing railroads:

(1) That if the government owned or controlled the railways, it would give greater opportunities for dishonesty, as it is now claimed our representatives are practically owned by the railroads. (2) The railroad employees would be compelled to vote for the party in power. (3) That railroads are not, as a rule, making more than a fair return on the capital invested. (4) It is claimed by some the trouble is caused not so much by the railroads as by men who control the elevators and storage warehouses, where the products of the farmer can be stored until a scarcity exist and thus gives them control of the market.

That we have answered these objections many times is no reason why they should not be answered again. It is only by "line upon line and precept upon precept" that the new can hope to overcome the old on so large a scale as we nationalists are working and hoping that it may. Prejudice must not be met with resentment, but with infinite patience.

As to the first point made above, it is precisely because our legislatures are now owned by the railroads that we demand that the people shall own the railroads. That is the only way in which the people are to get back the ownership of their representatives. Or take it in another light: The reason the railroads at present bribe the representatives of the people is that the interests of the railroads, being under a different ownership, are not the same with those of the people and are often opposed to them. National ownership will identify the interests of the people with those of the railroads and there will be no opposition of interests to give occasion for bribery.

As to the second point, we may refer to the Omaha platform of the people's party which in declaring for government ownership of the railroads expressly provides that all the employees of the railroads should be placed under the classified civil service rules, absolutely excluding political control over them in any way. To add a practical argument, it may be well to say that in the several political divisions of Australia, in all of which the railroads are publicly owned, it has been found quite a sufficient means of putting an end to all complaints of abuse of patronage, merely to place the tenure of office of employees under control of a non-partisan board containing representatives of the leading political parties. If you want facts instead of theories, here is your fact.

As to the third point, that the railroads are only making a fair return on the capital invested, it may be remarked in the first place that this is not the nub of the question at all. The nub of the question is whether the state or nation can afford to permit private parties to control their highways. The question is not what the profits of the private proprietors are, but whether private proprietors of public highways can be tolerated by any self-respecting commonwealth. We hold that they certainly cannot be so tolerated and that the question whether they make more or less profit out of their usurpation has nothing to do with it.

But while making this demurrer to the introduction of the question of profit, we are quite willing to waive it for the sake of the argument. It is not true that the railroads "as a rule do not make more than a fair profit on the capital invested." It is true that they do not usually make an excessive profit upon the nominal capitalization of the roads, but this, as everybody ought to know, has no solution of any sort to the "capital invested." As a rule the stock of railroads represents nothing but "enterprise" for which the plain English is "gall." They do not commonly represent any money paid in at all, the roads being built on the proceeds of the bonds. The stock, usually representing nothing at first, has been reduced by successive waterings to a minus quantity of so many degrees of reduction that only algebra could express its infinitesimal relation to honesty. When the true facts and figures of our American railroad capitalization, already known to those who have inquired, shall become matters of common knowledge, we shall be confronted with a stupendous edifice of fraud which, if there be any virtue left in our people, will cause a complete revolution in our railroad system.

As to the last question in the above quotation, it is enough to say that undoubtedly there have been abuses in the warehouse and elevator system, and that their public management would be included in the plan of nationalization of the railroads.

Think on These Things.

What is the difference between the rich idler and the poor idler? The first goes to Europe and the latter goes to jail, both at the expense of the honest laborer.—Iowa Tribune.

The basic principle of the whole reform movement is, that every person has a natural right to comfort and happiness. That being true, whatever interferes with that right is an evil; it is such evils that we are fighting.—Spectator.

You cannot examine closely into the means by which undue accumulations of wealth were made without finding at the bottom in almost every case, a special privilege conceded by law, or taken in spite of law.—Springfield, Mass., Republic.

Gold is getting higher priced every day. Wheat is getting lower priced in proportion. What we, in North Dakota, want is higher priced wheat. We produce no gold, and, therefore, have no interest in a higher price for the metal.—North Dakota Independent.

Whatever the people can do for themselves, independent of law, that they ought to do. By careful study the people will be able to neutralize many of the evils resulting from bad laws, and in so doing raise the standard of intelligence.—People, Topeka, Kan.

The competitive system of dog eat dog, everyone for himself, and the devil take the hindmost, is a system of savages, and under its blasting influences our civilization will wither and perish. A more humane code is destined to take its place before the twentieth century dawns upon a mis-governed world.—Nonconformist.

The persecution of one religious sect by another is positive evidence that the persecutor lacks faith in his own religion and is afraid the other will supplant it. It is true, also, that the public press, or teacher, that will suppress facts or refuse to discuss issues is afraid of his position with reference to public questions.—Iowa Tribune.

The Unemployed Protesting Against Landlordism.

The following resolution was recently passed at a meeting of the the unemployed in Liverpool:

"That, in the opinion of this mass meeting of laboring men, condemned to involuntary idleness, it is a crime against humanity that the benevolent intentions of the Creator should be frustrated by unjust man-made laws, which enable a few private individuals to keep idle 30,000,000 acres (46,875 square miles) of the food-producing land of our country while tens of thousands of laboring men, who are anxiously seeking opportunities for producing food for themselves and families, are, in large numbers, condemned to starve in the streets of our large towns. We hereby solemnly and emphatically protest against food-producing lands being kept idle, while laboring men, willing to work, are starving. We protest against the system which enables landlordism to rob the laborers of the products of their labor, and to discourage and hinder food productions at home, while hundreds of millions are annually spent in the purchase of food from foreign nations; we protest against the folly and wickedness of draining, exhausting and squandering the mineral resources of the country for the immediate enrichment of a useless class, and the impoverishment of the present and future generations of wealth producers in this country, and we call upon every just-minded man to assist in ridding the empire of the blight of felonious landlordism, the root-evil which is primarily responsible for causing the starvation and degradation of the workers of the United Kingdom."

Railroad Nationalization in England.

The New Nation.

Nationalization of the railroads is coming to the front as a live issue in Great Britain also. The freight rates charged by the British roads have long been more extortionate than even those of American lines. In response to public complaints that could no longer be put off, the last parliament considered a scheme for the regulation of rates. The companies, however, pleaded that if parliament would let them alone they would prepare a fair schedule, and they were permitted to do so. This schedule has just gone into operation, and is found to be even more oppressive than the old ones. It is stated that under it the rate for freight from the nearest English city to London is more than from Minneapolis to London, and this is but an illustration of a system of extortion which even a Nebraska farmer never dreamed of. The new schedule has been in operation only a short time, but has already excited a universal popular outcry which seems certain to force the railroad regulation issue into practical politics at the present session. It is said that the ministry will not be able to refuse to bring in a bill for reducing rates as soon as the home rule bill has passed the commons, and some of the measures already discussed by the radical press are more drastic than anything our western legislatures have yet attempted.

The Logical Outcome.

Boston Globe.

The nationalization idea as applied to railroads, in accordance with the Ricks decision, would work both ways, and after a peremptory fashion that might not be precisely relished by any of the parties to a controversy. But it is perfectly safe to assume that the very loudest complaints and protests would come from the corporations when their ox was gored, and they began to realize that the logical outcome of Ricksism is nothing less than governmental ownership of every railroad in the land.

Postal Banks Given Right of Way.

The New Nation.

The National bank of Australasia makes the seventh out of the ten large Australian banks which have failed within a few weeks. The cause is not difficult to find. Russia and Austria, as well as England, are in the world's market as purchasers of gold. The withdrawal of gold from Australia decreased the volume of the currency and depressed values. The banks demanded more security for their loans and refused credits. This disturbed confidence and people began to withdraw their deposits. As a gold standard, with not gold enough to go round requires popular confidence for undisturbed transaction of business, it follows that a panic at almost any time is possible. In other words, gold is no standard at all unless people believe in it. It is not in itself an honest measure of value. The government of Victoria has decided to gather all the private savings banks into one system and attach them to the postal savings banks to be run by public officials. This marks the growing distrust of private banking institutions.

Why Values Shrink.

The New Nation.

Let us explain to our small merchant friend the secret of the constant decline in values of his stock. Money is a creation of law. Legal tender is money in the United States and is the measure of values. The purchasing power of a dollar increases with a decline in the volume of the currency and decreases with the increase of the currency volume. The policy of this government since 1865 has been to decrease the currency. With a population of 35,000,000 in 1865, the volume of the currency was about two billion. To-day, with a population of 65,000,000, the volume of the circulation is about a billion, six hundred million. Naturally the dollar has appreciated; that is, it takes more produce to secure a dollar. It being harder to get a dollar, the debtor classes are to that extent cheated as they find when they come to extinguish their debts. The small merchant can see, if he thinks a moment, that the contraction of the currency is the mysterious power that causes the decline in the value of his stock. This decline will continue so long as money is kept cornered by the bankers. These bankers know perfectly well that it is easy enough by regulating the volume of the currency to make the purchasing power of a dollar practically the same from year to year. This will enable a man to pay a debt under the conditions that he contracts the debt. The dollar of today is dishonest to the extent it has appreciated; this appreciation is the result of contraction.

Did Any One Ever Hear?

Mrs. Diggs in the Advocate.

President Cleveland and his secretary of the treasury receive in Washington the agents of the gold gamblers of Europe and America in secret consultation. The president and his secretary of treasury go to New York and confer with men whose millions are made through financial operations. The president and his secretary of treasury go to Chicago and there consult with the same class of men. Did any one ever hear of a representative of the people being in consultation with the president and his secretary of treasury on matters relating to the impending financial crisis? Did any person ever hear of a carpenter, plasterer, blacksmith, grocer, farmer, miner, or any other sort of useful citizen being admitted to consultation with the president or his secretary of treasury on this subject, money, which vitally concerns them all? No, sir; no such person could get a hearing, and yet without any sort of ceremony or red-tapeism a New York banker can gain audience so soon as he arrives in the city.

But, some one will explain, the common tradesman do not understand this great and complicated system of finance, and the bankers of New York and England do; precisely, therefore, it is high time that the painters, carpenters, farmers, et al. trade off this inexplicable system by which these speculators make millions, and which is so precarious that spite of its being labeled glass, handle with care, falls down in a collapse about every so often and smashes every legitimate business into smithereens.

The ownership of railroads by private corporations, instead of by the government, is roughly estimated to cost the people directly the sum of six hundred millions of dollars annually, which would pay the national debt in less than three years, and must greatly exceed the state taxes of all the states in the aggregate; or it would build the Nicaragua canal twice over. This control of a public need by private persons and corporations is one root of the mortgage trouble; but its tap-roots are two, landlordism and the money power—twin monsters that must be assailed, not separately, but together, to secure success.—San Francisco Star.

IN A LIVING GRAVE.

Where 600 Men Live in Solitary Cells—Louvain's Dreadful Prison.

The seclusion of Latimer in his solitary cell at Jackson, Mich., calls attention to the Maison Centrale, of Louvain—that one prison in Europe where absolute isolation is still enforced.

The buildings all converge to a central apsis, whence a warden can easily survey the six immense avenues or wings, consisting of two stories of cells.

The convicts are clad in gowns and hoods of linen, which cover the face, except the eyes, nose and mouth. They must never see a face except their keeper's, and they must conceal their own face from everybody. If, perchance, a face is seen by a doctor it is paled by the long sunless shadow and the want of free air, for even the daily hour's walk is in cramped passages between two high walls, where a few stunted plants soon wither and die. The prisoners have that flaccid fleshiness which comes from the absence of movement. Two of the inmates have dwelt there since 1864.

At 6 o'clock in the morning the peals of an organ wake the convicts. The music may be religious or secular. It lasts for fifteen minutes, and by that time the warders must find each man at his work. All labor is performed in the sleeping cells. Breakfast consists of half a pint of coffee and bread, and the two other meals are of soup and vegetables. Three times a week the convicts have fresh meat. Sunday is a day of religious services. The prison library is excellent, and those who can neither read nor write are compelled to attend school. The chapel is like a circular and reversed amphitheater. The convicts occupy stalls. They can see the priest, but they enter the stalls one at a time and never see each other.

The cells are clean and well lighted, heated and ventilated, but the convicts cannot see out.

Some of the convicts are shoemakers; others bookbinders, tailors, carpenters, even smiths. Some are employed in copying students' essays. The produce of each man's labor is divided equally between the state and himself. His earnings never exceed two or three cents a day. In the evening, labor ended, he dines and goes to bed.

None but isolated cases of revolt have ever taken place. These are punishable by incarceration in a subterranean dungeon, but there is another and harder punishment—the deprivation of work! and the threat of taking a convict's tools rarely fails to insure submission.

It is impossible to leave the Maison Centrale of Louvain without a feeling of almost superstitious horror at the vision of those miserable beings, buried in their livid of infamy, the face of each remaining as sealed to his 600 companions of crime and shame as if the lid of a coffin had closed upon it and the hand of death forever obliterated the features.

Stereotype Women.

There was presented to a French medical society some time ago a curious case, which came to be called the stereotype woman.

The skin of this woman became red at the least contact. If a pencil or a dull point was passed over the skin the lines or words traced were at once seen to appear in relief with surprising distinctness.

Autographism was the name given to this phenomenon, but it has been called also graphic uteraria, desmography, etc.

If we take a blunt style or a sharp-pointed pencil and inscribe upon the shoulders, breast, arms, or thigh of such a subject a word, name, or figure by moving the instrument lightly over all the points of the word or inscription that we wish to produce, we shall almost instantly observe a redness to appear upon the line that the instrument passed over.

This diffused redness constitutes the first phase of the phenomenon. Two minutes later the letter or inscription begins to appear under the form of a rosy-white outline of a much paler tint than the skin which surrounds it on all sides.

Do not leave the patient, but watch the different phases of the experiment, and you will see the inscription repeat itself before your eyes; you will see it extend, rapidly enlarge, take on a more prominent relief, rounded at the summit, and attain the size of a goose quill applied to the skin.

When the phenomenon has reached its complete development, and the relief is well established, the part of the skin upon which the word or figure was delineated assumes exactly the appearance of a stereotype plate, whence the name of "stereotype woman" bestowed upon the first subject.

This relief is visible from a distance of from thirty to sixty feet, and, according to the subject, lasts from a few minutes to several hours. It is a transitory phenomenon, in the sense that, in a few hours, the skin will have assumed its usual appearance.

Ireland's Egg Shipments.

Ireland sends annually 50,000 tons of eggs—some 640,000,000 in round numbers—to England.

Post Yourself ON THE WORLD'S FAIR CITY CHICAGO By DAY and NIGHT

69 ILLUSTRATIONS

300 PAGES

Contains what you want to know regarding the great western Metropolis. Its light and dark sides are told in a breezy manner. In it will be found information of which even many residents themselves are ignorant. If visiting Chicago for only a day it will repay you to read this book, as it will enable you to view, buy or enjoy what you wish.

3 Large Maps

showing Chicago with all its places of interest, the Midway Plaisance and the World's Fair grounds; also LARGE LIST OF HOTELS, with rates per day. No danger of false moves, mis-steps, or possibility of being overcharged if you have this book to guide you in prices as well as places.

"Chicago by Day and Night" is a directory to the pleasure resorts in and around Chicago. The stranger who reads it will fully understand how best to see it and what to avoid seeing in his grounds. The dangers which lie in wait for the stranger about a great city are not at all exaggerated. The book is published in handsome style.

"Chicago by Day and Night" is gotten up on an entirely new and original plan and differs from the ordinary cut and dried guide books. The stranger is told in a gossipy manner all about the attractions of the city and its parks and the reader can learn what kind of a time the different places will afford them. One can hardly think of a question that is not answered regarding the city. Owning it is having the merit of being as interesting as a novel. It will probably be bought by thousands who never intend to visit Chicago and the World's Fair. —Chicago Globe.

"Chicago by Day and Night; the Pleasure Seeker's Guide to the City of America," is a book that is meeting with popular favor and is commanding a large sale. The eyes of the world are turned toward Chicago, and the man who intends to visit the World's Fair will learn something of this great city before leaving home. Among the city's attractions, independent of the World's Fair, the stranger may save much time and sometimes money by a previous knowledge of what is worth seeing and what should be avoided. This book covers the subject thoroughly, is beautifully and profusely illustrated and is written in an agreeable entertaining style that is a cheerful relief from the monotonous form employed in most guide books. The night side of the city is presented truthfully and all the snarls and pitfalls that the sharpest of a great city set for the unwary stranger are fully exposed. The book is written by one who is familiar with all phases of Chicago life. —The News.

"New occasions teach new duties: Time makes ancient good uncouth, They must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of Truth."

WATCH FOR THE FIRST NUMBER OF

NEW OCCASIONS

a Monthly Magazine of Social and Industrial Progress, edited by B. F. UNDERWOOD. New Occasions will not be the organ of any party or clique, but will offer a free field for the discussion of living questions. It will ride no hobby, but will help in solving the great problem of securing justice for those who do the work of the world. 10 cents a number; $1.00 a year. No free samples.

New Occasions and any two of the following 50 cent books post paid for $1.00. Circulars free.

The Russian Refugee, a Tale of the Blue Ridge, by H. K. Wilson; 618 pages.

Why Government at All, by W. H. Van Ornum.

The Coming Climax, by L. C. Hubbard.

The Rice Mills of Port Mystery.

An Ounce of Prevention, Jacobson.

Liberty and Life, by E. P. Powell.

Inquendo Island, by Hador Genone.

The Last Tenet, by Hador Genone.

The Faith that Makes Faithful, Eight great sermons, by Gannett and Jones.

The Genius of Galilee, an historical novel by Anson Uriel Hancock, 507 pages.

John Auberrtop, Novelist, Hancock.

The Auroraphone, by Cyrus Cole.

Lessons from the World of Matter and the World of Man, Theodore Parker.

Send six cents in stamps for a catalogue, and a copy of W. H. Van Ornum's remarkable address, just published, "How we can all get Rich."

Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Monroe Street, Chicago.

The Rocker Washer
has proved the most satisfactory of any washer ever placed upon the market. It is warranted to wash an ordinary family washing of 100 POUNDS IN ONE HOUR, as clean as can be washed on the washboard. Write for prices and full description.
ROCKER WASHER CO.
PT. WYATT, ILL.
Liberal inducements to live agents.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS
CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.
For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American.
Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN DRESSES?

Every Lady, Especially Dressmakers, should have one of

MADAME VALON'S LADIES OWN YOKE AND COLLAR CUTTERS

The greatest invention of the age for improving Ladies' Figures. Drafts perfectly fitting seamless Yokes and Collars, all shapes and sizes. Medici Roll, etc.

One of the greatest difficulties in dressmaking is to fit a perfect Yoke and Collar, and a dress imperfectly made in this respect, ruins the beauty of its fit otherwise.

Madame Valon's Ladies' Own Yoke and Collar Cutter never makes a misfit. Every lady who makes her own dresses and especially every professional dressmaker should have one of these Cutters, as they save both time and material and are perfect in their work. They are handsomely made in enamelled metal, and will last a life time.

FULL DIRECTIONS FOR USING ACCOMPANY EACH CUTTER.

To dressmakers or any one sending us two yearly subscribers at 50 cents each we will send one of the above Cutters free.

Address, THE FARMER'S WIFE,

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History, Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonparel type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 30c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong maroon binding, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5000 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost." —The Week, Toronto.
"A vast amount of trustworthy matter covering a wide range." —School Journal, New York.
"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged." —American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.
"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library." —News and Courier, Charleston.

Our Offer. By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manila binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular home journal, published twice a month, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

JOHNSON & FIELD CO.

RACINE, WISCONSIN.

The "Racine" Farm and Warehouse Fanning Mills, Land Rollers and Broadcast Seeders, ELEVATOR MACHINERY and SUPPLIES, Gas and Steam Engines.

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

Our line of BICYCLES consists of over 30 different sizes and models, HIGH AND MEDIUM GRADE from $20.00 to $170.00, for every class of riders.

We guarantee to give you the best value for the money, and guarantee every wheel. Don't buy a bicycle until you see our catalogue and get our prices.

ASTHMA CURED BY ASTHMALENE

Easily, quickly and permanently by Dr. TAFT'S Asthmalene. It is a specific for that terrible disease. Instead of flying to the door gasping for breath, seeming as if each one would be your last, you have only to take a few doses Asthmalene when the spasm is broken, the thrashing becomes easy and you feel as if some angel of mercy had unlocked the iron grasp of the fingers of death which had nearly deprived you of life.

IT IS AS HARMLESS AS THE FOOD YOU EAT. yet the ease with which it cures the worst cases of Asthma is the wonder and admiration of all who have used it. The happiest moment of your life will be when you have used a bottle of Dr. TAFT'S ASTHMALENE.

and found it has cured you of the most distressing disease that ever afflicted the human family. For BRONCHITIS it surpasses every known remedy. For sale by all druggists. We mail to any Asthma sufferer who will send name and post-office address A TRIAL BOTTLE FREE.

DR. TAFT BROS. MEDICINE CO., ROCHESTER, N. Y. and prove that it does Cure Asthma.

Your Stomach Distresses You

aftereating a hearty meal, and the result is a chronic case of Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Dyspepsia, or a bilious attack.

RIPANS TABULES

Promote Digestion, Regulate the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Purify the Blood, and are a Positive Cure for Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, and all other Disorders arising from a disordered condition of the Liver and Stomach. They act gently yet promptly, and perfect digestion follows their use.

Ripans Tablets take the place of an Entire Medicine Chest, and should be kept for use in every family.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

FREE

$10.00 worth of lovely Music for Forty Cents, consisting of 100 pages full size Sheet Music of the best, most popular selections, both vocal and instrumental, gotten up in the most elegant manner, including four large size Portraits.

CARMENCITA, the Spanish Dancer, PADEREWSKI, the Great Pianist, ADELINA PATTI and MINNIE SELIGMAN CUTTING.

ADDRESS ALL ORDERS TO THE NEW YORK MUSICAL ECHO CO., Broadway Theatre Building, New York City. CANVASSERS WANTED.

For Ladies: 1 Package Mending Tissue, mends Silk, Satin, Kid Gloves, etc., better than needle and thread; 1 Package Solder mends all kinds of Tinware; 1 Package of Starch Gloss, for polishing cuffs, collars and shirt bosoms; 1 Hair Grimmer; 4 Papers Needles, 8 darning worsted, lace, glove, carpet and motto Needles, 6 Hat Shawl and Toilet Pins; Illustrated Book on Fancy Work, Knitting, etc.; 100 designs for Ties, Cushions, etc.; 44 Songs, including Tia, ra, boom, ta ray, words and music. All sent by mail, not paid for 10 Cents. Address Howard Mfg. Co., 62 Wash. St. Providence, R. I.

"The World's Fair Hatcher" Send 4 stamps for new illustrated catalogue. It will pay you. 36 Yards of High 36 Class Embroidery, 43c. Address: RELIABLE Embroiderer & Broader Co., Quincy, - Illinois.

EVERY Family Student School Library

S-H-O-U-L-D Own a Dictionary.

Care should be taken to GET THE BEST.

THE INTERNATIONAL NEW FORM COVER TO COVER, IS THE ONE TO BUY.

SUCCESSOR OF THE UNABRIDGED. Ten years spent in revising, 100 editors employed, over $300,000 expended.

Sold by all Booksellers.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Publishers, Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.

Do not buy reprints of obsolete editions. Send for free pamphlet containing specimen pages and full particulars.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper?

Do you wish to know what the eastern women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the Romanists?

Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work?

Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE.

John Trank Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 8, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

Address us a POSTAL CARD TODAY.

Including Sample Books, Yearlies, Pictures, Magazines, Letters, Papers, etc., each with your address boldly printed on each wrapper. You will receive more choice reading and heartiest mail of any one at your town. It will also insert your address for twelve months in our Guaranteed Directory, that goes weekly daily to Manufacturers and Publishers all over the world; and 500 of your boldly printed and gummed addresses in two colors, for your personal use to stick on your letters, books, etc.; also Lum Smith's 16-page Almanac, 12 months (regular price 50 cents). All free and post-paid to you. Send your address to-day on a postal to GUMMED ADDRESS CO., 126 S. 8th St., Phila., Pa.

WORK FOR US

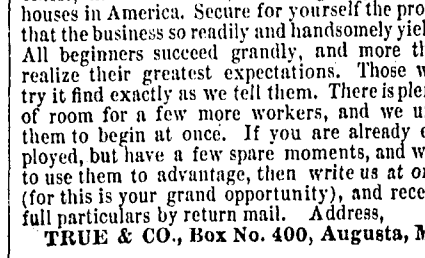

a few days, and you will be startled at the unexpected success that will reward your efforts. We positively have the best business to offer an agent that can be found on the face of this earth.

$45.00 profit on $75.00 worth of business is being easily and honorably made by and paid to hundreds of men, women, boys, and girls in our employ. You can make money faster at work for us than you have any idea of. The business is so easy to learn, and instructions so simple and plain, that all succeed from the start. Those who take hold of the business reap the advantage that arises from the sound reputation of one of the oldest, most successful, and largest publishing houses in America. Secure for yourself the profits that the business so readily and handsomely yields. All beginners succeed grandly, and more than realize their greatest expectations. Those who try it find exactly as we tell them. There is plenty of room for a few more workers, and we urge them to begin at once. If you are already employed, but have a few spare moments, and wish to use them to advantage, then write us at once (for this is your grand opportunity), and receive full particulars by return mail. Address,

TRUE & CO., Box No. 400, Augusta, Me.

A MAN

MACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Or Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office or address

E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

Only 25 Cents a Year for this Paper in Clubs of Six, if Sent at Once.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, JUNE, 1893.

VOL. 11, NO. 11.

WOMAN'S LEAGUE.

Kansas Women Organize a State League.

POLITICAL, POPULIST, PROGRESSIVE.

The State to be Organized in County and Local Clubs at Once.

GETTING READY FOR BUSINESS

A Large Number of Delegates Present From All Parts of the State.

Officers Elected, By Laws and Constitution Adopted.

A Large and Enthusiastic Meeting Held in Representative Hall in the Evening.

Address of Welcome Delivered by Mrs. Otis, President of the W. P. P. L.

Delegates and friends of the Woman's Progressive Political League, permit me, in behalf of our local organization, to extend to you a cordial greeting and a most hearty welcome. We are most happy to have you as our honored guests this evening. Notwithstanding it is the year of the Columbian exposition in which our government is receiving royal visitors, we make no attempt to receive you according to the royal etiquette of foreign nobility. We welcome you to our city which is the capital of our beloved state, a state in which we all take an honest pride because of the achievements of her citizens in the past, the stand she has taken in the reform work of the present generation and the assurance we have that her honest and intelligent citizens will always be in the vanguard in the march of human progress. We welcome you to our homes, not because of their grandeur, but because of an open hospitality on our part, and because you come as representatives of a grand movement.

Sisters, you come as representatives of that portion of our American citizenship who have ever been disfranchised, but not disowned; overworked, but not overthrown; ignored at the ballot box, but never at the bake oven; exempt from military duty, but not from taxation; classed with idiots and lunatics, Indians and criminals, but no silver-tongued orator of the male sex has yet ventured to suggest our colonization as a class in darkest Africa or any other foreign land. Our sex is often denied a seat at the banquet, but never at a burial; and we have recently been permitted to take part in same political burials.

Friends, in this cause of human progress, this club has a significance. It is not organized to accomplish a single reform, but is intended for what its name would indicate, a progressive, political power. But it is a mere infant, a child of Columbia, and we wish to welcome you to counsel with us as to what is needed for its future growth and development and we have no time to trace its complete genealogy, we find in this organization the same blood that prompted that little spartan band to cross the ocean in the Mayflower and establish the civilization at Plymouth Rock, which has swept across the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and which was the beginning of the idea that "governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed." Other ancestors were among the patriots of revolutionary times. To Abigail Adams is accorded the credit of writing the first Declaration of Independence, written in one of her letters from Braintree to her husband at Philadelphia, several months prior to the one written by Jefferson, and later she wrote him that the "women would not hold themselves bound by any laws in which they had no voice or representation." This is precisely the position taken by the progressive women of to-day.

Jeffersonian democracy and Abraham Lincoln republicanism are among the ancestors of our young infant; then come the grange and alliance movements and the people's party which is the parent that has entrusted us with the care of its child. It is a child of the times. New thoughts need to be infused into the body politic. New vigor into our industrial system; new conceptions for the social life of our nation need moulding into form. Such is the mission of the W. P. P. L., of which you come as representatives to carry on a vigorous campaign of education along the lines of political economy, industrial, co-operative and domestic science. We recognize that the great industrial and social problem of the day demanding solution at the hands of the American people can only be solved by intelligent and prompt action at the ballot box. The intelligent exercise of the franchise implies correct education, and to aid in this education the W. P. P. L. is organized. Our by-laws provide that the Omaha platform shall be the basis of our political action and that no one shall be admitted as a member who is opposed to equal suffrage or the control of the liquor traffic.

Friends, when our child has developed from youth to middle age, then to mature life, and her influence has extended into the organizations that are the outgrowth of our united efforts of the present time, we hope to welcome to our homes, to our city and to our state delegates from every state in the union.

Once more permit me to extend to you a hearty welcome, trusting that your stay will be both pleasant and profitable.

RESPONSE BY MRS. CRUMB OF OSAGE COUNTY.

Mrs. Chairman, Sisters of our new organization, Ladies and Gentlemen: Upon me has devolved the honor of responding in the name of our organization to the hearty welcome which we have just received. We came with our hearts in our hands and our hands extended, and were received in like manner. This great honor has come upon me so suddenly that I come to you with only such preparation as a life-long sympathy with suffering humanity can give. I feel that it is truly a great responsibility to appear as one of the delegates representing this body of earnest women. For we are as truly representative as any who have ever lifted up their voices in these halls.

Our sister who preceded me has told you somewhat of the purposes of the organization and that it is as yet only an infant. That is true, and it is a very promising infant, for it was born as an infant should be, with the right, natural tendencies, and its education has begun as some one has said a child's should be, one hundred years before its birth.

You, brothers, will be aware of this when you read our ringing resolutions and realize that we are fully entitled to the name "progressive in every sense of the word. Perhaps our most important message should be a warning to you, brothers, that just once more we ask you to restore to us our privilege so long withheld, and invest woman with her inalienable right of suffrage. You have indeed never advocated our colonization; but there are colonies who have emigrated to other lands of their own accord for freedom's sake, and there have been declarations of independence. (We feel the Puritan blood tingling in our veins.)

You will ask what has brought woman to a realization of the necessity of asserting herself by demanding her long-ignored and thoughtlessly undesired rights. My answer is, that you give attention to the condition we find confronting us to-day in the various political parties where we find partisan feeling running so high that many believe us on the verge of another civil conflict.

Once before woman failed to come to the rescue and her first born was slain. And we realize that another such a declaration of the ranks of manhood and its consequent lowering of the standard of natural selection would result in the downfall of civilization. Let me paint for you a picture of a fair northern home where a mother sits upon the porch of a little white cottage and cradles in her arms her beloved infant, and listens to the cry coming up from the far south of wailing and distress from the oppressed and down-trodden. How she clasps her dear one closer with a prayer of thanksgiving that she does not live in that land of the slave. Let us watch her as she faithfully fills what she believes to be her woman's sphere, as she nourishes and trains her boy and watches over his education, teaching him true patriotism and loyalty to freedom. We see him go to college; and with what fond expectation his letters are received telling of his progress. We see his home coming at vacation, and we see him again returning, the center of highest hope and ambition. And then we hear the bugle's blast and there comes to that mother a letter that tries her very soul, for it says, "Mother, father, you taught me to love our country; I have enlisted for the war." And she says, is forced to say it is well. After a time comes another letter with a black border, telling her that her boy was slain upon the battle field. And then, for the first time, as she kneels in her closet crushed with sorrow, she asks herself if she did her whole duty when she cared for only her own.

Oh, believe not, mothers, you can rear your own children in safety so long as one other of "His little ones" is suffering and homeless. Perhaps the condition of our country is in to-day can be best illustrated by a comparison to Ford's theatre which has so lately collapsed, which shows us, when the structure is faulty how dangerous are even the works of repair. Let us not, like them, be unmindful that the walls are tottering, but come bravely forward and with our woman's hands hold up the trembling beam until we can build under it a solid foundation.

If we ask what has brought about this centralization of wealth and population which so endangers our republic, we are rightly answered, it is invention. And we are pointed to history and told, thus have all nations risen and then fallen; but it is not true that it is from this cause they have fallen. It is because just as they were about at their acme of perfection, about to receive the reward of the progress of civilization, they allowed war to precipitate them again to barbarism.

Dear friends, there are forces already at work that will save our nation if we will but have patience and work resolutely and wisely for a little more of the medicine that made us sick will make us well.

When we can transmit heat and power as we now do light and sound into every dwelling, the problem will be solved, and manufacturing, or some branch of it can again be done in each home, and we shall have no longer the tenement or the crowded factory, but houses for all.

Then a man shall work and bethink him and rejoice in the deeds of his hands, nor yet come home in the evening too faint and weary to stand.

Men in that coming time
Shall work and have no fear,
For to-morrow's lack of earnings,
And the hungry wolf anear.

ADDRESS OF MRS. PACK.

How Can We Best Help One Another.

The subject which I have chosen is one I think that presents itself to my mind oftener than has any one subject in my life time. I think Sister President and Sisters these words have generally been understood in the most external or literal manners. Whenever they have been read there has arisen before the mind's eye a picture of domestic life and happiness. We at once think of the fireside with its cheerful blaze and a well spread and hospitable table, with our family gathered around us and of all that ministers to the comfort and enjoyment of a well-ordered household. And as often as we think of these things we remember that they are incompatible with solitude. They are not the conditions which surround a hermit, or any one who lives and cares only for themselves. But we see in them the very essence of companionship, and they unmistakably tell of a companionship which is not confined to either sex, but which both have joined in, thus aiding and lifting the cares from each other and making life worth the living.

No one need be told that the scene

thus called up to imagination are among the most charming which this life affords. Were it not for the peaceful influence of the homes this world would be a barren waste, a desert, and we would be unable and unfitted to battle as many of us are compelled to for the mere substance of life. But so far as such homes exist they help to transform this world into something of a paradise. But our own views of the matter would be wholly superficial if it were to suggest to us nothing more than the thought of our own homes, and the helping of our own little circle. But it suggests to us how much we can do to help each other. There are many avenues open through which we may be able to lend a helping hand to those less fortunate than ourselves. We can deny ourselves a little now and then, and with our presence cheer some sick room, we can throw open the doors of our homes of an evening to cheer some grief-burdened heart. We can turn our back on a cold and merciless world and reach out a helping hand to the beardless boy who has been suddenly initiated into city vices by those who ought to shield him from them.

We can reach down and lift an erring sister, take her in our arms and teach her that virtues, in spite of a low sensational press and public opinion, form after all, the larger part of the real world of men and women. And are much the better worth seeking. If you are rich, you can show the greatness of your fortune or what is better still the greatness of your soul in the meekness of your actions, and the greatness of your deeds to your fellow beings. You can sympathize with those in trouble, aid the distressed and care for the neglected. When once we are determined to help one another and study in what way we can best help we will find plenty to do. When once we decide to take that stand many a flower, a glass of jell, an interesting book, or some little token of love will find its way into some neglected sick room. Many an hour will be spent in preparing a little gift or surprise for some poor one, which is spent in frivolous pleasure. My sisters I have often felt that it was a great mistake to put off being generous until after we are dead.

In the first place we lose the pleasure of witnessing the good that we may do. And again no one can administer your gifts for you as well as you can do it for yourself. It is a great pleasure to be brought into personal relations of that kind, and to make people feel that you are not a philanthropist in the abstract but that you are interested in them personally and care for their welfare. In that way you benefit them not merely in a natural way, but you make them feel that we are really brothers and sisters and that we were made to help each other. Not only is that feeling agreeable in itself, but it will be apt to prompt them to carry out the principle themselves. Put yourself into all you do and let others feel that you are there. Do not only contribute to a charitable object, but go yourself and help. It may seem an inconvenience at first, but soon you will come to consider it worth any inconvenience. When once we reach the point when we are ready to do all we can to help one another we will be willing to go out among the poorest classes and strive to do something to smooth the rough and stony paths which poverty compels them to travel. And charity and pity will fill our hearts instead of pride and haughtiness. And we will always keep before our minds this fact, that often the brightest gems are found when and where least expected. If each and every one of us would make a resolve that each day we would aid some one in some way, many a tear dimmed eye would be bright with gladness, and many a grief burdened heart would be light with joy. A little act of kindness is but a small mite for each to contribute, and still if each one of us would make the contribution this world instead of being full of grief and sorrow would abound with joy. There would be no hungry, half-clad homeless children. No men and women bent by the weight of care and trouble. All would have a home as their Maker intended they should have. No tramps made so by avarice and greed. No paupers, made so by the unjust and cruel usury system that is fast robbing the people of their homes. There would be far less people occupying places as tenants who were once the proud and happy owners of the same. Oh, if all would lend a helping hand this world would abound with mirth and joy instead of sorrow. If we but have a will, though we may be unable to assist financially. And perhaps our means will not permit us to cheer the sick with a basket of luscious fruit, or a rare and fragrant flower, yet we may be able, though death hovers o'er the loved ones, to carry sunshine in the desolate home and smooth the dying pillow, and perhaps be the means of pointing them to a friend who never forsakes in time of trouble. There is so much we can do to help each other that will lighten the load that to-day many a brave heart is groaning beneath. And I am sure no one realizes more than myself what those words mean to one who has a disposition to help their fellow creatures. It means many times pleasures sacrificed when it costs something to make the sacrifice. It means many a night over the bed of the sick. It means the silent watch of the lone midnight hour when all earth is wrapped in slumber, save the lone watchers at the bedside of the dying watching and listening to catch the last words to convey to the grief stricken friends. And as you see the swift messenger of death claim its victim, then you will ask yourself the question what can we best do to help their aching hearts. All this, my friends, I have witnessed, and still I never realized how much need there was for us to help one another until I stepped unceremoniously and uninvited in a carpetless, cheerless sick room and over heard the prayer of a heart-broken mother as she knelt over the form of her half-clad, half-starved, though dearly loved child.

The scene was so sad that I think even time with all its power to blot out will be unable to erase from my mind the black picture. I was so strongly impressed with what I saw and heard that I could not refrain from coupling the words together thinking as I did so it might be the means of awakening some one to see the necessity of lending a helping hand to relieve the suffering class though a noble honest heart beats within their breast, yet they have been denied the pleasure of enjoying the sunny side of life. My mother's heart almost ceased to beat when I beheld the mother.

Her form bent by want and care
As she knelt in her cheerless chamber,
Her voice was heard in prayer,
To an all just God
Who rules from Thy throne on high.
Oh stay the hand of injustice,
To Thee dear Lord, I cry.

Wipe from off this land forever
Monopoly, avarice and greed,
They rob us of homes and children,
Our darlings we cannot feed.

Dear Lord the thousands of children
Who roam and tramp the streets,
Crying "please give me a penny" as they Face the rain and the sleet.

Are all of them Thy children,
We pray give each a home,
What have they done, Oh, Father,
That unearned for they should roam.

In that beautiful mansion,
Dear Saviour so far beyond the sky,
Are these hungry and homeless children,
And for bread do they ever cry.

If not, take home to your loving bosom
These innocent babes so fair,
There's no room here for the darlings,
There's too many a millionaire.

My sisters let us consecrate ourselves anew so this work, and never cease until the cry for bread and butter is heard no more, and true liberty and freedom reigns throughout the land.

Mrs. Lease made one of her telling speeches in Chicago on June 19, greatly to the everlasting enmity of the associate press. It takes Mrs. Lease to wake up the old parties.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE LADIES' CORNER.

MEN ARE NOT EXPECTED TO READ THIS COLUMN.

What the Women of To-Day Need—Love as a Cure for Intemperance—Suitable Dress for a Business Woman—More Brains, Less Politics.

Love as a Cure for Intemperance.

A YOUNG man in deep distress appeals to us to aid him. He is madly in love with a beautiful girl. Before he fell in love he was addicted to the use of intoxicating drinks. Since, he has entirely left it off. He tries to make the young lady believe this; but tries in vain! We are sorry to say that, so far as practical and permanent results are concerned, we think the young lady is more than half right. Such reforms are sometimes permanent; but more commonly they are not. A dissipated young man, to gain the object of his passionate love, promises to become a paragon of virtue, and for a season he walks in the straight and narrow path. She marries him. Does he stay reformed? Not often. He usually relapses into his bad habits and degradation, and leads her an unhappy, disappointed, mortified life, perhaps to follow him to an early grave, and survive, herself, in misery, or die broken-hearted. There is many an interesting and attractive young man whose love is a curse to any woman it falls upon; for ten to one are the chances she will return it, and that it will blight her whole existence! We prefer young men who, independent of their love affairs, can do right and maintain good habits. The graveyards are thick with tombstones over beautiful women who have died young but heart-broken for the sake of some scoundrel they had been persuaded to accept as a husband.—New York Ledger.

What Our Women Need.

A good rule to live by in these days when there is such a mental strain upon women, as well as upon men, is to go out in the evening as often as you stay at home, and stay at home as often as you go out, writes Edward W. Bok, in "At Home With the Editor" in the Ladies' Home Journal. We want to alternate things a little in this world. Variety is not only the spice, but the medicine and tonic of life. A change is good for us all. Live in a rut and you will think in a rut. Going out evenings does not necessarily imply the expenditure of money if the domestic purse will not bear it. We need not go to the theater, to a concert, to a lecture each time that we venture out. The best society in this world is that of our friends—those whom we know to be our friends, to be sympathetic with our beliefs, to be in touch with our surroundings. An evening at the house of friends, or they at our house, is relaxation and diversion from the day's thoughts. Unfortunately in our larger cities we know so little of this neighborly feeling, so little of that community intercourse that makes life in smaller places so much the better worth the living. In the greater cities it is the exception, rather than the rule, that we know those who live next door to us. The people living in the same house with us are often as far removed from us as if they lived in Honolulu. But friends we all have, some more, some less, and the very fact of seeing other faces takes us out of ourselves, lifts us into new spheres of thought, gives us new ideas, and takes us away from what we have to face on the morrow.

Suitable Dress For a Business Woman.

A business woman—that is, a woman who earns her living in some field usually occupied by men—cannot be too particular about her dress. It should be the personification of plainness as well as neatness, as well for economy's sake as to preserve the fitness of things. It is asking a great deal to ask a woman to abandon furbelows and trimmings, for the female heart does just love adornment in dress. For all that, a woman who is in business should in selecting the goods for a business suit avoid all figured and striped materials. Let the stuff be as plain as possible, so that the dress may be in no way conspicuous. That is the great thing to be avoided. Fancifully dressed women are not popular with their employers. They waste a great deal of time in attending to their finery, and moreover it is an expensive method for themselves. Do not get cheap materials for business suits; they are by far the most expensive in the long run. Get thoroughly good material for a dress that is to be worn at business every day, and in making it up follow the fashions at a respectful distance. And here is another little tip to remember. Don't neglect to put pockets in the dress, and put them where they can be easily got at. In the skirt, over the hips, is the most convenient place to put them. A good way to finish them is with a pointed lapel which buttons over the pocket.

More Brains, Less Politics.

Miss Susan B. Anthony was lately appointed by Gov. Flower as one of the managers of the New York State Industrial School for Girls. Miss Anthony has been visiting the school. She found that seventeen of the girls stood over washing and ironing after the old fashion of our grandmothers. She succeeded in convincing the authorities that it would be a great saving of time and labor for a few of the girls to take the clothes over to the boy's laundry, where all the modern machinery is, and wash out the clothes with ease and swiftness. Miss Anthony writes to Mrs. Stanton: "Such delighted girls you never saw, to think they were to be emancipated from those washtubs. What took them six days to do, will now be done in two, and they will have leisure to do other things. We are establishing a cooking school, dressmaking and millinery, so as to fit each girl to earn a living when she goes out of the institution."

A Chapter on Petticoats.

Of course she who leads in the world fashionable has petticoats galore, each one different from every other. There is one for her walking gowns, another for her "at home" and yet another, which is an addition de luxe, which is used exclusively for evening wear, besides those to be worn with the tea gown and the dressing sack. Then, too, there are exquisite petticoats designed expressly to be worn with dancing gowns. For example, one of pale pink chiffon made over a foundation of white silk. The chiffon is laid on in deep flounces under bands of white silk embroidered in white. Another pretty skirt to be worn with a dancing costume is of rainbow silk finished with three tiny ruffles, one of blue, one of pink and one of yellow. However, after all, the white petticoat remains dear to the sweetest and daintiest women. With its soft flounces of embroidery or lace it has about it a freshness that silk cannot rival.

Don't Jump Out in a Runaway.

"The horses were stopped a few paces farther on," a formula in such cases almost as invariable as "He did not know it was loaded" is in another form of disaster. It was so in the case of Mrs. Pendleton, and in that of Mme. Van Loon, who met her death in that way at Nice at the beginning of the present season, and in a host of other instances. Ten years ago I chanced to be in a carriage when the driver having left his box the horses ran away.

I did not jump out, and so I passed through that unpleasant experience without so much as a scratch. I only mention it to prove that I know something about the peril of which I write, and also am competent to express an opinion on the subject. Had the young and popular heir of the dynasty of Orleans only sat still when his horses started in their mad career, the Comte de Paris might at this moment be reigning over France.—Mrs. Lucy H. Hooper.

Value of a Couch.

A room without a couch of some sort is only half furnished. Life is full of ups and downs, and all that saves the sanity of the mentally jaded and physically exhausted fortune-fighter is the periodical good cry and momentary loss of consciousness on the up-stairs lounge, or the old sofa in the sitting-room. There are times when so many of the things that distract us could be straightened out and the way made clear, if one only had a long, comfortable couch on whose soft bosom he could throw himself, boots and brains, stretch his weary frame, unmindful of tidies and tapestry, close his tired eyes, relax the tension of his muscles, and give his harassed mind a chance. Ten minutes of this soothing narcotic, when the head throbs, the soul yearns for endless, dreamless, eternal, rest, would make the vision clear, the nerves steady, the heart light, and the star of hope shine again.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Monkeys.

Oriental tradition assigns to monkeys a very peculiar beginning. Satan, we are told, tried to imitate the works of the Creator, but failed signally to equal them. Instead of the horse, he could produce only the ass; instead of the fish, a serpent; and instead of man, the monkey. Yet in India, the paradise of monkeys, they are held in high honor because of the aid which their king, Hanooman, in the days of old, gave to the good Rama when, to rescue his wife, Sita, he invaded Ceylon: Hanooman helping to bridge the strait.

Somenow everyone dislikes to see an unusually pretty girl get married. It is like taking a bite out of a very fine looking peach.

FITTED FOR TRAVEL.

WOMAN'S OUTFIT IS GREATLY SIMPLIFIED.

The Woman Traveler of To-day Carries an Outfit Almost as Comfortable and Sensible as That of a Man—Her Dress Almost a Uniform.

Several Nobby Suits, New York correspondence.

BEFORE a great while a woman's outfit for traveling will be as simple, comfortable and sensible as man's. Never did women do so much traveling as now, nor were the conveniences and necessities of traveling dress ever so much of a study as they are now. The average traveling woman knows that in any city she finds herself she can at the chief store fit herself out in a brand-new rig, if need be, and not wait any longer than to pay her bill and put on the things. The traveling woman of to-day has her wardrobe much simplified. The bag she carries is full of little more than clean cuffs, collars and handkerchiefs, and absolutely necessary toilet conveniences. Possibly there is one very trig and pretty shirt waist.

The travelling woman's dress is almost a uniform. The discomforts of the tailor-made are recognized and modifications obtain. Serge is the pet material. A wiry, tough serge like the goods made up for men. The skirt is snug about the hips, and free from the knees down. It is on a very wide belt which assures a trimly held waist. A shirt-waist and jacket complete the costume. She can ring so many changes on it that she will be fit for all occasions and yet carry only that absurd little bag. The usual skirt is dark wash silk. Its collar and cuffs turn out over that of the jacket. This is her train rig. Then there are heavy kid gloves which she does not remove, unless to substitute a close-fitting old pair of suede, that she can "feel her fingers in." She wears one petticoat of stout black silk. It is so much cleaner than any other material. It is a little shorter than the dress skirt and that clears the ground. Her stockings are black, and over them, to do away with garters, are worn a pair of thin black silk tights. They come a little below the knee, and hold the stockings firmly. She wears a soft felt hat, this being the most generally comfortable. If the cars are hot she takes off the jacket. When she comes near her station she retires to the dressing-room if she can get there, otherwise she gives her face a brisk rub off with a silk handkerchief, smooths her hair, and adds to her toilet a spick, span pair of linen cuffs and a collar. The transformation is complete and there isn't a trace of travel on her. She is fit to go into a first-class dining-room.

Examples of stylish and sensible wear for traveling are shown in these pictures. In the initial picture there is seen a model in sand-colored diagonals. The skirt is perfectly plain save the odd trimming of bias fold of diagonal sewed on in the manner indicated. It is lined with silk and has a flounce of silk inside. The bodice is tight fitting and also garnished with the seams and darts with the bias folds which are also made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

SIMPLE AND PRETTY.

The next sketch are ochre-colored braid and sand-colored cloth. The skirt is stiffened with hair cloth, lined with silk and trimmed with a bias fold of cloth about twenty-four and a half inches in width, finished with two rows of braid. It has a few pleats in front, but is laid in two box pleats behind. With the skirt is worn a vest with sleeves. The front of the vest is made of surah and the sleeves are also of surah. It is cut away like a man's vest and a chemise and small black tie are worn with it. The jacket is open in front, but fits well in back. It has pockets on both sides and the fronts are faced with cloth, but the remainder is not lined. The full sleeves are trimmed with two rows of the braid. The belt is lined with silk to prevent it from stretching and fastens with a bronze buckle in front.

The traveling cloak of the third illustration is a very useful garment. It is made of brown and yellow changeable silk, shirred in yoke form at the neck; in back, at the waist line, the fullness is put on the sleeves. The derby collar is pointed in front and back and is laid in box-pleats on the shoulders. It is also garnished with bias folds of the fabric. The materials used for the costume of also shirred, but the front is loose. It hooks in front and has a turn-down collar and full, puffed sleeves with tight cuffs. No more useful garment could be devised for long journeys. The fourth model is a very dressy one, and for comparatively short trips will prove entirely serviceable. The fabric used is a pale-green woolen suiting. The dress is cut princess, the top being turned back in wide revers which necessitates a separate blouse, of green and pink changeable silk in this instance. The dress buttons on the left side. The revers, collar and cuffs are heavily embroidered with silk, but could well be made of plain silk or suiting.

A SENSIBLE DRESS CLOAK.

Rain cloaks and mackintoshes are not as popular as they were. We have found out that they are fearfully hot and bulky things, and that one is tempted to wear them all the time rather than bother to carry them extra. The only practicable rain cloak is a very light "gauze," one that does not pretend to be anything but a rain cloak, and is, therefore, ugly. These are like the old-fashioned ones which came all rolled up in a little oil silk bag. They are sold again now.

Another advantage the traveling woman of to-day can boast. She has lots of pockets made in her dress. They are put in low down at about the knee, where the gown begins to spread, and where filling them will not interfere with the fit over the hips. She can actually have as many as she wants. The inside of her Eton, the outside of her jacket and the inside of her cloak all have pockets. Many are made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

FOR SHORT JOURNEYS.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

IN BLUE AND GREEN STRIPED CHEVROT.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

made with flaps that button down over and make them quite safe. The last example is an elegant and simple costume, made of green and blue striped chevrot. The material is taken on the bias in the skirt, which is about three and a half yards wide and lined with silk. It is tight-fitting over the hips, and the fullness in back may be either gathered or laid in pleats. The waist is double-breasted and has two moderately long tabs behind. Great care must be taken to have the chevrot fit well on account of the stripes, which are apt to look awry if not put properly together. The two points seen in front are sewed to the bottom of the waist, and are of plain green cloth or silk. The latter also furnishes the material for the small pointed plastron and the high standing collar. The waist has two large revers and a shawl collar, faced with plain green silk. It closes in the center, the plastron fastens on the right shoulder, and the right front laps over and buttons with three large buttons. If the material is wide enough, the revers can be allowed in cutting; but if not, they must be made separately and carefully sewed to the fronts. The sleeves are very full and pleated into the arm-hole to make them more broad than high. The lining is silk. In making the skirt it will be best to put a tape along both sides of each seam, as the bias material is very apt to sag and spoil the hang of the whole costume. Copyright, 1898.

NEWSPAPERS IN GERMANY.

Little Enterprise Displayed, About the Biggest Circulation Being 100,000 Daily.

The newspapers in Germany are largely sold by women, and the small newsboy of America is unknown in Berlin. Now and then, says a writer in the Washington Star, you see a man selling papers, but the greater part of the circulation of the journals is by subscription, and women always deliver the papers. There are many queer things about the newspapers, and few of the Berlin journals have large staffs of reporters. The local news is about the same in all papers, and no one thinks of trying to make a scoop, as it is called, or to have the news in advance of his fellows. The editors of the morning papers leave their offices at 9 o'clock and the papers are on the press at 11. By 12 o'clock even the printers have gone home, and when General von Moltke died at 11 o'clock at night there was only one Berlin newspaper that had a line about it in its issue next morning. The announcement of the death was published in New York and elsewhere in full, but the German newspapers knew nothing about it.

The newspapers publish items from their contemporary journals which they should have had themselves, saying that the other papers say so and so, and there is no life in Berlin journalism. The papers have not a very large circulation, and they do not make a great deal of money. The biggest of them sells something like 100,000 copies, and this paper makes $137,000 a year and thinks it does wonders. Men who write for the papers are moderately well paid, and editors-in-chief get from $4,000 to $5,000 a year. The Germans are good advertisers, and there seems to be no reason why the papers should not do better. Everything under the sun is put into the papers in the shape of an advertisement. And there is a great deal of social news that we publish for nothing which is put in at so much per line. Engagements are generally announced in the newspapers by the parents of the bride and also by the groom, and there are a large number of matrimonial advertisements in which men and women state their good qualities and ask for husbands and wives. Sometimes men advertise, stating they have a daughter whom they wish to get rid of, and in one year there were 400 advertisements in one paper of persons seeking better halves. Marriages are also published in the same way, and there is a fixed rate for births and deaths.

The Germans are very proud of having children, and it is generally expected that a son or daughter will make his or her appearance in the newspaper columns immediately upon its appearance in the world. There are always numbers of death notices, and the official advertisements of the city amount to something. Advertisements of patent medicines have as much prominence in the Berlin newspapers as in our own, and altogether the German is a very good advertiser.

Take Care of the Girls.

There is no subject that so deeply interests the thinking people of our country as that of rational education for our girls, and there is none that is productive of so little real advantage to the girls from the many discussions that the subject occasions. Plans are considered and laid aside, and theories rise only to fall again, and meanwhile the girl speeds on toward womanhood, misdirecting her energies and wasting valuable time through lack of well-defined plans for her best advantage on the part of her guardians and educators.

We cannot overdo the matter of discreetly rearing our girls. They are to be the wives and mothers of our next generation, and on them rests the prosperity of the nation. The world is to be largely influenced by their abilities and strength, and it rests with the educators of to-day to prepare them for the great work that is before them. The key-note for harmony in mental and physical education has not yet been touched, and will not be until their physical well-being is made supreme, and the mental is based on this power. The time has never been in our country when this has been practically considered. Regardless of physical resources mental expansion has ever been and still is the aim, and has grown to such a craze in America that brain power is often forced to the exhaustion of all other capabilities.

When our girls thus forced graduate they are, even if they escape invalidism, utterly without stamina, and are poorly prepared for entering cheerfully upon the arduous duties that await them in every-day life, and also are unfitted for rising above the disappointments and anxieties that enter to a greater or less extent into every home.

Their career closes at their graduation instead of being at its dawn, and many a bright intellect that gave promise of strength everywhere burns but dimly in an obscure circle from being caged in an enfeebled and exhausted body.—Godey's.

Natural Ices.

In 1468 the army of Flanders used wine that was regularly cut from the rudgeons with hatchets and distributed in the shape of ice.

AGRICULTURAL TOPICS.

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

Points: Law for Farmers—When to Water Horses—Pneumatic Fountain for Poultry—Common Sense in Farming—Fertility of Pastures, Etc.

Farm Law.

There are certain points of law that govern the rights of farmers that should be known to be used as a guard against personal liability, as well as to protect against an infringement of rights. The question of right to fruit growing upon branches of a tree standing upon land of one and overhanging land of another is liable to arise. It is a settled principle of law that where a tree grows near a boundary line and the roots extend upon the land of another and derive nourishment from such land, even though the branches extend over the line overhanging a neighbor's land, the entire tree is the property of him on whose land it stands, together with all the fruit growing thereon, and it has been decided by the courts of Vermont, Connecticut, and New York, that any attempt to prevent the reaching over and picking such fruit on the part of such neighbor makes an actionable case of assault and battery. In a case in New York where the daughter of the owner of a cherry tree stood upon the division fence and attempted to pick fruit from a limb overhanging a neighbor's land and on being forbidden by such neighbor persisted, the neighbor in attempting to prevent using force, but did no personal injury. On an action the court awarded, and the neighbor was obliged to pay $1,000. Regarding the right to enter upon the land of a neighbor to secure fruit fallen from overhanging branches the law does not seem to be fully settled although decisions in Massachusetts and Vermont seem to imply that such a right existed if it could be executed without injury to the neighbor. These points are probably but faintly understood by average farmers. We judge so for the reason that we heard of a case where the fruit from overhanging branches was all picked by means of a ladder. No trouble grew out of the case although the two owners were at variance, but it is quite clear that the fruit being the property of the owner of the tree, the taking of it by another made a clear case of theft. —Germantown Telegraph.

Pneumatic Fountain for Poultry.

One of the best troughs for supplying fowls with drinking water is made of an empty five-gallon kerosene can as shown in the illustration from the American Agriculturist. A hole two and one-half inches square is cut near the bottom as in Fig. 1. Next cut an empty tin can in two, and about three inches deep as in Fig. 2, and bend the edges in at right angles. With a soldering iron, solder this section of can to the five-gallon tin opposite the hole at Fig. 1, so that when the section is fixed on, the hole will be one-half inch lower than the top rim of Fig. 2. The two put together are seen at Fig. 3. The result is that chickens cannot tramp through and soil the water. Five gallons will hold enough for a large flock of fowls, and the drinking pan fills as quickly as they drink from it, and by throwing a sack over the fountain it will keep cool in hot weather, which would be a great advantage in warm climates. It is easily moved from place to place, and is far preferable to open dishes which get so hot in the sun. There must be no holes in the kerosene can, except the one below, or else the water would all rush out, and for the same reason the one hole must be a trifle lower than the top of the tin they drink from. The inventor has found it to act very well, and sends this description, trusting that other poultry lovers will find the contrivance satisfactory.

Fig. 1. Fig. 2. Fig. 3.

Common Sense in Farming.

There is much talk these days about educating the farmer. The right kind of an education is highly beneficial, but the farmer wants common sense and eyes which will see. If he cannot learn by observation and experience then a collegiate education would be useless. If a young man wants to educate himself to be a farmer he must take off his nice clothes, and roll up his shirt sleeves, and go to work in earnest. He must learn by experience, from books and papers, observe what his neighbors are doing; how they manage their farms to make money. He must learn what crop is best adapted to produce the most profitable crops on his farm. This decided, he must use his best efforts in the right direction to develop this crop to its fullest extent, and if successful he is on the way to greater success. Forty-five years ago a young farmer, in looking over his farm in order to decide what would be the best crop to rely on for profit, concluded to set an apple orchard. With this object in view he went to work. He raised trees from the seed, budded or grafted them, and then they were set out on the farm. The natural trees he renovated and grafted. The result was just as he expected. He now has an orchard which gives more profit for the labor bestowed than any other crop on the farm, and will without doubt for years to come.

Watering Horses.

The digestion of food may be very much interfered with by mistakes in watering. This should always be done before feeding and never soon after. The water is absorbed by the intestines with great rapidity. A few minutes will suffice to absorb three or four gallons of water, and this dilutes the salivary secretion so as to supply all the water needed for the digestion of the food, and no water will then be needed soon after feeding. This avoids the washing of undigested food from the stomach into the intestines, where it ferments and produces much gas and causes those frequent colics that on the whole reduce the usefulness of our work horses fully one-half. For every attack of disease cuts off so much of the thread of life, and there are very few horses that are not affected injuriously with colic—the result of mistakes in feeding, but more in watering—sufficiently to have an appreciable result on the duration of life.

Salting the Cows.

We used to know careful farmers who made it a practice to salt cows every Sunday afternoon, after return from church. Once a week is better than leaving the salting to accident, but if salt is placed where cows can get it all the time they will not eat too much of it. Rock salt is best. Leave large lumps of it where the cows can lick them, and you will find that they will soon learn to visit them daily, taking a small amount at each time. Thus fed there is no temptation to get more salt than is for the animal's good. Salt in quantity cannot be digested, and, of course, operates as a powerful purgative, besides injuring digestion. Eaten in moderate amounts it makes the digestion better. —Exchange.

Half-Sills for Barn Basements.

In the construction of barn basements, walls of stone are dispensed with, only in places where the building is located on a steep side hill, and the discarding of a wall necessitates the use of many strong basement posts. If these are framed into the lower side of sills in the usual manner, they are greatly weakened by the cutting away of so much timber.

MANNER OF APPLYING HALF-SILLS.

By the use of the false or half sill, shown in the engraving, the main sill is actually strengthened. This short sill may be of sawed stuff, and for a common barn should not be less than 4x12 inches. The ends may be spiked. If the whole building is raised when empty, and a false sill placed below, the structure will be made more firm and durable.

Crowding Young Chicks.

Do not try to make one hen raise the number of chicks that two hens should care for. Giving the broods of several hens to one hen, in order to make the one hen do what the others should do, may save the work of the hens, but it will be at the cost of a loss of chicks, especially in cold weather, as a dozen chicks are all that a single hen can properly hover.

Odds and Ends.

An oiled floor is excellent for the kitchen, because the grease never shows.

TOWELS will give better wear if overcast between the fringe before they are washed.

MIGNONETTE may be kept as a pot plant for years, provided no seeds are allowed to develop.

NEVER put patent fasteners on shoes until they have been worn and stretched for a couple of weeks.

The toughest fowl can be made eatable if put in cold water, plenty of it, and cooked very slowly from five to six hours.

ALWAYS put through the eye of the needle first the end of thread which comes off the spool, and the thread will be less apt to knot and snarl.

INSTEAD of putting food into the oven to keep hot for late comers, try covering it closely with a tin and setting it over a basin of hot water. This plan will keep the food hot, and at the same time prevent it from drying.

HAVE the table at which one sews at night spread with a light color, or, if it must have a dark one, a sheet of white paper may be used over it. A needle can be threaded with much greater ease if held over a white surface.

DRAPINGS OF LACE.

A FASHION THAT LENDS ITSELF TO ALL AGES.

Suitable for the Stout and Matronly Outline, the Young Plump Figure, or the Squareness of Childhood—Illustrations of This Popular Style.

Gotham Fashion Gossip. New York correspondence.

HERE never has been a fashion that so lends itself to all ages, types and styles as does the present popular one of shoulder drapings of lace. At first thought the fashion is particularly adapted to the very young and slender figure, but that is the case with all styles. As a matter of fact this one is almost equally well suited to the stout and matronly outline, the young plump figure, or the squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fichu. The latter has a foundation of silk on which is put first a lace frill, then a second ruffle, shirred in the center three times, and the other side lies on the neck in the form of a smaller

the yoke of the gown, while the epaulettes, the ruffle above, the little yoke attached, and the collar thereto may be a blessed little cape affair that can come off all by itself. The third sketch brings us to such a mantelet of lace and silk rep, with a pointed yoke embroidered with jet. The cape is a flounce of lace about eighteen inches in width, gathered to the yoke. Down the front are lace tabs about one and a half yards in length. Over the shoulders are very deep bretelles of silk, embroidered with jet, and shorter ones of lace. The Medici collar is trimmed with lace six and a half inches in width, which is gathered in back with a rosette and falls on the yoke. In front are placed two rosettes. The ends of the tabs form a jabot in front.

Another mantelet has a yoke of silk covered with embroidery of black silk, chenille and metal beads. The cape, composed of two lace ruffles each fifteen inches wide, is sewed to the yoke. As shown in the illustration, the mantelet is profusely trimmed with black velvet ribbon which frames the yoke, passes over the shoulders to the waist in back and is crossed in front and tied in long loops and ends in back. On the shoulders are full bows of the same and it also furnishes the standing collar which is finished with a ruffling of lace. Quite a similar and equally tasteful way is to have the ribbons continue from the shoulders down to a point front and back, at the waist line. Then the lace will fall continuously from the shoulders following the line of the ribbon. For some figures it will narrow to the points front and back; for others it will keep its width; again, the lace will not go as far as the waist, but will at just the right place for becomingness pass under it another and deeper ruffle comes that hangs deeper over the shoulders, and is a little softer and more droopy, to give effect to the perk of the one above. Indeed, this ruffle may be of cloth, crepe, or silk. It may go across the chest, or it may be a modified epaulette and stop after shrouding the shoulders. Still another fall of lace may or not be added, coming from under the epaulettes and reaching to the elbows, and falling across the chest to the waist line, the back being identical always with the front. The under deep ruffle, for instance, may really outline

squareness of childhood. It all depends on the way you put the lace on, and since you may put it on nearly any way you like, it is your own fault if you do not get the right effect. The initial picture shows one method. The neck of this pretty house dress is cut V-shaped in front only, and made much more dressy by the addition of a dainty lace fich

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1902.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free.

If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Showers of blessings.

Showers of blessings will fall,
Over the homes of this nation,
When the ballot is given to all.

No women in our state are better qualified to head a state organization than the state officers of the W. P. P. L.

History is again repeating itself. New men, new issues and a new party is bound to come to the front.

We wish all lovers of good morals and good government would carefully read the official report of the W. P. P. L.

The executive board are all good business women. No one need have any fears for the welfare of the organization.

The convention of the W. P. P. L. was well attended by as bright and intelligent women as the state of Kansas boasts of.

Mrs. J. C. Bare of Baldwin City, has been appointed chairman of the committee on political economy. No better selection could have been made.

If we were to make an attempt to write up all the good qualities of our officers, the executive board included, it would take our entire paper to put all their good qualities in print.

I say that a man who is not as religious at the ballot box as he is at the sacramental board is an arrant hypocrite, and I don't care what church it is he belongs to.—Gen. Jas. B. Weaver.

Senator Householder says the amendment will carry, of course it will. He says the People's party will vote for it to a man, and the Republicans always were strong suffragists. "Doncher know."

The party first to give woman her political freedom will be the one that will win lasting victory and glory. The party that refuses to enfranchise her is doomed forever to oblivion. For the women of Kansas to-day are more united on the subject than ever before.

The rights of no person should be subject to the caprice of any other person. When every intelligent person, male and female, not disfranchised for crime, is allowed to vote, we will be much nearer ideal liberty than we are now.—Agitator.

Organizers appointed for the W. P. P. L. are, State Organizer, Annie L. Diggs, Topeka, Kans.; Douglas county, Mrs. J. C. Bare, Baldwin City, Kans.; Barton county, Mrs. Althena B. Stryker, Great Bend, Kans.; Osage county, Mrs. M. E. Crumb, Burlingame, Kans.

The present outlook for the adoption of the constitutional amendment is in every way encouraging. The fossils oppose it. They oppose everything calculated to make the world better. By the grace of God, they are dying off, and, like the mule, they leave no posterity.—Agitator, Garnett.

When we realize that the above is true it gives us renewed hope and courage to push on.

Defective education being at the bottom of all our social evils, how can we best meet and overcome them, was the subject of discussion at the W. P. P. L. meeting June 20, the discussion was opened by Mrs. Lutes, followed by Mrs. Heller.

At the next regular meeting the Nationalization of the Liquor Traffic will be the topic for discussion. The women are desperately in earnest in their work, and it is hard for them to understand why the people who have had everything their own way so long could not have settled such an important question. The discussion will be opened by Mrs. Clemens followed by Mrs. Lathrop.

The People's party owes its success in a great measure to the faithful women, who have stood by their side and helped to cheer them in times when it seemed as if there was no silver lining to the heavy dark clouds that hung over them. And now to reward them for the assistance they have been to them in times of sore distress, they are coming forward like the true noble men they are and place the last crown on her brow. May Heaven shower blessings on the party of and for the people is the prayer of the women of Kansas.

A prominent gentlemen in politics when asked his opinion as to the prospects of the amendment carrying said: "If the voters of Kansas do not vote for the amendment and give it an overwhelming majority, I would not blame the women if they would organize a new political party. And if once they are compelled to take such a step they will have the support of the very best element of all parties who mean what they say when they ask for reform." And further said he, "The reform that the country at large is demanding to-day can never be brought about without the help of women, any more than the sun can rise in the west and set in the east. And the man or woman who fails to see that something is wrong and that the conditions which surround us at the present time demands a speedy change, is in no way justified in saying whether it would be right or wrong for women to be enfranchised." We will add that the gentleman is not at present a member of the People's party, but has always voted the Republican ticket but at a late day has made the discovery that the Republican party of to-day is not the Republican party of the lamented Abraham Lincoln type.

The women have been led to believe the only thing that could possibly bring grief to the home was the saloon. In the cities, as election time came round the women were besieged day and night. If any man, I care not who he might be, if a preacher, if not a good Republican, the cry would go up in doleful melancholy tones, it he is elected we will surely have the open saloon. And the women not being used to thinking for themselves believed it. But when the accursed saloon was closed forever, and by the most rigid economy could keep together only an excuse for a home. They began to think, and let me say they intend to keep on thinking until there is a decided change. And they have banded themselves together and say in language plain enough for all to understand that no man or woman need apply in the future for an important official position who has not been identified with the work long enough to be well known throughout the length and breadth of this poverty stricken land.

Our progressive women do not intend to keep their thoughts to themselves. They are going to think out loud so that the brothers can have the benefit of their thoughts. Many different phases of thought have been presented to their minds? First, How did the country happen to be in its present condition? Has it been brought about by the unwise use of the ballot placed in the hands of the women? No. Then by the men being influenced unwisely by their wives, mothers and daughters? Hardly. Then how we ask are there nine millions mortgaged homes to-day. Why men tramping the streets begging for work? Tramping because there is no place in this great world they can call home. Why so many, many thousands of children who ought to be in school, toiling their sweet childhood away to fill the coffers of a few who have no right to their labor. Then why, we ask, are mothers compelled to go out and seek employment that she may be able to keep the wolf from the door. Why we ask, must she be driven from the home that has had the consecrated toil and labor of herself and family? Why all this we ask. We think the reason is this, brothers. In your party blindness you lost sight of the interests of wife and children, and year after year sent men to our legislative halls who have robbed you, your wives and babies not only of their homes, but of the bare necessities of life, and those men would, had it been possible, robbed them of their hope of heaven.

MRS. EMILY E. LATHROP, FOUNDER OF THE "HOME KINDERGARTEN."

Mrs. Emily E. Lathrop.

The subject of the following sketch was born in Hartwellville, Shiawassee county, Mich., December 31, 1847, and is therefore past 45 years of age. Her early life was spent in the wild settlements of Michigan among hazel brush, huckleberries and horses. Being the oldest child, her father claimed her as his "boy" to drive a team and ride a horse; which lesson by choice she has practiced in a varied period of travel and adventurous life of twenty-two years in Kansas. Her early life was thus the meaning of teaching her the lessons of truth by contact with nature's forms and substance, to fit her for object teaching. Leaf, plant and fruit have become living models of instruction, whose character was fixed upon an indelible memory. She combined the beautiful in color and form with the useful in her years of teaching. At the age of fourteen, herself a child, she began teaching a school in the log school house of the woods. From this early effort she went on to school in Cornua, and at the farm on the Grand river road learned books and things, moulding bread and shaping the character of the young; plowing corn and rocking the cradle; attending Sabbath school and gathering apples. She early learned the ways of pioneer life, hence, she has gathered more inspiration to impart truth to the expanding senses of child life than could have come from books alone, and like the great Teacher, has ever come to the original patterns of living forms of rough hewn truth to draw the ideas of real facts to inspire the soul of the true teacher at the feet of nature's great masters; in the oak power is learned; in the rainbow beauty beheld; in the fern form is seen. Those teachers made the young Emily know the source of all that will appeal to the young learner's mind, and she became a plain, honest, apt and natural teacher through the appeal to the senses of the young children everywhere. From the modest home to the daintiest mansion she has engaged her time and attention more to entertain and develop the struggling senses of the young child than to any other work. More so in aid of struggling humanity than to selfishly gather substance and personal attraction. She has taught many terms of public school in Michigan, New York and Kansas. Sabbath school and mission classes, and Kindergarten work of all kinds have had her life's attention and service. In the void of her own motherless instincts, she has atoned for her lack of child-bearing and domestic duties by filling her providential mission of doing unto the least of all others all in her power to aid other mothers in the proper development of the human cares entrusted to them.

Having travelled among some of the families of the cities and towns of the west, and examined the manner of teaching little children, both at home and in public, she has concluded on making home the best nursery for the children until quite well developed in the ability of the child's senses, to pass from the truths it can handle to that of the abstract; that the public school should have an advanced system of industrial and manual training for every person, male or female, to give each life its own personal development, and such special training for life's duties as the "Home Kindergarten" had brought out in its training.

She has combined the social and economic questions of life along with the earliest knowledge of the child's development. To this end she has written and published the article on the "National Home Kindergarten" and "Industrial Alliance" in the FARMER'S WIFE at Topeka, Kansas. She has also written some poetry of a pioneer strain, and other articles which will be expanded hereafter in "Lathrop's Prospectus of the Kansas Revolution."

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

Mrs. Johns and Judge McKay at Harper.

The Harper county Equal Suffrage association held its tenth annual convention in Attica, June 10th. Considerable interest was manifested. The topic of absorbing interest was the pending amendment and the best methods of work for the same. Suffragists were urged to utilize the Fourth of July celebrations by requesting the orators to say a good word for the amendment. The two dominant parties were represented on the platform by Mrs. Laura M. Johns and Judge Geo. W. McKay. Judge McKay believes firmly in the enfranchisement of women and made a fine argument for the adoption of the amendment. He urged that while men have the vote in the amendment women may help the matter by energetically urging upon men the righteousness of the measure now submitted to their decision.

Mrs. Johns, though just home from Chicago and fatigued with attending the Woman's Congress, spoke with her old time energy and presented conclusive reasons for the adoption of the amendment. The following resolutions were among those adopted:

Resolved, That we lay aside for the time, as far as may be consistent, our other work and devote all our available time and talent to the coming campaign and we urge all Kansas women to do likewise;

Resolved, That the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association is and should continue to be non-partisan;

Whereas, It is universally conceded that women are the moral element in society, therefore,

Resolved, That giving the ballot to women must result in strengthening the party which occupies the highest moral ground, politically.

We commend the action of our legislature in submitting the amendment to strike the word "male" from Sec. 1 of Art. 5 of the constitution; and we urge upon the political parties of the state the advisability of supporting this measure; and we hereby make it known that our fealty and support will be withdrawn from that party which withdraws its support from the amendment.

CAROLINE L. DENTON,
ASA TAYLOR, Pres. Dist. E. S. A.
Sec. pro tem.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

Sixth District K. E. S. A. Convention.

From our special correspondent.

The Sixth district K. E. S. A. met in mass convention at Downs, May 24th and 25th, to perfect a permanent organization, Mrs. A. A. Welch, district president, presiding. The evening session of the 24th was largely attended, many not gaining entrance. After the usual opening exercises, the address of welcome was delivered by Mrs. Alice G. Young, a royal welcome indeed, and ably responded to by M. L. Berry, president of the district W. C. T. U. The music by the Mistletoe choir was excellent, and the closing recitation by Miss Georgia Linton, "Woman Before the Law," by E. Cady Stanton, was loudly applauded.

Thursday's sessions were well attended. The state and district constitutions were adopted and Ollie L. Royce was chosen secretary. The papers read were instructive and practical. Words of greeting and encouragement from the Lincoln Auxiliary through their secretary, Mrs. Anna C. Wait, were read by Alice G. Young. Mrs. C. W. Smith of Stockton, had an interesting paper, "What the Ballot Means for Women," read by Mrs. Frank Hizer. "Every Day Women," by Ollie L. Royce, spoke to the majority of women who will never aspire to office; but to hold the ballot means advancement; and protection and woman's indifference to this right is the only barrier to her freedom. Mrs. M. H. Jordan read a spirited paper setting forth the reasons "Why Women Want the Ballot."

The work mapped out for Kansas workers was heartily endorsed and the resolutions read by the chairman of the committee, Mrs. M. L. Berry, were concise and pointed and unanimously accepted by the convention. The meeting throughout was enthusiastic and harmonious. The success of the convention was largely due to the kind hospitality of the citizens of Downs and to the energetic president of its auxiliary, Alice G. Young. The officers elected for the ensuing year are as follows: President, Mrs. A. A. Welch, Cedarville; secretary, Mrs. M. H. Jordan, Aiton; treasurer, Mrs. Sarah Magaw, Downs; organizer, Mrs. Harry Gray, Osborne.

Woman's Progressive League.

[New Era.]

In the Journal of June 14, is published an interview with one of the members of the Woman's Progressive Political League, relating to the convention held the day before, that shows so much malice, spite and bad temper as to bear very little resemblance to the truth. The society is composed of sincere, earnest women working for better conditions for labor, the equality of women and the progress of humanity. One of its members will gain for herself nothing but well deserved contempt by giving to opposition papers, already prejudiced against woman's advent into the economic arena, a report so full of careless statements and misrepresentations. It is told with an air of flippancy and disrespect entirely at variance with fraternal feeling or common courtesy.

It would not be surprising for an enemy to the cause of equal rights to give a garbled, distorted account of a "woman's meeting," but for a member and pretended friend of the League to report as published in the Journal, is the act of a traitor.

She says "They have the organization; now what will they do with it?"

Does the success of the organization depend on the temper of the disgruntled member? Must she be conciliated before the organization can proceed in its work?

The names of the officers elected give ample assurance of the success and good work of the League.

The session of the State Convention of the Woman's Progressive Political League held Tuesday evening in Legislative hall was very interesting and well attended. The speakers, Mrs. Otis, Mrs. Crum, Mrs. Striker and Mrs. Pack gave evidence of woman's ability to manage a convention successfully without help from the masculine side of the house. It may be in defiance of the divinely inspired command of Paul that women must keep silent and learn of their husbands at home, but we may presume that after all these years of their submission and deference to their very able teachers they are now ready to announce to the world what they have learned.

The address by Mrs. Stryker was especially able, well prepared and well delivered, but as all did so well, special mention seems out of place. Not the least important feature was the music which was of high order. A duet on the violin by two young children was especially attractive and really a remarkable performance. We hope the organization will prosper and future meetings be as successful and entertaining.

L. D. W.

$100 Reward, $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

F. J. CROENY & Co., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely

pure and soluble.

It has more than three times

the strength of Cocoa mixed

with Starch, Arrowroot or

Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

FARMERS WIFE SOCIETY.

Organized Eight Years Ago.
PENDER, NEBRASKA, 6-14, 1893.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack.
DEAR MADAM:—The farmers' wives of this new country decided eight years ago next August to form a society here so that new settlers could meet together once a month and get acquainted. The society was to be called the Farmers' Wives' Society, and from about a dozen members it has increased to nearly a hundred. They have a few by-laws to be governed by, also have a President, Vice-President, Secretary and Treasurer. The treasurer's office is not a burdensome one as the society was not formed for the money in it, although we need some sometimes, and when we do there is a collection taken up, each one giving her mite. In the winter the meetings are in the morning and dinner is furnished by each member bringing something to eat from her own home so that the one entertaining them does not have to furnish all the victuals. In the summer the meetings are in the afternoon and the supper is provided in the same way as the dinner in the winter. Any woman can join the society. The men are not allowed to join but can accompany their wives and families at any time if they wish to and enjoy the privileges of the society. There are several papers taken in the society, among them the FARMER'S WIFE, from which we gain some good ideas. We have prose and poetry consisting of political, intellectual and humorous pieces culled from the different papers read by different members, and also at each meeting generally there is a question for discussion on any subject that any one wishes, so that the meetings are a source of pleasure to all. Thinking perhaps if you would insert this in your paper it might benefit some other community, and I am sure that the President or Secretary of the society will give any more information desired or help which is in their power to benefit other farmers' wives.

Mrs. DALTON,
Secretary F. W. S.
I wish to renew the subscription to the FARMER'S WIFE paper for another year
Mrs. L. DALTON,
Secretary F. W. S.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

Letter from the President.
Mrs. EDITOR:—In behalf of the Women's Progressive Political League of Kansas permit me to urge upon the sisters and friends throughout the state to read very carefully the report of our late meeting at Topeka, and then take action to assist in extending local organization.

At this time I am desirous of calling particular attention to the resolution in which we pledge ourselves to not support by our influence any one who is not favorable to equal suffrage.

Sisters at this time when the amendment is pending, it seems to me that all who believe in "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" must unite and demand that no one shall be nominated for any official position who is opposed to equal suffrage.

The county conventions will soon convene and we need to use our influence in these conventions, give the men to understand that we are in earnest. It is now time to declare that there can be no "taxation without representation" and that "all governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed."

We agree with what Abigail Adams said more than one hundred years ago when she declared that "we would ferment a rebellion and would not hold ourselves bound by any laws in which we have no voice or representation."

BINA A. OTIS,
Pres. Kansas State W. P. P. L.
SANTA FE ROUTE.
Pointers for World's Fair.

Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While waiting may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.

Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited; or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stansfield, North Topeka, or W. C. Garvey at depot.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

THE OFFICIAL REPORT

Of the State Organization of the Woman's Progressive Political League, June 13, 1893.

Pursuant to the call of the local Woman's Progressive Political Club of Topeka, delegates of the various local clubs and women interested in this reform movement met at the residence of Dr. Eva Harding, corner Sixth and Harrison streets, to perfect a state organization.

The convention was called to order by Dr. Harding, and opened with prayers by Mrs. Harrington, of Oakland. Mrs. E. W. Crumb, of Burlingame, was elected to the chair, and Mrs. Heller, of Topeka secretary.

A committee on credentials was chosen as follows: Miss C. E. Stallard, of Topeka; Mrs. John Davis, Junction City; Mrs. Emma Trounder, Carbondale; Mrs. S. L. Ruggles, Emporia; Mrs. J. C. Bare, Baldwin. The convention took a recess pending their report.

Upon motion, it was decided that all women present willing to subscribe to the principles and constitution as set forth in the circular published in the Advocate of May 3, 1893, should be constituted delegates, with full rights and privileges.

The following committees were then elected:
Committee on Constitution and By-laws—Mrs. Ruggles, Emporia; Mrs. Trounder, Carbondale; Mrs. Furbeck, Topeka; Mrs. Davis, Junction City, and Mrs. Otis, Topeka.

Committee on Resolutions—Mrs. Ray Dietrich, Carbondale; Mrs. E. W. Crumb, Burlingame; Miss C. E. Stallard, Topeka; Mrs. Emma Sells Marshall, Garden City, and Mrs. Dr. Leary, Lawrence.

The convention then adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The meeting was called to order by the presiding officer, Mrs. E. W. Crumb. The report of the committee on constitution and by-laws was adopted by sections as follows:

CONSTITUTION AND BY-LAWS.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—This organization shall be known as the Woman's Progressive Political League of the State of Kansas.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1.—The object of this organization is to unify the work of the local leagues of the state, and assist in educating women in progressive politics, industrial co-operation, and social and domestic science.

SEC. 2.—Its membership shall consist of delegates annually elected by the local leagues of the state, each league being entitled to two delegates, the president, who will act ex-officio, and one other to be elected, and one additional delegate for every fifteen members, or major fraction thereof.

SEC. 3.—Delegates shall be elected at the first regular meeting in May.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1.—The officers of this league shall be: President, vice-president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer, chaplain and state organizer, and an executive committee of five, of which the president and secretary shall be members ex-officio, who shall be elected annually.

All elections shall be by ballot, and nominations for officers shall be by informal ballot.

SEC. 2.—The regular meeting of this league, shall be held the second Tuesday in June of each year, at such place as the league may direct or the executive committee determine.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER To All Wanting Employment.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want Live, Energetic and Capable Agents in every county in the United States and Canada, to sell a patent article of great merit, on 100 PERCENT. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house-owner, it might not be necessary to make an "EXTRAORDINARY OFFER" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $500 a month clear, and this fact makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial and fail to clear at least $100 in this time, ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all goods unsold to us and we will refund the money paid for them. Any agent or general agent who would like ten or more counties and work them through sub-agents for ninety days and fail to clear at least $750, ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all unsold and get their money back. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such offers, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making more than double the amount we guaranteed; and but two sales a day would give a profit of over $125 a month, and that one of our agents took eighteen orders in one day.

The executive committee shall have power to call special meetings by giving thirty days' notice; and shall also have power, upon the recommendations of the local leagues, to appoint an organizer for each county, whose duty it shall be to urge forward the work of organization, and whose compensation shall be such as may be agreed upon between themselves and the league where the services are rendered.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1.—This league shall have the following standing committees, which shall present a written report at each annual meeting, to-wit:

First—Committee on political economy.
Second—Committee on industrial problems.

Third—Committee on social and domestic science.

Standing committees shall consist of one person from each congressional district in the state.

SEC. 2.—The Omaha platform shall be the present basis of political action of this league.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1.—This constitution may be amended or repealed by a two-thirds vote of the members present at any regular annual meeting.

BY-LAWS.

First—Members of each local league shall pay into their treasury a monthly due of 10 cents, and each local league shall annually forward to the secretary of the state league 20 per cent. of all dues received during the year before such local league shall be entitled to representation at a state meeting.

Second—No person shall be admitted to membership who is opposed to equal suffrage, control of the liquor traffic, or suppression of the liquor saloon.

Third—Nine delegates shall constitute a quorum for doing business.

Fourth—Order of business:

1. Calling to order.
2. Devotional exercises.
3. Roll call.
4. Reading of minutes.
5. Report of officers.
6. Report of standing committees.
7. Report of special committees.
8. Miscellaneous business.
9. Adjournment.

Fifth—These by-laws may be amended, suspended or repealed at any regular meeting by a two-thirds vote of the members present.

The report of the committee on resolutions was accepted and adopted as follows:

Resolved, That the executive committee of this state league be authorized to appoint one or more suitable persons as state organizers in other states of this union, and as soon as five states have completed organizations, the executive committee shall call a national meeting at some acceptable point for the purpose of forming a national organization of the Woman's Progressive Political League upon an equitable basis of representation.

Resolved, That in view of the constitutional amendment now pending, and to be voted upon in 1894, we urge upon all friends of equal suffrage throughout the state to be wide awake and vigorous in their efforts to secure its adoption, and to this end pledge the united action of this league; and, further, that we will assist by our influence and advice, at the coming election, only such nominees as are pledged to, and will work for, the support of this measure.

WHEREAS, War being a prominent element in all barbarous nations, and such recognition of the law of might against right, is in direct opposition to all progressive reform, therefore be it

Resolved, That we, as women deeply interested in all questions of true reform, do hereby protest against war as barbarous, unchristian and unprogressive. We believe in the education of the people in peace, and the consignment of war to that barbaric past, which is its home, and that all questions of difference should be settled by the ballot.

WHEREAS, A large number of our most intelligent people have for years advocated the election of United States senator by direct vote of the people; and

WHEREAS, Up to the present time congress has not seen fit to recognize this desire, by taking any action thereon, and in view of the difficulty usually attending the election of United States senator, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Woman's Progressive Political League does hereby declare in favor of the nomination, at the state conventions of the several political parties, of a suitable person to be supported by the legislature for United States senator, and that these delegates be instructed to that effect; the same to be considered as instructions to the legislative body.

Resolved, That we believe all legislative powers should be vested in the sovereignty of the people and we therefore approve of the "Initiative and Referendum," as a means to restore our republic to that condition, desired by its founders, "a government of the people, by the people and for the people."

Resolved, That the Woman's Progressive Political League recommends to the careful consideration of the local leagues the measure now in operation in South Carolina and formally incorporated in the state platform of Ohio in 1891, for the regulation of the liquor traffic, and that in their discussions of this subject in the local leagues they invite and urge the presence and advice of all persons interested in this and all other measures looking to the same end.

State officers were then elected as follows: President, Mrs. B. A. Otis, Topeka; vice president, Mrs. J. C. Bare, Baldwin; recording secretary, Mrs. S. L. Ruggles, Emporia; corresponding secretary, Mrs. John Davis, Junction City; treasurer, Mrs. Aimen, Junction City; chaplain, Mrs. Emma Sells Marshall, Garden City; state organizer, Mrs. Annie L. Diggs.

Members of executive committee were elected as follows: Mrs. E. W. Crumb, Burlingame; Mrs. C. E. Pixley, Emporia; Mrs. M. H. Heller, Topeka.

A motion was made and carried that the executive committee decide the time and place of the next meeting.

Mrs. S. L. Ruggles, Mrs. John Davis and Mrs. Emma D. Pack were constituted a committee to inform Mrs. Diggs of her election.

A unanimous vote of thanks was extended to Dr. Eva Harding for her kindness in tendering the convention the use of her home.

Convention adjourned sine die.

The executive committee convened at the residence of Mrs. B. A. Otis, June 14, 1893, all members being present. Mrs. E. W. Crumb was elected chairman and Mrs. M. H. Heller secretary.

They prepared an official report for the press; adopted measures for extending the organization throughout our own and other states and drafted the following form of constitution and by-laws, to assist in the organization of local leagues, to-wit:

CONSTITUTION OF LOCAL LEAGUE.

ARTICLE I.

SECTION 1.—This organization shall be known as the Woman's Progressive Political League of, Kansas.

ARTICLE II.

SECTION 1.—The object of this organization is to assist in educating women in progressive politics, industrial co-operation, and social and domestic science.

ARTICLE III.

SECTION 1.—The officers of this league shall be president, vice president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer and chaplain, and an executive committee of five, of which the president and secretary shall be members ex-officio and which shall be elected annually.

All elections shall be by ballot and nominations for office shall be by informal ballot.

SEC. 2.—The regular meetings of this league shall be held upon the second and fourth Saturday of each month. The first regular meeting in May each year shall be the annual meeting for the election of officers. Special meetings may be held as the league shall direct, or may be called by the president and secretary by giving five days' notice.

ARTICLE IV.

SECTION 1.—This league shall have the following standing committees: Committee on invitation and solicitation, committee on program, committee on printing and circulation, of reform literature.

SEC. 2.—The Omaha platform shall be the present basis of political action of this league.

ARTICLE V.

SECTION 1.—There shall be no admission fee, but members shall pay 10 cents monthly dues.

ARTICLE VI.

SECTION 1.—This constitution may be amended or repealed by a two-thirds vote of the members present, provided such change does not conflict with the state constitution. Notice of such proposed changes shall be given one month in advance, except at the regular annual meeting in May of each year.

BY-LAWS.

First—Seven members shall constitute a quorum for doing business.

Second—The secretary shall keep a list of the members, and shall call the roll at each regular meeting.

Third—No person shall be admitted as a member of this club who is opposed to equal suffrage, or to the control of the liquor traffic or suppression of the liquor saloons.

Fourth—The order of business of each regular meeting shall be: Calling to order, devotional exercises, roll call, reading minutes of last meeting, reports of standing committees, miscellaneous business.

Fifth—These by-laws may be amended, suspended or repealed at any regular meeting by a two-thirds vote of all members present.

Sixth—Cushing's Manual shall be the parliamentary guide in the absence of other rules.

All persons desiring to organize a league should correspond with Mrs. John Davis, of Junction City, corresponding secretary, or Mrs. B. A. Otis, of Topeka, president.

As soon as local organizations are perfected, the same should be reported to the recording secretary, Mrs. S. L. Ruggles, Emporia, Kas.

Local leagues are requested to send in dues to state secretary as soon as possible.

The Advocate

—AND—

FARMERS' WIFE,

BOTH FOR

$1.00 A YEAR.

Address, "THE ADVOCATE,"

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

B. L. CRANS,
10 Spruce St., N. Y.,
Room No. 4.
Newspaper Advertising.

Attractive advertisements prepared and placed in all newspapers and magazines.
Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr. B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 10 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex.
DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICSVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send for Royal Safford No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail $1. Brown Bros. Druggists, 108 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

GOITRE OR THICK NECK I have a positive, cleanly, harmless cure. Come if you can, or write me at 28 Livingston St., Cleveland, O. DR. J. CASKEY. It is no iodine smear. Cure made permanent.

1840-1893.
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP
has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children with Teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOTTLE.

J. M. KNIGHT,
Furniture, Carpets, Curtains, Glassware, Queensware and Stoves.
SOLD ON EASY PAYMENTS.
404 Kansas Avenue, 406 Kansas Avenue
PHONE 52.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.
Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.
Send for Circulars and Prices.
J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND—TANSY PILLS
Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others Fail. If your Druggist don't keep them accept no Substitute but send for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE
Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by
CLARA BEWICK COLBY,
Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Two cents.

FAITH AND REASON.

Two travelers started on a tour
With trust and knowledge laden;
One was a man with mighty brain,
And one a gentle maiden.
They joined their hands and vowed to be Companions for a season.
The gentle maiden's name was Faith,
The mighty man's was Reason.

He sought all knowledge from this world,
And every world anon it;
All matter and all mind were his,
But her's was only spirit.
If any stars were missed from Heaven
His telescope could find them;
But while he only found the Stars,
She found the God behind them.

He sought for truth above, below,
All hidden things revealing;
She only sought it woman-wise,
And found it in her feeling.
He said, "This earth's a rolling ball,"
And so doth science prove it.
He but discovered that it moves,
She found the strings that move it.

He roams with geologic eye
The record of the ages;
Unfolding strata, he translates
Earth's wonder-written pages.
He digs around a mountain base,
And measures with a plummet;
She leaps it with a single bound
And stands upon the summit.

He brings to light the secret force
In nature's labyrinth lurking,
And binds it to his onward car
To do his mighty working.
He sends his message o'er the earth,
And down where sea-guns glisten,
She sendeth hers to God himself,
Who bends his ear to listen.

All things in science, beauty, art,
In common they inherit;
But he has only clasped the form
While she has clasped the spirit.

He tries from earth to forge a key
To open the gate of Heaven!
That key is in the maiden's heart,
And back its bolts are driven.
They part! Without her all is dark;
His knowledge vain as humor;
For Faith has outwitted with God,
Where Reason may not follow.
—Home and Country.

BACK TO THE OLD HOME.

Six weeks ago I went down to Fire Island fishing. I had had a lunch put up for me, and you can imagine my astonishment when I opened the hamper to find a package of crackers wrapped up in a piece of the little patent inside country weekly published at my home in Wisconsin.

I read every word of it, advertisements and all. There was George Kellogg, who was a schoolmate of mine advertising hams and salt pork, and another boy was postmaster. By George! it made me homesick, and I determined then and there to go home, and go home I did.

In the first place I must tell you how I came to New York. I had a tiff with my father and left home. I finally turned up in New York without a dollar in my pocket. I got a job running a freight elevator in the very house in which I am now a partner.

My haste to get rich drove the thought of my parents from me, and when I did think of them the hard words that my father last spoke to me rankled in my bosom.

Well, I went home. I tell you, John, my train seemed to creep. I was actually worse than a schoolboy going home for vacation. At last we neared the town.

Familiar sights met my eyes, and upon my word they filled with tears. There was Bill Lyman's red barn, just the same; but—great Scott! what were all of the other houses?

We rode nearly a mile before coming to the station, passing many houses, of which only an occasional one was familiar. The town had grown to ten times its size when I knew it.

The train stopped and I jumped off. Not a face in sight I knew, and I started down the platform to go home. In the office door stood the station agent. I walked up and said, "Howdy, Mr. Collins?"

He stared at me and replied, "You've got the best of me, sir."

I told him who I was and what I had been doing in New York, and he didn't make any bones in talking to me. Said he:

"It's about time you came home. You in New York rich, and your father scratching gravel to get a bare living."

I tell you, John, it knocked me all in a heap. I thought my father had enough to live upon comfortably. Then a notion struck me. Before going home I telegraphed to Chicago to one of our correspondents there to send me $1,000 by the first mail. Then I went into Mr. Collins' back office, got my trunk in there and put on an old hand-me-down suit that I used for fishing and hunting. My plug hat I replaced by a soft one, took my valise in my hand and went home.

Somehow the place didn't look right. The currant bushes had been dug up from the front yard, and the fence was gone. All the old locust trees had been cut down and young maple trees were planted.

The house looked smaller, somehow, too. But I went up to the front door and rang the bell. Mother came to the front door and said, "We don't wish to buy anything to-day, sir."

It didn't take a minute to survey her from head to foot. Neatly dressed, John, but a patch and a darn here and there, her hair streaked with gray, her face thin, drawn, and wrinkled. Yet over her eye-glasses shone those good, honest, benevolent eyes. I stood staring at her, and then she began to stare at me. I saw the blood rush to her face, and with a great sob she threw herself upon me and nervously clasped me about the neck, hysterically crying, "It's Jimmy! It's Jimmy!"

Then I cried, too, John. I just broke down and cried like a baby. She got me into the house, hugging and kissing me, and then she went to the back door and shouted, "George!" Father called from the kitchen, "What do you want, Carline?"

Then he came in. He knew me in a moment. He stuck out his hand and grasped mine and said, sternly, "Well, young man, do you propose to behave yourself now?"

He tried to put on a brave front, but he broke down. Then we three sat like whipped school children, all whimpering. At last supper time came, and mother went out to prepare it. I went into the kitchen with her.

"Where do you live, Jimmy?" she asked.

"In New York," I replied. "What are you working at now, Jimmy?"

"I'm working in a dry goods store." "Then I suppose you don't live very high, for I hear tell of them city clerks what don't get enough money to keep body and soul together. So I'll just tell you Jimmy, we've got nothin' but roast spareribs for supper. We ain't got any money now, Jimmy. We're poorer nor Job's turkey."

I told her I would be delighted with the spareribs, and, to tell the truth, John, I haven't eaten a meal in New York that tasted as good as those crisp roast spareribs did.

I spent the evening playing checkers with father, while mother sat by telling me all about their misfortunes, from old white Mooley getting drowned in the pond to father's signing a note for a friend and having to mortgage the place to pay it.

The mortgage was due inside of a week and not a cent to meet it with—just $800. She supposed they would be turned out of house and home, but in my mind I supposed they wouldn't. At last 9 o'clock came and father said:

"Jim, go out to the barn and see if Kit is all right. Bring in an armful of old shingles that are just inside the door, and fill up the water pail. Then we'll go off to bed and get up early and go a-fishing."

I didn't say a word, but I went out to the barn, bedded down the horse, broke up an armful of shingles, pumped up a pailful of water, filled the wood box, and then we all went to bed.

Father called me at 4:30 in the morning, and while he was getting breakfast I skipped over to the depot cross lots and got my best bass rod. Father took nothing but a trolly line and spoon hook. He rowed the boat with the trolling line in his mouth, while I stood in the stern with a silver shiner rigged on.

Now, John, I never saw a man catch fish as he did. To make a long story short, he caught four bass and five pickerel, and I never got a bite. At noon we went ashore and father went home, while I went to the postoffice. I got a letter from Chicago with a check for $1,000 in it. With some trouble I got it cashed, getting paid in $5 and $10 bills, making quite a roll.

I then got a roast joint of beef and a lot of delicacies, and had them sent home. After that I went visiting among my old schoolmates for two hours and went home. The joint was in the oven.

"Mother had put on her only silk dress and father had donned his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, none too good, either."

This is where I played a joke on the old folks. Mother was in the kitchen watching the roast. Father was out to the barn, and I had a clear coast. I dumped the sugar out of the old blue bowl, put the thousand dollars in it and placed the cover on again.

At last supper was ready. Father asked a blessing over it, and he actually trembled when he stuck his knife in the roast.

"We haven't had a piece of meat like that in five years, Jim," he said, and mother put in with, "And we haven't had any coffee in a year, only when we went a visitin'."

Then she poured out the coffee and lifted the cover of the sugar bowl, asking as she did so, "How many spoonfuls, Jimmy?"

Then she struck something that wasn't sugar. She picked up the bowl and peered into it.

"Aha, Master Jimmy, playin' your old tricks on your mammy, eh? Well, boys will be boys."

Then she gasped for breath. She saw it was money. She looked at me, the at father, then with trembling fingers drew the great roll of bills out.

I can see father now as he stood there on tiptoe, with his knife in one hand, fork in the other, and his eyes fairly bulging out of his head.

But it was too much for mother. She raised her eyes to heaven and slowly said, "Put your trust in the Lord, for He will provide."

Then she fainted away. Well, John, there's not much more to tell. We threw water in her face and brought her to, and then we demolished that dinner, mother all the time saying, "My boy Jimmy! My boy Jimmy!"

I staid home a month. I fixed up the place, paid off all the debts, had a good time and came back again to New York. I am going to send $50 home every week. I tell you, John, it's mighty nice to have a home.

John was looking steadily at the head of his cane. When he spoke, he took Jim by the hand and said:

"Jim, old friend, what you have told me has affected me greatly. I haven't heard from my home way down in Maine for ten years. I'm going home to-morrow."—Romance.

Youthful Champion.

The Duchess of Sutherland, besides being pretty, highly educated and a great traveler, is famous for her benevolent work in the east end of London, where she has established night schools, reading rooms, and regular entertainments for the poor in which many titled ladies take part. The New York Tribune says that she is almost idolized by the gamins of London. Once she found a champion among them in an unexpected manner.

A ragged, barefooted boy, a crossing-sweeper, had doffed his cap to the duchess in the hope of recognition, when he observed a well-dressed but rakish-looking man following her across the street, as if trying to force upon her attentions that were evidently obnoxious to her. There was a look of distress on the duchess's face.

"Scuse me, lady," said a boy's voice beside her, "shall I punch 'is 'ead?"

She turned, looked down angrily upon the little sweeper, and then said smiling,

"Why, it's Jemmie!"

She had remembered his name, after all, and at that moment the boy was hers, body and soul. Without waiting for another word, he dashed off and turned a sort of violent "cart wheel" so adroitly calculated that he landed with two very muddy feet right in the middle of the offensive man's waistcoat.

Then, before the man could recover from the shock, the boy had slapped him with one muddy hand across the mouth, and with the other had deposited a handful of the filthy compound on the back of his neck.

The next moment the boy was in the grasp of a policeman, who dragged him away to the nearest police station. He was just being charged by the constable with having committed an assault when the duchess entered. She spoke kindly to the gamins, and then explained the affair to the inspector on duty.

At her request the boy was set at liberty, and he stayed only long enough to say to the inspector:

"It's the lady what nursed me when the cab run over me leg."

Treating Them Alike.

Laudable as the desire to make every one feel pleasant is, there is a point beyond which it can scarcely be commended. Sam Bassett was one of the hardest and best workers in Greenville, and in harvest time he earned large wages by "hiring out," as he had no farm of his own, to the various farmers who needed extra help. Sam's chief fault was his apparent inability to refuse to do anything for any one who asked him.

Once, when farm hands were scarce, one man had secured Sam's service at the beginning of the harvest. The first day, while the two were at work, another farmer came up, and asked Sam to help him the next day.

"I'll see what I ken do for ye," said Sam, encouragingly.

Presently another farmer came along, asked the same question, and received the same answer.

The farmer for whom he was working was somewhat indignant and amazed at Sam's evident intention to assist three different people on the same day.

"Sam," said he, "what do you call'te to do? First you promised to help me to-morrow, and now you've agreed to help two others. What do you mean?"

"Oh, well," said Sam, easily, "I like to see folks go off feelin' good; treat 'em all alike, that's my motter, when it comes to talkin'. As for work, I've got to tote my wife over to Slowtown to-morrer, an' you can settle it betwixt you three which'll hev me next day: jest make it pleasant all round."

And with a smile of universal good will, Sam returned to his task, evidently feeling that his method of adjusting a delicate matter was above criticism.

Big Ears and Their Meaning.

Ears in which the "hem" is flat, as if smoothed down with a flat iron, accompany a vacillating mind and cold, unromantic disposition.

Large round ears, with a neat "hem" around their border, well carved, not flat, indicate a strong will and a bull-dog tenacity of purpose.

When there is no lobe and the ear widens from the bottom upward, the owner is of a selfish, cunning and revengeful disposition.

The person with an ear with a rounded ovate top is almost without exception one with a placid disposition and a nature that pines to love and be loved in return.

When the ear is oval in form, with the lobe slightly but distinctly marked, it indicates for its owner a lofty idealism, combined with a morbidly sensitive nature.

A BURNT child dreads the fire, but usually continues to play with it.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO THE FARMER AND HOUSEWIFE.

Value of Farm Improvements—Lifting Jacks for Vehicles—Care of Bees and Honey—Making Wire Fences Visible—Boarding Farm Help, Etc.

Farm Improvements.

Upon many farms there are mowing fields presenting a spotted condition, made so by cold, wet pockets needing drainage, gravel ridges or knolls; sour slopes, whereby surface water in descending from higher levels, keeps the grass too wet for health, and other conditions that tend to reduce the productiveness of the farm or increase the labor upon it as is the case in those fields where rocks and stones abound. To remedy these evils is afforded the opportunity for labor at a season of the year when there is no pressing need in any other direction. Regarding clearing of stones, there are many acres that had better be abandoned to pasture than make the attempt at clearing, reserving the energies to be expended upon more favored fields. In other words, it is more profitable to improve good land and bring it into a condition that will pay a handsome profit than to expend labor upon fields that will only return a moderate yield of crops even after the labor performed. An amendment of such conditions as were first mentioned is productive of far more satisfactory results. A few weeks labor in the drainage of a wet pocket, the correction of sandy or gravelly knolls by cartage and mixing with the soil that has been kept cold by moisture all tends to a changed condition that gives great and large returns. Upon the question of drainage an enthusiastic farmer of New York who practiced it, claimed that he could get pay for all necessary labor in the increase of the first successive crop, and even went so far as to recommend the adoption of a system of drainage upon all fields unless it was absolutely sandy soil.

One great objection urged against the use of both barbed and plain wire for fencing is the liability of injury to stock by running into it, simply because the wires are so small as not to be visible until the animal is entangled in the fence. This objection is overcome by the free use of scrap tin, as shown in the engraving. It is best, however, to take the scraps from the shop and at your leisure cut them into the desired form. Many of them will be found of the triaggle shape, with one end slenderly pointed, all ready for attaching to the wire by simply closely wrapping the pointed end twice about the wire. Square pieces may be hung from one corner, and closely pressed to the wire with a pair of pliers. Five or six pieces attached to the top wire, between each post, will prove more useful where horses and cattle are pastured than if the same number were distributed over all the wires. On barbed wire tin scraps will remain where placed, while on plain wire the action of the wind is liable to work them toward the post; hence, on the latter, wrap them as closely as possible, using the pliers freely. The scraps may be cut to uniform size, or sorted over and those of nearly the same size placed in each section. Thus they will present a neater appearance than if applied regardless of uniformity. When scrap tin is not obtainable, old tin fruit cans, pails, or pans may be used.

Bees and Honey.

The bee keeper should always have everything in readiness for work before the blossom comes out upon the fruit trees. This having to make or borrow a hive after the bees begin to cluster for swarming often causes the loss of the swarm and most frequently of the earliest and strongest one of the season. And spare honey boxes or sections should be ready, as the bees are the busiest and gathering the most honey at about the same time the bee-keeper is weeding or haying, when he feels as if he could not spare much time to attend to them. There is not much use in putting on surplus boxes after the clover has been cut. The bee hives should be placed where they will be sheltered from the cold north or east winds, and where they will also be protected from the hottest rays of the mid-summer sun. But they should not be where they will be disturbed by the falling of fruit upon the hive, which disturbs them so much that they are apt to get cross. Under a tree which is kept for shade only will do very well if right in other respects, and if there is not such a place, it will pay to protect the bee stand with a simple roof, which can be cheaply done. Foul brood has a disagreeable odor that would not be easily mistaken when the hive was opened by any one at all accustomed to it, but dead bees and mouldy comb also have a very strong smell of foul brood by one not used to the latter. The hives should be examined and the cause of the trouble removed, in either case, as soon as possible.

Cherry Trees on Roadsides.

The fact that cherry trees thrive under neglect, and need no cultivation, particularly adapt them to roadside planting. The traveller also along a country roadside may refresh himself with cherries, and not feel that he is injuring their proprietor as he would if larger and more easily-gathered fruit were placed within his reach. A driveway lined with cherry trees, and having it understood that its fruit to be eaten as picked was free to all, could hardly help becoming popular. From the surplus fruit the owner of adjoining land could probably make more clear money than he would be apt to get from the roadside crop in any other way.

Lifting Jacks for Vehicles.

Every owner of a wheeled vehicle should have some form of a wagon jack, for raising the axle for oiling, or convenient washing of the wheels. The very simplest form is shown in Fig. 1, from a sketch in the American Agriculturist, and is simply a board six inches wide, and of the proper length, with two notches sawed out near the top, as shown. For light wagons, one man can use this jack very easily, but for heavy wagons assistance is required: The one in Fig. 2 is cheap, strong, and convenient. The part a, is made from a two-inch plank of some tough wood, and is two and one-half feet in length, and should be made from a tough stick 3x4 inches square, dressed to the form shown. The retaining rod g, may be two pieces of No. 8 annealed wire. The upper end fastens in the serrated edge on the upper side of the lever. This will be found a most serviceable jack, and will easily support half a ton weight.

FIG. 1. FIG. 2. STRONG WAGON-JACK.

Feeding Milk to Calves.

Few kinds of food contain a larger proportion of the nutrition required to make rapid growth than does milk. Very young animals find it their exclusive diet at first, and the period when they are suckling their dams is that when they grow fastest. But milk is not easy to digest. It may be, however, all the better adapted to young animals for that fact, because on a milk diet they lay the foundations for a vigorous digestion through after life. The young suckling animal gets very little food at a time at first. "Little and often" is its rule, and it must eat very slowly. But while suckling it gets its food warm. This partly relieves the difficulty of digesting it. Neither of these conditions is found when milk is fed. It is often given cold, and if the calf, sticking its nose into cold milk, refuses to eat, the feeder loses patience and withdraws the milk pail, so that after the calf becomes ravenously hungry it will swallow a large quantity of cold milk in the shortest possible time. Is it any wonder that digestive organs thus treated refuse to work, and the calf has "the scours"? Give the milk always warm, and encourage the calf to eat slowly. But after a calf is one month old, twice a day feeding is better than oftener. Digestion goes on better if the stomach is comparatively empty before new food is given. Give a little clover hay to the calf between meals, and it will learn to eat that. —American Cultivator.

Dairy Notes.

The cow that stops chewing the cud and pricks up her ears when being milked cannot be depended upon to give all of her milk.

HENRY TALCOTT, formerly dairy commissioner of Ohio says: "I can make from $50 to $75 a cow easier in winter dairying than I can from $25 to $40 in summer. Consequently I have my cows come in in October, November, and December."

THERE is much good evidence that the more water cows can be induced to drink the more milk they will give; and some dairymen feed extra amounts of salt to accomplish this end. But the cream and butter product cannot be increased by such means.

THERE is no season of the year when the stock needs better food or closer care than in the early spring. Both the weather and the first succulent feed that they crop in the freshly starting pastures have a relaxing effect, and some grain and good dry fodder is needed to counteract this.

WELLS located near a barnyard are very proper objects of suspicion. The chance is good that they are contaminated by the drainage of the barnyard, and the milk or butter from cows drinking water impregnated with barnyard drippings cannot be regarded as first class. The milk consumer who buys his dairy products is justified in asking the milkman some pointed questions on this matter.

What the People's Party in New Zealand Has Done.

Reverend T. H. P.

Only a few years ago New Zealand's financial standing was in a very precarious condition. Political partisanship brought the country to what seemed irreparable bankruptcy. Thereupon the farmers and laborers united and put their own people in power by ousting the old parties at the ballot. England thereupon prophesied the country's complete downfall; the English banks withdrew their capital; the landed aristocracy sold their lands for what they could get and left the country, as they feared a reign of anarchy. The new government reduced expenses one-third, created an income tax on all incomes over £150, abolished ad valorem tax on property, put a tax on lands, particularly unutilized lands, which forced the large land owners to sell out in parcels to farmers, the tax rate on land being gradually increased from one-eighth pence on the pound sterling for land valued at £5000, up to one and three-fourths pence on the pound when the property was worth £200,000.

The next care was to provide for the accumulating surplus. Under the old parties in 1886 the exports were £6,000,000, and in 1890, under the new government, exports increased to £9,500,000, and for 1892 the figures were still larger. Irrigating ditches were constructed so that the exports of fruit in 1886 of 20,000,000 pounds were increased to 72,000,000 pounds in 1892. The present year the colony has 2570 factories in operation, turning out produce to the value of £9,500,000. All this has been achieved by the farmer's and workingmen's party in a lawful manner. And the credit of this colony stands higher to-day than any of the English colonies. England now continually offers capital, but it is invariably refused, the New Zealanders saying they have all and more money than they want. The present government is said to be composed of honest men; no stealing or corrupt measures are occurring. And all this so contrary to the many supposed-to-be-long-headed predictions of ruin outright. By thoughtful Englishmen this experience is looked upon as one of the most interesting social phenomena of modern times. New Zealand has about 575,000 inhabitants, and is now doing an export and import business of over $75,000,000.

Co-operation Among Alliance Farmers.

Populist farmers of the state of Washington are pushing forward a warehouse system. During the last two or three years the alliances in the Palouse country, which comprises the greater part of eastern Washington and is one of the most productive wheat belts in the world, have been building their own grain warehouses on the co-operative plan. This proving a success, it is now their purpose to erect a terminal warehouse at tidewater which will place them in direct communication with the markets of the world. The company has been organized with a capital stock of $150,000 in shares of $25 each. The city of Tacoma, situated on Puget Sound, has been decided upon for the location. The business men of that place have given a very valuable site of six acres of ground, and further donated $30,000 toward the $75,000 or $100,000 necessary for the cost of erection. The opposition from the railroads and grain speculators will be strong, but the farmers presenting an unbroken front will win. It is hoped very soon to secure some legislative relief by the appointment of a grain inspector.

Public Sentiment Changing.

Reverend T. H. P.

He would be an indifferent observer of the trend of public opinion who did not realize, from the hearings and debates that have taken place at the state house this year, that a change in public sentiment was gradually taking place respecting the attitude that the state should occupy face to face with its quasi-public and especially its railroad corporations. It is needless at this time to go into the causes for the change, whether it springs from the unwillingness of the railroad corporations to perform what many believe to be their duty in the way of service, whether it is the tendency of railroad managers to indulge in financial operations in the way of leases and consolidations that a few years ago would never have been thought of, or whether it is a latent disposition toward what is termed nationalism on the part of the people, or all of these causes combined that have produced the result, the fact none the less remains that outside of the legislature there is a feeling far deeper and broader than ever existed before, the reflection of which shows itself from time to time in legislative action, that hereafter the state must keep the railroad companies under a close, immediate control and that that freedom from official supervision and legislative interference which has characterized the past will not and cannot characterize the future.

Fuel at Cost.

Age of Labor, Oshkosh, Wis.

Agitation is going on in the eastern part of the country relative to the propriety of city governments supplying fuel to the citizens at cost. Most progressionists are heartily in favor of such a scheme and it occurs to us that the city of Oshkosh would be a good place for the establishment of such an excellent public service. Here where there are any number of men supporting families on an income of a dollar a day, where men have offered their overcoats in midwinter as security for a little coal to warm their hovels, a fuel supply station which furnishes fuel at cost would surely be appreciated. Many cities furnish both water and light to their citizens. Some of them supply gas for lighting and heating and there seems to be no good reason why they should not furnish fuel in other forms than gas. Whatever will lighten the burden of labor without injury to anybody is a good thing. To reduce the cost of living is the same as to raise the wages of the poor. The city should own the water works, the light plant, the public coal stations, the gas supply and the street car lines, and operate them all at cost for the benefit of the people.

How They Do It.

As an example of how railroads legislate so as to prevent the people from getting the benefit from improved methods of production, the following, clipped from the daily press is good.

BALTIMORE, May 25.—The Baltimore & Ohio and the Pennsylvania railroad companies have entered into an agreement to advance freight rates on southern pig iron 35 cents a ton to eastern points, to go into effect June 1. The reason given for the advance is that in consequence of the cheapness of coal and labor contiguous to southern furnaces, they are enabled to turn out the pig at a rate that cannot be competed with by the iron furnaces of Pennsylvania and elsewhere along the lines of the Baltimore & Ohio and Pennsylvania railroads. The advance, it is said, does not effect the furnaces of Alabama as much as possible in Virginia and West Virginia. The Alabama furnaces find their outlet over the Louisville & Nashville system and their market in Cincinnati and points in the Ohio and Mississippi valleys.

In other words, this means that when one section of this country can produce or manufacture a given article of consumption cheaper than any other section, the railroads will get together and raise the freight rates on that fortunate section until it is barely able to compete with those sections in which that article is produced or manufactured at the greatest expense. The result is that the consumers' price is based on the cost in that section where it costs most to produce, and the railroads pocket all the profits that should by rights accrue to the sections naturally able to produce or manufacture the cheapest. At this rate "the government must own the railroads or they will soon own the government."

Discover what will destroy life, and you are a great man; what will prolong it, and you are an impostor! Discover some invention in machinery that will make the rich more rich and the poor more poor, and they will build you a statue. Discover some mystery in art that will equalize physical disparities, and they will pull down their own houses to stone you.—Bulwer Lytton.

CONGRESSMAN HARRIS has been down in Virginia encouraging the populist of his native state. He says the prospects there are very bright for the reform movement, and that the only drawback is the people's aversion to the surplus of "isms" and side issues which theorists are trying to force on to the new party.

Populists to Rally on the Fourth of July.

There never has been a more auspicious time in the history of the people's party for a general revival of interest and enthusiasm. There never has been a time when our speakers could present our principles with greater effect and vanquish our enemies with so much ease. The rank and file of the republican party are at sea without rudder or compass. They are disgusted, routed and confused, ready to align themselves with right and progress. A large portion of the rank and file of the democratic party are disgraced and humiliated at the disgraceful scramble for spoils now going on among its leaders. They were told from every democratic stump in the south and west that if the democratic party should be placed in control of the government, free silver and reduction of taxation should be forthcoming at once. They are now confronted with a gold-bug administration, preparing to repeal the last vestige of law that recognizes silver, and doing the bidding of Wall street at every turn. It is to-day violating the spirit and letter of the statutes of the United States. First, by redeeming coin certificates in nothing but gold, when the law plainly provides that they shall be redeemed in silver coin from the bullion purchased under the Sherman law of 1890. Second, by failing and refusing to execute the Geary Chinese law; and third, by taking money from the treasury of the United States without warrant or authority to defray the extravagant and exorbitant expenses of royalty now visiting this country. These grim facts cannot be defended or excused.

Just think of it, taking $2,600 of the sweat money of the workmen in this country to pay the hotel and carriage bills of the Duke of Veragua for one week in Chicago. Our rulers seem to be perfectly infatuated with royalty, and to have absolutely lost every vestige of the spirit of 1776. That spirit dethroned royalty in this country, and should be kept alive among our people; therefore, we, the national committee of the people's party, urge our people everywhere to prepare at once for a great rally of our forces on the 4th day of July, 1893. Arrange for a rally and picnic in every community. Have our very best speakers to entertain and enlighten our people.

Invite your neighbors of every political faith and order to come out and hear the truth. Let this Fourth of July be not only a celebration of the declaration of 1776, but also a celebration of our second declaration of independence as proclaimed at Omaha on the Fourth of July, 1892. Let the 1,058,000 men who voted our ticket in 1892 turn out and convert as many more, and thus build up the cause of right and justice all over the land, and God who holds the destiny of nations in his hands will bless and help us.

H. E. TAUBENECK,
Chairman National Committee of People's Party.

J. H. TURNER,
Secretary National Committee of People's Party.

LAWRENCE J. MCPARLIN,
Secretary National Committee of People's Party.

M. C. RANKIN,
Treasurer National Committee of People's Party.

GEO. F. WASHBURN,
IGNATIUS DONNELLY.

There is Only One Way.

R. T. Van Horn.

Argument on finance is like that on religion—generally a repetition of fixed opinions, without any intention or desire to be convinced. There are, however, a few propositions that are axiomatic:

1. Any kind of money depends for its use as such on the fact that the law of one country, or of all countries recognizes it as a debt payer.

2. If gold or silver is to be money, a certain bulk of it must by law or consent have a fixed value for that purpose.

3. If only one metal is so used, it is easier for money owners to control its supply—and to make the world pay tribute.

4. If two metals—as gold and silver—are made money, it is harder to "corner" both than one.

These propositions are plain enough for the world to understand. Certain brokers in Europe and this country own most of the gold and gold mines of the world—and the national debts held by them alone far exceed the gold supply of the world, to say nothing of other forms of indebtedness in bonds—all payable in gold. A child can see the logic of this situation.

It is monstrous as an economic proposition that individual men should have the privilege of owning the land from which is to be dug the standard of value for all mankind, and to force governments to get from them the material to endow with money power by its own authority. It is a power before which human progress is a slave.

Why not governments make their own money—one way as well as another? We did it during the war and after, and are doing so to-day at the extent of $346,000,000. Why not make it $1,000,000,000 if necessary? It would be just as good as now and the people be free from the losses and distress imposed by the gold corner.

One thing must be remembered. The encroachment of gold owners has been such that to-day no business can be done that does not pay interest to money lenders. And with the money of the world confined to gold, it is only a question of time when its owners own everything.

Take a merchant, a manufacturer, a railway operator, and in twenty years he has paid the gold holder as much as he has made himself—supposing him to have acquired an independence. That, of itself, will bankrupt the world. Europe, to-day, is bankrupt—for the labor of its people is taxed to the last farthing to pay interest on debts that nobody ever thinks possible to pay. That is bankruptcy.

There is only one way for future civilization, and that is for the people, society or government, to furnish the money and allow the people, the labor of the people, to have what it earns. The production of the country must first pay interest on the vast indebtedness resting over everything before it is allowed to eat its dinner.

Governments are now run to protect money. The whole power of civilization is now concentrated to make a bill of exchange par all over the world. And as long as gold is the standard money, just so long will the disabilities now felt grow and weigh down the spirit of labor and progress. Money freedom is the needed freedom of future economy.

Virginia Vagrants.

National Watchman.

Owing to the financial policy of our government, thousands of people are yearly thrown out of all means of earning a sufficient living. Last year, it is said, 100,000 persons were thrown upon the streets of New York because they could not pay their rent. And now comes the following, clipped from a recent Virginia paper:

"This is to notify all dredgers, woodsmen and farmers, that the police court of Norfolk will furnish vagrants and hire them out for three months, for the privilege of working said vagrants with ball and chain, if necessary, or we will furnish the said vagrants to the superintendent of public works in this city, to work with ball and chain for three months. I hereby ask all officers to arrest, according to law, all persons who have no visible means of support, and if the supply exceeds the demand, I will send to jail three months to be fed on bread and water. This is done at the request of the board of health, as a sanitary measure, and under the authority vested in me by section 885, code of Virginia."—J. F. East, Police Justice.

Chosen by the Alliance.

ABILENE, June 13.—The referendum has been introduced here by the people's party central committee, and will be used in the nomination of county officers.

Names of all the candidates have been sent in to the central committee. The names submitted will be sent back to each alliance to vote upon, the two highest being sent in again. From these two the one receiving the highest vote upon another referendum will be the nominee for the office.

WHEREVER there are in any country uncultivated lands and unemployed poor, it is clear that the laws of property have been so far extended as to violate natural right. The earth is given as a common stock for man to labor on; if, for the encouragement of industry, we allow it to be appropriated, we must take care that other employment be furnished to those excluded from the appropriation. If we do not, the fundamental right to labor on the earth returns to the unemployed. It is not too soon to provide that as few as possible shall be without a little portion of land.—Thomas Jefferson.

JUDGMENT AND HEROISM.

Sometimes the Two Do Not Go Hand in Hand.

The brig Aquatic, storm-tossed from Hatteras, ran on the rocks off Cuttyhunk, Buzzard's Bay. Some one was at fault, for she was out of her course. With all sails set, she was on the reef before the breakers were seen.

It was a tempestuous February night, says a writer in Youth's Companion, and the air was so thick with snow that the land seemed farther away than it was. The brig was wrecked, but the captain hoped the hull would hold together for twenty-four hours. Meanwhile there were seven men under him to be saved. How it could be done in such a sea he did not know. Still from the sinking ship lights flared as signals for help.

The Massachusetts Humane Society had a station a few miles from the wreck. The signal was seen. A group of men gathered at the boat house. The bravest man among them became grave and hopeless as he listened to the distant roar of the breakers. The practicability of rescue was gloomily discussed.

"Man the boat!" cried Captain Tim Akin.

Five volunteers followed him. Remonstrances were heard; the sea was dangerously high; rescue was impossible; they would never come back.

"Push her out, boys!" rang out Captain Tim's cheery voice. Away sped the life boat on its errand to save. It was a generous act, but not a wise one; but whose judgment should be taken when lives were at stake? There was important work to do, and Captain Tim thought courage was wiser than judgment.

The men on the brig could scarcely believe their eyes when they saw the life-boat under the stern. They had barely time to count the number of their rescuers.

Captain Tim called for a rope. Before it could be thrown a great breaker struck the life-boat and overturned it. There had been six oarsmen; only four were now seen, three clinging to the bottom of the boat and one struggling in the water, the only one who could not swim.

"Get an oar, Joel!" cried Captain Tim.

While the brave man helped his sinking companion, the other two men were swept from the boat, and he himself was exhausted. It was his habit of life to do what lay nearest. His first thought was for the man who could not swim.

Joe was saved. With a rope he was drawn to the deck of the stranded brig. Captain Tim fought hard for life, but the line slipped from his arm, and he reeled backward into the sea.

Six men had gone out on the ill-fated life-boat; only one of their number returned on the morrow, when another crew from the United States Life Saving Station rescued him and the Aquatic's crew. Five heroes had perished, each as brave as Gordon, who crossed the desert alone to rescue Khartoum.

Captain Tim's generous courage had caused him to err in judgment. No boat could live in such a sea. But he had gone across the bar to a haven where generous self-sacrifice is taken fully into account.

BUILT ON GOLD.

The Soil of Helena, Mont., Is Rich in the Auriferous Metal.

The city of Helena, Mont., is only the growth of a decade, but it contains a population of 20,000, and has magnificent buildings. It is founded on gold dust. The main street of Helena, writes Frank G. Carpenter, runs down a ravine known as the "Last Chance Gulch," and from under its paved sidewalk $30,000,000 worth of gold was taken. The city was built on what was once the most famous placer diggings of the United States, and all about it you see the gravel which had been thrown up and washed out for gold. Even to-day it is not uncommon in building a house or a business block to find enough gold in the foundations to erect a great part of the building, and not long ago a man found a thousand-dollar pocket while he was excavating a cellar. The country about for miles in every direction contains gold, and some of the most famous mines in the United States are within a short distance from Helena. New mines are being discovered every now and then and old ones are being reworked with profit. Recently a $22,000 block of gold was taken from the old Penobscot mine, which had lain idle for many years.

MAIN STREET, HELENA, MONT.
[From under which $30,000,000 worth of gold was taken.]

Not a New Toy.

The magic lantern was the invention of Roger Bacon in 1260.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, AUGUST, 1893.

VOL. 11. NO. 12.

WOMAN.

BY ROSE HARTWICK THORPE.

A queen in her beautiful garments,
She stands on the ramparts today
To herald the dawn, and the ceremonies
Of her past are folded away.

She stands with the prophets and sages;
She speaks, and her tongue is a flame
Leaping forth from fires which for ages
Have smoldered in silence and shame.

Her feet have come up from the valleys,
They are climbing the mountains of light.
At her call the world rouses and rallies,
Bearing arms in the battle of right.

She treads on the serpent that struggles
And grinds out its life 'neath her heel;
She grapples with sorrows that wrong her,
Converting her woe into weal.

Made strong through her slaughtered affection,
She comes, with her sons by her side,
An angel of power and protection,
Their beacon light, leader and guide.

MRS. GEORGE DAWSON LUTZ

Addressed the W. P. P. L. of Topeka, Kansas, June 20th, on the Following Subject:

"Defective education being at the bottom of all social evil, how can we best meet and overcome this difficulty?"

"Tis education shapes the common mind,
Just as the twig is bent the tree is inclined."

If that education is, as our topic implies, defective, the result will be distorted views, misshapen lives and all the variations from the ideal which confront us at every turn. It has been tritely said that, to educate our daughters, we must begin with their grandmothers. Well, there is truth in that, and we may go further, and say that we began at creation to educate for eternity. It is a great error to suppose that education begins at six years of age and ends with the diploma. All life is discipline, its object, education, which means, you know, just "cultured growth," the development of all our faculties and the formation of character, but we have not yet realized this, and we make mistakes.

Now it must be apparent to every close observer that there are radical defects in the system of education and the plan of human life, even in this most favored land. But we cannot go exhaustively into them. We are just a handful of women slowly awakening to the tremendous importance and meaning of this complicated mystery which we call life, and reaching outward and upward with an earnest hope that it may not be too late, asking only "what can we do?" That is,
I think, the one question in the minds and hearts of the thoughtful women of today, "what can we do?" Not as our brothers seem to ask, "what can we get?"

I have thought of so many things that seem to be waiting for women to do, that if I were to put them all down the list would be appalling, and I have tried to sift them to a few things which were to my mind very urgent, and which women themselves can do. We must arouse in ourselves and all other women a strong conviction of the necessity of action in public and political affairs by women.
They have rested so long on the falcy that men could attend to these things without them, that we will find our most difficult task to be convincing them that they are needed. They have known for a long time that the home could not be maintained without them. Their management, judgment, industry, self-sacrifice and virtue are the recognized corner stones of our social structure. They know that the churches could not exist without them, for they are the admitted support of all religious and most philanthropical movements.

I do not think, although I was nearly tempted to say it, that women are not patriotic, but they certainly have been lacking to a certain extent in a full appreciation of patriotism as a duty. I have heard men say they were too lazy to prepare themselves properly for intelligent citizenship, but I think it is not that, perhaps, so much as a modest belief coupled with a fervent hope that there was one thing men could do alone and unaided, and that was the gravest, the most important thing that could be laid on the hearts and consciences of humanity, the wise, just government of a grand and always growing, always changing country. My dear sisters it was a mistake. There is no place where our hearts and heads are more needed, not even in our own homes, than in the field of politics today. No matter how much we may shrink from adding another burden to our already overweighted shoulders. Citizenship is not only our plainest right, it is our highest privilege, our most sacred duty. Do you believe that if we women had always been citizens in fact, as we have in form, if we had been bred and born to patriotic enfranchised citizenship, that our sons could have degenerated into mere politicians, our government into a scramble for place and power and revenue? I think not. Our American men have grown in gentleness, culture and all the directions in which women's minds were strongly turned, and it is only because they habitually neglected the side of government and patriotism, that they were ever able to feel or say "the men will take care of that." Now that is one of the defects we must set ourselves strongly to remedy —this want of patriotism. We must preach and teach and pray for the highest type of patriotism, so that people will be willing, not only to die for their country in emergencies, but to live for it as well, and it is with the children we can do most. Let patriotism and the high calling of citizenship be their earliest lesson. Teach them to glory in the name America, and boast themselves Americans. Put a flag on every school house and public building, and let it and the principles it stands for be to Americans what the shrines of the virgin are in Catholic countries—the objects of pious reverence and devotion. Let us discourage in every way possible the wholesale disparagement and depreciation of our government and our leaders, so common in the public press. Striving always towards the highest ideals, we will yet make mistakes, but let us respect our own laws, our own methods, our own government, and insist upon others doing so. Now if we are to do all these things well, we will need to give more attention to some other things which we have hitherto neglected. Women have had so much patience on time for correcting mistakes and omissions, that not enough thought has been given to preventing them. Her lack of physical strength, or even health, has seemed to her like her political disabilities, something just to be borne, but not preventable. Now I, for one, disclaim utterly the title,

"weaker sex," for women. She is not and never was, and her apparent delicacy and frailness are largely habit and affectation. But I would like to see an era of practical physical culture. I would like to see the fact fully recognized that the first essential of success is to be a healthy animal. I would like to see the body recognized, not as the enemy of the soul, but as the temple, and I would like to see as much care bestowed on its development as on its adornment. I would like to see teachers chosen because they understood and appreciated the wisdom of training the body as well as the mind, and were themselves worthy specimens of the human race, with grace of movement and habits of deportment suitable for imitation, and not because they are too feeble for housework and too homely for clerks or typewriters. I would like to see children trained to habitually correct methods of sitting, standing, walking, breathing, rather than to a few meaningless exercises reluctantly performed in an atmosphere which you could slice, and I think, in the primary department at least, a good nose for carbonic acid gas quite as useful as the ability to demonstrate Euclid, 43rd proposition. And I think it is the business of women to see to all this. Poor women, how much they have to do! How will they go about it? Well, they will have to leave undone some of the things which now consume their time and energies, and this will be one of the blessings which will follow emancipation. With real work to do and the power to make it effective, they will waste less strength on superfluities. Life will be simpler; that to my mind is the safety of the race—simplicity, temperance, co operation.

When women are partners not pensioners of their husbands, when their belongings are a matter of choice and not an advertisement of some man's generosity and an evidence of their own powers of charming, they will dress with temperance and comfort, not with meaningless, ever-wearying display.

When the laws of good health and good hygiene are the possession of every human being it will issue in an era of "plain living and high thinking." The time-honored axioms that "the way to a man's heart is through his stomach" and "to please a man you must please his palate," will pass into "innocuous desuetude."

When men are better informed they will be ashamed to admit that they can be pleased in that way, and when women are equals instead of inferiors they will not care so much whether they please them or not.

In this "good time coming" the wastefulness of our present system will disappear. The woman with a gift for cooking will not wear out her life making dresses, while the genius for costumes struggles vainly with the cook stove.
The square blocks will not have fitted themselves to round holes; co-operation will help each to his appropriate place and work, and we will still be women; for while we desire many things to be different, we do not wish for ourselves anything better than to be good patriotic women citizens, and we can begin now to bring this about. First, by cultivating in ourselves, our husbands, sons and daughters, patriotism; second, physical perfection; third, temperance in food, drink and apparel; fourth, simplicity; fifth, cooperation, which properly understood, means brotherly love, charity, helpfulness and all the Christian and human virtues summed up. The keynote of life here and hereafter, "For another commandment I give ye, that ye love one another."

ADDRESS OF MRS. OTIS AT ROSS- VILLE, JULY 4TH.

This year we celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America, and to-day the one hundred and seventeenth birthday of our nation.
The orators of Independence day have been accustomed in the past to summon forth their highest oratory and bid the American eagle soar aloft to the skies and screech to the admiring crowd that this is the land of the free and the home of the brave. Seldom have they realized that one wing of our national bird was clipped by our forefathers when they declared for political independence for themselves and forgot that their wives and mothers would necessarily be citizens of the same country. In forming a government that derives its strength from the consent of the governed, they disfranchised one-half of its citizens and hold them subject to the laws in which they have no voice and tax them to support a government in which they have no representation. In other words, the mother element is excluded from the home making and home keeping of our national home. I look upon our nation as but an enlarged edition of our industrial homes. We are children of the same Heavenly Father, each with our individual peculiarities, but created by Him to perform our part in the economy of nature. The mother influence is just as essential to make a perfect government as it is to make a model dome.

God said that it was not well for man to live alone so he created woman to be his helpmeet and companion and said that the twain should be one, but mind you he did not say that the one should be the man nor the woman but the twain.
During the past thirty years of our nation's history the money power of our own country and even of the old, have been making laws and manipulating the politics of our country in their own interest; they have been led to this by selfishness and ignorance of the needs of the laboring people. The result is that the sanctity of the home has been invaded; whole families have been made homeless after years of hard labor on the homestead. Scenes as heart-rending as those of the evicted tenantry of Ireland have been witnessed in our own land. Our girls have resorted to lives of shame to save them from starving, or committed crimes such as would send them to the city prison where they could be fed and housed until the cold of winter was passed. Our boys have idled their time on the street corners and are thus left to the mercy of the one who seeks to entrap the idle.

There is no spot on earth so dear to every true woman as home, and no one knows how to protect and care for that home as does the mother. Women have ever been foremost in asking for reform schools, in visiting the criminal's cell, and her love has reached out for the orphan and the outcast. Her experience with the unfortunate of all classes has taught her that the greatest needs of her race to-day are better homes and better home influence, and the thinking, progressive women of to-day believe that they can do most to protect these homes by uniting their ballots with the honest, intelligent men to make laws to protect our homes.

The discussion of the economic question of the present time has aroused the intelligent people of progressive Kansas to such an extent that it is probable that the amendment for equal suffrage will win in 1894. While our success has been ignored at the ballot box, woman's work in the recent campaigns and the active part she has taken in public affairs has identified her with the political parties at this time and while we may have our political complexions we are ready to join hands and unitedly ask the legal voters to grant us our natural rights.

If we glance back through the past thirty-five years we notice remarkable changes. In 1857, Mrs. Nichols, who was one of the pioneers of equal suffrage in Kansas, was refused the privilege of delivering a lecture from a pulpit in Sinclairville, Chautauqua county, N. Y., and forced to speak from a low platform in front of that sacred desk. Since then the Chautauqua circles, originating in that very county, have been calling and educating women to come to the front in all good works, and at the Assembly in 1893, at Ottawa, a day was set aside as "Suffrage day." In 1859, Mrs. Nichols appeared before the constitutional convention at Wyandotte, as the representative of two hundred and fifty-two women from Douglass and Shawnee counties
"protesting against constitutional distinctions based on difference of sex." But the request for political suffrage was denied and Mrs. Nichols declares that "having at the commencement of the convention only two known friends of our cause among the delegates to rely upon for its advocacy against the compact opposition of the sixteen democratic members and the bitter prejudices of several of the strongest republicans including the first chief justice of the new state and its present unreconstructed senator, Ingalls, an early report upon our petitions would have been utter defeat."

When introduced to Governor Medary at that convention, he said, "But, Mrs.
Nichols, you would not have woman go down into the muddy pool of politics?"
She replied, "Even so, Governor. I admit that you know best how muddy that pool is, but you remember the Bethesda of old; how the angel had to go in and trouble the waters before the sick could be healed, so I would have the angels trouble the muddy waters that it may be well with the people, for you know, Governor Medary, that this people is very sick."

Now, we have in 1893 an amendment to the constitution, submitted by the legislature, embodying the same principles contended for in 1859 and the platforms of two political parties endorsing it. If this amendment under such circumstances fails to carry in 1894, I suggest the propriety of the ladies of both these parties suing for "breach of promise," and I am sure that any fair-minded jury would bring in a verdict for heavy damages.

All labor organizations have united with the suffrage associations in advocating the enfranchisement of woman. Full well do I remember in 1873 when the agitation of this question was begun in the grange organization, and when in 1874 we elected a lady secretary in Capital grange, alas! how it shocked the sense of propriety of the ancient fossils; and when two or three years later we elected a lady overseer it was just too much for the old fogies to endure. But two years ago I had the pleasure of installing the officers of the state grange and not one objected or even thought to question the legality of the proceedings. Surely the world doth move and the people do progress slowly.

After the grange came the Knights of Labor declaring for woman's equality, and later the Farmer's Alliance takes the same position. And now we have the People's party as the latest and truest exponent of woman's rights in Kansas.

Even the progressive leaders of the Republican party are polishing their shoes and brushing their plug hats and, with a polite bow, offering their right arm to the honored guest of the hour, Miss Equal Suffrage. The democratic party is even making a modest bow and uttering a sorrowful amen.

The organization of the Woman's Progressive Political League within the last few weeks is the latest manifestation of the onward movement and the remarkable changes going on in public sentiment. This new organization is not simply a suffrage association, but it will in nowise antagonize any other but will work hand in hand with all suffrage associations and will do more; it will endeavor to educate its members in political economy along progressive lines. It will favor the Initiative and Referendum in legislation which brings the entire government closely home to the people.
It will favor industrial co-operation and seek to solve the vexed questions in social and domestic science. It stands opposed to war as a relic of barbarism and favors the settlement of all international difficulties by arbitration, and all national political questions by fair and uncorrupted ballot. It makes the Omaha platform the basis for present political action. It admits no one to membership who stands opposed to equal suffrage or the control of the liquor traffic. It calls for the progressive women of our own as well as other states to council together on any needed reform. It is simply an outgrowth of the times. It comes as a friend of truth, of progress and of human rights.

Sisters, the signs of the times as found in these changed conditions and in these new organizations should give us new courage. The hour has come for action, bold, energetic, united action, and as soon as we prove to the legal voters that the majority of the women of our state are in earnest and determined to have the rights that should never have been denied, then our cause is won. The future is before us with great possibilities if we are equal to the responsibilities of the present time.
Let our motto be "ad astra per aspera."

HELEN M. GOUGAR.

LAFAYETTE, IND., July 15, 1893.

DEAR MRS. PACK:—Accept my thanks for calling my attention to the fact that my subscription has expired to your valuable paper. I must have it. I enclose $1.00, for which please mark me up for two years instead of one. I am deeply interested in the success of the pending woman suffrage amendment in Kansas.
I shall try to donate such service as I can to the work before the vote is taken. It was my thought, when I caused the municipal suffrage bill to be introduced in the Kansas legislature, that it would finally lead to full suffrage for the State, then the Nation. A general circulation of your paper would render the best of service for success. Women every place should swell your subscription list.

Cordially,

HELEN M. GOUGAR.

The FARMER'S WIFE is being clubbed with all of the leading reform papers in America. Ask your editor to send for it for you.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

MATRONS AND MAIDS.

FAIR WOMAN'S DOINGS AND IDEAS.

A Woman's Disposition is Depicted in Her Countenance—Danger in Playing at Love—Identification of Signature—Home Influences—Advice to Young Women.

Women Playing at Love.

HERE is but one way in which a married woman may safely lay herself out to be charming or fascinating to any man, and that is with the one purpose in mind, dominating all else, that she may arouse in him the conviction that her husband ought to be a happy man, writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland in an article on "Dangers of a Social Career" in the Ladies' Home Journal. A woman may sometimes increase her value in her husband's eyes by the admiration of others when it is solely for his honor that she is seeking to please. Vanity is not the only moral danger of a life spent in fashionable society, though it leads to its most disastrous consequences. In often alienating a wife's affection from her husband, and vice versa. They handle edged tools who "play at love," and the divorce courts seem to be the only places resorted to for the cure of such wounds. If "the little rift within the lute" has already begun in a wife's relations with her husband, let her repair it at once, and realize that her life-long happiness depends on that man. It helps wonderfully in arousing one's own waning affection to try to gain that of another and excite and deserve his highest admiration. There is another side to the subject—the husband may be in fault—but we are considering the matter from the woman's standpoint. Let us

"Act well our part,
There all the honor lies."

Beauty and Disposition.

I firmly believe that in the majority of instances the disposition of the individual is generally depicted on the countenance, perhaps more so in women than it is in the case of the men, writes a correspondent of London Tid-Bits. It seems to me that if a pretty woman is really desirous of preserving her good looks the most certain method to adopt for the attainment of her desires is to attend not only to the preservation of her beauty, but to the far more important cultivation of a good mind. Marriages would be more numerous and happy, in my opinion, if the young women of to-day paid greater attention to the pursuit of the pleasure of the intelligence.

The habits of the average young lady nowadays are not very conducive to health and good looks, when we remember how many thoughtlessly sacrifice and prematurely age their youthful beauty in the heated ball-rooms and dancing academies of the metropolis. Late hours and their consequent evils tend also to make many women ugly before the resistance of time. If it is a fact that a pretty woman grows ugly through defects in her disposition, etc., why should not many a plain-looking girl, by leading a simple life and avoiding those errors which have been enumerated, become comparatively handsome? Does not a thoughtful, reflective mind impart a certain sweetness of expression to the face? There are women who, by the unselfish character of their lives, charm almost everybody with whom they come in contact; yet although they may be plain looking in the strict sense of the word, their facial defects in this respect are entirely counterbalanced by their winning manner and charming expression.

A Woman's Age.

A woman has nothing but her age to defend her. And she does her best to keep that age as young as possible, because she knows that the fewer years it carries in the eyes of others the greater its power to charm, the surer its strength to win her victories in the big battle of life. She has an arcanum for it just as she has for the wad of false hair that she wears in a bogus Psyche knot at the back of her neck and for the little paint-tube out of which she squeezes the cheeriness of her lips. The man who tears away the veil from this sanctum sanctorum of innocent and harmless white lies deserves a hereafter of horns-wagging in which a perpetual procession of hours trample over his trembling heart and Cupid ever hovers near with his thumb to his nose and his fingers spread out, mocking at and making merry with him. In a recent breach of promise case the brother of the defendant, in a cruel, desecrative way, went to work and revealed the alleged real age of not one woman, but of six. The fair plaintiff says she is 27. The age unmasker says he has records which prove that she is 34, and these same records boost the ages of plaintiff's five sisters across the same seven years of time. Isn't it awful? How hard-hearted a man must be to publicly declare that a woman is seven years older than she says she is? Where is our boasted modern chivalry? What has become of the world's supply of Chesterfieldism? And how about the thing we used to call gallantry? Evidently they are not a drug in the market just now. From this time out a woman whose age has holes in it doesn't want to court the glare of the public eye very much, breach-of-promises or otherwise.—New York World.

Good Advice to Young Women.

There is nothing so certain to make you disliked as to tell your troubles to a friend. Prosperity means friendship, but once you take it into your head to retail your woes you will soon discover that your company is not wanted, and the people who once bowed to you in pleasant recognition now walk on the other side of the way with a cold and stony glare that looks over your head or through your body, but never meets your eyes as of yore. The people are not hard-hearted that turn the cold shoulder to you. They are only averse to knowing of any more misery than they already have to bear. We every one of us have our little trouble. In some cases they grow to be very large ones, and it isn't pleasant to have the dark side continually thrust before us just when we begin to feel a bit comfortable in our minds over some unpleasant occurrence that has upset us for a time. Take a bit of valuable advice, and when you feel like telling some one of your spat with your intended or how low your finances are, just remember our warning and don't do it. Your mother, your father, and your husband are the truest sympathizers, and, outside of them, you are certain to be soon called a bore if you persist in your harrowing confidences.—Philadelphia Times.

Engaged Couples in France.

After a girl has passed her eighteenth birthday she is thought to be a demoiselle a marier, but it is considered bad taste for the parents themselves to make any effort to achieve a daughter's marriage. Young men, excepting in the country, where far greater liberty is allowed, are seldom asked to visit a family where there are grown-up daughters, and, under rare circumstances, are never asked to come to lunch or dinner. On no account would a French mother allow her daughter to speak to a man of known bad character or obviously unfit to become her husband.

Marriage is an ever present possibility in France where young people are concerned, and as may be easily imagined, this has both its advantages and disadvantages. None of these rules apply to near relations. Abroad families see a great deal of one another and cousins hardly ever develop into husbands, probably because they are allowed to see so much of their younger cousins.

Identification of Signature.

The growing fashion of giving girl children but one name as "Helen" or "Katherine," so that when, if they marry, they may retain, with their new signature, their full maiden name, is part of this subject of identification of signature, writes Frances E. Lanigan in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Mollie Irene Brown" is not as euphonious nor as sensible as "Mollie Garfield Brown" or "Nellie Grant Sartoris." This custom has the further advantage of securing the woman's immediate recognition not only as her husband's wife but also as her father's daughter. Mrs. Brown or Mrs. Sartoris signifies but little, but Mrs. Garfield Brown or Mrs. Grant Sartoris tells its own story.

Home Influences.

"Why aren't you on the streets of nights with the rest of the boys?" inquired his comrade of a Vermont, a son of Edwin Chase, when the former was a youth in the high school, says the Bellows Falls Times. His reply is worthy of every father's consideration. "Because father makes it so much more pleasant for me at home than I don't want to be." That man has three sons and four daughters, and he felt under obligations to his children, especially after dark. The children appreciated the attention and grew an honor to the family name.

Why Car Wheels Wear Out.

A car wheel wears out because the metal of which it is composed comes away in thin scales. A microscopic examination shows that the continual jarring has a tendency to destroy the coherence of the particles, and thus gradually disintegrates the whole. Car wheels long in use become so brittle that a stout blow with a heavy hammer will sometimes cause them to fly into fragments as though they were made of glass.

The good time is here, but it gets no recognition because every one is looking past it for the good time coming.

WORN BY THE WOMEN

SOME OF THE VERY LATEST IDEAS IN DRESS.

A Black China Silk Gown Is One of the Most Serviceable—A Tasteful Summer Walking Dress—Simple Attire for the House, Etc.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondence.

HAVE you ever considered that of all the gowns ever made the one from which you can get the most wear for the longest while and for the greatest number of occasions is a little black China silk. The silk must be of the very best quality. Such comes as wide as wool, is of close texture, smooth, glossy surface, and washes like linen. The gown must be made all in one, both skirt and bodice being shirred to a good wide belt. The width of the belt extends above the waist line, so that the general effect of the gown is short-waisted. The bodice opens in front, so does the skirt, and what a comfort it is not to have to bother about a placket hole. Make the belt extra big around, and double so as to accommodate a drawing ribbon. The bodice is full and has a sort of surplus front; that is, the collar crosses over and fastens at the side, and carries some of the fullness of the bodice with it, making it double-breasted at the top, though not at the belt line. In this way the bodice fastens securely in a jiffy. The collar is a choker, snug and trim-looking. The sleeves are literally enormous. Just as many yards as you can spare and make stay in the arm-hole should be used to form great unstiffened bishop sleeves that go into a smooth tight cuff coming to the elbow.

FOR HOME AND JOURNEYING.

Coming to the first model set before you by the artist, that of the initial picture, there is seen a tasteful summer walking dress. It is made of pale blue and white striped crepon, and trimmed with white lace and pale blue satin ribbon. The skirt escapes the ground and is about three and a-half yards wide. It is trimmed with three rows of crepon ruching, is laid in a few pleats in front and gathered to the skirt band in the back. The waist fastens in the center. The front and back are taken rather loose, and in the front is a yoke of alternating rows of one and a half inch satin ribbon and lace insertion. This is finished with a frill of white lace nine inches wide, gathered to the yoke in the front and the ends then carried around under the arms up to the shoulder seams, making a kind of reversed Figaro jacket. The belt of satin ribbon ties with long bows and ends at the left side. The sleeve has a short puff and is finished at the wrist with a lace frill headed by a crepon ruching. The standing collar is covered with lace.

AMID THE BLOSSOMS.

The next sketch was taken as a hostess parted with her guest, and shows the former in a house gown of cheerful coloring and the latter garbed in serviceable and stylish traveling attire. The material used for the indoor dress is pink woolen crepe trimmed with lettuce-green satin ribbon and lace. The gown is open all the way down in front and is finished around the bottom with a pink ruffle about six inches wide. The waist has silk lining. There is a square yoke of embroidered tulle with an insertion of very fine lace laid over green ribbon. At the waist it is shirred four times in groups of two rows each and ornamented with four ribbon bows. The cuffs of the sleeves are also covered with embroidered tulle and garnished with a lace frill and bows; at the top is a large puff. The standing collar is green ribbon covered with lace. The gown hooks from top to bottom in the front. The second costume follows current modes closely, and is more elaborate than usual traveling dress. Its fabric is made colored rough diagonal, trimmed with cloth in the same shade. The skirt is composed of three parts, each one finished with a band of cloth, over an alpaca lining.

SIMPLE HOUSE DRESS.

At mention of gardening one's thoughts would more naturally turn to some old dress and coarse protecting apron than to the stylish gown of the third picture, but it, nevertheless, is intended for wear amid the flower beds, in company with the trowel and watering pot. Its material is sand-colored woolen suiting, trimmed with white or palest pink faille. The skirt is very wide around the bottom, but snug over the hips. It is gathered in the back, lined with satin, and has a thirty-inch strip of muslin as stiffening, but no trimming whatever. The bodice has loose fronts faced with silk and a vest of faille fastening beneath the box-pleat adorned with gold buttons. The back is plain with pointed plastron of the faille. In front is a belt fastening with a bow of ribbon. The bodice is trimmed with full festooned bretelles, narrow in front and back, but wide over the shoulders.

The fourth picture presents a pretty and simple house dress in a moss green crepe strewn with a figuring of tiny black flowers. It is made princess, perfectly plain and is lined with satin. All the seams in the skirt are biased and the dress hooks in the back. Its sole trimming consists of a draped fichu collar arranged in folds and caught up here and there. The right end is short but the left hangs down for some distance, being held in place at the waist with fancy pins. The collar is arranged in pleats fastened with jet straps having a long jet fringe.

The material employed in the calling dress of the last illustration is black and red changeable silk, set off with black velvet and black lace. The bell skirt is lined with silk or satin and is stiffened throughout with muslin; around the bottom there is a very full frill of silk edged with velvet and attached to the skirt with two rows of gathers. At the back the fullness is arranged in two deep pleats. The round waist goes inside the skirt and has no seams save those under the arms, although the fronts may have darts if necessary. Each front must be cut considerably wider than the lining to allow for the yoke-like shirring at the neck; the stuff is then drawn to the waist line and laid in tiny pleats. The back is treated in the same way, save that there is no shirring. The sleeves are finished at the wrist with a band of velvet, and the belt and standing collar are of the same velvet. The waist is garnished with a full jabot of black lace.

A WELL-DRESSED CALLER.

Copyright, 1903.

THE soundness of a beam or log can be accurately determined by the sense of hearing alone. The ear should be applied to one end of the beam, while the other is struck with a hammer. If the sound is clear, distinct, and sharp, the beam is sound in every part; if dull or muffled, decay has set in somewhere in the interior.

YELLOW quartz or topaz resembles the real topaz in color only. It is softer, lighter, different in crystallization and cleavage, and in electrical properties. Much of the yellow quartz is manufactured by heating amethysts.

EVE'S MILLINERY STORE.

Is Located in an Ancient Country of Western Asia.

In the ancient country of Mesopotamia, Western Asia, is the Arab village of Corna, believed by Arabs, Turks, and Persians to be the site of the Garden of Eden. Here stands an old and knotted fig-tree, pointed out from time immemorial by the natives of the locality as the descendant of the identical fig-tree that nearly 6,000 years ago furnished the material to our first parents, Adam and Eve, for their first clothing. The tree is twenty-five feet high, with a knotty trunk nearly three feet in diameter. Visitors to this original millinery store usually cut their names on the trunk of the old tree.

THE ORIGINAL MILLINERY STORE.

Cider Vinegar.

Good cider vinegar can be made only from good cider. Cider made from ripe apples is stronger than that made earlier, when the apples are yet green. Put the barrel on its side, and fill it with good cider to the bung, that the pomace may be thrown out as the cider ferments. Fill up the barrel twice a day when fermentation is in progress. At the close of fermentation the cider should be racked off carefully and put into another clean barrel, or the same one after it has been well washed out.

If there are enough barrels, it is better to fill them only half full after fermentation is finished, as this exposes a greater surface to the air. The more air the better the vinegar will make; hence, a darkened airy outhouse is better than a close cellar for the storage of the barrels. Cider vinegar is not weakened by exposure to the air or injured by freezing; and if the barrels are only half full there will be no overflow from freezing. It is not necessary to add anything to the cider; nor is it desirable to add anything, except some old vinegar, after the cider has fermented. The cider will be converted into vinegar in about twelve months, but will steadily increase in strength.

The tightness required of a cider vinegar barrel has become proverbial. Leakage is what haunts the nights of the vinegar maker. The staves of the vinegar barrel must be free of sapwood, and twice the usual thickness. Wooden hoops are better than iron ones, as the cider will cut through the iron hoops in short order when once it gets to them.

Worms, the larva of a fly which usually deposits her eggs in the chime, make much bother, and must be carefully guarded against. Naturally enough they prefer sapwood; and on this account as well as the cider soaking through sapwood, it should be avoided. It is said that occasionally painting the barrel with coal oil will kill the larva. But it is best to prevent the deposit of the eggs, which may be done by keeping the barrel in a dark place from March to October.

A Floor Oil-Cloth.

Many housekeepers like an oil-cloth for a dining-room floor, but unless taken good care of it will soon wear out or at least lose its beauty.

Never use soap in the water when cleaning the oil cloth. It fades the colors and breaks up the paint. Ammonia also is to be avoided, because it gives the cloth a dead look. If a brush is used it should be a soft one, but is better not to use any, except in case when the oil-cloth has been long neglected or poorly washed for some time previously. Take a clean flannel cloth and apply clean warm water, which is finally to be removed by soaking it up into the house flannel again after it has been wrung out. The oil-cloth is then wiped dry with another piece of clean flannel.

After the oil-cloth has become thoroughly dry apply to it some water linseed oil. The housekeeper who tries this for the first time will probably use too much and make the cloth so sticky that every particle of dust will adhere to it. Only a very little is used and slightly rubbed into the cloth, giving it a handsome gloss. Skim-milk is sometimes used in the place of oil and gives the cloth a beautiful gloss.

Too frequent washing, no matter how well it is done, will not improve oil-cloth in the end. Usually this is the kind of treatment it receives, for few housewives seem to realize the difference between dusty oil-cloths and a dirty one, and treat both the same. After it has had a thorough sweeping, if it looks dull and dusty, go over it a little at a time with a dry mop cloth, and it will look as bright as though washed and will wear a great deal longer.—Grange Homes.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

GREAT VARIETY IN THE STYLES FOR THIS SEASON.

Nothing Like a Silk Waist for the Dog Days—Handsome Promenade Toilet—Wash Lace Is Ugly and Starched Lace Is an Abomination.

Fashion as It Is Found.
New York correspondence:

REALLY pretty wash petticoats are here again. With wash dresses the old-fashioned starched skirt will be worn, to supply the needed stiffness, but we have learned something by experience with the petticoats we have worn of late, and such starched skirts are not to be trimmed with lace. We have found that wash lace is ugly, and that lace stiffened by starch is an abomination. Fine Hamburg may be used or a lot of tucks. The material of the skirt is not too fine to hold the starch.

What makes the new petticoat not the old one is that it is shaped a little and that it has cute little ruffles on it about the bottom, often of colored stuff. Also that it is not necessarily made of white stuff itself. You may have a perfectly distracting petticoat made of striped blue and white cambric, with adorable ruffles of solid blue. Other wash skirts to be worn with fine muslins that accomplish the required flare by cut and fullness and quite without stiffness of any kind, are made of dainty dimities, every bit as good as the material of the dress, of faint colors, and evidently selected to go with the gown. For instance, a dress of blue spotted or sprayed muslin will be worn over a petticoat of solid blue dimity that is a wilderness of tiny blue ruffles. Just why it does not look as if one had on two dresses I don't know. It would have looked so a while ago. Skirts are made of turkey red, that standby wash-stuff, and are run with ruffles of white Hamburg, or of the red set with insertion of Hamburg. Such skirts are starched stiff and worn under outing cloth dresses, or with gingham or duck gowns.

EMBROIDERED WITH PANSIES.

Of the five accompanying illustrations the first is a handsome promenade toilet in figured foulard shot in prune and copper, with the design in pale yellow. The skirt is cut to give but little fullness at the top, and is lined with thin silk. The bodice comes over the skirt, and is hooked to the latter to prevent it from slipping. It fastens in the center beneath the plastron and has revers piped, as is the flaring collar, with pale yellow silk. The plastron hooks over and is trimmed with a box pleat down the center, adorned with gold buttons. The balloon sleeves are also piped with yellow at the wrist. With the costume a round hat is made, of cream-colored fancy straw, with a slightly tapering crown, entirely covered with tiny blossoms. Linen shirt-waists are fairly cool and comfortable, but there is nothing like a silk waist for the dog days. By waist I mean a garment cut exactly like a tennis shirt with a half-high collar, a deep yoke, a handkerchief pocket in front and fastening either with buttons and button holes of diminutive size or else with link-studs. The sleeves should be long and full. With this kind of shirt-waist one should wear a silk tie, matching it exactly. The waist is very pretty in white or dove-gray silk, but it can be made in any light color, and light-blue looks particularly well. Serpentine, alias surplice, waists are extremely popular. They are made in a great variety of materials. In silk they are rather expensive, but one can get the same thing in saten for a much less sum and one which is quite enough to pay for an article that may go out of style to-morrow. Blouse waists of changeable silk are still fashionable, but they do not sell well without linings, and when a loose waist is lined it naturally loses its chief merit. Very dainty are the shirt waists of Japanese wash-silk in gray and white stripes, but after all nothing looks prettier than plain, creamy India silk, which washes beautifully, becoming softer after each visit to the laundry.

BLOUSE WITH REVER COLLAR.

Two pretty models of the blouse waists, which are seen this summer in so many forms and materials, are shown in the next two pictures. The first of the pair is old rose silk or satin, trimmed with bands of the same embroidered with lavender and yellow shaded silks, in a design of pansies. The lower part of the blouse has no lining, but the top is lined with muslin or thin silk and closes in the center. The blouse closes on the left side and has no seams save those in the middle of the back and the sides. The fullness is laid in pleats at the waist in the front and back. The sleeves are balloon shaped, and the wide belt of silk fastens at the side. The embroidered bands may continue around the back or be left only in the front, as desired. The second example is made of pink satin merveilleux and has a plastron of moss-green satin, beneath which it hooks. The back has only the seam in the center and the left side laps over a trifle. The satin is draped over a tight-fitting silk lining. The revers collar is quite full, round in the back, but ending with a point on the overlapping side in the front. It is trimmed at the edge with a narrow moss-green satin ribbon. The standing collar is covered with a full ruching of green silk or chiffon, and the sleeves are trimmed with ruching as the collar. The folded belt of pink satin is boned in the front and the back to keep the folds in place.

AMID VERANDA BREEZES.

Of the final couple of pictures the first is a natty veranda dress, and the other an elaborate and elegant house dress. The material used in the case of the former is a dark cloth, and it is made perfectly plain with no adornment whatever. The skirt is cut a trifle wider than the ordinary bell skirt and is edged with a heavy cord around the bottom. The front and sides must fit snugly, and the back is laid in two box pleats. The round waist has as few seams as possible and goes inside the skirt: it buttons in the front, and is finished with a very narrow belt, either of cloth or of leather. The balloon sleeves are sewed into the armhole with a large box pleat in the center and a series of smaller ones at either side, instead of being gathered, to relieve what would otherwise be too great plainness. A cravat bow of black lace is worn, and a long black scarf is laid over the shoulders and is knotted at the side, with the ends reaching almost to the bottom of the skirt.

AN ELEGANT HOUSE DRESS.

Copyright, 1893.

THE Golconda mines are now exhausted. At one time 60,000 men were employed in them. When the Sultan Mahmoud, who reigned 1177-1206, died, he left in his treasury over 400 pounds weight of gems from Golconda.

The measuring compass was invented by Jost Bing, of Hesse Cassel about 1602.

REAL RURAL READING

A DEPARTMENT FOR OUR LOCAL AGRICULTURISTS.

Farmers Should Carefully Consult the Markets—A Homemade Row Marker—Variety in Pasture—Cheap Feed Rack—Gooseberries and Currants—General Farm Notes.

Consulting the Markets.

To meet a demand for special products, one must know what the demand is, writes a correspondent of an agricultural journal. The special requirements of a market may be nothing better than a mere whim or caprice, but they must be met if a ready sale is expected. If the market requires brown-shelled eggs it is folly to offer those with white shells. The latter may be just as good as the former, but so long as the former have the call they are the ones to be furnished. Or if the market requires yellow legs and yellow skin on dressed poultry, it is unwise to offer poultry with white skin and dark or white legs. It is true that people do not eat the shanks of fowls, and some of the best table fowls in the world have white, or dark shanks and a white skin, but so long as the fancy of the buyer demands the yellow color, that is the color to supply. One cannot afford to spend his time educating people out of their whimsical notions, if he expects to make money out of his trade. So long as no principle is sacrificed, so long as their notions can harm no one, not even themselves, the poultry raiser is not bound to sacrifice his profits in attempting to remove the prejudices of his customers. He is raising fowls for business, not for fun, and must adopt business methods, always remembering there is some good reason for the public taste and fashion.

A Row Marker.

To insure straight rows in field or garden, the ground should be marked before planting. A convenient implement for this purpose is shown in the accompanying illustration, from the American Agriculturist. A six-inch pole twelve feet long, of red elm or white oak, has a tongue pinned below it and braced by an old arch of a two-horse cultivator morticed through the pole and pinned above the tongue. A second pole, four inches through is attached to the first by pieces of one-fourth by one and one-fourth inch strap of iron passing loosely around the front pole, but bolted to the blocks c which are twenty inches long and six inches through, and pinned above the back pole. The holes for the marker pins should be bored where needed. Wood pins need one and one-half inch holes, iron pins one-half inch. These holes should be so bored that the pins will slant back while marking. The pins d which fasten the back pole to the connecting blocks e should be made six inches longer for this purpose. A double tree can be attached to the tongue in the usual manner. By using a heavy back log, an excellent clod crusher, leveler, or weed and cornstalk breaker can be made.

A HOMEMADE MARKER.

Farmers as Speculators.

"Talk about speculators," said a produce dealer the other day; "there isn't a greater speculator out than the farmer. If the price of any product goes up he never wants to sell; no matter how high the price, he always wants more. After the price begins to go down he wants to sell, and usually gets a lower price than he might have obtained." Unfortunately there is too much of truth in this statement. The dealer in question cited several instances in support of his statement. Every seller wishes to get all possible for his wares. This is natural and right, but it isn't always easy to tell just when the right point has been reached. It is generally better to sell on a rising than on a falling market. When an unusual high figure has been attained, it isn't reasonable to suppose that that price will be long sustained.—Rural New-Yorker.

Clean Cultivation of Small Fruits.

Strawberries, raspberries, and other small fruit plants require frequent and clean cultivation to produce the best results. When grown in large quantities, they should be so planted as to admit of horse cultivation. On land free from stones, a careful man with a steady horse and the use of the improved cultivators' work can be so neatly and closely done that but little use of the hand hoe is required. The great point is to commence the cultivation early, when the weeds are small and easily destroyed with shallow stirring, which disturbs no roots.

Over Manuring Grain Crops.

The fact that stable manure contains too much nitrogen and too little potash and phosphate makes it unsuitable for manuring the small grains. To furnish the mineral elements that grain crops require an overdose of manure must be given, and this makes an expensive growth of straw. If the stable manure is applied to corn and potato crops, the crops of oats, barley, or wheat grown the second or third years will need only mineral elements. This is especially true of winter wheat. It is sown after more or less summer cultivation which has developed nitrogen from decaying matters in the soil.

An Idea for a Feed Rack.

This feed rack, described in Farm and Home, is simply a square box, no bottom in, and open at top. It is 10 ft. long, 3½ ft. wide and 4 ft. high. The letters A show the lower part boarded up 20 in. The letters B show the top boards 1x6 in. The letters C are the upright boards 1x8x4 ft. long, all well nailed together with wrought nails and clinched. Each side of the rack is made separately, then hooked together with hook and staples at each corner above and below. The feed is thrown in at the top. Cattle reach in through the spaces between the boards C to eat. This rack is intended for hay, corn, fodder or feed of such kind. It is far better than the old X rail racks, as cattle do not need to reach overhead to eat and get their eyes full of dirt, but reach down, which is natural. Neither can they run over their feed and dirty and waste it. If intended for sheep made the spaces for reaching the feed smaller or the sheep will jump inside.

Variety in Pasture.

Farmers do not either for meadow and pasture seed down with sufficient variety to make the best feed. Only amateur wealthy farmers sow the sweet-scented vernal grass. Yet who has been over a field that has had even a little of this in haying time, who has not been delighted with its fragrance. It is good, too, in the hay now, for the sweet perfume permeates the entire mass, and stock of all kinds eat it better. Besides, with a variety of grasses there is sure to be a good stand, one succeeding where another has failed. It is far better to have a variety of the best grasses in pasture than a scattering of timothy and clover and all the bare spaces filled with weeds.

Cause of Sour Silage.

One of the principal causes of sour silage is cutting corn too green. Dr. Miles tells us that sour silage may often be caused by too rapid filling, excluding the air, so that the temperature is not allowed to rise high enough to kill the bacteria causing the fermentation. Cases are cited where slow filling and loose packing have resulted in excellent sweet silage. It is probable, however, that the maturity of the corn has more to do with its acid condition than the manner of filling.

Work for Rainy Days.

It is so often necessary to work over hours in pleasant weather that when a rainy day comes in summer the farmer may profitably devote it partly to intellectual improvement. He can at least then take time to estimate carefully what needs to be done and plan as to the best way of doing it. This will require study and prove the best possible intellectual exercise. It at least requires as much executive ability to keep everything on a large farm in order and working smoothly as it does to manage a manufacturing or commercial business.

Rapid Cooling of Milk.

The housekeeper always sets milk in a cool place, not merely as she says "to keep it better," but to insure the more rapid separation of cream from the water and casein with which in milk it is always mixed. The creamery does this by enclosing the milk in ice, so suddenly cooling it that the cream rises without having the milk soured. Its process is patented, but the idea is not, and explanation of the principle will help housewives to make more and better butter, even though they cannot afford to buy a creamer.

Poultry Notes.

First is death to lice, and the fowls should have free access to it.

Once a week parch a little cracked corn until brown and feed to chicks.

CHICKENS, like sheep, cannot be crowded together in large flocks without breeding disease and becoming an easy prey to death.

A PEKIN duck lays from 120 to 150 eggs in a year, and it is not hard to make a pair of young Pekins weigh ten pounds when ten weeks old. They are a profitable fowl.

THE annoyance of having too many males among the flock of hens ought to cease soon after the eggs for early chickens are dropped and set. Few people make anything from the latest eggs, and the hens will produce more eggs if not made fertile than they will if the rooster is always in their company.

HONORING A GREAT POET.

The Bust of William Cullen Bryant to Be Mounted in New York.

There is no sweeter name in the range of American literature than that of William Cullen Bryant, and in erecting a monument to him in Central Park, New York, the people of the republic's metropolis are alike paying tribute to genius and doing a work that will call out expressions of admiration throughout the land.

Before Mr. Bryant's death, which occurred in 1878, the sculptor-artist, Launt Thompson, executed a bust of the poet which was acceptable to him and his family. Since his death the bust has occupied a niche in the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It is now proposed to mount the bust upon a handsome monument in Central Park, New York. The monument and pedestal have been designed by Architect Ernest Flagg, of New York, and will be erected from the purest Italian marble. The cost of the monument and pedestal will be $30,000. On the monument will be inscribed the titles of the poet's greatest works. The name of the poet will be carved on the pedestal, and underneath it will be the word "Thanatopsis," the title of his greatest poem.

The life of Mr. Bryant was exceedingly sweet and pure. He was true to nature, and nature's simplicity is reflected in his verse. Between him and the great Milton a not unfavorable comparison could be instituted. While American literature shall endure the name of William Cullen Bryant will shine side by side with those of Washington Irving and James Fenimore Cooper.

PROPOSED BRYANT MONUMENT.

A Merry Clergyman.

The Rev. Joseph Haven, who preached in Rochester, N. H., during the last quarter of the last century, has been always remembered for his genial spirit and his inexhaustible humor. One story told of him has many parallels, but it is quite as likely to be true in his case as in any.

A boy had been guilty of some grave offense, and yet would not confess it.

"I can tell who did it," said the parson, and accordingly he called together all the boys suspected, and explained to them that he had confined a rooster under a kettle in a darkened room. One after another, they must pass in and touch the kettle: when the guilty boy touched it, he might expect to hear the rooster crow.

The lads filed in, and out again, and were made to display their fingers. All but those of one lad were sooty; he, the guilty one, had not ventured to touch the telltale kettle.

One day the old minister was measuring some land, carrying one end of the chain while a young man carried the other. Just as they were drawing it tight, the young man quoted the adage:

"Satan can only go the length of his chain."

"Pull, pull," instantly replied Mr. Haven. "We will see."

Walking in his garden with a friend, they came to a tree laden with very fair, inviting apples.

"There," said Mr. Haven, picking one of the finest and presenting it to his friend, "I recommend you to try that apple."

His expectations excited, and his mouth watering, the gentleman took a generous bite, and found only astringent bitterness. Mr. Haven looked merrily into his puckered face.

"They need recommending, don't they?" said he.—Youth's Companion.

Her Memory Was Strengthened.

A woman who has had a great deal of trouble with her servants also has what she calls a "humorous husband." The last table maid this woman hired was a six-foot, auburn-haired Nova Scotian. She was very satisfactory, except for the fact that in setting the table she would invariably omit to place the salt thereon. So one day the head of the house, being weary of ordering the same thing every day, called the girl and said: "Christie, will you get the step-ladder?" It was brought into the dining room. "Please put it against the wall and climb up on it." The girl, wondering, obeyed, and stood looking down over her shoulder at her employer. "Now, Christie, please look all over the table," said he, "and see if you can see any salt." The salt was not forgotten again.—Boston Record.

Rainfall at the Equator.

At the equator the average annual rainfall is 100 inches.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free.

If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

NOTICE TO OUR PATRONS.

Owing to our change and for the better use of our advertisers, we have concluded to issue the FARMER'S WIFE hereafter the 1st to 5th of each month, instead of 20th to 25th as heretofore, commencing with this issue August 1st. This, however, will not in any way effect our subscribers or advertisers, as twelve numbers will constitute a year, and no further correspondence in this matter will be necessary.

Respectfully,

EMMA D. PACK,
Editor.

Elizabeth Cady Stanton recently closed her remarkable paper with the lines, "The kindest woman's heart is that which shrinks rather at its own inhumanity than at another's."

Way out in the historical land of Greece the queen and king pay a woman astronomer named Mma. Gethelm an enormous salary. Here at least is one woman who ought to thank her stars.

Miss Grant, the daughter of Colonel Fred Grant, besides her various social attractions and her remarkable beauty, works hard in the study of art. She has an ambition to follow in the footsteps of Bonheur.

Mrs. Hungerford—"The Duchess"—has, up to the present time, written thirty-two novels, and her thirty-third story, "The Red House," is to appear as a serial this month. Her first book, "Phyllis," was published when she was only 19.

It is a curious fact that while a French woman may become a doctor, a lawyer, a member of the board of education, she cannot witness a legal document, possess her own earnings if married, or buy and sell property without her husband's consent.

Two hundred and fifty clubs, with a membership of 25,000, were represented at the Federation of Clubs this year. As this number is probably not a tenth of the total number of women's clubs in this country, the figures, if they could be secured, would be astonishing.

English women are going quite as fast over Paderewski as the silliest of their American sisters ever did. One hot day they encircled the poor man with such zeal, and kept him trotting up and down the platform steps so constantly, that he at last sank upon the piano stool and played a soothing nocturne as a gentle hint, and then departed, to be seen no more.

News comes from over the sea that Mr. Gladstone favors a reform in the female dress of the day. He expressed his views to one of the dress reformers and she is spreading them abroad to the people. After all, it is dress that interests women. They will flock to a hall to listen to a talk on dress and dress reform when they would not go to hear anything else in the world. They will go through rain or shine, snow or blow.

The only woman in America who is an operatic conductor is Miss Emma Steiner, a southerner by birth. She composed music as well as read and executed it by the time she was eleven years old. She began her career as a conductor under Edward E. Rice, and she continued it with various traveling companies. She appears to understand her chosen work thoroughly, and has incidentally composed a number of songs and operettas.

Where are the croakers who say that everything was all right in "the good old days?" Here comes along a diary written by a lady of fashion some fifty years ago, and among other complaints, which are like echoes of those we hear every day, are these: "Our streets are not wide enough for the carriages, nor the week long enough for one's engagements. There isn't enough money, or enough time to spend it in. In short, such a mess!" Also, the writer of the diary, Lady Georgina de Ros, says: "No wonder girls are delicate if they eat mutton chops before dinner!"

Anna Fuller, the author of that clever story, "A Literary Courtship," written under the auspices of Pike's Peak, is a maiden lady, who makes her home in Colorado Springs, as companion to two other maiden ladies, who are sufficiently wealthy to gratify their individual fads. One is musical, and the other has a fad for opals, and possesses one of the finest collections in the west. Her other book, "Pratt Portraits," gleams with the same humor and quaint philosophy that makes the "courtship" so delightful. Her style is strong, masculine in a way, and yet full of feminine thought and instinct.

Mary E. Wilkins "fesses up" to the following story about her youthful days: When Miss Wilkins was a young girl she was invited to a party, and she yearned with great yearning for a blue sash to adorn herself for the occasion. But her mother thought differently and Mary was obliged to content herself with a blue ribbon tied around her waist. But another little girl was more lucky and appeared in the full glory of a wide blue sash. Miss Wilkins at once took all the life out of the other little girl by telling her, in a superior way, that sashes were all, oh! all out of style, and ribbons were the only garniture a self-respected waist would acknowledge. Miss Wilkins characterizes this conduct of her as "a piece of cattiness" and professes repentance.

The freedom and gaiety enjoyed by the average American girl are quite unknown to her English cousin. The latter, until she has a home of her own, is rarely allowed to give any festivity on her own account. Three English girls, however, recently took advantage of the absence of the rest of the family to have an afternoon party of their girl friends. The invitations had a picture of a lady in semi-evening dress—that is with elbow sleeves and bodice out half low in the neck. In one corner of the card was, "Tea and Chatter," and in the other the notice, "In consequence of the extreme heat, ladies are requested to come in semi-evening dress." The innovation was such a success that the company voted to revive the fashions of their grandmothers, who always wore sleeveless and low necked frocks in summer.

"In the administration of a state, neither a woman as a woman, nor a man as a man, has any special function, but the gifts are equal in both sexes."—Plato.

"The woman's cause is man's: they rise or sink together, dwarfed or Gold-like, bond or free."

"I am standing now just behind the curtain, and in full glow of the coming sunset. Behind me are the shadows on the track, before me lies the dark valley and the river. When I mingle with its dark waters I want to cast one lingering look upon a country whose government is of the people, for the people, and by the people."—L. L. Polk, July 4, 1890.

The South Carolina liquor men are trying to dispense with the dispensaries.

There is a land that is fairer than this, but no goldbugs or politicians ever spend the summer there. They are in this country by the carload, but when they leave they don't go to a fairer land than this.

Money is said to be getting tighter every day. Money ought to sober up or take the "gold cure." By the way, have you ever thought of the fact that the discovery of the bi-chloride of gold was the first instance in the world's history where gold is of any practical utility? Can you name anything else in which gold is used that it is an absolute necessity, may not be dispensed with or something else substituted in its stead, and the world move along just as well without it? If you can, name it.

The State Fair association has designated Wednesday of the week of the fair as suffrage day.

During the month of August the Omaha platform will be the subject for discussion at the meetings of the W. P. P. C. Notice will appear in the city papers each week, giving notice of the place of meeting.

Suffrage day at the Chautauqua Assembly at Ottawa was a success. Mrs. Chants' address on "Social Life in England" was a strong People's party speech, and it was rather amusing to hear those who belong to the old parties cheer her and express their approbation of her remarks.

Old party editors and politicians have about as much sense as an ostrich who sticks his head in a bush and imagines his whole body concealed. They rely wholly upon their ignorance of the growth of populism and imagine it is dying out.

Mrs. Laura Ormiston Chant, English W. C. T. U. delegate to the Woman's Congress, referring to the wine exhibit at the World's Fair said: "The men who placed those exhibits there should make them complete. They should have exhibited the wrecked homes, the desolate mothers, the orphans, the criminals and the beggars. These all belong to the exhibit."

History demonstrates the fact that all great financial disasters have occurred when we were on a pretended metallic basis. Such a thing as a real metallic basis cannot, in the very nature of things, exist. A full legal tender paper money, bottomed on taxes, when issued in reasonable quantity by a responsible government, never has depreciated in value, and never will.

The Woman's Progressive Political club met at the home of Mrs. Osborn, wife of the Secretary of State, July 19th. After the business of the club was disposed, the silver question was discussed. Mrs. L. W. White, associate editor of the New Era, opening the discussion, and Mrs. Heller following. The discussion was lively and full of interest, and by the unanimous consent of the club the same will be the subject for discussion at the next meeting.

"What the world needs today is healthier women. Not women fairer or plumper, but healthier women with more vital resistance; women who can perform the duties which devolve upon them without these ever-recurring nervous breakdowns, this everlasting war between enfeebled and would-be healthy organs."

The above are the words of a noted physician. Now if the learned M. D. will help to change the conditions which compel so many women to toil and labor eighteen hours out of twenty-four, then the everlasting war of which he speaks of between the enfeebled and would-be healthy organs will cease. But until there is a change, the men and women both must pay the penalty.

How much easier it is to see the sins of our neighbors than our own, or rather the evils that confront the English people than those that are rapidly taking possession of our own beloved America. Shall we hold up our hands in pious horror at the condition of the women at the Bridge of Sighs before it was converted into the Bridge of Hopes by the Christian women who were really Angels of Mercy, and not utter a word against the civilization of our own country, where in New York City alone we are told that "if Dr. Parkhurst were to succeed in his efforts to suppress prostitution twenty thousand women would be reduced to starvation," and the New York Sun says "that there are sixty thousand men in that city permanently unemployed."

The following resolutions were passed by the members of the W. P. P. C., July 12th. The ladies have no apology to make:

RESOLVED, That the best way to aid the People's party is to elevate its moral standard and make it worthy of support.

RESOLVED, That the letter of John T. Little, attorney general of the State of Kansas, dated July 12, 1893, to Rev. A. J. Richard of Ft. Scott, meets with the unqualified disapproval of this league. That the sentiment therein contained is unworthy the chief prosecuting official of the State of Kansas, and we believe the position taken by the attorney general is a practical surrender to the liquor saloon and the baser element in politics, and we believe misrepresents the true sentiments of Kansas women.

RESOLVED, That we request the People's party county convention of this county soon to assemble to place in nomination only such candidates as unqualifiedly favor woman's suffrage.

In an editorial that appeared in the Capital of July 19th, the editor blames the women and small depositors for the many bank failures. He commences by saying that he is always happiest when defending the ladies. But he says the fact must be admitted that one of the most familiar facts about bank runs is that they are always started by women and small depositors. And he says the fact that poor depositors, and mainly women, have immensely contracted the currency is known to every banker and business man in the country.

But notice what he has further to say: "This fact proves two things worthy of noting—the enormous importance of (small) depositors (women) to the financial and business safety of the country."

If the editor will pardon us, we think we can give him some very good reasons why the poor depositors, and ladies chiefly, are so anxious to save their earnings. We think if the editor will take the trouble to investigate, he will find that the women who have saved up a few dollars are those who have earned every cent of their money by the sweat of their brow. Many of them have stood over the washtub and done a two weeks' washing for the small sum of fifty cents, that they might be able to keep the wolf from the door and provide a shelter for their little children. Many of them have sewed from early morn 'till set of sun, while others have worked at any and all kinds of labor that they might provide for a rainy day. And if the editor will pardon us for helping him to brush the cobwebs from his already addled brain so that he will be able to look back for the short period of three short years, he will recall to his mind the time of the failure of a bank in the city of Topeka, when the hard earnings of the poor washer-women were swept away, and they were left with only an aching heart and an empty pocket to comfort them.

We would like to ask if the "small" depositors and "women" should be called upon to leave their earnings in the hands of such men who care not how they make their money nor who suffers, if only their wants are supplied.

PUSH THE ENROLLMENT.

The women of Kansas, irrespective of party, should push the work of enrollment. Let every voter of every party be put upon record on the suffrage question as soon as possible in order that the friends and the enemies of the amendment may be known. We shall have use for this information in due time. In making the enrollment, due diligence should also be exercised to determine the sincerity of certain classes. Office seekers may sign the roll with no intention of supporting the amendment. Woman are pretty good detectives, and they should check the doubtful names on their roll, so as to be able to estimate the result of the election with a fair degree of accuracy before the ballots are cast.—The Advocate.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

The Fall Campaign of the Suffragists Will Open September 29.

The big State convention of the Woman's Rights association will be held in Kansas City, Kan., on the 29th and 30th of September, and that will be the date on which the fall campaign of the suffragists will open. The women of the State association will make a great fight to carry the proposed amendment to the State constitution for universal suffrage. The opening meeting will be a notable one. A large number of the best known women suffragists of the United States will attend, including Mrs. Laura M. Johns, Mrs. Helen M.onger and Miss Susan B. Anthony. The meeting will follow closely the programme of State political rallies in all but partisanship, which the women state will be conspicuous by its absence. The meeting will be under the auspices of the "amendment" committees of the State association, but all local arrangements will be looked after by a committee of the Kansas City association.

Sensitive people can purchase Humphreys' Specifics by simply asking the druggist for the needed number alone, without disclosing or mentioning the disease for which it is a cure.

MALE GOVERNMENT A FAILURE.

History has Proven This.

The Literary Digest has an article condensed from the New Jerusalem Magazine, on woman suffrage. It is written by Catherine Parsons and is interesting as showing what sort of arguments a woman can urge against her own enfranchisement.

Madam Parsons urges first that "women are natural partisans." By this argument she rules herself out of court. If women are natural partisans, incapable of forming a judicial opinion, then Madam Parsons, being a woman, is only fulminating a partisan whim and has no opinion to speak of.

Second, "the leaders of this movement have a reputation for mendacity—would it not be an element of corruption to add their untruthfulness to that of men? Mendacity means lying. As a matter of fact there are no more truthful people in the world than the leaders of this movement for equal human rights regardless of sex. The mendacity is on the other side. "Natural partisans always slander those they cannot meet in argument, and this question has long passed the argumentative stage.

Third, "Women are, for the most part, too emotional and excitable to hold anything like a political contest." Would not a little emotion be a good thing in politics? The men who have manipulated our politics for the last thirty years have been altogether too cool. They have confiscated the whole country. They would have stolen the world and the solar system if they could have found a place to put it.

Fourth, "many good and sensible women are suffragists, but that they have become so is, I think, because they have been led away by misleading facts," etc. Led away by facts! If facts are misleading, then of course fiction is a proper and safe guide. Madam Parsons observes that "though on other matters woman can speak sensibly, she cannot on that topic (politics), for this is one which engages the feelings." Then in order to speak sensibly on politics, one must be destitute of feeling. Madam Parsons has demonstrated that there is one woman who, in trying to discuss politics, can manifest neither feeling nor sense. But perhaps she also is one of those who could talk sense if she were speaking on a subject about which she knew something.

But Madam Parsons is fearful that those women who are destitute of morality will be demoralized by becoming suffragists. She says: "If a woman has not a strong sense of morality she is decidedly demoralized by becoming a suffragist. I heard one of the leaders saying that she did not wish her daughters to marry until the law was such that if her daughter did not like her husband she could leave him and find another."

Like is a very mild, unemotional word to use in connection with the marriage relation. Some extravagant people insist that love is the proper bond of union, but Madam Parsons thinks the proper function of law is to hold people together who do not even like each other. Women are so emotional that if they do not like they are apt to hate, and the great desideratum of a holy marriage is that they should be held firmly together and compelled to fight it out "till death them doth part."

The last reflection of Madam Parsons is: "I have never heard of nor seen in print any hint by the leaders of this agitation of the possible worthlessness of men and the possible unworthiness of women."

All history and experience has proved the utter failure of exclusive male government. There is no sense in discussing possibilities where we have an overwhelming supply of facts.

By request we cheerfully give a column to our brothers, and we hope all those who are in favor of the amendment or oppose it will avail themselves of the opportunity to let their wishes be known. Please write your articles short, crisp, and write to the point.

The FARMER'S WIFE is fifty cents a year, excepting in special clubbing lists.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely

pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

TWO HALVES OF A WHOLE.

Our Letter From Across the Water.

By MRS. WARNER SNOAD of England.
To the FARMER'S WIFE.

This is an age of progress, an age in which the landmarks of barbarism are being effaced one by one as civilization makes rapid strides. Gradually is the world increasing its detestation of darkness, slavery and superstition, turning over more and more eagerly toward light and freedom. To be a free-born Englishman is the pride of England's sons. What of her daughters? What of the women who are still struggling, fighting their way slowly toward emancipation step by step?

Humanity is grand and noble. Why should its grandeur and nobility be marred by the undue oppression of woman? Mark this, I do not say the undue exaltation of man. Place him as high as you like; the higher the platform the better, and it is part of woman's duty to keep him there. But it must be done by his side, not groveling at his feet. Degrade the woman and you degrade the man; Every history of every nation proves this incontestably. Men have done much in their own special sphere. They have conquered nature. It is their part thus to labor, it is their part to fight, and pre-eminence in brute force must be yielded to them. But the stronger moral force, the higher ministry of influence, for thus God has specially ordained woman and for this she needs the broadest culture, the freest liberty.

Long years ago we women asked for justice and increased recognition and many requests have been granted. One, and that of the utmost importance, is still denied, viz.: woman's suffrage and a voice in parliamentary elections. Why should women be classed with lunatics, criminals, paupers and minors? The lunatic may become sane, the criminal may be pardoned, the pauper become independent, the minor attain majority, and so each in time get his vote; but woman, no matter what her intellectual powers, no matter what her property or other qualifications, is by the action of the parliamentary franchise laws doomed to perpetual minority, or, in plain words, is considered incompetent to express her opinion on the laws of her country—laws as binding on her as on the opposite sex, and which in many cases affect her more seriously. More than half the laws relating to woman are a disgrace to our constitution and relics of barbarism without the ignorance of barbarism to excuse them.

Take, for example, the marriage laws wherein, though important changes have been made, much remains to be desired, notably with respect to the guardianship of children, which during the father's life belong exclusively to him. In the divorce court, also, there is a crying and shameful inequality in the treatment of the two sexes, and in cases of intestacy, the widows and daughters of the deceased frequently suffer from injustice. Women have a right to be heard on questions affecting so strongly their special interests, and the only constitutional way of recognizing that right and of allowing them to make their influence felt is to enable them, when their qualifications are the same as those of the male voter, to claim an equal share in the election of members of parliament, and this concession is what we seek to obtain for them.

Some say women should not have the suffrage because they cannot fight. As well say men should not vote because they cannot bear children. A very small proportion of men risk their lives on the battlefield, and that only occasionally, but a woman risks hers every time a child is born. If men fight, women supply the soldiers; if men defend their country, women rear the coming generation. Put maternity in one scale and all the armies of the world in the other and then see which weighs the heavier. Moreover, millions of men are unfit for soldiers. Are they disfranchised? Again, it is said that if women vote they will do as bidden by their husband, doctor or clergyman. Very well then, no harm can come of it, to act under masculine guidance must surely be to act aright. If, on the other hand, women use their own judgment and vote as their good sense and intelligence dictate, they will show plainly they are capable and fit persons to exercise the franchise. Look at it as you will, there is neither reason, logic nor common sense in refusing women a vote—only prejudice.

Then comes the grand, crowning argument, the favorite argument, because it is so unwomanly, it would unsex us. Now what is this shadow of intangible vampire that would seek the very life-blood of our fairest womanhood and defy the mandates of nature herself? It cannot be the study of politics, or Primrose Dames and Liberal Leagues would be the most unsexed creatures on earth. It cannot be dropping a paper into a box once in a few years, or posting letters would be open to the same objection. Neither can it be the vote itself, or the women of Wyoming and our own Isle of Man must be unwomanly and unsexed. I will leave the ladies to speak for themselves. What say the men of Wyoming about their women? Governor Hoyt's testimony with regard to the direct benefit of woman's suffrage was very strong in 1882. In his official report he said: "Elsewhere objectors persist in calling this honorable statute of ours an experiment. We know it is not; that under it we have better laws, better officers, better institutions, better morals and higher social conditions in general than could otherwise exist; that none of the predicted evils, such as loss of native delicacy and disturbance of home relations, have followed in its train; that the great body of our women, and the best of them, have accepted the elective franchise as a precious boon, and exercise it as a patriotic duty; in a word, that after twelve years of happy experience woman's suffrage is so thoroughly rooted and established in the minds and hearts of the people that among them all no voice is ever uplifted against or in question of it."

The speaker of the House, Hon. N. L. Andrews, a Democrat, ratified what had been said by the Republican governors, saying publicly, "I came to the territory in 1871; strongly prejudiced against woman's suffrage. It has produced much good and no evil that I could discern. In my opinion, the real, health-giving remedy that would counteract political degeneracy would be the ballot in the hands of women in every state and territory."

In 1882, Chief Justice Joseph W. Fisher stated: "I have seen the effects of woman's suffrage. Instead of encouraging fraud and corruption, it tends greatly to purify elections."

In the same year Mr. Kingman said before a committee of the Massachusetts legislature, "I have never heard of a lady being treated with disrespect at elections. Men are more respectful toward women in Wyoming than elsewhere."

Governor Francis E. Warren said in 1885, "I have seen much of the workings of woman's suffrage. I have yet to hear of the first case of domestic discord growing therefrom. Our women nearly all vote. As the majority of women are good, the result is good, not evil." In the same year he reported to the secretary of the interior: "The men are as favorable to woman suffrage as the women are. Wyoming appreciates, believes in and endorses woman suffrage." In his official report the next year he said, "Woman suffrage continues as popular as at first. The women nearly all vote, and neither party objects." And in 1889 he reported, "No one will deny that woman's influence in voting has always been on the side of the government. The people favor the continuance."

This official evidence as to the beneficial effects of woman suffrage is supported by the universal testimony of residents and the personal experience of visitors. On the other side are only random statements born of prejudice whose wish is father to the thought. We are, therefore, bound to believe that the status of Wyoming has been favorably affected by woman suffrage if we exercise the ordinary trust and credibility of which our other beliefs and daily transactions are based. There is little doubt that woman suffrage would bring an element of purity and conscientiousness into political life, which none can deny is lacking at present. Is this what the men are afraid of? Are they afraid of their actions being viewed, not through the halo of distance, but in the searching light of quickened intelligence? As for the rest—the fear that home will be less sacred, children less dear, or that we shall fall in love with men less because we are political units instead of political ciphers. Well there may be women strong-minded enough for all this, but I confess I am not one of them, nor do I know any one who is. Vox populi, vox Dei; but should one-half of that voice only be allowed to be heard? Before now women have led armies, and, in thousands of instances, have won a harder battle than that fought by saber and cannon. The influence of their intuitive and peace-loving nature upon Parliament would increase the tendency to arbitration between nations and hasten the time when war shall be no more. Ours is not merely a woman's rights agitation; it is a human rights agitation—a demand that woman, the great character builder, the mother of our sons as well as our daughters, should in direct, as in indirect ways influence public opinion.

Men and women in England vote equally for town councils, county councils, local boards, poor-law guardians, vestries, church-wardens, and school boards. For very shame extend the parliamentary franchise which has been granted to every ignorant laborer, not only to the honest, industrious working woman, but to the thoughtful, educated lady whose gardener, coachman and groom can record their votes before her eyes, while she is practically outlawed. As for the argument that women as politicians would destroy the peace of the domestic circle, it is universally conceded that family life is infinitely richer and more attractive to men when politics are not tabooed on account of the ignorance or indifference of female members of the household.

In questions of intellect women have proven themselves able to cope with men. Let justice be done to both. Then, and not until then, will there be the same law for rich and poor, man and woman, the powerful and the defenceless.

WOMEN READ PAPERS.

But When a Man Reads a Paper it is Called an Address.

A lady commenting on some of the great conventions of women in Chicago this summer remarked, "We have been papered to death." That very nearly expressed one phase of feeling that existed amid the general satisfaction called forth by those admirable meetings of women. Too much papering is one drawback of nearly all assemblies of the present day women, whether in clubs or conventions. The dear ladies consult libraries and pore over the historic records of centuries, wearing out their eyes. They copy and read sweetly just what somebody else has said twenty times before and applaud one another and appoint some other women to go through the same programme another week, or when the papers are not gathered from the musty records of the past they are apt to be of the sermonizing order. We women do love to preach, bless us! But the sermons, the lofty sentiments, the elegant rhetorical periods we quote from Emerson and others, have been said before so often that they become stale, unprofitable platitudes to our audiences. We are "papering them to death." There are some things I do wish women would do in this enlightened age of the world. One, to learn to speak. Prepare your words as carefully as you please, the more carefully the better, but speak them instead of reading. Look your audience in the eye instead of burying your nose in a paper. Even Colonel Ingersoll, when he wishes to be most impressive, lays down his manuscript, and facing his audience like a lion, pours out a shining, electric torrent of eloquence extempore. Another thing women should do in their attempts to instruct the public is to draw their instruction from the facts of real, red-hot, present life, instead of making their papers up of quotations and musty history and preaching. For this one thing I glory in the work of Helen Campbell, that she has bestirred herself, read newspapers, studied labor statistics and gone herself into shop, hospital and factory and gathered matter of vital, living interest. One fact from the life of today is worth more for instruction than the whole side of a houseful of books.

Helen Gardner's speeches, which created a genuine sensation at the congress of women at Chicago, are to be published in book form soon, in a volume which will be called "Facts and Fictions of Life." Among the essays will be the one entitled "Woman as an Annex," also "Sex in Brain." I mention this particularly for the benefit of the New York Sun, that it may know herewith the name of at least one of Helen Gardner's books.

Great Britain has now 158 regularly graduated women physicians whose names appear in the British Medical Register.

Very funny are two resolutions passed at nearly the same time in two southern states. The southern Presbyterians in high and mighty convocation assembled at Macon evolved from their inner consciousness a resolution that "the session must absolutely enforce the injunction of Scripture forbidding women to speak in churches or in any way failing to observe that relative subordination to man which is taught in 1 Corinthians xi, 13, and in other places." But suppose the women refuse to obey the southern Presbyterian ministers, what are they going to do about it? The other resolution is the prettiest companion piece to that of the Presbyterian preachers that you ever saw. It was passed by the Arkansas woman suffrage association, and it reads: "Resolved, That as the churches are mainly made up of and supported by women we will use our influence against the employment of ministers who are opposed to our movement and pray the Almighty Father to keep them from our midst." Against the intense and solemn prayers of an association of intelligent nineteenth century women and the dictum of a lot of antique hunkers that plant themselves on an 1,800-year-old utterance of that disgruntled widower Paul, who expressly disclaimed inspiration for some of his sayings regarding women, which do you think will win? It is striking preachers exactly where they live when women resolve to support their churches no longer, and we could even wish that every minister who sets himself against the progress of our sex might be struck just so.

A woman has been appointed professor of elocution at King's college, England. But the University of Chicago has done better than that and appointed no less than four ladies among its instructors, Alice Freeman Palmer and Martha Foote Crowe being full professors.

Miss Cora Goodenow, candidate of both the Democratic and Populist parties for school commissioner, of Ottawa county, Mich., was elected by a large majority.

Miss Louise E. Francis of Castroville, Cal., is the assistant secretary of the National Editorial association. Miss Francis is also the plucky and successful proprietor of the Castroville Enterprise.

September 1st the Unitarian church at Geneva, Ill., will have for its pastor Rev. Celia Parker Woolley. The Unitarian church at Geneva is to be congratulated on securing a pastor of such eloquence and earnestness.

We are informed that for years the Duchess of Devonshire has been writing anonymously for the London Saturday Review. I wonder if she writes those mean things about women?

One of the most cheering signs of the time is the universal interest women are taking in physical culture and active outdoor exercise. The craze has overtaken even the French and Russian ladies.

ELIZA ARCHARD CONNER.

The Women in Line.

An interesting recent feature of the People's party movement in Kansas is the organization of the "Women's Progressive Political League." This body is made up exclusively of women in sympathy with the principles of the People's party; women who are sympathetic with the Republican and Democratic parties not being eligible. With a view to clearing up misunderstandings on this subject the secretary of the league has just issued an address, quoted from elsewhere in this issue, in which she affirms that the organization is distinctly affiliated with the People's party and especially devoted among the other objects of that party to women suffrage and public management of the liquor traffic. The rise of this organization may perhaps be regarded as suggestive of the prominent part which women everywhere are destined to take and the decisive influence they are sure to exert in the great movement for radical social reorganization which the People's party, with its nationalist principles, so far, most notably represents in this country. The interests of men are indeed bound up with the fate of this cause, but even beyond men, are women concerned in its triumph. While nationalism is the cause of manhood, it is pre-eminently the cause of womanhood, for while it promises man deliverance from economic despotism it promises woman deliverance at one blow from economic and sex slavery. The women of Kansas have from the start been "the better half" of the revolution there and it is fitting that they should lead in calling women everywhere to take a stand openly in defense of principles in whose victory or defeat they have so much at stake.—New Nation.

Every dollar of money in this country is drawing at least ten per cent. interest. In ten years the interest will equal the principal and it will take twice the money in existence to cancel the debt. A fool can see that these debts cannot be paid in cash; hence foreclosure of mortgages is the inevitable result. Then people wonder why times are hard!

Now the pension bureau has shut down upon a large number of "our country's brave defenders" and cut off the dole that has stayed the hand of death. Verily, it never rains but it pours. Who will defend our defenders? The press is silent upon it, and make no comments unless they can throw a political slur at another party. The injustice to those that have been led to believe in its continuance creates no indignation.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper? Do you wish to know what the eastern women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the Romanists? Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work? Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE. Eliza Trask Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 9, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

AN EXTRAORDINARY OFFER To All Wanting Employment.

AGENTS WANTED.

We want Live, Energetic and Capable Agents in every county in the United States and Canada, to sell a patent article of great merit, ON 11 MONTHS. An article having a large sale, paying over 100 per cent profit, having no competition, and on which the agent is protected in the exclusive sale by a deed given for each and every county he may secure from us. With all these advantages to our agents and the fact that it is an article that can be sold to every house-owner, it might not be necessary to make an "EXTRAORDINARY OFFER" to secure good agents at once, but we have concluded to make it to show, not only our confidence in the merits of our invention, but in its salability by any agent that will handle it with energy. Our agents now at work are making from $150 to $600 a month clear, and this fact makes it safe for us to make our offer to all who are out of employment. Any agent that will give our business a thirty days' trial and fail to clear at least $100 in this time, ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all goods unsold to us and we will refund the money paid for them. Any agent or general agent who would like ten or more counties and work them through sub-agents for ninety days and fail to clear at least $750 ABOVE ALL EXPENSES, can return all unsold and get their money back. No other employer of agents ever dared to make such offers, nor would we if we did not know that we have agents now making more than double the amount we guaranteed; and but two sales a day would give a profit of over $125 a month, and that one of our agents took eighteen orders in one day. Our large descriptive circulars explain our offer fully, and these we wish to send to everyone out of employment who will send us three one cent stamps for postage. Send at once and secure the agency in time for the boom, and go to work on the terms named in our extraordinary offer. We would like to have the address of all the agents, sewing machine solicitors and carpenters in the country, and ask any reader of this paper who reads this offer, to send us at once the name and address of all such they know. Address at once, or you will lose the best chance ever offered to those out of employment to make money.

RENNER MANUFACTURING CO.,
Pittsburg, Pa.

ALL FOR 12 CENTS.

AMUSEMENT, FUN AND INSTRUCTION. OUR MAMMOTH GAME PACKAGE contains all the following, and will be sent for 12 cents (stamps): Game of Authors, 48 cards, full instructions; Set of Dominoes; Chess and Checker Board, with men; Fox and Geese Board and nine men; Morris Board, with men; 10 other parlor games; Magic Music; 13 Magical experiments; Mind Reading, Sleight of Hand Tricks, etc.; 50 Conundrums with answers (new); The Clairvoyant, how to become a medium; Parlor Tableau; Game of Letters, and others equally as pleasing. If you cannot write to-day, cut this out and send some other time.

HOME GAME PUB. CO., Brooklyn, N. Y.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful Sea Shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address, CHAS. HUGHES, Pensacola, Fla.

B. L. CRANS,
10 Spruce St., N. Y.,
Room No. 4,
Newspaper
Advertising.
Attractive advertisements prepared and placed in all newspapers and magazines.

Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr. B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 4 cents in postage, a look of your hair, name, age, and sex. DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICSVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail St. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

This paper will be sent for 25 cents a year in clubs of six, if sent at once.

GOITRE OR THICK NECK. I have a positive, Cleanly, Harmless Cure. Come if you can, or write me at 28 Livingston St., Cleveland, O. DR. J. CASKEY. It is no iodine smear. Cure made Permanent.

1840-1893.
MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP
has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOTTLE.

SANTA FE ROUTE.
Pointers for World's Fair.

Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While walking may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.

Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited; or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stauffer, North Topeka; or W. C. Garvey at depot.

NOTHING NEW.

The spider weaves his gauzy web,
Quick each false step retrieving,
He's weaving on, and weaving on—
Fast in and out his swift thread goes
From morn till night, from night till morn,
And why so fast—the whole world knows,
That old, old web he's weaving.

The drowsy boe on timber perch
Is all day droning, swinging,
And up and down, then down and up,
He sings—cool hours, cool hours and sings,
As slipping from a rose-leaf cup,
He swings and sips, and sips and swings,
That old, old tune he's singing.

Two lovers sit beneath the tree—
Oh happy, happy meeting,
What do they say? Oh dear—my fair,
'Tis nothing new, no, nothing new,
O, peach-bloom cheek and golden hair—
Just "I love you," sweet "I love you,"
The old, old tale repeating, —Godey's.

HAPPY TOM.

In England and Scotland men build very tall brick chimneys which carry off the smoke from the great factories. They are so tall that a lot of scaffolding is built round them so that the men may get up and down to their work. When the great chimney is finished the men begin at the top and take all the scaffolding down. The man who has charge of the building is called the master mason, and he stays at the top until the last stick is down, then when he is sure that all is right he comes down himself by means of a rope which is fastened to a great iron ring at the top of the chimney.

Now, if you will remember about this you will see just how the incidents of this story came about.

Tom Sanders was the son of a master mason. He was a sturdy Scotch boy, not a bit handsome, for he had red hair and freckles and big feet and hands and a snub nose, but he had a pair of as merry blue eyes as ever twinkled in a boy's head, and he was always so good-natured that the other boys called him "Happy Tom."

He never had a chance to get lonesome, for he had a lot of brothers and sisters. They lived in a wee little house, but it was all their own, and they had a garden where they raised their vegetable. They had a cow and a pig, and Tom's mother had a little corner under the window where she planted flowers.

So you see they were a very happy and busy family.

Tom's father could not always get work. The winter before this time I am telling you of he had been idle for a long time, and Tom had to work pretty hard, but he didn't mind it. He whistled and sang, and his mother used to say with tears in her eyes:

"Ah, he's the blithe, bonny lad,
God bless him!"

At last Tom's father got a "job." It was a good one, too. He was to superintend the building of one of the largest chimneys that had been built for years. Now the children could have new shoes, and the good mother could have a gown, and Tom could go back to his books.

Day after day the father went to his work. Tom carried his dinner to him at noon, and when night came they were all together, a healthy group, and far happier than many who live in palaces.

"I'll tell thee what we'll do, mother," said Mr. Sanders, one day. "The morrow after the chimney is done we'll ha' a bit of a holiday, and ail go over to the Loch for an outing."

The children heard it and were delighted, and day after day they questioned their father as to when the happy day would come.

"Will it be next week, feyther?" rosy little Kate would ask, and when he would shake his head wee Will would plead.

"Tell us how many days will be before we can ha'e our frolic?"

But at last the long waiting came to an end, as all things do, and Mr. Sanders announced one night to the delighted children:

"To-morrow the chimney'll be done, and then, hey for our frolic!"

The next afternoon Tom and his mother and the children all went to see the scaffolding come down, and the father descend the long rope, for the boys thought that was a great feat.

Slowly the men took down the heavy timbers and struck the sides of the chimney with hammers to see that there were no weak spots in it. Tom's father, up at the top, was paying great attention to the movements of the men, for he had taken great pains with that chimney, and he wanted to be sure that it was all right.

At last it was all done, and there stood the tall chimney in all its beauty of workmanship, and the men gave a great shout.

Tom and his mother looked up at the top. It was so high that the brawny mason looked like a little boy. And now they looked to see him come down, but—what was the matter?

They saw him start, look wildly about him and then clasp his hands about his head in a dazed sort of way.

The men looked at each other and then up at the chimney, wondering what could be the matter, when all at once the truth burst upon them: They had forgotten the rope.

There it lay in a coil upon the ground. Tanned and grimy as they were their faces grew ghastly as they thought of the awful consequences of their mistake. What could be done? It was impossible to get ladders that would reach to the top of the great tower, and of course they could not throw anything up to such a height.

It had taken the whole force of men all day to tear down the scaffolding, and it would take ten days to build it up again. The case seemed a hopeless one.

The poor mother threw herself on the ground and cried and groaned as if she were dying, and all the children kept her company, all but Tom. In that little head of his the thoughts were buzzing about like bees.

"There must be some way," he kept saying over to himself, and all the time he kept thinking as hard as ever he could. At last he sprang up with a shout:

"I have it!" he cried.

The men thought that the horror of the situation had driven him mad, but they soon knew better.

Mr. Sanders was standing in a hopeless way looking down at the little group, when Tom, making a trumpet of his hands, shouted:

"Can you hear me, feyther?"

He nodded his head in reply, and then Tom screamed up at him with all the strength of his lungs.

"Tak' off thy stockin', an unravel it, and let down the thread wi' a bit o' mortar. Canst hear me?"

Affain he nodded, this time eagerly. He pulled off his boot and then his stocking, which he looked at for a moment, as if he did not know how to go about it. Tom's mother was on her feet now, all eagerness, and she called up to her husband:

"Begin at the top, lad!" You see, she had knit those stockings herself, and of good honest Scotch wool, and she knew all about it.

At last he got the thread started and unraveled row after row. He took his knife and dug out a bit of the hard mortar and tied it on the yarn. It came slowly down the tall chimney, blown about by the wind, but it was coming.

As soon as Tom saw that his father had caught his idea he was off like the wind. But before the little thread reached the ground he was back all out of breath, bringing a big ball of stout twine. A dozen willing hands were ready to tie it to the yarn, and then they shouted:

"Now hold fast to the string, lad, and pull it up."

When the twine got to the top the big rope was fastened on, and almost without breathing they watched it slowly uncoil like a great serpent, and at last that, too, had reached the top.

The iron was there all right, and they saw that he was making it fast. And now they wondered if he would have the nerve to come down. The last hour had been a terrible strain upon him, when it seemed that he must stay in that little circle until he died.

He came to the edge of the chimney and made a sign of descent. Then he began to come down. He came rapidly about half way, then, clutching the rope convulsively, he stopped.

His head fell back and a cry of horror went up when they thought that, after all, he would be killed. Again Tom came to the front and shouted:

"Dinna gie it up, feyther: it's but a bit further noo, dinna gie it up!"

And he didn't give it up. Rousing all his strength he took hold once more and slid safely to the ground, where he fell all in a heap, as weak and helpless as a baby.

How they kissed him and cried over him and how Tom's mother thanked God, and how proud Tom was when his father at last staggered to his feet, and, laying his hand on his head, exclaimed:

"My lad, thou'st saved my life."

Do you need to be told that the holiday was the happiest one that had ever come to these humble folks?

I shall have to tell you about it, however, for it was on that day that a most wonderful thing happened to Tom; something that made people change his name from "Happy Tom" to "Lucky Tom."

The boys had often begged that their father would allow them to go into a cave, several miles up the coast, for they lived in a seaport town. But the cave was full of water when the tide came in, and it was not safe for the boys to go alone, but on this day Tom's father said to him:

"Now, lad, ask me what ye will and I'll grant it if I can."

Little Ben slipped slyly up and whispered in Tom's ear:

"The cave: ask him to let us go in." And as that was the very idea that Tom had in his own head, he did ask it, and of course it was granted.

They took a lot of candles with them and some old clothes, and a generous basket of lunch, and away they went to the cave.

The opening of it was just a great hole like a cellar, but the boys kept on, and soon they found an opening through which they crawled, and found themselves in a great room with a crystal roof. They held up their candles and every part of the cave glittered as if it were set with diamonds.

Tom ran back to fetch his father, but he said he would rather stay outside. They began to look for another room, and soon they found it. The only opening into it was a hole big enough for them to squeeze through. This led to a smaller room, which they began to explore.

Ben fell over something, which proved to be the skull of a man. It frightened him so that he began to cry, but Tom was interested and looked about for more bones, which he found. It was plain that a man had died there.

Shading his candle with his hand, Tom groped slowly round the wall. He found a rude chair made of boughs from a tree, a table, one or two rusty pans and an old knife. This room had been the abode of a man some time, but when? And who was he?

That was what Tom wanted to know. He groped on up to the very darkest corner, and there his foot struck against something hard. He stopped and saw that it was a small iron trunk, fastened with a big lock. Tom tried to lift it, but could not. Evidently it was full of something heavy.

"I guess feyther will come now," he said, and he crawled out to tell him.

Tom was right. His father did come; eagerly, too; and when he saw the iron trunk he exclaimed:

"Hoot! lad; it's a money chest. Who knows but ye've found a fortune?"

Together they got the heavy box outside, for the tide had begun to come in and they dared not stay any longer. They carried it up on the cliff, and then with a heavy stone Tom's father broke the lock and opened it.

It was full of gold, hard, yellow gold, all in little leather bags, and in the very bottom of the trunk was a letter. They had to unfold it very carefully, for it was rotten with age. It was written in red ink, and this is what it said:

"Whosoever shall find this treasure shall have it for his own, for I have neither kith nor kin. No friend have I in all the world save my bags of gold. I have lived for them and with them, and I shall die with them."

"I have not sinned to get this treasure, unless it be a sin to rob the forgotten dead, for I have taken most of it from sunken ships."

"I have risked my life often, but it paid me to be able to sit and count over the shiny pieces and know that they were mine."

"Should ever human eyes seek out my hiding-place and find my treasure, perchance they will find my bones beside it, and I ask that he who is the lucky finder will dig for me a grave in the crystal chamber and mark the place with a cross. This is all I have to ask, and I will not even tell my name. Let that die with me."

That was a strange will, was it not? But it stood the test of the law, and Tom was rich.

But it did not spoil him. He was the same Tom as before, only he was able now to help people, and he did so.

ARRESTS THE OTHER.

An Old Lady Distrusts One and Appeals to the Other for Protection.

One old lady has gone back to her country home with a thrilling tale of how she escaped from a robber, and two policemen of the Woodlawn Station look bowieknives at each other when they meet. Lieut. Bonfield tells the story:

"An old lady came along here the other night and said she had lost the way to her hotel. She told me the name of it, and on looking it up I found it to be located on Oglesby avenue. She seemed quite nervous, so I told Officer McCann to see her home. McCann was in citizen's clothes."

"McCann naturally wanted to take the nearest way, but that led them down dark streets and the woman absolutely refused to trust her guide. McCann showed her his star, but she said that while she would allow it was pretty it didn't make her feel any safer. The more the officer talked to her the more suspicious she got. Just then she saw Officer Duffy across the street. Duffy was in uniform and is a new man at this station. The woman rushed across the street, threw her arms around Duffy, and begged to be protected from McCann, who, she said, was surely going to rob her."

"Now, Duffy didn't know McCann so he went across the street and arrested him. That made McCann mad and he started in to arrest Duffy. McCann showed his star and Duffy said he guessed that McCann was the man with the bogus star, that he was looking for. McCann tried to persuade Duffy that they both came from the same station, but Duffy said he didn't give a cent where McCann came from originally, he was going to the station that trip, sure. While the officers were arguing the old woman ran away, and I don't know where she is. Finally each man arrested the other, and they came to the station together madder than wet hens. It took me thirty minutes to straighten out the tangle.—Chicago Tribune.

If the prodigal is a boy, he is received with joy when he returns home, but if a girl, she is disowned.

A MAN loses his power when he loses his temper.

REAL RURAL READING

WILL BE FOUND IN THIS DEPARTMENT.

Labor Saving Contrivance for Spraying Potatoes—Advice About Hiving Bees—Convenient Garden Tool—Old and New Methods—General Farm Notes.

Hiving Bees.

We have found, says a good authority, that artificial swarming is best, as bees most always swarm when the men are in the field, sometimes more than a mile from home. Look through the hives that are full. Take out a frame containing queen cells, cut out all the cells but one, put it in a new hive, also half of the other frames with what bees adhere to them. Fill space in both hives with empty frames, and you have a new colony. The bees that were out on the old hive will then have room inside and will go to work. The new ones will raise their queen and all start off to work. If you have your queen's wings clipped another good way is to catch her as she crawls out (when they swarm) and put a new hive in place of the old one. The swarm will come back when they miss their queen and go in the new hive. Give them their queen and you have a new swarm. If neither of these is practised there is nothing left but to take your smoker, rope, ladder, and saw and climb the tree.

Save Labor in Spraying Potatoes.

The greatest labor saving article I use, is simply a cart with which to sprinkle paris green on potatoes. I plant rows 2 ft. 8 in. apart, wagon tracks 5 ft. 4 in. Take front wheels, brace a barrel on them, attach a short hose with sprinkler on the end. I use one pound of poison per barrel of water, spraying two rows as fast as the horse can walk. It will save its cost in one day. I think mine is the only one in this state.—E. I. Church, in Farm and Home.

This is a Hint.

"These potatoes are not half done," was the impatient exclamation of the farmer, as he sat down to the mid-day meal. "Well," was the calmly-exasperating reply of the wife who had cooked the meal. "I used every stick of wood in the wood shed to cook this dinner, and if it isn't done you know why. It was because there wasn't enough wood to cook dinner with." There was no lack of wood properly sawed and split for use by that household for a good while after this incident from real life. It is our belief that coal is largely used for winter fuel because the class of careless, go-easy farmers do not make as good provision for summer firewood as they used to do. Then they had to bestir themselves in winter to cut and split wood to keep the stoves and fireplaces running to warm the house. Now they use little wood, except for kindling, in winter, and the habit of sitting by winter fires, either at home or at the village grocery, is apt to grow when once formed. It is not a woman's place to cut and split wood for household use, and in the households where they have to do this they usually have far more of woman's work indoors than one woman is able to do.

Transplanted Weeds.

The great advocate of thorough and timely cultivation of hoed crops is found when there comes a spell of rainy weather. If the ground is entirely clear of weeds, there will be intervals between the showers when the cultivator may be used with the greatest benefit. But beware of cultivation if the weed has been allowed to escape previous cultivation, by which its roots have been cut. Then it becomes stocky and full of fibrous roots, so that nothing but entire burial of the whole plant will keep it from growing. It does no good to tear up such a root and throw it on the loosened ground between the rows. Its fine roots will catch in the soil and the first shower will set it to growing again.

Water Fowl.

Water fowl are not very largely bred upon farms in comparison with the number of our land poultry, and yet they are both profitable and a delight to the eye. While liberal water privileges are useful where geese and ducks are kept, they are by no means essential, as these birds will do well with no more than enough water for drinking purposes. Plenty of grass and good pasture are needful, as geese are as truly grazing stock as horses, sheep, or cattle. When clover and other nutritious fodder abound, little or no grain is required, and geese may be reared very cheaply. The duck is a heavy feeder, but not over particular, so that almost any farm waste may be used. Table leavings, small potatoes, beet, and turnip leaves—in short, anything and everything at all eatable, the duck will consume and make a return for in a goodly number of large, rich eggs. It is quite remarkable how a duck will lay. She begins as early as February and lays every day for three or four months with few respites. Toulouse and Embden are by far the best breeds of geese, and the Pekin is queen of ducks. Hatch both geese and duck eggs under hens, as the geese make clumsy mothers and the ducks cannot be relied on for hatching.—Country Gentleman.

Weed Killer.

A weed killer for use on farms infested with dock, plantains, wild carrots, thistles and other things necessary to be cut off just below the crown is made from an old shovel. With a cold chisel remove each side of the blade, leaving a strip only three inches wide and as long as the worn shovel will permit. Then cut a V-shaped notch in the end of this, afterward put it on the grindstone until the outer edges are smooth, and the notch is sharp as a knife. A single thrust with such a tool will be more effective than several blows with much harder work where the clumsy shovel, ax, or hoe is used.

Durable Whitewash.

Here is a receipt for whitewash that is used by the Government on its lighthouses and is said to be nearly as durable on wood, brick, or stone, as oil paint, while very much cheaper. Slake half a bushel of good fresh lime in boiling water, keeping it covered during the process. Strain it and add a peck of salt dissolved in water; three pounds of ground rice boiled to a paste; and a pound of clear glue, dissolved in water. Mix these well together and let the mixture stand for several days. Keep the wash thus prepared in a kettle or portable furnace, and put on as hot as possible.

Old and New Methods.

Old and beaten tracks are not the ones that always lead most quickly to success in agriculture. New ideas and new methods come up in every branch of farm practice, many of which have been proven by trial to be good and worthy of being adopted. There should never be so strong a prejudice in favor of old ways as to hold one away from the path of true progress. Farmers should be willing to read, study, and investigate the new, and so be up with the times in all things that relate to progressive agriculture. Remember that farming is a progressive science.

It Pays to Thin Grapes.

Not only the size and quality of grapes, but their earliness in ripening, is promoted by judicious thinning. It is, therefore, especially profitable with grapes to be sold early, or with varieties that are too late to ripen in ordinary seasons. We have ripened Catawbas in good condition where only one bunch was allowed on a shoot, while other vines allowed to bear two, three, or four small bunches barely began to color the fruit when frost stopped ripening and left it worth scarcely anything. Pinch out the extra bunches any time after blossoming is finished and fruit is set.—American Cultivator.

Corn Leaves and Roots.

Whoever looks at a field of growing corn will see in the way its leaves shed the water how and where cultivation and manure are needed. All the rain that falls on the corn is conducted by its leaves outside the hill, and after the plant is eighteen inches high, into the middle of the row. Here you will find nearly all the feeding roots, and if there are frequent rains they will be near the surface. Hence to run a shovel plow through the rows breaks up this feeding ground of the roots, and places it where no rains can reach it, and where there are comparatively few roots.

Olds and Ends.

ELDERBERRIES are said to be almost a specific for dropsy.

ALL traces of mud can be removed from black clothes by rubbing spots with a raw potato cut in half.

BEFORE putting away your stove-pipe brush it over with a mixture composed of a gill each of linseed oil and kerosene and a tablespoonful of spirits of turpentine well shaken together. This will effectually prevent rust.

MANY a cup of poor coffee is due to the fact that the coffee pot is not clean. Too many housekeepers are careless about this utensil, which should be kept scrupulously clean and free from the brownish deposit which too often defaces the inside.

If your carpets have suffered from the invasion of the kalsominer's brush, try rubbing spots with a mixture of carbonate of ammonia, say a few drops in a small quantity of water. This will indeed change all discolorations, whether produced by acids or alkalis.

THE MELUNGEONS.

A Strange People Who Live in the Mountains of Tennessee.

It is not generally known that in the mountains of Eastern Tennessee there lives a class of peculiar-looking people whose origin is wrapped in mystery and who are called by the whites Melungeons. They resent this appellation and proudly declare that they are Portuguese.

The legend of their history, which they carefully preserve, is this: A great many years ago these mountains were settled by a society of Portuguese adventurers, men and women, who came from the shore of Virginia that they might be freed from the restraints and drawbacks imposed upon them by any form of government. They made themselves friendly with the Indians, and, freed as they were, from every kind of social government, they uprooted all conventional forms of society and lived in a kind of Utopia of their own creation, trampling upon the marriage relation, despising all forms of religion and subsisting upon corn—the only possible product of the soil—and the game of the great forests. They intermixed with the Indians and subsequently with the negroes, and thus formed the present race of Melungeons. They are tall, straight, well-formed people of a dark copper color, but with Circassian features. They were privileged voters in the old slave days and accredited citizens. They are brave but quarrelsome, and are hospitable to strangers. They have no preachers among them and are almost without any knowledge of a Supreme Being. They marry by established forms, but husband and wife can separate at pleasure without meeting with any reproach or disgrace from their friends. They have but little association with their neighbors, and are in every respect, save that they are under the jurisdiction of the State government, a separate and distinct people.—N. Y. Recorder.

By a Ruse.

Some years ago the Abbe Liszt was staying in Rome, but he was not easily induced to play when in the salons of the Italian nobility. A young princess, who was desirous that the Abbe should favor her at her party with a display of his musical talents, resorted to a ruse.

She had noticed that whenever Liszt was present at a social gathering, her friends had taken special care to open the piano, and in such cases it was almost impossible to get the artist to touch the instrument. At her own soiree she locked the piano and put the key in her pocket.

Liszt was spared on that occasion any request to play, and all the evening no mention was made of his art. This unusual attitude evidently surprised him. Presently he began to walk to and fro in a nervous manner before the locked instrument.

At last he could no longer conceal his excitement, and personally requested the princess to give him the key of the instrument. Then he played.

Some Safe Disinfectants.

There are many good disinfectants, writes Elizabeth Robinson Scovil in the third article of her series "Life in the Invalid's Room" in the Ladies' Home Journal. Each physician has his favorites. Different kinds are required for different purposes. Some will stain clothing, while others are harsh and disagreeable for personal use.

Cheap and efficacious ones are: Copperas, one and a half pounds to a gallon of water.

Sulphate of zinc, two ounces, and the same quantity of common salt, to a gallon of water.

Sulphur. Boracic acid, two ounces to a gallon of water.

The copperas solution should be put into vessels before they are used by the sick person, the discharges covered with it before they are emptied, and a painful thrown down the water-closet two or three times a day. If an earth-closet is used it should be plentifully sprinkled with dry copperas.

Coal Deposits in Mexico.

Considerable attention has been attracted to the reported discoveries of coal in the Huasteca (Vera Cruz,) or tropical district lying on the eastern or gulf side of the mountains which line the coast of the Gulf of Mexico. The existence of coal in these localities has been known for a long time, and it appears that the matter has been taken up by a syndicate of English capitalists who have sent experts into the region. It is asserted that the latter have pronounced the thickness and extent of the deposits to be very great and the coal to be of the best quality. Tests of the fuel are said to have given an average result of 88 per cent. of fixed carbon.—Philadelphia Record.

Historical Inaccuracy.

A small boy with an inquiring and analytical mind, residing on a farm about sixteen miles in the country, sends this in:

Dere Sur—
I notice in the history that we are studying that Rome was saved by the cackling of a lot of geese, but I don't believe it for I have lived on a farm all my life and I never herd a goose cackle yet. Doant they meen a hen? Yours truly.—Free Press.

MORTIMER WHITEHEAD.

Lecturer of the National Grange Will Speak in Kansas.

EDITOR PARTON:—Permit me through your paper to state that Bro. Mortimer Whitehead, Lecturer of the National Grange, will speak in Kansas, September 18, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

I have received word from Bro. Harbaugh, master of Missouri state grange, word to the effect that Bro. Whitehead's last appointment will be in Northwest Missouri, September 16th, and from there will cross the river into North-eastern Kansas. In view of that fact, and after consulting with the state lecturer, Bro. Dickson, and Bro. Sims, chairman of the executive committee, I have made the following dates and places in Kansas:

Jefferson county, Monday Sept. 18, '93; Cumberly's Grove, Tuesday, Sept. 19, near the line between Shawnee and Osage counties; Vinland, Douglas county, Wednesday, Sept. 20; Edgerton Fair, Johnson county, Sept. 21; Cadmus, Linn county, Friday, Sept. 22; Cowley county, Saturday Sept. 23.

We are satisfied that there will be some disappointments in regard to these appointments. We have received a number of communications from other parts of the state urging lecture work, but owing to the meager number of appointments for Bro. Whitehead, we are obliged to study economy, and make the appointments to meet the most urgent demands.

We hope that the patrons of the state will endeavor to make these meetings a success. Shape your business so that you can attend one or more of these meetings, the nearest one to you, even if you have to drive thirty or forty miles. Don't let this opportunity pass by for it will pay you. Have your neighbors go to hear him whether they belong to the grange or not, and it matters not what our political faith may be, our interests as agriculturists are the same. Then let us come out and hear one of the ablest speakers in the United States, and let us make these meetings a grand success by using our utmost endeavors to get everybody out. Collections will have to be made at each appointment to provide means to bear the lecturer's expenses while traveling in our state, the committee on arrangements, or county deputies will see to that part of the program as well as the other arrangements necessary.

Fraternally,

A. P. REARDON,
Master of Kansas State Grange.

A Way Out.

Lawrence Jeffersonian.

A bushel of wheat makes forty lbs. of first grade and seven of second grade flour; six of shorts, six of bran, and one lb. waste. At present prices forty lbs. best flour retail for eighty cents; seven lbs. second quality 11 cents; six lbs. bran, 4 cts.; 6 lbs. shorts, six cents, or a total of one dollar and one cent for a bushel of wheat costing fifty cents. It costs forty cents to raise and market the bushel of wheat, and it costs probably five cents to grind it, but say it is ten, and then figure out whether the farmer or the miller will first be able to start a national bank and buy a seat in the senate.

A roller mill with all modern improvements, with capacity of 75 barrels per day, can now be contracted to be built ready to start grinding for $7,000, but say it costs $10,000.

Such a mill, located at the central corner of four townships of six miles square, each, could be built at a cost of 12½ cents per acre, or $19.25 per quarter section of the land in the four townships. The cost per quarter would be paid on the saving on a single forty acre crop of wheat. There is, however, a serious objection to such mills, for they would be socialistic, and possibly even anarchistic, but they would be money-makers for their owners.

To Loan Seed Wheat.

Kansas Farmer.

It is stated that the Kansas Farmers' Alliance proposes to arrange a loan of seed wheat for every one of its members who, on account of crop failure, is in need of such assistance, the wheat to be returned after the next harvest without interest. This is a move in the right direction and will doubtless succeed. It is quite probable that those who receive the seed would be willing to pay a reasonable interest, and yet it is not unlikely that the bushel of wheat to be returned next year will be worth enough more than the bushel loaned will bring now to make the transaction a fairly profitable one for the lenders.

Something similar to this was done on a smaller scale in 1874-5 under the management of the Grange. Having lost their crops in '74 by grasshoppers the county grange of Barton county took contract notes from its members, endorsed the notes, placed them in the hands of an agent, who negotiated them with the grangers of southwestern Iowa, for both seed and other supplies. The notes bore 10 per cent. interest and were promptly paid to the mutual advantage and satisfaction of both parties.

No doubt the state alliance can successfully carry through its plan for the present relief of those who have suffered loss of crops in several counties.

A "Give Away"

R. T. Van Horn.

People know the anti-silver howl about "fiat money," and making money out of a "commodity." No matter about facts, so long as a howl is accepted instead. It is unspeakably humiliating to find any portion of the republican press so lacking in good sense as to encourage this political conspiracy against the money of the constitution.

Silver is discredited because the law has been made hostile to it. Restore it to its position before 1873 and financial prosperity would be instantly restored.

Read the following extract, it is in the Journal's New York dispatches yesterday. It occurs in the defense of the acting director of the mint, for their being governed by London prices in the purchase of silver—because that market has always controlled the price of silver. Here is the extract we want the reader to note:

"The French ratio of 1 to 15½ was a fixed point about which the price of silver moved. The London price fixed the relative value of silver and gold in the commercial world, but the commercial value could never vary very widely from the coinage value so long as the mints of the Latin Union stood ready to transform gold and silver into coin at the ratio of 1 to 15½."

So long as the mints of the Latin Union stood ready to transform gold and silver into coin at the ratio of 1 to 15½ "the commercial value of silver could never vary very widely from the coinage value."

There is the whole case given away by the directory of the mint. And were the mints of the Latin Union or those of the United States open to coinage of both metals now the same fact would obtain.

Now, what is the fact? The United States is the great cotton, corn and meat producing country of the world. It also produces the larger proportion of the silver crop as well. Give to us the full commercial power of these great staple crops—cotton, corn, meat and silver—and we become at once the commercial masties of the world.

To prevent this is the life-and-death struggle of England. Grover Cleveland and the democratic party, in their suicidal policy of free trade and anti-silver, are doing the work that England in the open competition of the world has failed in.

The above statement of the director of the mint takes away the very last argument on which their great crime rests. Restore coinage, and silver is king again—and so is America.

That old chestnut of "plenty of money in the country" seems to be exploded. The people want more money and have been waiting for it quite a while and now the banks that were said to have so much money have been forced to the confession that they want more money. They have none to loan. The logic of events is proving that the position all the time taken by the populists is correct.

When Henry George spoke at the Winfield (Cowley county) Chautauqua in June, he was asked by many populists to return to Kansas this fall, and agreed to do so if possible, in October, and speak eight or ten times in the state, asking only his expenses. Since then the populist county committee of Cowley county has passed a resolution requesting Chairman Breidenthal to formally invite him on behalf of the state committee to do so. Mr. George will attract large audiences and can reach the business and professional men better than any other speaker.—Jeffersonian.

Not Yet Quite Satisfied.

Kansas Farmer.

But it is well for older people to remember that one hundred and seventeen years ago this country was indifferently governed by a king—the king of England—and that our laws, our liberties and our customs were sought to be controlled from the little island across the water. Our forefathers thought these were cast in the interest of the king and people of the mother country rather much, and they thereupon declared they wouldn't stand it, but would establish a separate government, even if they had to fight for it. The remark of one of the patriots of that day that they must "hang together or they would hang separately" was not too strong a showing of the usual consequences of defeat in a revolt of a colony of England.

But while our fathers succeeded in their fight for separate government, they wisely availed themselves of the experience of the mother country and undertook to retain the good and reject the bad in the system from which they had separated themselves. The diverse feelings with which the present anniversary is celebrated, arise largely from diverse opinions as to what is yet English in our institutions and to greater or less favor in which essentially English influences are held. It is charged in prominent journals (the Chicago Inter-Ocean, for instance,) that so great is England's hold upon the finances of this country and people that in this respect we are again a colony of Great Britain. From whatever source we get the influence which brought about the present financial condition, it is certain that nobody is satisfied with it. Congress has been called to meet in extraordinary session at the unusually early date of August 7, for the avowed purpose of securing change in our financial legislation. As was the case one hundred and seventeen years ago, there are those who favor a surrender to the authority of England, this time by the complete and final demonetization of silver. There are also those who believe that this country is big enough, and old enough, and rich enough, and knows enough to manage her own finances in her own way in the interest of her own people, and that we should declare our independence and fight it out on that line.

Perhaps never before has there been in this country so large an element of dissatisfaction with the organization of society. The inequalities of condition are in this country as well as in others charged against the system on which society is organized. In some cases this dissatisfaction goes no further than a general discontent, in others it calls for the destruction of existing systems without much reference to what shall take their place, and in others it demands the substitution of systems believed to be more adapted to conserve the general prosperity.

But it should not be forgotten that while by our continual changing and patching, and by our persistent and universal demand for new legislation, we admit that we are not quite satisfied, yet our system places it within the power of the people to make such changes as our enlightenment enables us to determine to be desirable. It is our patriotic duty to use this ability to so reform abuses, to so introduce new features, to so conserve the ends of justice and the equality of which we boast.

Government Railroads in Prussia.

Prof. Cohn, of Gottingen, says in the Journal of Political Economy, published by Chicago University, that neither in Prussia nor Germany would any practical man think of returning to the private ownership of railroads. Prussia was kept from adopting the system of state railroads for a time by the fact that the government could not incur a debt without the consent of parliament, and until the democratic revolution of 1848 the government avoided the assembling of parliament. It was in 1849 that the new popular assembly determined upon the first great state railway, and the state took into its hands the administration of a number of subsidized roads, which yielded unsatisfactory revenues. This stage of state management lasted until about twenty years ago, when the movement in favor of public control of railways which swept over western Europe led in Prussia to a demand for the union of all the railroads under the control of the state. In 1879 the first bill providing for the acquisition of private railways was passed, the chief ground for its passage being the waste of capital through the construction of duplicate and triplicate lines, where a single line with low charges might have handled all the traffic. Although the government paid most liberally for the roads, each year they not only paid in full the interest on the railway debt, but that on the entire state debt. In addition they yielded a very substantial surplus, which in the fiscal year from April 1, 1889, to March 31, 1890, reached the maximum amount of $35,000,000. Moreover, more than $135,000,000 of the railway debt has been extinguished.

Squeezing.

Garnett, Kan., Agitator.

Whatever may be said to the contrary, it is absolutely certain that the small farmer is rapidly disappearing from among American farmers.

One company owns all the oil.

Several companies own all the railway lines.

The smaller merchants have been squeezed out in the cities.

One company owns America's telegraph lines.

Part of the late financial flurry was designed to squeeze out all the smaller and weaker banks.

Operatives and mechanics largely live in tenement houses.

There is but very little left to squeeze but the owners of farms.

Hitherto, the rapid increase of tenant farmers was due to widespread depression, but now, we believe that the capitalists are directing their attention to the buying up of large tracts of land.

If the small farmer has not been able to hold his own in the past, competing with his neighbor of small means, how will it be when large bodies of land are farmed with cheap labor and improved machinery?

This is not intended for a scare. The emergency is upon us. Whatever may be said to the contrary by the lying plutocratic press, we know that thousands of farms have been, and will be, sold under mortgage. The loan companies, having obtained these farms for an average of one-third their value, can afford to sell cheap. The lands will be offered to whomsoever will buy. Foreign capitalists will be—being—induced to purchase, and cheap foreign labor will till the land, supposing that cheap American labor cannot be bought. Alien land laws will not avail. With plutocratic courts, it is easy to evade laws. It is safe to say that the old world land system is well on its way to successful inauguration, and then with all other wealth in the hands of a few men, the American masses will be as completely subjugated as the subject of the Russian empire.

Oh! For a Moses.

San Diego Vidette.

The United States banks in every state of the republic have been failing at the rate of ten to fifteen per day for the last month for want of silver dollars. Nearly all the banks of Australia have closed their doors for want of silver dollars. In England, France, the German Empire, Austria, Russia, Spain and Italy, some of the oldest banks, and many of the strongest commercial firms have shut their doors and gone into insolvency for the want of silver dollars. It is a noticeable fact that in Mexico, Central America and South America, all free silver coinage countries, not a failure of any importance has occurred. But in all the countries where Rothschild has been able to demonetize silver, and establish the single gold standard, the financial crash and panic have been greater than ever before known in the history of the world. Shrewd observers say that Rothschild and his agents throughout the world will clean up more than $2,000,000,000 out of this deal! The destruction of the banks and old established commercial firms, and the robbery of the millions of depositors of the industrial classes all over the world, this heartless gang of public marauders calls a deal! Great God! how much longer will the people stand it? Oh for a Moses to lead them out of the wilderness into the light of justice, truth and social happiness and reform.

The people are taxed by those who are elected to guard their interests. These "guards" take our money and loan it to banks without demanding any return. We, in turn, are compelled to pay six per cent interest to the banks for what originally belonged to us. How long will we endure this when we have within our own hands the needful remedy?

HUMPHREYS'

This PRECIOUS OINTMENT is the triumph of Scientific Medicine.

Nothing has ever been produced to equal or compare with it as a CURATIVE and HEALING APPLICATION. It has been used 40 years and always affords relief and always gives satisfaction.

Cures PILES or HEMORRHOIDS—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding—Itching and Burning; Cracks or Fissures; Fistula in Ano; Worms of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.

WITCH HAZEL OIL

Cures BURNS, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant. Cures BOILS, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Fistulas, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Scurfy or Scald Head. It is infallible.

Cures INFLAMED or CACKED BREASTS and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable. Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.

Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price. HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

Your Stomach Distresses You

after eating a hearty meal, and the result is a chronic case of Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Dyspepsia, or a bilious attack.

RIPANS TABULES

Promote Digestion, Regulate the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Purify the Blood, and are a Positive Cure for Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, and all other Diseases arising from a disordered condition of the Liver and Stomach. They act gently yet promptly, and perfect digestion follows their use. Ripans Tabules take the place of an Entire Medicine Chest, and should be kept for use in every family.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

Package Mending Tissue, mends Silk, Satin, Kid Gloves, etc., better than needle and thread; 1 Package Solder, mends all kinds of Tinware; 1 Package of Solder, for polishing cutlery, collars and shirt buttons; 1 Hair Gripper; 4 Papers, 8 darning worsted, lace, gloves, carpet and moto needles; 6 Hat, Shawl and Toilet Pins; Illustrated Book on Fancy Work, Knitting, etc.; 100 designs for Ties, Cushions, etc.; 44 Songs, including Tea, ra, boom, ta ray, words and music. All sent by mail, post paid, for 25 Cents. Address Howard Mfg. Co. 62 Wash. St. Providence, R. I.

"The World's Fair Hatcher" Send 40 stamps for new illustrated catalogue. It will pay you. 36 Yards of High 36 36 Class Poultry. Address: BELLADUE Incubator & Brooder Co., Quincy, - Illinois.

"New occasions teach new duties. Time makes ancient good uncouth. They must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of Truth."

WATCH FOR THE FIRST NUMBER OF

NEW OCCASIONS

a Monthly Magazine of Social and Industrial Progress, edited by B. F. UNDERWOOD. New Occasions will not be the organ of any party or clique, but will offer a free field for the discussion of living questions. It will ride no hobby, but will help in solving the great problem of securing justice for those who do the work of the world. 10 cents a number; $1.00 a year. No free samples.

New Occasions and any two of the following 50 cent books post paid for $1.00. Circulars free.

The Russian Refugee, a Tale of the Blue Ridge, by H. R. Wilson; 618 pages.

Why Government at All, by W. H. Van Ornum.

The Coming Climax, by L. C. Hubbard.

The Rice Mills of Port Mystery.

An Ounce of Prevention, Jacobson.

Liberty and Life, by E. P. Powell.

Inquendo Island, by Hador Genone.

The Last Tenet, by Hador Genone.

The Faith that Makes Faithful, Eight great sermons, by Gannett and Jones.

The Genius of Galilee, an historical novel by Anson Uriel Hancock, 507 pages.

John Auburntop, Novelist, Hancock.

The Auroraphone, by Cyrus Cole.

Lessons from the World of Matter and the World of Man, Theodore Parker.

Send six cents in stamps for a catalogue, and a copy of W. H. Van Ornum's remarkable address, just published, "How we can all get Rich."

Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Monroe Street, Chicago.

The Rocker Washer has proved the most satisfactory of any Washer ever placed upon the market. It is warranted to wash an ordinary family washing of 100 PIECES IN ONE HOUR, as clean as can be washed in the washboard. Write for prices and full description. ROCKER WASHER CO., FT. WAYNE, IND.

Liberal inducements to live agents.

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York.

It is worth the attention of the 100,000 people living within a line drawn from Wabunsee to Snokomo, Waushara Osage City, Wakarusa, Tecumseh, Oskaloosa, Ozawkie, Netawaka, Onaga, Pottawatomie and Wamego, thence to the place of beginning, embracing within this area the county of Shawnee and the city of Topeka, beautiful for situation upon the banks of the classic Kaw. A little to the north lies the village of Menoken, while to the east rises the heights of Tecumseh, to the west is a beautiful undulating sunset country, and to the south is the rich garden-like valley of the placid Shunganunga.

I ask again, is it not worth your attention that DOWNING is making the finest of Photos, the high artistic finish of which gives such general satisfaction.

617 Kansas Avenue, - TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUCHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURTON, KANSAS.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.

Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State. Send for Circulars and Prices.

J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by

CLARA BEWICK COLBY,

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History, Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla bin "in", price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, N. Y. Toronto.

"A vast amount of trust, worthy matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

Our Offer. By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cents for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manila binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Catsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuit, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashion, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

JOHNSON & FIELD CO.

RACINE, WISCONSIN.

The "Racine" Farm and Warehouse Fanning Mills, Land Rollers and Broadcast Seeders, ELEVATOR MACHINERY and SUPPLIES, Gas and Steam Engines. Send for Catalogue and Prices.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

Our line of BICYCLES consists of over 30 different sizes and models, HIGH AND MEDIUM GRADE from $20.00 to $170.00, for every class of riders.

We guarantee to give you the best value for the money, and guarantee every wheel. Don't buy a bicycle until you see our catalogue and get our prices.

DOBBINS'

ELECTRIC SOAP,

is for sale everywhere, and has since 1869 been Acknowledged by all to be

THE BEST FAMILY SOAP IN THE WORLD.

Its quality has never been changed since we first made it. We ask every woman using it to save all the OUTSIDE WRAPPERS, and donate them to her favorite Religious or Charitable Institution, NO MATTER WHAT DENOMINATION, anywhere in the United States, as we have promised to pay these institutions cash, for all the OUTSIDE WRAPPERS of our soap, they will collect and send to us. This will give needed financial assistance to worthy charities, at no expense to you. We thus propose to thus donate, at least One Hundred Thousand Dollars a year. Among hundreds of worthy institutions, are all the "Little Sisters of the Poor," Orphan Asylums, Sisters of Charity, Hospitals, Woman's Relief Corps, G. A. R. or S. of V., Soldiers' Homes, King's Daughters' Circles, Women's Christian Temperance Unions, etc.

The housekeeper will find on trial, ACCORDING TO DIRECTIONS, the washing does not require

HAVE THE QUANTITY OF DOBBINS' ELECTRIC SOAP

that it does of ANY OTHER; that there is a great saving of time and labor in its use; that it saves the wear and tear of the clothes on the wash-board, and does not cut or rot them to pieces, or hurt the hands, as adulterated soaps do.

It Disinfects Clothes Washed with it, leaving them thoroughly cleaned and sweet, instead of adding a foul odor of rosin and filthy grease. It washes flannels WITHOUT SHRINKING, leaving them soft and nice.

Respectfully,

I. L. CRAGIN & CO.,

CHICAGO, PHILADELPHIA,

NEW YORK AND BOSTON.

WORK FOR US

a few days, and you will be startled at the unexpected success that will reward your efforts. We positively have the best business to offer an agent that can be found on the face of this earth. $45.00 profit on $75.00 worth of business is being easily and honorably made by and paid to hundreds of men, women, boys, and girls in our employ. You can make money faster at work for us than you have any idea of. The business is so easy to learn, and instructions so simple and plain, that all succeed from the start. Those who take hold of the business reap the advantage that arises from the sound reputation of one of the oldest, most successful, and largest publishing houses in America. Secure for yourself the profits that the business so readily and handsomely yields. All beginners succeed grandly, and more than realize their greatest expectations. Those who try it find exactly as we tell them. There is plenty of room for a few more workers, and we urge them to begin at once. If you are already employed, but have a few spare moments, and wish to use them to advantage, then write us at once (for this is your grand opportunity), and receive full particulars by return mail. Address, TRUE & CO., Box No. 400, Augusta, Me.

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS. CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

A MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific

RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Ticket Office, or address

E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE

$10.00 worth of lovely Music for Forty Cents, consisting of 100 pages full size Sheet Music of the brightest, liveliest and most popular selections, both vocal and instrumental, gotten up in the most elegant manner, including four large size Portraits.

CARMENCITA, the Spanish Dancer, PADEREWSKI, the Great Pianist, ADELINA PATTI and MINNIE SELIGMAN CUTTING.

ADDRESS ALL ORDERS TO THE NEW YORK MUSICAL ECHO CO., Broadway Theatre Building, New York City.

CANYASSERS WANTED.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND TANSY PILLS

Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others Fail. If your Druggist don't keep them accept no substitutes but send 4c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive 4c. absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

Raw Heterodox Soc

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, SEPTEMBER, 1893.

VOL. XII. NO. 1.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S WARNING VOICE.

Written for the FARMER'S WIFE.

This was Abraham Lincoln's vision and warning prophecy,
The approaching danger of a monarchical, moneyed aristocracy.
The evil day is at hand; upon us now;
The way must and shall be remedied; I trow
The people must awake, be up and doing
For justice and equity before the nation suing.
Claim justice for all, with just and equitable right,
Gird on the armor; with flaming sword fight.
All must unite and link into love's chain of benefaction
And break the money king's wall into ten thousand factions.
To complete the anchor chain and weld the links Enfranchised women in state and national affairs consider what they think.
Truly the people have much on hand to do
To kill bartered laws and make productive ones new.
Were all the battles fought from Georgia to Maine,
At and since the time of Washington's honest reign
That pharo rule with oligarchs to possess the gain,
And place the people for existence in the utmost strain?
All hail, America! District of Columbia, the dawn
A new nation, from the old one learn
Love, justice and mercy, the capital's evergreen sword,
Wisdom, the light; denoting the ever present
Lord.
Gold being held it destroys the people's prosperity and peace,
The proper way to do that prosperity and happiness increase,
To make it tame the same as merchandise and brass;
Alter it and pasture it with the ox and ass.
The people for the people must furnish the circulating medium,
This will be four score and more for the millennium.
Of the round globe we are the advanced nation.
If justice to all is administered in every relation,
Let's truly be a united people and show the whole world
Of all nations, the star spangled banner to be the worthiest flag unfurled,
Paso Rabies, Cal. N. E.

The Woman's Progressive Political League of Kansas—An Auxiliary of the People's Party.

BY MRS. J. C. BARE.

For the FARMER'S WIFE.

My duty as chairman of the Political Economy of the Woman's Progressive Political League of Kansas, to give the first of a series of articles on Economic Co-Operation, followed in the next issue of the FARMER'S WIFE and Advocate of corresponding date by another by Mrs. Allie B. Stryker of Great Bend, Kansas, a member of the same committee. The economic co-operation of the women of the W. P. P. L. must not savor of narrowness. Our expenses must be curtailed in every way to enrich the treasury of the W. P. P. L. To make ourselves a true auxiliary of the People's party, we must give our money as well as the labor of our hands and brains. We must cordially return every favor, every recognition of equal rights for us that are almost daily being extended by the men to the women of the People's party, by adding to their strength in every way of which woman's ingenuity is capable. And like the almost numberless aid societies during the war of the rebellion, which were organized from New England to the "Far West," which were in turn the great sources of supply of the Christian sanitary commis- sions formed under the patronage of the government for the collection and distri- bution of hospital and sanitary supplies, millions of dollars were raised and ex- pended, thousands of lives were saved through the direct agency of the patriotic, loyal women of the North, and later on the organization of the Woman's Relief Corps, to meet the demands made upon the country by the failing health, the old wounds, the lack of work, bitter disap- pointment, and cruel ravages in the veter- an ranks, where did the veterans turn for help? To the loyal women of America. The men of this day are fast learning that when all other resources fail in emergencies, they can always turn to the women for help. Who ever heard of women refusing to help their brothers in distress? The G. A. R. had organized at the close of the war to promote the prin- ciples of fraternity, charity and loyalty, and had been doing its utmost to aid and comfort their unfortunate comrades, but the organization was small and had no source of replenishment for the steady drain upon its treasury. Then it was the women answered, "Here am I," and from an organization of forty-two members, today upwards of 150,000 women answer to its roll call. Its annual charity work foots up over $100,000. Its reserve fund held in its local treasuries throughout the land almost doubles this amount. Up- wards of $700,000 have been expended for relief work, not counting work done for soldier's orphan's homes, homes for nurses, and not counting all the bene- ficent things done in the interest of the soldiers.

Another great struggle for liberty is upon our Nation—a struggle of the people for pleasant homes, comfortable clothing, nutritious food, books, pictures, papers, and some leisure to utilize and enjoy these necessities for human devel- opment. The knell of death to these hopes is about to be sounded, and every loyal man and woman of this country should take up the cry of distress that comes from the oppressed, from the homeless and hungry, until the Nation trembles from center to circumference; until no longer a few men shall hold in their hands the destinies of millions of poor people who never have enough to eat, who shiver from lack of clothing, living in the darkness of ignorance, shelterless, furnishing recruits to the great army that is filling the houses of correction with neglected children; that is filling the insane asylums with men, women and children. As Talmage has said, "human beings driven from comfort to want, from want to beggary and crime; while thieves in gilded living, shame- lessly flaunt their illgotten gains on the streets of nearly every hamlet in the land.

Will we Populist women sink into lethargy while the men fight this battle alone? In fancy I can hear the sound of your voices as you repeat the oftspoken sentiments, "I have little to devote to the cause, of time, talent or money, but such as I have I give, my strength, my reputa- tion, my love of ease and comfort and the requirements of life; my life, if necessary, I devote to this cause, and will not cease from my efforts until our country is again redeemed from the curse of human slavery."

But how is this work of the women to broaden so that all may share in its duties? When are we to act as a body? Only one question must be settled, it is the how! The when is settled, it is now! Organize local Woman's Progressive Political Leagues in every school district in the State, and do it now. May the day never be too wet or cold or the snow too deep the coming winter to keep you from attending your local league or some other. Manage with as much good judge- ment and enthusiasm in your efforts to make money for this cause as you do for the church.

As organizer of the local Woman's Pro- gressive Political League of Douglas county, my plan to call the attention of the women to the necessity of organizing these leagues is being worked out through a series of grove meetings in which are discussed not only the silver question and the present financial conditions and the suffrage amendment, but also the object of the Woman's Political League.

Under the discipline of the Woman's Progressive Political League, we must study the art of active warfare against oppression, obeying every order of battle, taking our place among the mighty nar- shalled hosts of the poor and oppressed, stretching across the hills and valleys to the slums of the great cities, and remem- bering the great struggle that bathed our Nation in the blood of our loved ones, we can see that only the strongest senti- ments against oppression can fit our voters to meet the moral and political battles of the present day as bravely with ballots as did our Union soldiers with bullets. Their's was not the last grand camping ground; their last call to arms, was not the last marching orders the Great Commander had to give to the armies of the earth. We go from revol- ution to revolution in the onward march of progress toward civilization, routing out evil and the domination of despotism. As our Union army destroyed the root and branch of slavery of the black man, and dug it entirely out of American soil, so this generation must unclasp the cruel hand of the corporate slave dealer of the present time. We are now meeting in battle array the greatest foes to our Nation's prosperity. Let us continue the fight, constantly adding new recruits to our army until the last bugle will sound to lead us to an overwhelming victory for the poor and oppressed, that will trans- form their lives into one long psalm of grateful praise. To them the morning sunlight kissing the dew wet flowers will take on a new glory. No longer, as today, will the light of day bring a dread of another long day's battle with poverty, and at evening, when the shadows fall like the lashes of a weary eye drooping over mountain valley and sea, they can lie down to slumber free from the thought that the jaws of want are open ready to swallow them up. No longer will they be shelterless and clotheless. "The discouraged soul, almost turned to suicide for relief, may unfurl its tattered sail and catch the breeze of help floating out from the Nation's treasury, and be wafted into the sunny harbor of plenty to eat and plenty to wear, and the where- withall to educate and develop them- selves and their children."

We daily see the gray-haired veterans of political and moral reform holding on to the hand of an earthly comrade and reaching out with the other hand to the comrades on the other shore; their hair growing whiter and whiter, and their faces more wrinkled, and step less firm. It is our duty to take their places and push the work to completion. It is also our duty to remember that every child born in absolute poverty, of which there are hundreds daily, are only a multipli- cation of the unfit, and charity work can not provide for them, much less remove the cause. The poor ye have with you, and the poor ye always shall have, is the sentiment of the moneyed kings. Every one of these children are an added care to the reformer. What shall the women do to change for the better the existing conditions? Work constantly, fearlessly, for the "amendment" to give women enfranchisement. Women must unite, must organize for this great work. The Woman's Progressive Political League of the People's party is the only society solely for women in existence today. Organize local clubs, as I have said, in every school district, if only two women can get together; have a president and secretary. Embody in yourselves all the officers of the league, then go to work to get other women interested, and as soon as they can subscribe to the constitution and by-laws, admit them to membership. Open your doors to visitors and discuss every point of interest, allow not a single detail to pass without notice. Get all the information possible of the past and present industrial conditions and labor to make women see that the broadest avenue to helpfulness to the People's party is through the enfranchisement of the women. It is high time that we must see that it is as useless to hunt squirrels with a club, instead of the proper weapon, as to be effective workers for reform without the ballot.

Timid sisters, listen to your inward promptings. Conquer every feat of un- popularity and reputation. Put all you have and are on the altar of righteousness and make a call for justice. Hidden truths will thus be revealed to you, and you will be shown what you can do. If your spirits have been broken by the cruel hand of oppression, or if the chas- tening lesson of sorrow has done its sharp, keen work on your worldly aspira- tions and humbled you, the W. P. P. L. needs you to breathe from your crushed and broken lives the songs of sympathy and love for the oppressed. If you but yield yourself to the demands of truth and right, a divine lustre will throw its light on the way you are to go, and you will become great motive powers for sending strength and victory to the toiling masses, whose spirits have not broken forth in complaint against unavoidable calamities; their repinings are no effu- sions of morbid minds sickening under miseries and giving vent to bitterness upon an unoffending world. Study in your league work the causes that lead to the extortion of these murmurings, and you will find abundant reasons. Do not worship money and court ease, or you will surely shirk responsibility and lack brotherly love. Do not ignore a fallen sister from fear of contamination. Help her into the league; help her to have high and noble purposes. In order to do this, give her work in the league that she is mentally or physically capable of doing, remembering that Christ's life showed that he mingled more freely with the despised outcast than with priests and scribes, and constantly associated with those whose lives were farthest removed from his own. The great objective point to be reached is a felt brotherhood, with- out regard to race, sex or rank; a point where we will sacrifice ourselves physi- cally and financially and endure perse- cution, in the advocacy of the unpopular cause the league is working for. Fear not to change names and methods to accomplish further ends and aims. Do not be tied to old associations. Keep out of rut and the environment of force of habit. Let us have more individual, utmost endeavor. Subscribe for and circulate literature. Hundreds of families take no papers published exclusively in the interests of reform. Let us face the situation and sacrifice everything of the few, if need be, for the good of the many. The desire to read is universal, and the ability almost co-extensive with the desire. Scores of papers are pub- lished in these interests. Send for the FARMER'S WIFE, Topeka; The Woman's Tribune, Washington, D. C.; The Woman's World, and New Nation, etc. Send for sample copies, read them and give to others to read. Subscribe for some of them. If everybody would do this, what an educational work it would be. How it would send the light of truth upon our political, financial, social and moral con- dition. Now, sisters of the People's party, or any other party, or no parties, who have a desire to be useful, who are honest thinkers, see that you have no shadow of doubt as to the course to be pursued.

The Golden Wedding.

Comparatively few couples are spared to enjoy the pleasure of celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, their Golden Wedding, but such was the good fortune of Dr. Frederick and Mrs. Humphreys on August 1st.

The reception took place at Monmouth Beach, their country-seat, of which there is none handsomer on the Jersey Coast, the grounds running to the broad Atlantic; the fine, beautiful house of "many gables" was even more attractive than ever, when decked with golden flowers, and when there was gathered beneath its spacious roof, children, grandchildren, kinsfolk and friends from far and near.

The dresses of the ladies, the strains of sweet music, the fragrance of flowers and the many rich and rare presents gave the effect of fairy-land.

The scene seemed complete, when the central figure, erect and as handsome as of yore, Dr. Humphreys, and his sweet- faced wife, children, grand-children and friends, stood while the golden Loving Cup was passed from hand to hand. Each sip of the rich wine was accompanied by a silent prayer for the continued happi- ness of our host and hostess.

At a recent meeting of the Chamber- lain District Farmers' club, held at Worcester, Mass., Mr. Burton W. Pot- ter, attorney-at-law, spoke on woman suffrage, and said, among other things: "After long reflection and mature con- sideration, I have no hesitation in say- ing that in my opinion woman suffrage would promote the welfare of women and men alike, and is a step that must be taken before mankind can reach the apex of civilization.—Exchange."

How many there are who frankly admit that woman's enfranchisement means so much for the advancement of a higher civilization.

OUR QUAKER SISTER AGAIN.

A Paper Read by Request Before the Burlington County, N. J., Pomona Grange, by Elizabeth A. Rogers, and Requested to be Published in the "Farmer's Wife."

Would Woman Suffrage Benefit the Country, Socially, or Poli- tical or Either.

Worthy Master and Patrons:

I suppose there are those present who do not favor woman suffrage; they con- sider that politics is too corrupt, that no good could come to them or this country by their having that privilege granted them. There is conclusive evidence to the contrary. An ex-governor of Wyom- ing made the statement at the woman's congress at Chicago, that woman suffrage had proved a success in every way in that state. He said it is good for woman, it is good for the home, it is good for the state and it will be good for the whole world. The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Wyoming legislature, Feb. 16, 1893: "Be it resolved by the legislature of Wyoming, That the pos- session and exercise of suffrage by the women in Wyoming for the past quarter of a century has wrought no harm and has done great good in many ways: that it has largely aided in banishing crime, pauperism and vice from this state, and that without any violent or oppressive legislation; that it has secured peaceful and orderly elections, good government and a remarkable degree of civilization and public order, and we point with pride to the fact that after nearly twenty-five years of woman suffrage, not one county in Wyoming has a poorhouse, that our jails are almost empty, and crime, except by strangers in the state, is almost un- known, and as a result of experience we urge every civilized community on the earth to enfranchise its women without delay."

If those conditions exist where the bal- lot has been granted to women, it should induce every woman that is interested in the elevation of humanity from its pres- ent unsatisfactory condition, to plead with their voice and pen to procure the same condition in every section of our country.

In our order the brothers have con- ferred upon the sisters the honorable po- sition of being their equals in the Grange, but politically there are many of them who use their influence to keep their mothers, wives, sisters and daughters on an equality with idiots, paupers, crim- inals and the insane. Instead of procur- ing for them the privilege of standing by their side and using their ballots to assist in procuring relief from the unjust legis- lation that has inflicted such grievous burdens upon the farmers, they allow them to be kept on a lower plane than the low, ignorant immigrants who are coming in such large numbers to this country. The objection to women taking part in political life comes from too low a standard of politics and too narrow a view of what woman's life should be. When women have attained the right of suffrage, which right carries with it all the rights of an American citizen, that will commence a new era. It would take the human race higher in the scale of human progress than any other cause has ever done. With woman's advent on an equality with man upon all the questions of the age, the liquor traffic will vanish as a fog before the light of the sun, and the foul stench of our politics would be purified. All this could be done by a mere act of justice, not a great act of per- sonal sacrifice on the part of the men, but rather the shifting of a burden upon what God meant woman to be, the help- mate of man, not a slave nor a servant, but an equal in the courts of men as she is in the courts of God. God gave us the whole race with its varied endowments, man and woman, one the complement of the other, on which to base civilization. We starve ourselves by using in civil af- fairs only half, only one sex. I mean to get the ballot for woman. Why? Re-

[Continued on Fourth Page.]

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA,

KANSAS.

MATRONS AND MAIDS.

THOUGHTS FOR WOMEN OLD AND YOUNG.

The Sewing Room a Most Desirable Adjunct to a House.—The Hot-Water Remedy—Cleaning the Oven—An Old-Fashioned Girl.

They Didn't Fail.

THREE Wellesley girls who were in a summer-hotel fire are described coming out of the building dressed as if ready for a picnic, and having saved everything, even to a bag of peanuts. This seems to indicate a certain mental poise and equanimity of nerves which may be credited, for the time being at least, to the good effect of modern education of girls. It probably did not enter the minds of these gymnasium-trained and Greek-lettered girls to shriek and run about. They calmly got up and dressed, and picked up their things and walked out of the blazing hotel. It is pleasant, however, to note that they dressed themselves with care enough to look ready for a picnic. The old doctrine that it is every woman's duty to look as pretty as possible under all circumstances receives the unconscious confirmation of these three little maids from Wellesley.

A Sewing Room.

A most desirable adjunct to a house where much sewing is done is a room set apart exclusively for a sewing room. It need not be large, and it should not be carpeted or contain more than the necessary furniture; but the convenience of such a room where one may be sure of finding needles and thread, pieces of gowns, braid, and all the accessories of dress-making and repairing can hardly be overestimated. The floor should be stained and varnished, so that its daily brushing up will be easy to do. The sewing machine should be placed in a strong light by a window; from hooks on the walls should depend all the family piece bags, the pieces carefully sorted; shelves should be put up to hold boxes of buttons, trimmings, patterns, etc. A cutting table or lap-board is of course indispensable, as is a low rocking-chair, without arms. A long mirror in which the full length of one's figure may be seen is the greatest possible convenience, and, if cutting and fitting is accomplished without the aid of a professional dressmaker, a dress form saves the time and temper of some other member of the family who must otherwise serve as a dummy.

An Old-Fashioned Girl.

She can peel and boil potatoes, make a salad of tomatoes, but she doesn't know a Latin noun from Greek.

And so well she cooks a chicken that your appetite would quicken, but she cannot tell what's modern from antique.

She knows how to set a table and make order out of Babel, but she doesn't know true eloquence from rant.

She has a firm conviction one ought only to read fiction, and she doesn't care for science not a bit.

And the way she makes her bonnetsure is worth a thousand sonnets, but she doesn't yearn for "culture" not a whit.

She can make her wraps and dresses till a fellow fast confesses that there's not a maiden half so sweet.

She's immersed in home completely, where she keeps all things so neatly, but from Browning not a line can she repeat.

Well; in fact she's just a woman, gentle, lovable and human, and her faults she is quite willing to admit.

'Twere foolish to have tarried, so we went off and got married, and I tell you I am mighty glad of it.

Cleaning the Oven.

When anything boils over in the oven, it should be allowed to burn to a char, as it then may be easily scraped off and brushed out. After this the oven should be thoroughly aired. It is a great mistake to bake a delicate dessert or cake or pie in the same oven with a dish of meat which has been flavored with onions or strong spices. The flavor of the meat will invariably affect the more delicate dishes. The shallow closet under the baking oven, commonly called the heating closet, where dishes may be temporarily kept warm after they are cooked, should be kept as clean as the stove oven. It is certainly a very disagreeable and hard job to clean a stove which has been neglected, but it is a small matter to keep a stove clean if you begin at the beginning and never allow it to become clogged with soot and dust and the debris of food. The flues of every oven should be cleaned out once a month.

The Hot-Water Remedy.

Are you a busy, worried woman, who comes home at night with temples throbbing and every muscle aching from fatigue? If so, you often say to yourself: "I am dead tired, and I haven't the ambition to dress or even comb my hair for the evening." Then you lounge about and go to bed about 9 o'clock with your head still aching and your limbs just as tired as when you came in. The next time you feel that way just slip off the waist of your gown, brush your hair up on the top of your head, and bathe the back of your neck with hot water. When the pain is a little relieved wash your face with the same reviver, and by the time that is done you will feel like brushing your hair and fixing up a bit, or we are very much mistaken. The hot-water cure is quite as efficacious taken externally as internally.—Philadelphia Times.

Advice to Mothers.

To relieve pain from bruises, and prevent discoloration and subsequent stiffness, nothing is more efficacious than fomentations of water as hot as it can be borne. Most babies are bathed each morning and seldom oftener; many times a cross child may be soothed by a pleasant bath before its evening meal. All bathing should be done before meals, not after. Such an evening bath tends toward a good night's rest. Still, half the sleepless children would sleep if they were given exercise. A good practice is to let the baby lie on the floor and kick at the air, by throwing a sheet or quilt on the floor first, and having its edges raised, draughts may be avoided. Such exercises tires, but strengthens; and spine troubles and peevish nurses are not often seen in homes where this is the practice.

Tan Shoes.

The tan leather shoe is abroad in the land, and no self-respecting man, woman or child is without a pair or two. They are worn with that charming lack of discrimination that is one of our national characteristics in matters of dress. Their proper use is with negligee or so-called "outing" costume, but they are to be seen on men wearing frock coats and silk hats, and not long ago I saw a chap one evening on the street in dress clothes, dinner coat, etc., of most correct style, terminating at one end with a straw hat, and at the other in a pair of russet shoes. I really can not see how we ever existed without this comfortable and useful shoe. Only a few years ago the tan leather shoe was unknown. Thus speedily does a luxury become a necessity.—Harper's Bazar.

Wall Paper and Carpets.

In selecting wall-paper and carpets for rooms, a pleasant effect is produced if one remembers that the floor should be darker than the walls, and that the eye is gratified if the color lightens from the floor to the ceiling.

In a room with a light wall the carpet should be selected of as nearly the same tone as possible, but a deeper shade, and no strong contrasts are allowable if an artistic effect is desired. White walls are never desirable for a room in which ornamental effects are desired, and contrasts, whether in curtains or papers, should, as a rule, be avoided.

The Art of Pleasing.

Rev. Olympia Willis says: "Women trained in society have many advantages before the world that their less favored sisters cannot have, and it is well to remember that behind the fascinations of dress and gayety and love of pleasure there is still the woman's sympathy, and when occasion calls she may be as ready to respond as those whose lives have been devoted to more earnest work, and usually her response will come in a more gracious manner, and she will win success because her life has trained her to please."

Girls of Spirit.

The editor of the Ormond (Fla.) Gazette went to the World's Fair not long since, and as his paper wasn't paying very large dividends he decided to let it rest during his absence. The people of Ormond missed the paper, and some of the editor's contemporaries made unpleasant remarks, whereupon the editor's two daughters decided to get out the paper themselves which they did with good success, in spite of inexperience and lack of practice in running a newspaper.

Hat Reviver.

Without giving a greasy appearance to a silk hat, the following will be found to renew the color and gloss without deteriorating the foundation of the hat. Take of tannin, one ounce; dried and powdered sulphate of iron, one ounce. Well mix, and add one teaspoonful to a half tea-saucerful of warm water, stir till dissolved, and sponge over the hat where necessary.

If a woman is pretty and sympathetic enough, she can get almost any man to tell his secret grievances against his wife.

NEW STYLES IN HATS.

BRIMS ARE SLASHED, TWISTED AND TURNED.

Aside from This, Which Has Been Carried Almost to the Verge of Eccentricity, There Are No Startling or Radical Changes Observed.

Millinery Modes.

New York correspondence:

OST of what is startlingly new in the fall hats and bonnets lies in the way brims are slashed and then turned up, down and cornerwise. Aside from evidence in plenty that originality has expressed itself to the verge of eccentricity in this particular, there are no startling or radical changes to be seen in the coming millinery modes. Some shapes have settled into favorites, and there are a few new ideas on old lines. The Continental or Napoleon better suits felt than it did straw, and will be worn in all shades and colors. There is a distinct movement in favor of planning the hat to contrast in color with the costume, while the rule that in style of shape the headgear must harmonize with the dress worn is more imperative than ever. Summer usage of flowers still prevails and with questionable taste. The single victorious, full-blown rose is again a startling feature, and, let us hope, one that will not last till snow falls. Purple in its modified tints, red, brilliant and cardinal, and bronze greens will be worn. Bright emerald green and a rich shade of purple is a new and more daring combination than any yet made. One that is more artistic is deep purple and deep red. This, in a little hat justly named sweet pea, has the anchorites of one variety of that flower for its combination of color. It takes the French woman to skillfully "consider the lilies" when she plans a new scheme of color. Hats are trimmed more and more simply, a single tuft of feathers, a rosette, a single flower often making the entire trimming.

FOR AN AUTUMN OUTING.

The popularity of jeweled buckles has revived a "new" fashion from olden time, the Cavalier's hat. This is one of the few novel ideas. A particularly beautiful model is of emerald purple velvet, a low-crowned wide-brimmed hat, the brim curving gracefully as if according to its own will. A little to one side of the front an amethyst buckle holds the end of a magnificent black plume. The quill is white, cut square and is of good length, protruding beyond the buckle. The plume itself sweeps back and to the side, its weight bending the brim of the hat lying against the hair. This old-time model finely suits the great capes worn now, and the type of woman illustrators have made so popular. Buckle and plume make such a hat far from inexpensive. Crystals may be used, but genuine jewels are more frequent.

FOR A MIDDLE-AGED WEARER

A fall modification of the everlasting sailor is one that hardly knows itself a "sailor." The model is deep bronze-green felt, with velvet brim exactly matching. There is no hat band, but an old-time topaz and emerald necklace is substituted, the clasp in front holding just one bronze and green cock's feather, set at a jaunty angle. At last a halt has been called to the rioting hat pins. It has gone forth that ornate hat pins may be used only with elaborate hats. A new traveling hat comes from Paris, and when Paris starts to do anything in the "severe English" way, she turns out something much more hideous than English itself could be. This model is more like a "billy-cock" hat than anything else. It is all of soft, rough brown cloth, the brim stitched into some stiffness. Two big buttons which look as if they were sealskin but are not, are set to one side. The hat is big, sets down well on the head, and it transforms the average woman into something between a newsboy and an Irish comedian.

Theater hats are still more butterfly things or fillets. The latter are more and more elaborate, twisted gold-jeweled bands, and wreaths of exquisite flowers being frequent. These do not set on the head, but literally bind it, coming well down on the forehead and at the sides. The style is becoming to almost all faces, but, of course, demands very careful dressing of the hair. An effort is being made to substitute elaborate coiffures for theater bonnets. This, however, is hooted by the milliners, as why should it not be? Milliners must live, just the same as any other people.

A THIRD BONNET.

Milliners have long since usurped the right to supply the morning cap. In that direction they have widened their field and now dictate a headdress for Miladi when she receives in the afternoon. The happiest design for the "matinee coiff" is a jeweled net, made square and pinned on the head diamond wise, with one point on the forehead and a point at each side. The hair is to be coiled low. This is harking back to the net Juliet, Desdemona and Francesca wore. The same shape is shown in velvet embroidered richly, but you positively must have a beautiful head and a graceful low knot of hair.

Five handsome examples are chosen by the artist for subjects of as many sketches for these columns, and a few words of description should accompany them. In the initial picture there is a lovely little bonnet of green glace velvet. It is ornamented with an Alsatian knot of metallic blackbird's wings and topped by a dainty aigrette tipped with blackbird's tufts. Next is a hat intended for autumn outing made of cream mousseline de soie and trimmed with ostrich feathers and bows of cream satin. The third model is a bonnet for an older woman and is a simple and comfortable one. Made of light green chip, its beauty is enhanced by a fan of lace fastened by a jet ornament, and by a bunch of pink roses placed at each side. The tie strings are of black ribbon velvet. Black could be substituted for the green chip, and for matrons wear dark-red roses would be preferable to the pink, or almost any other flower could be used. The third bonnet shown, in the fourth illustration, is formed of corn-colored ribbon ruching framed by a border of jet. There is a puff of the ruching in the front, and two small black feathers on the right side, for ornamentation, the latter being fastened by a bow of black ribbon. A shape which is quite novel, and one which is much displayed in the stores, is last portrayed. Whether it will be seen outside the shops is still uncertain. It is in black chip and trimmed with an aigrette-like bow of lace and with roses and moss-green ribbons. Black velvet strings fall down the back, and fasten at the side beneath one large red rose. The knot of ribbon in front lends an air of newness and the upright lace bow makes the hat possible for faces which could not bear the effect of the flat hats now so much worn, but which are trying to other than small, piquant faces.

A NEW SHAPE OF HAT.

Copyright, 1893.

Among the Gems.

ARTIFICIAL agates are now made by so many different and effective processes that the stone has lost most of its value as a gem.

THE Russian scepter is of solid gold, three feet long, and contains among its ornaments 268 diamonds, 360 rubies and fifteen emeralds.

AFTER the conquest of Mexico and Peru, emeralds were so abundant that one Spanish nobleman took home three bushels of them.

NERO's eye-glass, through which the near-sighted tyrant watched the gladiatorial games, was an emerald cut into the form of a lens.

THEY ARE GRUBLERS.

The United States is Foremost Among Earth's Nations.

Our younger readers may be puzzled to account for the doleful manner in which some conspicuous men speak of their country, its institutions, and prospects.

We have among us a society called the Sons of the American Revolution, which has recently proposed the holding of a Pan-Republican Convention composed of delegates from all the republics now existing in the world.

The Sons of the Revolution hope in this way to exhibit the success of Republican institutions, and to recommend them to mankind.

But are republican institutions successful? To this question some of the gentlemen consulted have given very positive answers in the negative. One of them, a descendant of George Washington's family, avows his belief that every experiment of self-government that has ever been made upon our planet has resulted in disaster, and that this nation is now "whirling down the descending grade to destruction."

Another gentleman, an admiral in the navy, is of the opinion that although we are a much larger nation, we are neither as great, nor as virtuous, nor as valiant as the three millions of people who achieved our independence.

Another discouraged patriot, recently the president of a famous college, expresses the opinion that our system is correct, but "we are not good enough for our institutions."

A fourth, the scion of an historic family, remarks that he has such a sense of the failure of democracy that he has no heart even to talk about it. Finally, a veteran sea-captain comes forward to say that, until recently, there was one good government on the Continent of America, the late Empire of Brazil, but now there is not one.

This language is every different from that usually employed at our school-house flag-raising, with which our readers, young and old, are familiar. Which expresses the truth?

There is truth in both. On the one hand, compared with other countries, the United States is the truly fortunate and happy land. On the other, there are defects and faults in the conduct of public affairs which are grievous, and to persons of melancholy temperament discouraging. We advise our readers not to overlook either the glory or the shame of their country, and to spend their lives in enhancing the one and redeeming the other.

Let us remember that during the Presidency of George Washington there were more men who despaired of the Republic than there are now, and that Washington himself, even to the end of his life, regarded the government over which he presided as an experiment, which he hoped would be successful.

The number of educated men who fully believed in government by the people was not large, and few of them were free from occasional apprehension concerning it. After the lapse of a century, it is much stronger in the confidence of thoughtful men than it was during the administration of President Washington.

A more important fact to remember is that government by the whole people is an experiment that has been tried but twenty-seven years, reckoning from the abolition of slavery.

Now, the institution of monarchy had endured for unknown thousands of years, and was always bad. Certainly, it had had abundant time to perfect itself, but it never became anything better than a choice of evils. Under it, the mass of the people remained ignorant, oppressed, degraded, and miserably poor, while the ruling class was often dissolute, extravagant, and unfeeling. Nor had monarchy in itself any means of self-rectification. It could only be reformed by revolution and massacre.

It is the special happiness of the American system of government that it does actually possess within itself the means of self-improvement, and now the great majority of the people are deeply interested in applying remedies for existing evils, some of the worst of which are in course of removal.

An American citizen whose memory goes back fifty years, and who judges his country from the facts, and not from distorted reports of the facts, can adopt as his own the well-known statement of the late Lord Macaulay, when he said that all his life he had been hearing of decline and deterioration, while he had seen nothing but improvement.—Youth's Companion.

When Days Were Three Hours Long.

Away in the distant, when the earth was very young, it went around so fast that the day was only three hours long. The whole globe was liquid then, and as it spun around and around at that frightful speed it finally burst into two parts. The smaller of the parts became the moon, which has been sailing round the earth ever since at an ever-increasing distance. These curious points are not given on the "suppose-so" theories of an ignorant, but are the well-matured deductions of Dr. Ball, the astronomer royal of Ireland.

OUR RURAL READERS.

SOMETHING HERE THAT WILL INTEREST THEM.

Points That Must Be Observed in Order to Secure Profit—Plan of a Coop for Chickens—A Serviceable Wheelbarrow—Keeping Winter Apples.

Winter Apples.

Winter apples will keep all the better for being left in an open, airy place as late as it is safe to do so. Where there are but few apples to barrel a press can be made at home that will serve very well. The Philadelphia Farm Journal suggests the one here depicted. This press can be quickly rigged by using a plank or scantling with one end under a stud reaching to the shed plate and temporarily nailed in place. The barrel to be headed forms the fulcrum. Be careful not to press the apples too hard. A reader of the journal quoted says that the best apples of the season in Bucks County were brought out of a milk vault Feb. 7, 1892. They were Fallwaters, of a rich yellow color, with characteristic shading. They were remarkable for size, but more remarkable for their perfect preservation. Compared with apples kept in the cellar of the same house they were in far better order. The inference is that the deeper milk vault maintained a more uniform temperature. The vault had a small ventilator direct to the open air. The temperature as near as could be ascertained was about 55 degrees.

PRESS FOR BARRELING APPLES.

A Double-Board Coop.

A correspondent of Farm and Fireside sends a plan of a double-board coop, for two broods of chickens. The coop is four feet square, the back being eighteen inches high, and the highest point (center) being twenty-four inches. It slopes in front from one foot high at the center to two inches. In the illustration, A is a sash, fastened with hinges to the front of the coop (B), the sash being raised or lowered as desired. This sash may be made of wire cloth of about seven-eighths inch mesh, to allow warmth, air, and light to enter, and also to allow of arranging a center board between the two broods. The frame of the coop is fastened to the floor with hinges at the back part, so as to allow of raising it at the back also, if desired. No glass should be used in the sash. If the weather is severe, cover the sash with boards or tarred paper. C and D show the upper and lower sides of the coop, and E the two-inch board in front. The coop protects against rats, cats, hawks, etc.

THE DOUBLE-BOARD COOP.

Profit in Agriculture.

In order to secure profit from the crops produced upon the farm, there are several points that must be observed, and these are in the line of direction of reducing the cost of production, says the Germantown Telegraph. When a crop of any kind is worth no more than the cost of production, nothing has been gained. But the cost of production may be reduced in different ways: first, in the proper plowing of the land, or rather, in the preparation of the soil for the seed. Entire pulverization is an important element in successful culture; without this, there may be a loss in lack of germination of seed, and there certainly will be required more labor in the subsequent cultivation and with imperfect seeding the crops will be reduced. This, then, should be avoided, as it may be, by the exercise of proper care and the use of suitable implements in preparing the soil. With a well pulverized soil seeds come in contact with it and the moisture it contains and germination is complete. But this brings us to a second consideration, and that, the quantity of seed; if a soil is capable of carrying to maturity a full crop of any kind, if the seed is so poor or immature as that only two-thirds or one-half will germinate, then there is a loss, and for that reason only the very best seed should be used so that the chances of full germination may be of the best. A third means of increasing a crop and hence the profits, is by using an abundance of fertility and of a character to insure success.

It cannot pay to plant crops in a poor soil for the reason that the yield will be light while the labor will remain about the same as for a heavy crop. Another consideration is an application of fertilizers in a manner and at a time best adapted to the wants of the crop being grown. The requirements of different crops vary in this direction and a course that would be advantageous to one crop would avail nothing when applied to some other. Still another point to be observed is reducing the cost of production to a minimum by the use of labor-saving implements and machinery in the planting, cultivation, and harvesting of crops. Common sense must be employed. The exercise of good judgment usually insures success, while the exercise of bad judgment brings failure.

Water for Hogs.

Hogs are more often sufferers from lack of good water than any other stock. The milk they eat curdles in their stomach, and then its caseine does not look so much like drink as like food. The dishwater mixed with bran for middlings is more or less salty, and this makes more intense thirst than before it was drunk. It can do no harm at least to offer the hogs, especially those in pens, all the water once a day that they will drink. More will drink than the owner is apt to suppose.

Serviceable Farm Wheelbarrow.

A strong wheelbarrow is shown in the illustration from the American Agriculturist. It can be made of any size. The one sketched has a large box, four feet long on top, two feet six inches wide and eighteen inches deep, and is made of six-inch pine fencing. The wheel is set into the box, as shown in the sketch, the axle being stapled directly to the lower front edge of the box. A hood, made of boards with sheet iron top, is placed over the wheel inside the box. The wheel is two feet high. The legs are ten inches long below the box, and form the frame of the box. The handles are two feet long, and the same boards may be made to project forward far enough to hold the axle of the wheel. If one does not want the wheel to set into the box. This barrow is light and strong, and will carry heavy loads of farm materials when it is not convenient to use a horse.

HOMEMADE WHEELBARROW.

Starting a Nursery.

There are many opportunities of making a profitable business in the growth of fruit and ornamental trees in all rural localities. To be able to procure trees near by is an object for every planter, as the trees may be had the day they are planted, and the risk of injury and mistakes in the varieties are escaped. The method to be followed is first to select a piece of good land, and sow seeds of the trees, or procure cuttings of those grown that way. The young trees are then grafted, and cultivated as a crop of corn is, until they are old enough for sale, which is when two or three years old. If the best kinds for the locality are selected, and the trees are grown with care, they may be sold with excellent profit at half the prices charged by the peddler. The most profitable kinds of trees are evergreens, which are so bulky as to cost too much for transportation to sell well unless they can be procured close to home. A plantation of young pines, spruces, and other evergreens has made more than $1,000 an acre to the nurseryman.—New York Times.

Poultry Notes.

Sort your eggs as to color, if you want them to look and sell well.

Thoroughly whitewash the inside of your poultry house.

Oyster shells crushed will supply the necessary lime needed for eggshells.

Do not complain that it is too hard work, but be thankful that you are able to do it.

Furnish sitting hens with good, fresh, clean nests in a darkened place, and put them on in the evening.

Ducks lay at night or early in the morning. Don't let them out until after 9 or 10 o'clock. They seldom use a nest.

A little charcoal mixed with soft feed will aid digestion and prevent disease. It is a good purifier of the blood and system.

Little chicks will do better in the garden than any other place if you can confine the hens to prevent their making trouble.

The indestructible stoneware drinking fountains are as good as any kind we have seen, and have the advantage of being cheap.

Common every day dust is the best exterminator for chicken lice. Give them plenty and place it where they can revel in it.

Sitting hens should have food, water, some exercise and a good dusting every day, and if they won't get off the nest take them off.

WOMAN, BEAR AND BEES.

They Have a Lively Scrimmage in Which the Former Wins.

Near the cabin of Amos Corey, a woodsman in the Upper Beaverkill, near Turnwood, N. Y., occurred a most desperate battle between Mrs. Corey and a famished she bear. For several days bear tracks had been seen in the neighborhood, and once a good-sized bear had been seen crossing the road near Corey's cabin. Saturday morning Corey started with rifle and dogs to hunt down the animal, and had been gone about an hour when his wife heard a great commotion in the door-yard. Mrs.

TOO MUCH FOR BEAR.

Corey seized a keen bladed ax as she at once thought of the bear. Shutting her children into the bedroom she rushed to the yard and there saw bruin rolling and tumbling among the chips of the woodpile. Over the bear hovered a swarm of honey bees. The bear had upset half a dozen hives of bees and the insects were having revenge.

Mrs. Corey watched the battle for awhile, and then she made a stroke at bruin with the ax, inflicting a severe wound in the animal's side. With a howl the bear rushed upon her, unmindful of the bees. Rising upon its hind legs it advanced upon the woman and tried to hug her. Mrs. Corey plied the ax with energy, and after several blows struck the animal in the head, killing it instantly. She received during the battle a blow from one of the bear's paws, which badly lacerated one of her arms. Then the bees came at Mrs. Corey, stinging her severely. At last she succeeded in hiving them. Then she noticed that two little cubs had come out of the brush. These she captured and now has them as reminders of her desperate fight with their mother.

AN ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE.

A Machine at the World's Fair of Which Much Is Expected.

The electric locomotive for use on steam roads has finally become an accomplished fact, and a thirty-ton high-speed motor of this kind is on exhibition at the World's Fair. It is built to the standard steam railroad gauge and its dimensions are somewhat similar to the steam motors now in use on our elevated roads. It is 16½ feet long, 11½ feet high, and 8 feet 4 inches wide. The locomotive is expected to attain a normal speed of thirty miles an hour. It is primarily intended for elevated work and light freight traffic and passenger service.

THE ELECTRIC LOCOMOTIVE.

The adoption of the electric locomotive will of course be gradual, but for places comparatively near each other and where traffic is dense it is peculiarly adapted. It will probably first be used in elevated railroad service, and in cities like New York, Brooklyn and Chicago should be hailed with delight, doing away, as it will, with the present evils of noise, coal, smoke, dust, cinders, and flying sparks that attend the motor now in use. This invention is the first practical step toward the adoption of electricity altogether as a means of securing absolute rapid transit. The electric locomotive is susceptible of a higher speed than that already obtained by our most magnificent steam locomotives, for while there is always a limit to steam production and utilization dependent upon the structural and operating conditions of the locomotive, the limit of speed of a revolving armature is as yet unknown.

How to Go to Sleep.

Parents are frequently reminded, and with good reason, that it is their duty to make the little ones happy at bedtime. I wonder that there is not more said about cultivating in older minds happy thoughts as companions to the land of rest and dreams. To this end, what can be better than counting up one's mercies? As you lie with closed eyes, waiting for the chariot of sleep, review the day with this end in view. Pass by the darker happenings, and pick out the good things, as children pick the plums from the pudding. Begin with the morning. If your eyes opened on the world glorified by sunshine, let that head the list. If all the household were able to "be up and doing with a heart for any fate," that may come next. Has the help in the kitchen been willing and kindly, don't forget to make a note of it. The one little blossom on the plant you have so long tended in vain, the toothsome dessert that won the family approbation, the comforting poem that you found time to copy and mail to an invalid friend, the delightful call from a neighbor, the helpful paragraph in the paper, your success in renovating Amy's gown that seemed so hopelessly shabby, the wisdom from above that helped you to control dear, wayward Tom, the glimpse that you had of a warm, kind heart hidden away in that stern-featured Miss Cross, the beautiful tints of the sunset, and the bright twinkling of the sociable stars, may seem a curious jumbling of things great and small, but of such is the warp and woof of life.

If these and a score of kindred things have not been pleasant to us, I fear the days have not brought us much delight. Very few find great nuggets of joy between the waking and sleeping; we must search with care for the tiny, golden grains. Then if we string them on the silken thread of thanksgiving, they will make a magic circle whose enchantment will do away with the torture of weary wakefulness.—Good House-keeping.

Soapsuds as a Lubricator.

I had a curious lubricating experience a few years ago that I would like to put on record, observes Gulf. The machine that gave me the trouble was for experimental purposes, for what purpose it matters not. The trouble lay in the lubrication of a shaft that had to make four thousand revolutions per minute. It was about four and a quarter inches in diameter, with journals from eight to nine inches long, and carried a weight of eighteen hundred pounds. The thing simply would not run cool. We cut oil grooves in the boxes; we scraped them; we used every kind of metal we could think of; we hitched on a pump and pumped gallons of oil through those bearings; and yet, in from five to ten minutes they would commence to heat, and nothing seemed to be able to stop it but the stoppage of the machine.

One day, in a fit of despair, we put soapsuds in the tank instead of oil and started to pump that in. Presto! the bearing had found the food for which it was craving, and proceeded to do its work with the cheerfulness of an old campaigner. It seemed that it was not so much the quantity of lubricant that was needed as a regular and continuous supply. The oils that we were able to use had a consistency that unfitted them for reaching the remote points under the rapidly revolving bearings, so it heated, while the soapy water was thin enough to be forced over the entire surface and keep everything all right. I presume that there are oils that would have done the same thing, only we did not happen to get hold of them. But if you ever attempt to use water, remember that you will need it all the time and in large quantities.—Railway Review.

Color of the Hair.

Between men's pursuits and the color of their hair there is a direct relation, we are told. An unusual proportion of men with dark, straight hair enter the ministry; red-whiskered men are apt to be given to sporting and horseflesh, while the tall, vigorous blonde men, lineal descendants of the vikings, still contribute a large contingent to our travelers and emigrants. Birds and insects have the best of us here; their outside covering may be changed by diet; but man remains what nature made him to the last. Suppose for a moment that a protective color, like that which obtains in the fields, woods and hedgerows, ruled in the world of men, what an amazing change would ensue in the outward appearance of affairs! If a rogue could but at will assume the perfect guise of an honest man, and the gilded wasps of society appear as mason or honey bees, or were saints and sinners alike compelled to wear their own unmistakable livery, what a changed world would this of ours be! But no such world is possible. We have to be content with a medley of sober realities, where, though "white spiders" generally come to grief, the confidence trick still flourishes, and "men are mostly fools."

Must Observe the Custom.

In Scottish courts of law witnesses repeat the oath with the right hand raised. On one occasion, however, the magistrate found a difficulty. "Hold up your right arm," he commanded. "I canna dae't," said the witness. "Why not?" "Got shot in that arm." "Then hold up your left." "Canna dae't that, ayther—got shot in the ither ane, tae." "Then hold up your leg," responded the irate magistrate; "no man can be sworn in this court without holding up something."

ANCIENT MONUMENTS.

Sepulchral Ruins of the Zapotec Indians in Mexico.

Among the sepulchral monuments of Mexico the most remarkable perhaps are those of Mitla, in the state of Oajaca. They are in a secluded and gloomy valley called the "place of sorrow." Here, it is said, was the burial place of the Zapotec kings, and this was the Westminster Abbey of the ancient inhabitants. Here the living came to mourn with ostentatious sorrow, aided by a body of priests whose lives were dedicated to expiatory sacrifices for the dead.

The ruins are extensive and in many respects architecturally peculiar. They indicate the existence of edifices, the walls of which were of adobes, or sun-dried bricks, or indurated clay faced with cut stones, so arranged as to form ornamental figures in relief, strikingly like those of the ancient Etruscans. The buildings were all raised on terraces and arranged around the four sides of a quadrangular court. They had long and wide halls, the ceilings of which were supported by columns. The walls of some of these were highly ornamented with regular figures. Passages led from them to small, dark, unventilated chambers, now robbed of the poor human relics they were intended to preserve. These tombs were opened by the Spaniards, who even sought in graves the gold that was the aim of many of their expeditions.

RUINS OF MITLA.

Big Bank Notes.

It is said that two notes for one hundred thousand pounds each and two for fifty thousand pounds each were once engraved and issued. A butcher who had amassed an immense fortune as an army contractor in war-time went with one of the fifty thousand pound notes to a private banker, asking for a loan of five thousand pounds, and wished to deposit the large note as security with the bank, stating that it had been in his possession for several years. The sum asked for was of course handed over at once; but the financier took occasion to hint to the holder the folly of which he was guilty in hoarding such a sum and so sacrificing the interest.

"That is all very true and sound sense, sir," replied the man; "but I like the look of the critter so very well that I have got t'other one of the same at home."

A wealthy but eccentric gentleman in London once framed a bank post-bill for thirty thousand pounds and exhibited it in his study. At his death, which occurred five years later, the extraordinary picture was promptly taken down from the wall and cashed by his heirs.

It is said that several years ago, at a nobleman's house in the neighborhood of the Marble Arch, a dispute arose about a certain passage which was declared to be scriptural. A learned dean who was present denying that there was any such text in the sacred volume, a Bible was called for. After quite a search a dusty old Bible which had lain upon a shelf since the death of the peer's mother was produced. When the volume was opened, a book-marker was found in it which upon examination proved to be a bank post-bill for forty thousand pounds. Why it had been placed there was never discovered. Perhaps the lady had thought it a good means of inducing her son to search the Scriptures.

Newspaper Reporters.

Newspaper making is not a business, except in the publication office, says Julien Ralph in Scribner's. It is not a business—as the word is meant to be used—in the editorial or reporters' rooms. The kind of brains that are powerful there would not fit a man to earn his salt in trade. Once, when I called on a millionaire for a piece of news, at 7 o'clock every morning, twice a day at his office, and at least once every night at his home, he said to me: "You newspaper men amaze me by your persistence and enterprise. I have made ten millions in the lumber business, but if I could have employed young men like the newspaper reporters, I would have made one hundred millions in half the time."

Starboard and Port.

The term starboard or port when applied to the wheel of a ship is a conundrum to a landsman which he has difficulty in getting through his head. How the turning of the wheel which acts on the rudder brings about the desired result of starboard and port can be illustrated by reference to a Chinaman. A starboard wheel throws the stern of a vessel to starboard, changing the course of the bow to port and vice versa. So with a Chinaman when he turns his head to the left, which is port, his right side to the right, which is starboard. Opposite results are obtained when turns his head the other way.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAOK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.
Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

"Better to strive and climb,
And never reach the goal,
Than to drift along with time—
An aimless, worthless soul,
Ay, better to climb and fall,
Or sow, though the field be small,
Than to throw away day after day,
And never strive at all."

With this issue we begin the twelfth year of the FARMER'S WIFE, formerly the "City and Farm Record," eleven years under one management, with marked success. The largest growing circulation at the present time of any paper in the West. Nothing like it since the wonderful growth of the Ladies' Home Journal a few years ago. For this we thank our friends all over the Union. We pledge ourselves to not only keep up our former record, but will endeavor to add, from time to time, new and interesting features.

THE EDITOR.

The Woman's war tocsin is being sounded.

Air wimen tew ignerunt tew voat?

Simple justice is all we ask.

It is not policy but our rights we want.

Give us a show in the race of life.

There will be 1,000 woman lecturers in the field in Kansas during the next year.

Give women the ballot, they will give you reform.

Give our women encouragement and victory is yours.

Be as true to the women as they are to you.

Don't give us taffy we are too old for that.

Give the women a suffrage plank; you may have the rest.

The women will stand by you until the last. Will you be as true to them?

Universal suffrage and a short platform will suit.

The Omaha demands and woman's suffrage is good enough for us.

The eyes of the world are upon you; don't make a mistake.

Don't miss the opportunity the women have offered to you.

You can never succeed without the women's help and cheer.

Rule the women out and the reform movement is a dead letter.

Stick to your friends and let policy take care of itself.

The women are in earnest and will never falter.

Put 1,000 women lecturers in the field and revolution is here.

We do not come begging but demanding our rights.

We do not demand our rights with envy, but with love for all and malice to none.

It is estimated that each year in New York City 3,000 women find themselves stranded, not only homeless, penniless and without work, but unable to work.

No government, or even a church, can prosper that ignores the rights and just demands of any of God's children.

Woman pleads not for notoriety or office; but she pleads for the right and the power that will enable her to protect her home and her children.

Mrs. Mary E. Lease has been lecturing in New York during the past month. The Associated Press report her large gatherings everywhere.

We have no more use for the worship of the silver calf than for the worship of the golden calf. Both are mental to the best interests of the people.

The equal suffrage association has no strings tied to the FARMER'S WIFE. We will work for the amendment in a way to make it win and say politically what we please.

A true woman's deepest love and desires are for her home and loved ones, and entwined and interwoven with this strong love is a never-dying instinct and desire to save them from danger.

Mrs. Champ of Garnett, Kan., has come out with a full-fledged suffrage paper. It gives us great pleasure to welcome Mrs. Champ's bright, spicy paper, The Kansas Sunflower, to our list. There can never be too many papers working for one cause, and we earnestly hope she will meet with the success she so richly deserves. Every suffragist should subscribe at once.

Away down in Georgia the ridiculous figure Kansas cuts as an alleged prohibition state is commented upon. The Atlanta Constitution says: "Many Germans in Kansas, being disgusted with the fool laws of that fool state, are writing to their friends not to come to Kansas." How long will we continue to drive away the most industrious home-makers any state has ever known?—Barton County Democrat.

How long, oh! how long must sunny Kansas be cursed by the enemies of Prohibition—the destroyer of home, happiness and our children's future good.

"Let every woman attach herself to the party which seems to her, on the whole, the wiser and the better. Let her show her interest in that party by loyal and unselfish co-operation. By so doing she will secure co-operation for suffrage."

The above are the remarks of the famous Henry B. Blackwell. He would be justified in saying, if women would but do their duty, every one would attach herself to the People's party; for that party, though young, has done more for the women than both the old parties ever have done, or ever will do.

The band of women who met in convention at Kansas City, Sept. 1st and 2d, by their action, simply repeated the words of the lamented and much beloved Col. L. L. Polk, when he said that we stand not before the world begging for sympathy or charity, but, said he, "we have banded ourselves together and we demand justice, simply justice; as honest men we ask no more and as honorable men we will accept no less." And so those earnest women by their work said to the world in words that will go ringing from ocean to ocean, "we stand not before you pleading for sympathy or charity, but in the name of patriotic wives and mothers, we demand justice, and as such we ask no more, and as such we will accept no less."

It is singular how often we see an account of a very brilliant speech that some woman has made, and the editor will even go so far as to say that he was compelled to crowd out items in order to give space for the speech. And yet, ask that same editor if he will work for the amendment and he says, not much. He does not think a woman knows enough to vote. It reminds us of a little story we read about Harriet Beecher Stowe and her gardener who was a man that once wore the chains of slavery; (all our readers know who commenced to roll the ball that broke those chains). She was showing Cato how to do some particular piece of work, and finally Cato commenced to entertain the lady with a sort of a political speech, and in the course of the conversation Mrs. Stowe said, "Now, Cato, I have worked hard that you might enjoy your freedom; not only have I worked for your freedom, but I have worked that you might be armed with the power of protection. Now, in return I want you to do all you can that I, too, may be free." Cato looked up, his ebony face all aglow, and with much seeming disgust, he looked the lady full in the face as he remarked: "For the Lawd sake, Missy Har'it, who would ever think women know nuff to vote; he, ha, nuff to make dis chile 'gusted anyhow." That is the way with people even in this enlightened age of the world, after all the noble work that the women have done, if they dare ask to have placed in their hands that which will place them by man's side, his equal in all things, and his superior in many. Like Cato they are disgusted completely. But the time is coming when men must put themselves on record in regard to this question. No one can say it is not right that the mothers of the nation should be free. All men are free and the women have worked to set them free. Now, be men worthy of the name, and all, black and white alike, put your shoulder to the wheel and let the stars and stripes wave over free women as well as free men. Will you? If so, let every man who is in favor of the amendment carrying, send us $1.00 and the names of two people, men or women, who are not in favor of suffrage, and we will send the FARMER'S WIFE and convert them. We know we can with the host of contributors we have on the suffrage question. We believe there is no person who will read our paper who can help becoming converted.

ALLIANCE MEETING.

November 6th, at the next meeting of the county alliance, the women of the county will meet in the morning at 10 o'clock and organize a Woman's Progressive Political League. Let every woman in the county who believes in the enfranchisement of women, meet with them. Give no one a chance to say that women do not want the ballot; not only show to the world that you want the ballot, but that you know how to use it.

TOPEKA POLICE COURT.

A young villain assaults an innocent girl, or attempts to do so, and is let off on a charge of simple assault. A man pounds a woman, once his wife, breaks her bones and further maltreats her, and gets ninety days. On the same day another man gets the same number of days for vagrancy. In the eye of the law, it is exactly as bad to have nothing to do as to beat a woman within an inch of her life.

BE SURE THEY ARE RIGHT.

Let the women of Kansas be sure how the candidates for different offices stand in regard to the amendment that is now before the people. They may tell you that they are in favor of your being enfranchised, and still tell you that it would be unwise for them to say so in their speeches as they are working for the votes of all classes. Beware of that class of men or women who, if afraid to stand openly for justice, though they stand alone, if elected will not and cannot represent your interest and your home. Let the women of Kansas see to it that all speakers, no matter to what political party they may belong, put themselves on record. If they are against it let them say so; if for it, say so. And if, perchance, they forget to speak about the amendment, gently remind them that they have forgotten the most important part of their speech. Do not forget this.

RIGHT YOU ARE.

The Advocate, in speaking of the Woman's Political club, says:

"The club is receiving applications from women in all parts of the state for information concerning the organization and instructions how to organize. Those who are saying that the women of Kansas do not want to vote will be surprised when they confront the rapidly crystallizing sentiment on the subject. The man who arrays himself in opposition to this sentiment would better stand from under, and the party that ignores it will not know after election that it was in the field. These two questions—equal suffrage and the liquor traffic—are going to be settled once for all in Kansas, and settled right, too, and the women of Kansas are going to have something to do with settling them. Chalk this down where it will not escape your attention."

LABOR.

Labor is robbed by the politician and votes for the robber.

Labor produces wealth and votes it to the non-producer.

Labor builds fine houses and votes them to those who don't labor.

Labor produces everything to eat, votes it to those who are not hungry and goes hungry itself.

Labor makes fine clothes for those who don't labor.

Labor builds fine carriages for drones to ride in.

Labor builds railroads and is robbed by the railroad companies.

Labor makes fine farms to mortgage to the usurer.

Labor creates capital and is tyrannized over by capital.

Labor invents machinery and is thrown out of employment by the invention.

Labor feeds the world and goes hungry itself.

Labor clothes the world, but wears ragged clothes.

POLITICAL.

In God we trust the American silver$. In congress we bust the American silver$.

What is a mugwump, my boy? A mugwump, father, is a republican that votes the democratic ticket. That's right, my boy. Now what is a democrat that votes the republican ticket? Oh, he is just a natural born fool. The best republicans and democrats vote the populist ticket. That's right, father.

Two years ago it was a disgrace to howl calamity. To-day it is quite popular; all parties do it.

When rogues fall out, just men get their dues. It is a fair battle between the dealers of yellow metal and the dealers of the white metal, and the advocate of irredeemable paper money says, sick 'em.

Gold and silver is the rich man's money. What the poor man wants is cheaper money and idle men employed.

If Wall street can issue clearing house legal tender notes for a circulating medium in favor of the rich banker, why can't the government issue legal tender notes for the benefit of the people?

And now we have an extra session of congress called for the purpose of repairing the best financial system the country ever saw. Funny, isn't it?

Four years ago when we told the people through the columns of our paper that the present financial system would be disastrous to every channel of trade and that sooner or later business men and banks would have to succumb, we were branded as a calamity howler of the worst type. Has not our warning come true? "We told you so."

Talk about your fish stories, the biggest of fish stories is not equal to the legend "one dollar" on the American eighty-five cent piece.

The FARMER'S WIFE is independent in everything save the truth and our own convictions of duty, which we believe is as good a policy as any man or woman need have.

In a few years when women vote the financial system will be changed. This is not theory but an actual fact.

The republican party is an irredeemable fiat.

The democratic party or Grover Cleveland, which?

When the populist party gets as many rogues in it as the old parties have now, we propose to start another new party with women in the lead, and women's votes will count then.

OUR QUAKER SISTER AGAIN.

(Continued from First Page.)

publicanism demands it; because the theory of our constitution demands it; because the moral health demands it. It has been thirty years since Wendell Phillips uttered those glowing words, how true they are to-day. Are our courts honest, dispensing justice, or do they swerve beneath the power of the liquor traffic, or the corrupt influence of the moneyed corporations? A strong plea in favor of woman suffrage is that it is founded upon the unchanging principle of justice. Every reasonable man knows that it is not right to tax a class without that class being represented; to inflict penalties upon a class that has had no say in the determining of what those penalties should be; to have one-half of our people govern the other half. Women have opinions on public affairs which concern them as much as the men, and they should be granted the privilege of expressing them at the ballot box, and having them counted. For it would not harm society or the state to have the most sober, moral, religious and law-abiding half of the community take an active part in politics, and as power is always respected, it cannot lower the position of women to place them civilly above paupers, idiots, criminals and the insane. The moral status of any society is shown by the regard in which women are held in it, and women will be more honored when they have ballots in their hands than they are now. When they vote no bad, immoral man, much less a woman, will be put up for office. The party that wants the women's votes will see to that without our ever having to go into a "campaign of scandal," and the boys will grow up with the idea that there is a premium on good character in public as well as in private life. The state needs women to purify it politically as much as women need the ballot to protect their homes and their children from the many evils that those who are engaged in the legalized liquor traffic are now inflicting upon them.

The home is the dearest place on earth to woman. It is there her life is centered. It is her desire that she may be able to care for and protect the home that holds her children, for it is there that she moulds the character of her children who are dearer to her than her life. She should plead for the ballot that she may help elect good men and women who will see to it that laws are enacted that will protect her children when their mother lies cold in death. Is there a man who will say that she asks for too much. Give the ballot to the wives and mothers and they will use it to protect themselves and their children, which the fathers have failed to do. For woman's first thought will be of her home and children, as the time draws near for her to choose some one to represent her in congress or the state legislature. They will select men of known temperance habits for our law-makers, men of integrity who can not be influenced or bought to enact laws that would be injurious to the best interest of those they were elected to represent. If men would be honest they would have to admit that the real reason why the right of suffrage is denied to women is because there is just enough of ancient barbarism lingering in our civilization to bar them out. The same barbarism that made them slaves and beasts of burden. But thanks to the noble women who have been persistently striving to procure justice for their own sex, those barbaric ideas are gradually passing away. Woman suffrage is vindicated by the fact that as the sphere of woman has been broadening, and admission been given her into new fields, occupations and trusts, she has not failed to show herself equal to the task. Reflect upon that fact for a moment. If there were inferiority or unfitness of woman incapacitating her for suffrage, if it were wrong and inexpedient and dangerous for her to exercise that function, how do you account for the fact that whatever forward step she has been allowed to take, she has been competent for its requirements. The influence of woman has refined whatever circle into which it has been admitted under conditions of its own self respect. History, homely experience and common observation all confirm this. Woman suffrage would not debase women and politics. It would add to the body politic the positive elements of feminine wholesomeness and natural antagonism to vice and violence. A new interest for the security of home and peace, sobriety and order would be invoked. Woman herself would be benefited, as intelligent emancipation of every sort and to whatever degree always benefits its object.

How's This.

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions, and financially able to carry out any obligation made by their firm.

WEST & TRUAX, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

WALDING, KINNAN & MARVIN, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Testimonials free.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

Pointers for World's Fair.

Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While walking may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.

Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited, or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stansfield, North Topeka, or W. C. Garvey at depot.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—or—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely

pure and soluble.

It has more than three times

the strength of Cocoa mixed

with Starch, Arrowroot or

Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

The Long Campaign for Equal Suffrage in Kansas Has Begun.

A Large and Enthusiastic Convention held at Kansas City, Kan., September 1st. Some Prominent Women From All Over the State Were Present.

RINGING RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED

Eloquent Speeches Made by Brainy and Energetic Women.

The grand opening convention of the equal suffragists met in the tabernacle at Kansas City, Kan., Sept. 1st and 2d. The platform was beautifully decorated with yellow bunting, flowers and sunflowers, and a large motto of free silver quilt back of the speaker's stand: "Equal Suffrage." "The dilemma—who'll solve it?" The other mottoes encircling the stand were: "Equality before the law;" "The ballot is the citizen's right; women are citizens;" "Taxation without representation is tyranny, women are citizens;" "Your mothers and daughters ask for protection;" "Under God the people rule; women are people;" "All governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed;" "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none."

This meeting brought noted women together from all parts of the Union, and they put forth their best efforts to make the national meeting one that will go down in history as the greatest gathering of the kind ever held in the Sunflower State. Although these women represented every political faith, yet it was a non-partisan meeting, and the entire time was devoted wholly to the discussion of the suffrage cause. At each of the four sessions the greatest enthusiasm was shown and fully 2,000 people assembled to witness the most notable gathering of women ever held in this country. These women fired the opening gun of the equal suffrage campaign in Kansas. If the advocates of equal rights continue to pour forth such volleys during the next fourteen months, they will lead their opponents a swift race at the general election in 1894.

The suffragists of the nation are more interested in Kansas just now than any other state in the Union. The question of equal suffrage is to be voted upon in that state next year, and they propose to do everything in their power to win the day. For this reason the campaign was opened early, and from now until one year from next November scores of speakers will be stamping the state in the interests of that cause.

THE GREAT WAR CRY

From now on will be: "We must win; we cannot lose," and with the faith that every woman is heir to they are going right on to the end, supreme in the confidence that they will triumph. There is "method in their madness," however, or not depending on the wiles of the sex or their undenied powers of persuasion, they are preparing to go out through the land, take their incalculable brothers by the hand and convince them by every means short of force that they are denying their sisters, not a privilege, but a right; that in permitting them permission to cast their ballots, they are doing but simple justice.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

"WHEREAS, We, the women in convention assembled in Kansas City, Kan., recognize and believe that the submission of the equal suffrage amendment at the present time is an evolution and not a revolution; that it is simply one more step in the progress of civil government, and that it is in the spirit of mutual helpfulness and not antagonistic, that we ask the support of the men to this cause; therefore be it

Resolved, That inasmuch as there are in the suffrage ranks women of all political parties and women of no political affiliations, and also women of all churches and women of no church; and

WHEREAS, These women are a unit in their demand for the ballot, and are working together for their common cause, therefore be it

Resolved, That we declare it to be the determined policy of the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association to confine the work for the amendment strictly to arguments and propaganda for the enfranchisement of women.

It is not expected nor will it be asked of the women of the several parties that they should cease their activities or their zealous work for their respective parties, yet we most emphatically state that all speakers and workers while under the auspices of the amendment campaign committee shall refrain from argument or reference to their party issues.

Inasmuch as we recognize the present crisis and the significance thereof, and the relation of this movement to political parties; therefore,

Resolved, That all political parties of the state shall be and are hereby asked to embody in their county and state platforms expressions favoring the pending amendment;

Resolved, That we extend to the Republicans and Populists and Prohibitionists of those counties which have adopted unequivocal equal suffrage planks in their platforms our hearty thanks and congratulations upon their political sagacity and progress and position;

Resolved, That we recommend the following resolutions, recently adopted respectively by the Republicans of Cowley county and the Populists of Johnson county, as worthy examples of platform expression on the question:

"Believing that women have equal rights with men; that their hearts are equally loyal and true; that their intelligence and worth is equal with that of men, and that their rights to say what shall be done for our common good is as great as that of their brothers, we commend the action of the legislature in submitting the female suffrage amendment to the people and assure our sisters that when the hour comes to act, the Republican men of Cowley county will, by their vote, welcome them joyfully into full and equal rights among men in all political affairs."

Resolved That we favor the free and unqualified right of suffrage for women and ask all persons who love justice and free government to vote for an amendment to our state constitution granting the same."

THE CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE.

This committee is composed of three republicans, three populists, two democrats and two third party prohibitionists, with one place yet to fill. The women are already sending out speakers all over the state. Among the number are the names of Bina A. Otis, Laura M. Johns, Carrie Lane Chapman, Annie L. Diggs, Mary E. Lease, Helen Gougar, Amanda Way, Susan B. Anthony, Mrs. Tucker, Eva M. Blackman, Mrs. Smith, Mrs. Brown, Marian Todd, Mrs. S. E. V. Emery, Mrs. Bare, Mrs. Hoffman, Mrs. Byron Sherry, Mrs. E. S. Devoe and many others.

ELOQUENT WORDS.

BINA A. OTIS:—Woman is more than a toy in a Turkish harem, a drudge in a German field or the pampered pet of American society.

Mrs. T. J. SMITH:—As the woman always shares the same trials and adversities that beset man, why should she not be accorded the same privileges that he enjoys? Thomas Jefferson says: "I cannot conceive of any position so humiliating as that of the person who has been disfranchised," and that is just the position of the women of this land to-day.

Mrs. BYRON SHERRY:—In response to the earnest invitation of President Johns, Mrs. Byron Sherry of Kansas City, Mo., made a brief address in which she declared herself an unqualified equal suffragist, and prophesied for the women of Kansas a complete victory in their fight for recognition.

EMMA SMITH DEVOE:—Mrs. Devoe will be one of President Johns' ablest lieutenants for the next two months in Kansas. Mrs. Devoe made a characteristic speech, replete with stirring appeals to the justice of her hearers, and witty references to the lame arguments advanced by the opponents of equal suffrage.

A baldheaded man in the front row, who looked unregenerated, was selected by Mrs. Devoe as a special target, and she turned the fire of her caustic wit on him until he writhed uneasily in his chair. Later he announced himself a convert.

Rev. C. H. St. John faced the audience for a few minutes while lauding equal suffrage to the skies and declaring that he wanted nothing else. Mrs. Clara C. Hoffman told funny stories while several good looking young women passed a various assortment of straw hats among the audience.

HELEN M. GOUGAR:—This never can be a true republic so long as any people within it are denied the right to vote. When women vote, then, and not till then, will this be a true republic. We are working rapidly to that end. I will not attempt to answer any of the objections to women's voting that are made by numerous people. For instance, they ask, "Who shall take care of the baby when the mother goes to the polls?" That question has already been answered by the women of Kansas. Many men say, "You women are too smart now, and if we give you the ballot you'll get away with us entirely." It is seldom I find a man in any walk of life who does not acknowledge the justice of our demands, and the press of the country is taking strong grounds in our favor. The action of women in all the societies in which they are organized has inspired the confidence of the country in us.

The ballot is the saving power of this country. We see debauchery flourishing, our prisons and asylums full; we see murder and mob law rampant. In the last two years fourteen human creatures have been burned at the stake in this country, and the blood of the victims of misrule call for vengeance. In the womanhood and motherhood of this country is the reserve force that is to right these wrongs, when brought to the ballot box.

I would soon hear a woman say, "I don't want to be a Christian" as "I don't want to vote." There is too much of a disposition to shirk the responsibility on the shoulders of the men. Our special work should be to stand by the men in this work of making the nation the larger home.

I give you due notice that when the motherhood of our country is given the right to vote that no boy and no girl will be put upon the auction block and sold in the name of revenue to support vice and crime.

As long as the republic stands the battle between right and wrong will be waged, and the great need is now and ever will be for good men and women to stand shoulder to shoulder against the vicious classes.

THE "FARMER'S WIFE."

Mrs. Gougar then asked how many women in the audience took a suffrage paper, and about a half a dozen raised their hands. "I would not give five cents a dozen for equal suffragists who do not take such papers during the coming campaign." She urged women to "work" all the local papers during the campaign and get the matter before the public as much as possible.

She said, "You have one of the best equal suffrage papers right here in Kansas, it is the FARMER'S WIFE, published by Mrs. Pack of Topeka. It is chock full of suffrage news every issue and is only fifty cents a year. All friends of the cause will miss a treat if they do not subscribe for the paper."

Susan B. Anthony had been reserved for the last, and for nearly an hour she alternately pleaded for equal suffrage and scathingly arraigned the government that could deny half the people the right to rule themselves. Miss Anthony treated her auditors to a detailed history of the equal suffrage movement from 1848 to the present day. At the conclusion of the address resolutions were adopted thanking the press of both cities for their assistance to the cause, and the meeting was ended.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO FARMER AND HOUSEWIFE.

Important Things About Getting a Good Wheat Crop—Management of Bees—How to Make a Good Milk Stool—General Farm Notes.

Care of Bees.

Bees will leave their business any time to sting me, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home, so I built a small house 4x6 feet, using 14 well-seasoned spruce flooring, sound and matched for covering, and the same for the floor. Put a door in one end, and 2 feet from the door a partition from the roof down. Half way from the roof have another floor, making an upper and lower room. I bought two swarms of bees; put one in each room. For the upper room I cut holes through the sides for the bees to pass through at the end of the building and for the lower room I have them at the sides. This was ten years ago. The swarm in the lower room was a weak one and lived only a year, but the others are there yet and have never swarmed. When they get the hive full of honey they build on the outside, covering the hive with honey, and all I have to do is to break it off when wanted. Cut 1 shows the outside door open and the small entry 2 feet. Also two small doors through the partition, one for each room with glass in each so that you can look in and see the bees.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE HOUSE.

EXTERIOR OF THE BEE HOUSE.

The Chisel Weeder.

In times of drouth, it is often difficult to remove large weeds from among the rows of plants. An ordinary two-inch wood chisel, kept well sharpened, is one of the most efficient instruments for this purpose, as the keen edge and the weight of the chisel will cut through the most fibrous weed. With a short handled chisel, one must kneel or bend over, and the resulting backaches are far from satisfactory. The accompanying illustration from a sketch in the American Agriculturist, shows how such a weeding chisel can be inserted in a long hoe or fork handle, and it is then feasible to stand up while fighting the weeds, which often grow faster than one man can pull them by hand. Narrow hand hoes, or the tomahawk or arrow head hoes may do good service, but they cannot compete with a long handled weeding chisel in the hands of a vigorous gardener. The chisel is especially adapted to the weeding of sugar beets and other root crops in weedy or dried-out soil.

WEEDING CHISELS.

Stable Manure in Mid-Summer.

What shall be done with the weekly and monthly accumulation of manure during and after mid-summer? This is an important question, as unquestionably much fertilizing material is now wasted. Left in the barnyard it ferments, and its ammonia is wasted on the air. Applied to cultivated crops it dries up and often does as much harm as good. On fairly fertile soil thorough tillage will develop all the fertility needed for most crops. The lack of manure is felt most early in the season, and then the winter-made, unfermented manure will do very little good. Why not compost the summer and fall manure, taking care to cover the pile so as to prevent waste of ammonia? If protected from rains after fermenting it will be dry and powdery, so that it can be evenly distributed in spring, and it will be rich enough to make every particle show where it is applied. If there is grass land to be plowed next spring let the manure ferment slightly and apply it in September. It will be washed among the roots of the grass and very little will be wasted. And if a quick stimulant is needed in the spring nitrate of soda will answer the purpose quite as well as any home-made manure.

Squashes.

Assuming that your squash vines have escaped the striped beetle and are in a thrifty condition, you will find it a good plan, says the American Farmer, to cover the vine at every second joint with a little mound of soil. If this is done the vine will send out roots from the joints that are covered, and its vigor will be greatly augmented. If fine manure is spread around the hills during the period of growth it will show in the size of the squashes, and a few years ago we grew a Kershaw squash that weighed over twenty-nine pounds, by mulching the whole patch with the scrapings of the barn yard. The average Kershaw weighs rather less than ten pounds, so it will be seen that we had a pretty fair sized one for our pains, and it was not the only large one in the patch, either.

A Good Milk Stool.

To make a good milk stool take a 1-inch board that is 22 inches long by 9 inches wide. Across the top of the front end nail a cross piece wide enough to hollow out on the back so as to fit the bottom of the pail and leave it wide enough in the center to admit a 1/4 inch leg in the center extending 4 1/2 inches below the bottom board. On top of the back end tack a 1 1/2 inch board edgewise across, 3 1/2 inches high, and bore 1/4 inch holes through the bottom into the edge of the cross board and insert two legs 6 inches long below the bottom. Nail 1/4 inch seat board 14 inches long on the edge of the top of the back upright board and nail a 1 inch board under the front end and to the bottom board 4 1/2 inches high, a little back from the front end of the seat board to allow a circle to be cut out of the front end to fit the pail.—C. L. Tower.

MILK STOOL.

Best Way of Getting Rid of Horns.

The best way to dehorn cattle is to begin with the calves, when from five to twenty-five days old. Either use Haad's horn killer, button-gouger, or a compound recommended by Dr. Salmon, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture. The latter is composed of fifty parts of caustic soda, twenty-five parts of kerosene, and twenty-five parts of water. Make an emulsion of the kerosene and soda by heating and vigorously stirring, and then dissolve in water. Place in a bottle with a rubber cork. Clip the hair from around the embryo horn, then drop two or three drops of the mixture on the spot, and rub it thoroughly with the rubber cork. Go over each horn two or three times, but do not let the application run over the other parts of the skin. To dehorn older cattle, use a very fine, sharp saw, or sharp clippers. We like the clippers the best. If sharp (and they should not be used unless they are), they cut the horn off at once, and with much less trouble and excitement than accompanies the use of the saw. Cut close to the skin in all cases. It would be better in every case, and particularly in warm weather, if a cloth could be covered around the head so as to keep insects off and prevent particles falling into the cavities. Healing will begin in from nine to twelve days.—Orange-Judd Farmer.

Odds and Ends.

If broken out with heat, dust rye flour over the part affected.

TEA trays and all japanned goods should be cleaned with a sponge wet with warm water and a little soap.

BEFORE beginning to seed raisins cover them with hot water and let them stand fifteen minutes easily.

INK stains on linen can be taken out if the stain is first washed in strong salt water and let it stand over night.

HALF the battle in washing dishes is keeping the dishcloths and towels clean. Washing out once a week in ammonia water should never be neglected.

CLOVER tea is admirable for purifying the blood, for removing pimples and whitening the complexion, and has also good repute as a sleep-inducing draught.

TO IMPROVE starch add a teaspoonful of epsom salts and dissolve in the usual way by boiling. Articles starched with this will be stiffer and rendered to a certain extent fireproof.

PARSLEY is entirely effectual in removing the odor of onions after a meal. The green sprigs should be eaten as celery is, with the onions or with the potato salad; not left to be taken after dinner or supper.

Nor only is the wool gown better for the frequent and thorough brushing, but a cambric frock is likewise improved in appearance by the same agency, and will keep clean much longer if treated in the same way as a winter dress.

1840-1893.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP

has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhoea. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOTTLE.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful Sea Shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address, CHAS. HUGHES, Pensacola, Fla.

Box 302.

B. L. CRANS,

10 Spruce St., N. Y., Room No. 4.

Newspaper Advertising.

Attractive advertisements prepared and placed in all newspapers and magazines.

Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr. B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me 4 cents in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex. DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail St. Brown Bros. Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

$25 a week made writing at home by LADIES. Particulars for stamp. EASTERN TOILET CO., Stillwater, Me.

For the Boys A Watch or Kodak. No money out. Write Box 230. Sidney, Ia.

GOITRE OR THICK NECK. I have a five, Cleanly, Harmless Cure. Come if you can, or write me at 28 Livingston St., Cleveland, O. DR. J. CASKEY. It is no Iodine smear. Cure made Permanent.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION

Official Souvenir—1893

In beautiful and bright colors, and the Designs handsomely etched on silk taken from Old Paintings and the celebrated, world-renowned models now on exhibition at the World's Fair. On the top is the famous portrait after Moro, of Christopher Columbus, in the center is an exact reproduction of the Santa Maria in full sail, showing the brave crew that assisted in discovering America, on the bottom is a design showing two globes—the old and the new worlds—on one side is Christopher Columbus, surrounded by his crew, representing the first landing on our shores, and on the other a complete bird's-eye view of the World's Fair. As pronounced one of the handsomest and most attractive mementoes yet issued as a Souvenir of the great Exposition. Can be used as a Badge, Book-Mark, or as an ornament for the parlor. Adopted by Societies, Clubs, Churches, and the public in general. Price, 15c. each, or two for 25c. AGENTS WANTED Everywhere. Price per Dozen, $1.00. Special terms for large lots. Mailed and delivered free to any part of the United States or Canada. I. McLEAN & CO., 157 S. Clark St., Chicago.

I LOVE THE WOODS.

I love the woods.

Oh, give me but that ring of rock
On which to build my simple cot,
And I'll not ask for palaces,
Nor murmur at my lonely lot.

I do not need the silken garb,
The cushioned couch, or seasoned food;
I do not need the tongue of men
To voice the word that "Life is good."

I do not need the amber scent,
The honeyed smile and tinted song,
Or crowd of glittering eycapants
That in the halls of Cressus throng.

I love the woods.

When o'er the distant line of hills
The rosy morning peeps its head,
And stars that through the night have watched
Now quench their light and go to bed

Arise from couch of perfumed pine
And seek the purring brook that flows
Between its fringes of velvet moss,
Where tiny turquoise blossom blows.

I need no marble fountain rare
To purify and lave and clean,
And when I say my grateful prayer,
'Tis in His mighty dome of green.

I love the woods.

My silent friend, my faithful dog,
The horse that hastens at my call,
The birds that sing above my head—
They constitute my all in all.

I breathe the forest's filtered air,
The breeze that cools the mountain brow,
The snow-clad summit's atmosphere,
And praise the Lord I'm living now!

I love the woods.
—Harper's Weekly.

C'LISTY.

"She's coming, boys! she's coming! Clear the way!"

Dave Howe swung himself over the low paling fence which surrounded the Gay School, and rushed excitedly toward a group of boys clustered about the west entrance.

"Who is coming?" a half dozen demanded at once.

The Queen of Salmagundi came to school on Monday," shouted Dave, dancing frantically about. "Hats off! Get ready for a regular old Eastern salaam."

Dave set the example, which was followed by several others—prostrating themselves to the pavement in the most exaggerated manner as a shy, oddly dressed girl turned the corner and passed in.

"Wouldn't Sue like a polygonation like that to wear!" Jeff Dorr whistled as she disappeared through the girl's entrance.

"A coat of me-ale!" cried Dave. "Didn't I tell you she was coming? Say, girl's, you've got one of the ancients now for sure," as a number of the girls came up. "It's a new scholar, and she's going to take the shine right off every one of you."

"Dave Howe, how often has mother told you to stop using slang?" exclaimed his sister Emma.

"And you to stop chewing gum!" retorted Dave. "Oh, my! but won't she though?" he ended.

"Who is it, Jeff?" asked one. "When Dave once gets started with his foolishness, you needn't expect an attack of sense soon."

"I don't know," laughed Jeff. "Dave got us to salaam to her, so I guess she's somebody. What is her name, Dave?"

"Queen of Sal—"

"Dave Howe, do have a little sense, if you have lost your manners!" his sister interrupted shortly.

"I don't know her from Adam, Miss Peppery," Dave answered, with mock humility. "She burst upon my startled vision—Oh, stop, Jeff."

"I can tell you who she is. She is just nobody."

Belle Price, who had just come up, announced this information with a tilt of her nose. "Do you remember old Weston?" she continued.

"Old drunken Weston, who used to chase us when we were kids?" queried Dave.

"Yes; and she is his girl. Her mother has been living somewhere in the backwoods upon a farm until now. She has come here to give C'listy, as she calls her, an education. She takes our washing, and I heard her tell mother that she meant to make a teacher of her. The Weston's never amounted to anything, and it's ridiculous trying to make something out of one of them. She's simply nobody."

"And we've been salaaming to nobody!" groaned Dave.

"She's here in school, but we don't have to have anything to do with her. Blood always shows itself," Belle continued amid Dave's continued groans.

"Does she drink?" he asked anxiously, in a tragic whisper.

"You know what I mean, Dave Howe," she sharply replied. "Folks with such antecedents can't be anybody."

"Oh—oh, my."

Dave collapsed back upon his heels, his elbows on his knees and his head in his hands, and gazed at Belle in ludicrous astonishment. The gong struck just then, and all hurried away without seeing a pale face at the cloak-room window above. Neither did they see the figure that darted through the hallways a few minutes later and thence down the street.

"Mother, mother! I couldn't stay! Who are we? Who am I that I can't be anybody?" she exclaimed passionately, rushing in upon Mrs. Weston, who looked up from her ironing-board, then sat down, trembling.

"I didn't think they'd say it to you, C'listy—a girl!"

"Why can't I be?" C'listy demanded.

"Can't you get along and not mind it?" her mother pleaded.

"Is it because my father was a drunkard—because men sold him drink—because he couldn't keep from drinking—because he died in prison? Have I always got to face it?"

"O, C'listy! We can't help that!" her mother moaned. "We're poor, but I want you to be somebody."

"How can I?" cried the girl, fiercely. "How can I when they say I can't? I hate them all."

"Don't, C'listy?" her mother shivered. "I don't like to see you so. You can—you can if you will. They can't stop you. Your pa was weak, but you're strong; only use that temper the right way. You can do right, be a lady, and learn. Nobody can keep you down if you're bound to go up. Be somebody in spite of them. O, C'listy, try for my sake."

C'listy rushed out of the house, as her mother closed her appeal, with a burst of tears. An hour passed before she rose from beneath the oak-tree where she had thrown herself. Then she went back to the house with set lips and pale face.

"I'll do it," she simply said.

The next morning she was back in the school-room, outwardly unmindful of the cold looks, withdrawn skirts, and upturned noses of the girls.

It soon became evident that the Gay School pupils must wake up. It was irritating to think of C'listy Weston's pushing them back while she went forward; but she was doing it, and when one day she gained a signal victory over Belle Price, who had been first in all things before that, open warfare was declared. But she pressed bravely on until Dave Howe could not resist speaking to her as she passed him.

"Good for your pluck, C'listy!"

"What do you care for my pluck?" she flashed back defiantly. "You set them at me from the first."

"Now, C'listy," drawled Dave, planting himself before her. "I'm a bigger barker than biter any day. I've got to make fun of somebody. I'd do it of Emma Howe herself. And you do know you looked odd as Dick's hat-band that day; but you've changed mightily, and I do like pluck anywhere. Just you stick to it, C'listy, and you'll pull through. Girls are queer animals."

"And boys, too," C'listy could not help saying to herself, with a queer feeling compounded of anger and gladness. It was something, at least, to have gained one friendly word. She would keep on.

But Belle Price succeeded perfectly in making her miserable. She looked upon the despised girl as her rival now, and her influence was all-powerful with the others.

Then came the offer of prizes to the girls for the best essay. C'listy knew that she could write, and the prize meant so much pecuniarily. So she set to work. Belle, also, was one of the contestants, and a determined rival.

The day was rapidly approaching, and Belle's admirers took occasion to state openly that their friend's production was not to be excelled. C'listy was about discouraged that afternoon before the day set for the exercises. Of what use to strive longer? Suddenly a cry rang through the schoolroom.

"Fire! Fire!"

There was a mad rush for the door. The teachers' presence of mind enabled them to get out safely the occupants of the rooms; but, once outside, it was discovered that C'listy and Belle were missing.

For a minute, as the lines passed out rapidly, C'listy had hesitated. She knew that Belle had slipped off secretly to the lecture-room on the last floor for a final rehearsal by herself. But what if she had? It was none of her business, C'listy thought. Some one else would tell her, and Belle would not trouble to save her from anything, she bitterly thought, as she remembered all the slights she had endured.

She had reached the foot of the stairway with the line when suddenly she darted aside unseen, and up the stairs through the hall, so rapidly filling with smoke from some unknown quarter.

"What are you following me here for?" Belle haughtily exclaimed, as C'listy entered the room.

"It's fire!" C'listy answered, with a quick clenching of her teeth at the tone.

Belle dropped her essay and rushed for the door; but C'listy caught her by the arm, picked up the paper, and hurried from the room. At the door Belle hung back in terror at the smoke.

"Come with me. We can get down if we hurry. Hold your breath. Come!" She fairly dragged the terrified girl after her through the blinding pall rolling up toward them.

"Get down!" she hoarsely commanded. "We've got to go down backwards, on our hands and knees, or we'll choke. Come on!"

C'listy clutched Belle firmly, and forced her to her side upon the floor. "And that's the way I found 'em—half way down the last flight of stairs," said the fireman who had dashed into the building when the two were missed.

"The only thing that saved them, too, in all that smoke—getting close to the floor—sensible thing to do, too; for smoke allers rises. Mighty lucky for them the gal thought on't," said another.

"They will come out all right. It is only the reaction and fright," said the doctor, as he examined the half-stupified girls, who were hastily carried to their homes.

"Belle's essay—it's in my pocket, mother," said C'listy that night. "Send it right to her. She'll take the prize. It is the best, I know. I shall not go. My essay burned."

"No, it didn't!" Dave Howe exclaimed, bursting in at the open door. "The desks had only scorched, and I found it. Here it is; and the exercises will go on at the hall, and Mr. Price told me to give you their thanks, and he would send for you to-morrow."

That was all then; yet C'listy felt that it was more than she expected, even when she reached the hall the next day late, and was hurriedly assigned at the end of the long row of classmates upon the stage. Neither could she help but notice that, as usual, the seat next her was vacant. The girls still avoided her, she thought, bitterly, though Emma Howe smiled pleasantly from the seat beyond.

Belle was not to be seen.

The exercises proceeded, each speaker being gracefully conducted to the front by the one at her right; and C'listy felt a lump rise in her throat as she saw there was no one to perform that office for her. It would be so always. Her eyes filled so that she could not see distinctly as her own name was called; but as she arose, struggling for composure, some one took her hand and accompanied her to the front, where a loud burst of applause greeted her, and gave her time to regain self-control. Yet her voice was pathetically tremulous to the close of the impassioned plea she put forth for "Recognition;" and, when she closed, she found her seat amid renewed applause.

Then Belle Price's name was called, and she saw it was Belle who now occupied the vacant seat.

Was it she who had escorted her? The question asked itself again and again as she listened to the essay in a tumult of feeling. But she was not prepared for what followed.

As Belle took her seat, Mr. Price arose to award the prizes.

"In awarding the prize," he began, "the judges have considered it as lying between the last two contestants; but one has honorably withdrawn, stating to the committee that her effort was assisted by the criticism of another. Therefore, we feel that the prize is due in all respects to—Calista Weston."

C'listy stared at Belle in amazement, but the latter only nodded; while Mr. Price continued, after the storm of hand-clapping had ceased:

"This is not all. A gold medal prize has been privately prepared for the one who has led her classes in scholarship and deportment as she leads it from her seat to-day upon this stage, in these and in magnanimity and heroism—Calista Weston."

There was no doubt this time. It was certainly Belle who escorted her to the front to receive her honors. It was Belle who stood by her through the misty closing ceremonies, and it was Belle who afterward introduced her to those who gathered round for congratulations.

"My friend, Calista Weston."

"Can such people be anybody?" whispered Dave Howe, mischievously, in Belle's ear, later.

"Being somebody rests with the person, after all," she quickly replied; "and Calista has proven that true worth will compel recognition."

—Christian Register.

A Niece of Robert Burns.

Returning past the "Thorn aboon the well" we came by a pleasant way to Bridgeside cottage, the home of Miss Isabella Burns Begg, niece of the Bard, and his only surviving near relative, writes Theodore F. Wolfe in an interesting sketch of the only near relative of the poet in the Ladies' Home Journal. The cottage is a cozy structure of stone, from whose thatched roof a dormer window, brilliant with flowers, peeps out through the foliage which embowers and half conceals the tiny homelet. The trimmest of little maids admitted us at the roadside wicket, and conducted along a path, bordered by flowers, to the cottage door, where stood Miss Begg beaming a cordial welcome upon the pilgrims from America. She is the daughter and namesake of Burns' youngest and favorite sister, Isabella, who married John Begg. We found her to be a singularly active and vivacious old lady, cheery, and intelligently and manifestly pleased to have secured appreciative auditors for reminiscences of her gifted relative. She is of slender habit, has a bright and winning face, and soft gray hair, and when she was seated beneath the Burns portrait we could see that her brilliant dark eyes are like those on the canvass.

"Give the devil a finger, and he'll take the whole hand." Give some devilish hard squeezer your hand and he will take your arm off.

There is a prejudice against a too shiny hat among men who are not politicians.

WORN BY THE WOMEN

SOME OF THE VERY LATEST IDEAS IN DRESS.

Not Necessary to Have an Unlimited Number of Striking New Gowns—The Less Pronounced of the Older Styles Have Not Yet Gone Out.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondence.

IF your judgment is excellent, you may think that unless you are supplied with a large number of striking gowns you might just as well stay at home down cellar instead of going away and having a lovely time this summer. But don't you believe it. The real truth is that the new vogue came in so suddenly and so violently that the less pronounced of the older styles did not have a chance to be really out, and that now they do not look as queer as do the most pronounced of the new style. The great run of people are dressing pretty much as they always have, with a variation here and there in favor of late ideas. Skirts are undoubtedly wider, but they are not all balloon, nor are they nearly all gored and cut with wonderful back falling folds, while many are merely full on the band. Sleeves are all more or less big, but they have been, you know, since the pretty sheath skirt of a year or so ago. Bodices are seldom made plain and the basque, dear to the hearts of us all but a little while ago, is no more. Round waists are pretty generally adopted, and there is likely to be a tendency towards frillitiveness on the best regulated gowns. The ultra things will always be but the medium, whether happy or not, we have always with us. So, if you are one of that kind, don't you go down cellar; just stay up stairs and have a good time and be as happy a "medium" as you can.

A NEW SORT OF SKIRT ORNAMENTATION.

A promenade costume which is very stylish and yet avoids the extremes of the present rules is to be seen in the initial illustration. It is composed of green foulard and garnished with lace and ribbon. The skirt is gathered in back, but it will not be very full, as all the seams must be biased. Around the bottom are two ruffles of lace trimmed with rosette bows of green ribbon. The bodice comes over the skirt and is hooked to the latter to prevent it from slipping. Its lining fastens in the middle, but the foulard at the left side. The yoke is pointed in front and back, made of pleated foulard and is sewed on separately, thus constituting only a trimming, and is edged with a lace ruffle as shown.

The second toilette sketched is in pale blue mousseline de laine figured with dark blue and trimmed with dark blue surah. The skirt is garnished with a folded strip of surah put on zig-zag and the points held in place by small butterfly bows of ribbon; thus constituting one of the new variations of the general round-and-round skirt trimming. The bodice has a shirred piece inserted in back and front, finished by two bands of surah pointed at the waist in back and front, with a third piece down the center. In addition the bodice is garnished with bretelles of the figured mousseline. The collar and folded belt are of surah.

ANOTHER.

The fabric of the next model presented is black silk, and it is set off with narrow jet passementerie and white lace. The moderately wide bell skirt is garnished with a festooned gathered ruffle, headed by jet passementerie, which is repeated twice further up. The bodice is alike back and front, and has a plastron of white lace over white silk. The inserted piece below the plastron is trimmed with pointed rows of jet. The elbow sleeves are finished with a black silk frill and a band of jet passementerie.

The three pretty dresses shown in the two remaining pictures are for outing

TWO VACATION DRESSES.

wear, but before coming to consideration of them in detail a pointer in bathing suits may not be amiss. Let the other girls take to new fashions in bath suits, don't you give up the sailor style that allows a low turn-away sailor collar and a vest set in to simulate a shirt of the kind the real sailor men wear. The kind meant has stripes across and no collar, giving a straight line across the chest, just below the rise of the neck. That is, stick to this if you have a head that sets finely and a well-developed neck. The costume itself may not be classic, but it will give your classic lines a chance. If the bath season is not long enough, then let other girls have soft shirt waists in their outing and yachting rigs. Stick, you, to the sailorman's shirt. If the weather is real warm you are sure to stick to it, but what of that, if the lines get a chance?

Coming to the couple shown in the fourth picture, the costume at the left is made of white woolen suiting, with the plaid in different shades of red. The round waist has double bretelles that form a collar in back and full gigot sleeves. The costume is finished by a shirt waist and black silk four-in-hand. The belt is red striped ribbon, fastening with a buckle and leather straps. The other dress is composed of pale mode-colored gingham trimmed with embroidery. The skirt is unlined and is garnished with two ruffles of embroidery, each put on with two rows of gathering and showing a small head. It fits snugly over the hips and the fullness is gathered in back. The blouse waist has a tight lining, over which the embroidery is draped with a slight fullness in back and front, but plain under the arms. The embroidery is pleated into the collar and waistband. The lining hooks in front, but the embroidery comes over to the left shoulder and under the arm. The sleeves have a deep cuff of embroidery and a full puff of the plain gingham. The belt of pale blue satin ribbon ties at the side, and the standing collar is also made of a band of this ribbon with a bow in back.

A THIRD.

The very dainty toilet of the last picture is made of striped foulard, trimmed with changeable taffeta silk. The skirt is rather wide around the bottom, and the front has a panel of three lace ruffles put on plain and edged with two bands of taffeta with pointed ends, as shown. The round waist has a deep decollete fitted in with lace in front, but the back is high at the neck. Revers and folded belt are of silk. The puffed sleeves have large double epaulettes of lace and a lace cuff.

Copyright, 1893.

CHIEF JUSTICE HOLT hated his wife, and when she fell dangerously ill was so delighted that he became hilariously tipsy. But Lady Holt, recognizing her condition and aware of the satisfaction of her husband, sent for Dr. Radcliffe, who detected the very sight of Holt, and out of spite gave her his best medical attention, and watched by her bedside until she was out of danger.

Will They Yield?

M. V. B. Parker in the Kansas Patron.

I find in the New York Voice of August 31st, an editorial referring to the defeat of the silver men in the house of representatives and their probable defeat in the senate, of which the following is the closing sentence: "If we are not mistaken both west and south will soon yield to this fact as they would yield to any other inevitable natural cause." While the Voice is not a "goldbug" organ, yet it has expressed here in a nutshell, just what the money power expect to see take place. They see that this has been true for the last fifteen or twenty years, and why, say they should "history not repeat itself." After taking a step in the squeezing process they have paused until the "west and the south yield," and then another step would be taken. And so they say the west and the south would yield to the fact. Slavery has been possible throughout the world because the slave saw nothing but a hopeless struggle before him, and all he could do was to yield and suffer and endure. And when they of the east, say that the taking away of more than one-half of the people's money at one stroke, is an inevitable fact and must and will be yielded to, they reason from the standpoint of the old slave master. However, I am sure that there is only one thing that will make the people cringe and bow down and worship before this golden calf, and that is, the strength of the chains by which men are bound to the two old parties. If it was needed to add anything to the legislation of a republican congress and the declaration of a democratic president, to show the hopelessness of help for the masses from either of the old parties, then the late vote in the house of representatives ought to be sufficient. Isn't it strange that we of the west and south should continue to yield and for the sake of a few paltry offices war against each other and against our best interests, while the gold fiend looks on, and gloats over the victory our warring makes certain. We may not lift the burdens from the shoulders of this generation, but, if we are patriots, we will fight that these unjust burdens may not rest upon our children, and that the generations to come may have the rights guaranteed under the constitution of the land.

How to Suppress a Bill.

A Washington special says that Colonel Hatch, the well-known champion of the anti-options bill, is very angry over the matter of the rules of the house being so amended that he, as chairman of the committee on agriculture, will not have charge of his favorite bill again this season. The colonel had hoped, and had often stated, that he would again make it very interesting for the gamblers, and while he was happy over the thought that he would make life a burden to them, he was placed beyond the reach of his bill.

The whole scheme whereby Hatch is defeated in the matter is credited to the New York fellows who made it a point to see to it that that bill was placed in a committee where it would never be reported to the house. According to the arrangement, if the bill was sent to the committee on ways and means that committee would not report it. This is the understanding with the majority members of that committee. Having reached that understanding, it was so arranged in the rules that the bill should be referred to the committee on ways and means.

This is one of the slickest schemes of the kind that has been worked for some time. The object is to protect the gamblers from any trouble from the farming interests of the country, and having the powers of the administration at their back on the floor of the house, it was an easy matter to perfect the arrangement that would shelve any bill of that kind.

This may be a very interesting matter for the farming interests of the country to know. The protection of the gamblers in New York in regulating the price of farm products is one of the main and chief accomplishments of the administration, as witnessed in the house so far this administration.

To Prevent Break-Downs.

New Nation.

How strikingly does a business crisis bring out the fact that the state and course of production and distribution is essentially public business! In easy times a man may get into the habit of regarding his particular branch of industry or commerce as his own business, as a private concern, but how quickly do the first shocks of a great crisis take this conceit out of him by proving that his business is everybody's business and that everybody's business is his business and that the whole business fabric, far from being made up of disconnected parts, is a machine of which no part can get out of order without affecting more or less the other parts, and in which no serious disturbance can take place without stopping all the wheels! Surely when a man has come to see so clearly, as all must in a time like this, the essentially public nature of the functions of the business system, it ought not be hard to make him admit that public control is the only proper way of administering it if accidents and break-downs are to be prevented.

If They Only Get Together.

The Advocate.

The man who says the United States cannot maintain a monetary system that does not suit the nations of Europe, is either an ignoramus or as despicable a tory as ever disgraced America during the days of the revolution. If he could see himself as he will be estimated a few years later he would either emigrate to Europe or commit suicide. The United States is greater in point of resources than any of the European nations, and in some respects greater than all of them together. Anything that human energy and patriotism can do the people of this country can do if they will only get together. But with our congress in the hands of a horde of selfish, disloyal gamblers, who never earned an honest dollar in their lives, and whose fortune depends upon their ability to control the money market, we can do nothing. Honest industry and legitimate business have no use for a money market.

The Methods Employed.

The New Nation.

Those who think the moon made of green cheese may regard the policy and methods of the gold advocates dictated by zeal for the public good. But facts are facts, and from the use of executive patronage by Cleveland to financial proscription in Wall street there is the application of the modern thumb-screw.

As Senator Coke, of Texas, was speaking of the efforts thus made to influence legislation, Senator Vance sent to the clerk and had read a letter from E. D. Shepard & Co., bankers of Broad street, New York, to Mr. I. H. Foust, of Salisbury, North Carolina, that read this way: "The senators from your country are not looked upon as promoters of the general welfare. If their stand represents the views of your people on financial matters, it will be very difficult for you to secure any accommodations from capitalists in this section until there is a decided change." That is a sample of the terrorism employed.

Title by Use.

R. T. Van Horn.

There are two great obstacles to real civilization—usury for money and rent for homes. The whole direction of thinking and economic study is in the direction of the removal of these two obstacles. It cannot be done by any safe method, except that by which the evil has grown up—by public consent and the familiarity of usage. Adopt the principle of title by use for the future—it will despoil no one of what is now his—but fifty years more will see as great a change from what is now as now is from a century ago, when we abolished primogeniture and instituted the quarter section homestead. Reforms are very simple when you get down to nature—and the title of nature to land has always been use.

There were over 500 delegates at the recent populist conference at Dallas, Tex. They are described as a fine lot of men and the reports from all parts of the state show that the new party is making tremendous strides.

The formation of the Lake Superior iron mine trust last week is an important step in the march of capital, as it means that the Standard oil ring have secured the Mesaba and Gogebie iron mines, as well as similar mines in Cuba. John D. Rockefeller, Colgate Hoyt, Wetmore and others are in it. The capital is $30,000,000, and the head office in New York City, with a branch office in Cleveland. The new deal involves fully nine-tenths of the product of the Bessemer iron mines of the country, besides those of cheap labor in Cuba.

KNOW WHAT THEY WERE DOING.

Dr. McLellan in the Advocate.

I desire to call the attention of Congressman Charles Curtis' constituents to some of his statements, and I wish to give him due credit for whatever he said that is good. I heartily endorse his criticisms of the administration. They are justified by the facts. I endorse his statement that the men who demonetized silver in 1873 knew just what they were doing. It is all rot that it was clandestinely done so far as congress was concerned. It is claim, which has been set up and reiterated by the bi-metallic league until the members of that organization have almost come to believe it themselves, is very tiresome to any one who is at all familiar with the facts.

But let us look at some of the gentleman's other statements that will not stand the test. He says:

I believe the only way to maintain the parity between gold and silver is to put a dollar's worth of gold in a gold dollar, and a dollar's worth of silver in a silver dollar, open the mints to their free coinage, and make them a full legal tender; but silver should be measured by its true value, and not by its fictitious value.

It should be measured by its true value in what? Measured by its true value in wheat, corn, cotton or any of the products of industry, silver at 16 to 1 of gold would be at its true value that has attached to it since the foundation of the government, and to which the business of the country has always conformed. The gold men set up the gold dollar as the arbitrary measure of all other values, and insist that the commercial value of silver, in the face of all the discriminating legislation against it, shall be measured by that standard alone. But what fixes the value of the gold dollar by which all other values are proposed to be measured? Is that measured by wheat, corn or cotton, or is it fixed arbitrarily without regard to any of the products of human industry?

It is said that the value of gold is fixed by the world and does not depend upon the action of one nation; but Mr. Curtis says "America is perfectly able to take care of herself." She produces more silver than any other nation in the world, and yet we are asking what India is going to do? What Great Britain is going to do? What Germany and France are going to do? Their action may affect the price of silver a little but not much; not enough to justify this country in refusing to use it longer as a money metal."

In this Mr. Curtis is right again, and if "America is perfectly able to take care of herself," why, if she proposes to coin silver at all, should she accept the arbitrary standard set up by other nations by which to measure the silver to be put in a silver dollar, when by so doing she will reduce the price of every bushel of wheat and corn, every pound of cotton, and all other property in the country? If America is perfectly able to take care of herself why not do it, and measure the silver to go into a dollar by our own products, and determine the value of the dollar in our own interest? Mr. Curtis' theories do not harmonize.

Railroads in Receiver's Hands.

The New Nation.

The Northern Pacific railroad has just gone into the hands of the United States government by a receivership and will be managed exclusively by its appointees until restored to good condition. Every road that goes into the hands of a United States receiver is a complete answer to every practical argument against the feasibility of railroad nationalization. The question whether the details of railroad administration could be attended to by government is no question. They are so attended to every time a railroad goes into the hands of the federal judiciary as a receiver.

As to the difficulties of the job being increased by including all the roads under the receivership, it would be vastly decreased thereby. Centralization reduces complexity; concentration spells simplicity.

Of course no secretary or commission could personally supervise the details of a national railroad system the size of ours, any more than the president can supervise the details of the work done by the 150,000 present national employees. Nobody, however, seriously proposes to reduce the size of the United States and multiply the presidents on the ground that the smaller the system the better the administration would be.

On that theory Rhode Island would be the best managed of our states, but in point of fact it is about the worst managed,

Jackson on Banks.

President Jackson, in his veto of a bill to re-charter the Bank of the United States, thus alludes to the fundamental principle underlying the system, and which applies as well, nay more emphatically and fully, to our present system than to old banks at which it is aimed: "Every monopoly and all exclusive privileges are granted at the expense of the public. The many millions which this act proposes to bestow on the stockholders of the existing bank must come directly or indirectly out of the earnings of the American people. * * * It is to be regretted that the rich and powerful too often bend the acts of government to their selfish purposes. Distinctions in society will always exist under every just government. Equality of talents, of education or of wealth cannot be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyments of the gifts of heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy and virtue, every man is equally entitled to protection by law. But when the laws undertake to add to these natural and just advantages, artificial distinctions, to grant titles, gratuities and exclusive privileges, to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful, the humble members of society—the farmers, mechanics and laborers—who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors to themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their government. There are no necessary evils in government. Its evils exist only in its abuses. If it would confine itself to equal protection, and as heaven does its rains, shower its favors alike on the high and the low, the rich and the poor, it would be an unqualified blessing. In the act before me there is a wide and unnecessary departure from these just principles. And now I have done my duty to my country."

Right Kind of Confidence.

The Chicago Express, which is now in the editorial charge of Henry Vincent, has the following to say about the right kind of confidence:

"There have been no runs on the post-offices of the land. Postage stamps have neither risen or fallen in price. During the past month the money order departments have done an immense business, large sums (people would not entrust them with the banks) have been sent from town to town by government agency. One man at Indianapolis, during the flurry which recently overtook that city, sent $700 by postoffice orders. 'What's up,' asked a bystander of him; 'are not banks good enough for you?' 'Just now,' responded the government patron, 'there is a sort of uncertain atmosphere pervading our banking institutions. This money must reach its destination immediately, and it must be money, not worthless bank drafts, when it arrives. I have faith in my government. It knows no runs.'"

"He was right. A part of the government himself, he had unbounded confidence in it. He sent his money by post-office order, knowing it would be perfectly safe. If we can trust the government with our money when desirous of having it sent to certain destinations, why can we not deposit funds with it with the same degree of safety? The present financial crisis has thoroughly demonstrated that the banks of the land provide unsafe places of deposits. Something better is required. Give the people government depositories."

What is Government For?

Topeka Populist.

What is a government for, any way? The founders of this republic seemed to have an idea that it was to assist the individual citizens in making an honest living, protecting their families and enjoying their journey through the world. But this idea seems to have become antiquated and obsolete. Government now seems to be a burden and a menace to all people not immediately connected with its administration. Instead of assisting agriculture and commerce, our laws are now almost all restrictive. The only assistance rendered now by law is directed to those enterprises where great corporations with strong capital are fostered. The common people seem to have been lost sight of entirely, except as prey for the monopolies. The people are regarded as being made to sustain the laws and not the laws to sustain the people. We hear of "uprisings" against the laws. How did the law get above humanity? When did the servant become master? As Topsy said, "You'd better be thinkin' bout dat ar!"

HIS HARD LUCK.

A Valuable Ice Mine that Had a Hoodoo in It Somewhere.

The man with the negligee shirt was talking of hard luck, says the Buffalo Express.

"It's just this way," he said; "when things get to going against you there's no stopping them. Luck and hard luck run in streaks with every man, and when things get to coming your way there's no stopping them any more than there is when they get to going against you."

"As an illustration, let me tell you of an experience I had. About three years ago I began to have hard luck. I lost everything I had one way or another, and got into all sorts of trouble. Finally I landed in Richmond, Va., stone broke, without a friend to whom I could apply for aid and nothing ahead of me but a turn on the roads as a tramp. I could get nothing to do in Richmond, and I started out to tramp up North."

"It was as hot as Tophet. I tramped along day after day, sleeping on the ground and stealing what I had to eat, which was not much, let me assure you. One day I struck Stony Creek, which is in a wild part of the State. I followed up along the creek until I reached Stone mountain, and there I made a discovery. I found an ice mine. It was fully an acre in extent, and the ice was as clear as crystal. I realized what the find meant, and after taking my bearings carefully I made my way back to Richmond."

"It didn't take me long to get some capitalist interested in it, and we formed a stock company, with me as President, to work the ice the next summer. It looked as if I had a fortune in my grasp."

"Early the next summer we started to work it, but my hard luck came toddling along and did me up. There wasn't a month that summer when we didn't have frost, and there was absolutely no demand for ice. That left me stranded again in worse shape than before."

"I don't see why," put in the doubting Thomas, who wore a broad-brimmed straw hat. "Why didn't you wait and work it the next summer?"

"I told you I was in hard luck, didn't I?" asked the man with the negligee shirt, severely. "Well, I was. Although the summer was cold the winter was so warm that it melted every blamed bit of the ice and left nothing but a pool of water there, which was of no earthly use to anybody."

The Feet.

Doctors very strongly recommend foot baths for those whose feet trouble them. Walking heats the feet, standing causes them to swell, and both are tiresome and exhaustive when prolonged. There are various kinds of foot baths, and authorities differ as to their value. Hot water enlarges the feet by drawing the blood to them; when used they should be rubbed or exercised before attempting to put on a tight boot. Mustard and hot water in a foot bath will side-track a fever if taken in time, cure a nervous headache, and induce sleep. Bunions, corns, and callousness are Nature's protection against bad shoe leather. Two hot foot baths a week and a little pedicuring will remove the cause of much discomfort.

Curiosity of Cookery.

The following is a copy of the bill of fare of what is called a regular mandarin supper, given by Sir Charles Macdonnell at Hong Kong, in 1867, to the Duke de Penthièvre, the Comte Beauvoir, and some other French gentlemen: "Preserved fruits; fish roe in sweet caramel sauce; almonds and raisins; shark fins in gelatinous sauce; cakes of coagulated blood; hashed dog, with lotus sauce; birds' nest soup; lily seed soup; whale nerves, with sweet sauce; Kwai-poh-Hing ducks; sturgeons' gills in cat-pote; croquettes of fish and rat; shark's fat soup; stewed sea snails, with tadpoles; sweet dish composed of fins, fruit, ham, almonds, and essences; lotus and almond soup as dessert, with medicated wine and warm arrack."

Queer Matrimonial Methods.

A convenient way they have in Holland and Batavia of tying the matrimonial knot when the lady is in one country and the gentleman in the other. For the Hollanders are such a thrifty, industrious people that they like not to lose time even over the most solemn services. The marriage is affected by procuration. The watches of the two parties—the one say in Amsterdam and the other in Batavia—are regulated to accord, or the difference in longitude allowed for. Then at the same instant of time the marriage ceremony is performed in both places, and the thing is done.

Karr's Toast.

Alphonse Karr, the gardener-poet, was present at a banquet given by the followers of Hahnemann, the founder of homopathy. Toasts were given to the health of one medical celebrity after another by different members of the company, till at last the president remarked:

"M. Karr, you have not proposed the health of any one."

The poet rose and replied modestly: "I propose the health of the sick."

FARMER'S WIFE.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, OCTOBER, 1893.

VOL. XII. NO. 2.

A PLEA FOR TOILERS.

For the FARMER'S WIFE.

I walked through the streets of the city,
On the duties of life intent,
When my heart was stirred to pity
By a figure, weakened and bent
Through years of labor and sorrow,
And scarred by unequal strife,
With no cheer of a brighter morrow,
Or ease for the end of life.

Still toiling with hands that are feeble
To earn the scant morsel of bread
For himself, and for one more feeble,
Who had toiled as the years had sped.
O God! was the plaint of my spirit
As onward I pressed my way,
Is it right that these toilers inherit
Not a portion for closing day?

They have given the strength of their noontide
To add to their country's wealth;
Does it make no provision (a boon wide)
For age or enfeebled health?
Charities! Yes! there are many;
But they seek for a just reward,
Disdaining to ask from any
Save a toiler's due award.

I passed by the homes of the wealthy,
I met with the young and gay;
Behold where old age grew stealthily,
And luxuries crowned the day.
How came it, this strange diversion,
This plenty and want so near?
It surely is sin's perversion!
Heaven giveth us bounteous cheer.

Demoniac greed has grasped the God-gifts,
Might has gained relentless sway;
Poverty must seek no cloud-lifts,
Coarse must yield to finest clay.
This the creed of silk and broadcloth,
Far too oft for Christian land,
May it not entail the Lord's wrath?
Will he purge with scourging hand?

Send us rulers, Wise Disposer,
Who shall care for toilers' woe;
Teach them how to follow closer
Footprints of Oppression's foe.
Bid them search out the enigma,
How to help their brother man,
And remove this saddest stigma,
"Inhumanity to man."

MRS. SARAH HARGREAVES.

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

Address of Mrs. Bina A. Otis at the Kansas State Fair.

A new feature is brought into our state and many of our country fairs this year. From time immemorial we have been permitted and come invited to bring to these annual gatherings our jellies and preserves, our cake and our bread, our needlework and our babies, to compete with one another for premiums when each of us have known without the aid of the expert judges that our own preserves were the richest, our jellies the clearest, our bread the sweetest, our cakes the finest and our baby the handsomest on earth. While we are permitted to bring all these this year, we have a day especially set apart and called suffrage day in which we may enter our plea to the legal voters, unitedly asking them with their ballots at the election of 1894 thirteen months from now, to grant us the election franchise and restore to us a privilege that we believe is our inalienable right under a republican form of government.

We come, the last disfranchised class, presenting our own claims, representatives of a class exempt from military duty but not from taxation, ignored at the ballot box but never at the bake oven; classed with idiots, criminals, lunatics and Indians, but no silver-tongued orator has yet ventured to suggest our colonization as a class in darkest Africa or any other foreign land. But, kind friends of the several political parties, we have been helping you in the political campaigns of the past and stand ready to help you once more, but we believe in reciprocity, and if by chance you thoughtlessly ignore our claims at the ballot box in 1894, we propose to establish a colony of Kansas women in Wyoming, helping one another like the foreign emigrant to raise money to pay our transportation and leave the men to rule in undisputed sway over the homes and cook stoves as well as the ballot box, and in the words of the resolution adopted by the democratic convention of Clay county, "touch with deft fingers and limitless tact the asperities of every day life and make them as grassy paths beside shady brooks."

Until woman's equality with man is legally recognized she can never be a free American citizen and enjoy the natural rights to which she is entitled under our present condition. The entering into the bonds of matrimony is too often assented to on her part as a means of support or to obtain a position in society, or as kind of an appendix to man to care for his every comfort, a side issue in the home economy and recently the same in the economy of politics, perfectly willing that she should be a vote worker thereby bringing strength to his political party. The idea of ever keeping her a side issue may have been caused by the Biblical account that she was made from a rib taken from man's side, but we are now living under a new dispensation that recognizes human equality without regard to sex, race, color or previous condition, and they should no longer be considered a side issue.

The vital question that confronts the women of Kansas at the present time is not whether her kitchen floor shall be scrubbed twice or six times each week, nor whether her daughter's dress shall be as elaborate as that of her girl friends, or that her own be made according to the latest fashion, but rather that her daughters shall have the same opportunities to earn an honest and honorable living as her sons, and have a voice in the government she helps to support with her taxes, a voice in the laws to which she must be subject.

One of the greatest sources of prosperity to a nation is through the remunerative employment of its citizens. The legal status of the laborer always has an effect upon the estimation placed upon his labor; the more intelligent and influential the laborer the higher will be the estimate placed upon labor itself. One of the strongest arguments against chattel ownership of the black man was that such ownership degraded labor itself and brought it into disrepute even among those who were free. Give woman the political power of the ballot and you will immediately elevate and dignify her personal services and increase the pecuniary compensation therefor. It is the terrible pressure and her love of independence that makes her seek an opportunity to earn a living and forces woman into nearly all the avocations of life and accept lower wages than men for the same services.

Woman's vote will aid in improving the economic conditions of civilized society. The wife who toils in the daily routine of home life is just as important a factor in the hive of industry as the man in the shop, field or mine. The mother who marches to the tune of lullaby and the tramp of the little tottering feet and commands the ins and outs of the home life for her God given darlings until they reach maturity, is as much a commander as any who ever won a battle. The epaulets of motherhood denote as much patriotism as those worn by any major general, and she should be recognized with something more tangible than fulsome flattery and the privilege of laboring under the disadvantages of a disfranchised class.

The signs of the times indicate that we shall win the amendment. It is not a party issue; the two dominant parties are ready to welcome a new factor into politics. Henry Watterson, the famous editor of the Louisville, Ky., Courier-Journal, once said that "Prosperous and satisfied communities are always conservative; Woman suffrage will come when it comes on a wave of popular discontent." Our present social and industrial conditions indicate that there is wave upon wave of discontent extending from the Atlantic to the most remote portion of the Pacific slope.

Prof. Joseph R. Buchanan, one of the foremost educators of our land, predicts the coming cycle of woman's equality and emancipation from the slavery and barbarism of previous generations to come out of the present unrest. Kansas always leads, we can trust her on this issue. The amendment was submitted by almost an equal vote of the representatives of the republican and populist parties, and if the voters do not stand by this action it is a step backward, a step Kansas cannot afford to take. The eyes of the world will be upon her at the election of 1894 and will expect her to take this step in the march of human progress; her own citizens demand it and will never rest satisfied until justice is granted to all the citizens of Kansas.

By an enactment of the legislature some years ago municipal suffrage was granted to the women of the cities of our State. This is a step in the right direction and has been educating us for the next advancement. Is it not granting special privileges to a certain class? Have the women of the country no interest in public welfare save in the matter of the public schools? The ballot is an educator as well as a power and all should have equal opportunities to use it whether residents within the corporate limits of a city or upon the broad prairie.

At one of the county conventions of the People's party this fall the suffrage roll book was presented to the candidates and not one of the doubting ones who were asking further time to consider the question were nominated. Take warning, brothers, you may be candidates another year. Voting is but registering the opinions previously formed. The question is to be decided by the legal voters but the women propose to make a long pull and a strong pull and a united pull and do their utmost to influence the opinions of the legal voters. We believe in "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" and claim to be a part of that all to whom equal rights should be given.

Eleven populist county conventions have adopted suffrage resolutions, and one republican. Eleven to one. Now, in conclusion permit me to say to Mrs. Johns that if the republicans do not hustle and get on their war paint on this issue, we propose to help the populists with our influence to whip them at the next election in the same ratio, eleven to one.

OUR SCHOOL-HOUSE CAMPAIGN.

The greatest school-house campaign ever known in the history of our civilization will be made by the progressive women of Kansas during the year of 1894. It will be more thorough than that of the Farmers' Alliance a few years ago. It was in the school-house that woman received her lessons in voting, first in the grange and latterly in the F. M. B. A. and F. A. I. U. The women on the farms are almost unanimously in favor of their enfranchisement. It behooves the friends of equal suffrage to look after the vote in the towns and cities; the country is all right, and when we say this we make no idle boast. The FARMER'S WIFE is in close communion with these sisters and knows how their men will vote. Dear sisters, give your attention almost wholly to the city people; educate and organize them on this great question and you will find even then that the farming vote will far exceed that of the cities and towns.

GREAT OFFER!

Womankind, a large 16-page woman's journal, issued twice a month, and the FARMER'S WIFE a whole year for 60 cents. Address this office.

THE WOMAN'S PART.

Man Has Done Himself a Wrong in so Long Restraining Her.

Women have suffered as only women can from the long injustice of man's misused dominion; but if we look deep into the soul life of the world we shall see that man has done himself a greater injury than he has been able to inflict on woman. In holding her subject to him he has put fetters on the being through whom God has ever sought to save him from himself. Limiting the exercise of her power and cramping and distorting her nature he has robbed himself of the strongest means of his own uplifting. He has often, by his own act, forced her to become his curse who was meant to be his greatest blessing. Perhaps it may seem that, in assigning so large a share of the world's redemption to woman, all responsibility is taken from man and he is left but a passive agent, not capable of nor answerable for his own salvation. Far from this, every individual soul, of man or woman, must desire and work out its own salvation. Women may and often do inspire men with this desire when nothing else can.

Woman's love will help a man to make the desire grow into a beautiful and grand consummation. But he himself must battle with and conquer the foe within his own gates. Man's struggle for the good, woman can but partially understand and dimly realize, for she only sees the world and its evils from the seclusion of a sheltered home, where sin may never be told in its fullness; but she intuitively knows that his encounter with the world beyond those walls is hard, at times desperate, and her whole being goes out to him with an aching tenderness, a ceaseless longing, a love that would cover him as with an armor, and shield him from all harm. Men grow stronger because they are loved so. Right becomes more precious and more beautiful to every man when a woman's eyes glow with rapture at his triumphs and a woman's lips seek his in thankful speechful joy; and thus women enter into men's souls and sow the seed of every higher aspiration, nobler effort, grander achievement. And the world, slowly it may seem, but always surely, uprises from the errors of the past into the realization of a new and better life. It has become almost a cant phrase to call this the woman's age. It is woman's age in a higher sense than many perceive; an age when her spiritual power is to make a definite impression; when it is to take a conscious part in the active life of the world.

Believing this, we would have all women question their own souls listen to the answer that will come, and does it confirm the statement here made, arise and begin their holy task to-day, if they have not already done so. O, women who are wasting youth and power and life in the fluttering round of a butterfly dance, cease your meaningless prattle, put aside the trivialities, the conformity, the artificiality in which you have been reared, and set your womanhood free to expand, free to bless and to purify. You strong women of brain and of energy, take only truth for your motto, let the rights you have bravely striven for and gained be valued most because of the higher right they confer of exercising your God assigned mission of redemption. We are living in days when no human being, no woman especially, should dare shirk her portion of the sacred work of redemption, but with all haste should set about it at once; and this in no vague, uncertain way, but with definite intention and steady, consecrated purpose. Whatever experience of struggle, of horror even, through which the world may have to pass, let women recognize their power and accept their responsibility, and then stand true to that one word, Love; and the blows of contending egotism, the corruption of individuals and communities, the strife of rebellion, the fierceness of war will be checked, will be subdued, will be healed, in the end will be overcome and made impossible forevermore.—Corn Maynard in Arena.

THE TABLES TURNED.

The Patriotic American commenting on the present political situation in Detroit says:

"The machine politicians made a resolute and ignoble effort to defeat the woman's suffrage bill and almost as great a one to crush the local suffrage act. To accomplish these ends, a hundred and one gauzy excuses and reasons were alleged, 'Our intelligent women will not turn out,' 'Our ignorant women will be mere tools of party or unscrupulous politicians,' etc. The machine rings knew that their excuses were as shallow as their own honesty. The machines in their alleged eagerness to save the women from themselves feared first the wrecking of the old rings, and cliques by the influx of a new, unattached element, and, second, political and moral reform that the woman's party would be liable to introduce into the body politic. Failing to subdue the women, the next attempt of the machines is to bring them down to their own particular level; to transfuse this new blood of regeneration into the veins of the tottering political rouses—to fortify corruption with the live blood of an infant organization—to prop up the tottering limbs of effete and impotent partyism with new vigor. This would have been excusable if the object had been of a reconstructive nature. The bitter opposition of partyism to the suffrage bill shows that this was not what is desired. The machines want strength—not that they may purify themselves, but that they may remain secure and defiant in their time-honored dishonesty and malefeasance. Now, finding that the women fought their own way to their rights regardless of the opposition of the rings, the latter would act in the capacity of patrons or guardians to the woman's organization. 'You are brainy, you are clever, but you lack political experience. This we are prepared to impart for a consideration—your adherence to the party.' Fortunately the women saw through the scheme and snubbed the gang bosses as only women can snub, in spite of the fact that the parties' subsidized press never have lost an opportunity to ridicule the women into acquiescence where arguments and threats have been ineffectual. We are pleased to see that the women have practically told the parties to mind their own business. The women feel that they are fully competent to attend to matters in their department. The women will put their own ticket into the field—another fact which will please all of those who favor good government. The ticket will not be made up, most probably, until after the party slates are made known. If there are any good men on the party slates the women will doubtless have the good taste to endorse them. The wardheelers, bums, ringsters and pot-house politicians will go overboard without any consideration whatever. This is the method that the women will take to purify politics. They are unaffiliated—unpledged, save to their country. The letter of Mrs. Oostdyke to a local daily was a diplomatic backhander to presuming party leaders that the latter will do well to take into consideration. The women are here to stay; they are here to fight in the interests of the people and good government. They are not, nor do they profess to be, infallible. If they make mistakes such mistakes will be far preferable to the corrupt perfection of the parties. Let us, therefore, tie to the women once; let us see if honesty and inexperience will not give us what dishonesty and experience have heretofore failed to give us—good government. The women are mistresses of the political situation at present for the simple reason that they are independent. Absorption by either party means political corruption and slavery for the women. If the women of Michigan never elect a candidate of their nominating they will at least be able to deal death-blows at the corrupt candidates and materially help to elevate the standard candidacy. We trust that the time is not far distant when every woman in the United States, who is able to read and write will have the right to cast a vote wherever and whenever the right of man to vote exists."

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA,

KANSAS.

MATRONS AND MAIDS.

FAIR WOMAN'S DOINGS AND IDEAS.

An Idea About Milliners' Folds That Is Worth Knowing—Care for the Nails—How to Prevent Wrinkles—An Aid to Sweeping, Etc.

An Aid to Sweeping.

FOR sweeping a room neatly there is nothing like newspaper aid. Take a page of newspaper or other paper at a time, wet in hot water, squeeze until it ceases to drip. Tear into pieces the size of one's hand and cast them all over the carpet. Then sweep, and most of the dust in the room, if you use your broom judiciously, will be gathered into the papers. On matting use larger pieces of paper, pushing them about ahead of the broom, to take up your fluff, if any, before beginning the regular sweeping. After a velvet or other heavy pile carpet is thoroughly swept, a sponging with ammonia and water will preserve its brightness wonderfully. About once a month, after sweeping, taking a pailful of warm water, adding thereto a tablespoonful of ammonia or turpentine. Two spoonfuls of the latter will do good, it being a preventive against moths. Go over the whole carpet with a large soft cloth or sponge wrung so as not to drip. Doubtless you will be surprised at the rapid discoloration of the water. If the carpet be large and much soiled or dusty the water should be changed once or twice.

A Point on Milliners' Folds.

"If you will give me your attention for about five minutes," said a practical woman, "I will give you an idea that is worth knowing. The present fancy for trimming of milliners' folds is a very pretty one and quite effective, but these folds are so troublesome to make, that your dressmaker will either persuade you into using something else or, as in the case of the friend of mine, will put the folds into the sewing-machine and stitch straight through them. This is all very well if one likes them, but the rounded fold strictly handmade is much more effective and artistic. To make a perfect fold, the goods should be exactly on the bias and the strips should be wide enough so as not to skimp the turned-in edges. For an ordinary five-eighths of an inch wide fold, a strip of goods about one and one-half inches wide is required. Fold one edge over on the wrong side, make this fold a little less than half an inch wide, baste this down with the utmost accuracy, then fold the other edge over so that the edge of it will almost meet the edge of the first fold. The space between the two should be a trifle over an eighth of an inch wide. Baste this with the utmost care as near the cut edge as possible, taking care not to draw or slide the goods; when the basting is done, fold again and prepare to sew the folds together. Select a narrow, very thin whalebone and run into the edge of the upper fold, then turn this wrong side up, bend the whalebone slightly over the forefinger of the left hand, then with rather fine stitches run a line of sewing just as near the left-hand edge of the whalebone as may be without running off. Keep sliding the whalebone along the fold as the work progresses. An expert can do five yards to one over the old rate, when it was necessary to blind stitch with the greatest care, and even then the needle would go through and spoil the symmetry of the work. By a little practice one can get so dexterous in this that it would almost be possible to run the folds down in the dark. There are a good many of these little points about present-day dressmaking that do much to simplify the task for the amateur and expedite business for the professional."—New York Ledger.

Prevention of Wrinkles.

There is no such thing as concealing a wrinkle or coaxing it out of sight on occasions, no dressing it up in pretty disguises, gauze, and frills; no one ever really admired its curves or wrote sonnets to its beauty; no one ever really longed for its coming or succeeded in banishing it by a cool reception; it comes uninvited and carries unbidden, and settles more contentedly in its place as you fume and fret over it. Many remedies for the eradication of wrinkles have been suggested by various writers on the subject of personal beauty, but the best and surest cure for wrinkles is not to get them, for they may be avoided more easily than removed. Wrinkles are not always the sign of age, but often the indices of a poorly-cared-for skin, the nervous temperament of their possessor, the habit of excessive worrying or continuous study, and sometimes of the degeneracy of the race. Italian children of 5 or 6 years often have more wrinkles in their little faces than a woman of 85 ought to possess. A skin that is carefully and frequently bathed in warm water and pure soap, and rubbed to a glow 'all over once each day with soft flannel or the hands preserves its elasticity and is less susceptible to wrinkles. The modern woman has more care and perplexities and worries than Caesar ever dreamt of. But these cares and worries are in no way ameliorated by expressing them in the face with countless grimaces and contortions of features that invariably produce lines. The vivacity and swift-changing play of features in bright, sparkling girls makes prematurely wrinkled and distracted looking women. Much of this vivacity and pretty by-play of elevated brows is forced and unnatural, and all the more conducive to wrinkles. Another habit women have is that of contorting their faces into most ludicrous and ugly positions when exposed to the strong sunlight, all of which by a little thought and effort can be controlled to a degree.

Entertaining a House Party.

The house itself may be a valuable adjunct in the entertainment of one's friends, or a kill-joy whose influence it is hard to overcome, writes Mrs. Burton Kingsland in a delightful article on "Entertaining Friends in the Country" in the Ladies' Home Journal. If possible, let us do away with "company rooms," and make our friends welcome in those made homelike by our daily presence and that of our families. Nothing but living in it will take the stiffness out of a room. The ideal room for the entertainment of friends in a country house is a large, cheerful "sitting-room," that shall be library, music and drawing room in one—the heart and soul of the house. Here should be collected all that we care most to have about us—souvenirs of travel, favorite pictures, photographs, low book-cases containing readable books, luxurious divans with bright-hued pillows, and every chair made for comfort. A piano standing across one corner, so that the player face the room may be draped with gay stuffs and made a "thing of beauty." The addition of a tall lamp with gorgeous shade near by, and a fine palm or two, makes a "cozy corner" that would prove alluring.

College Expenses.

A comparison of the expenses of the college girl at the leading colleges for women shows the following: At Mount Holyoke the cost in round numbers for board and tuition, without extras and incidentals, is $200 a year; at the Woman's College in Baltimore, $300; at Wellesley, $350; at Smith's, $350; at Vassar, $400; and at Bryn-Mawr, $475. To this outlay the student has in addition the extra expenses of her toilet, traveling expenses, for music and painting, for attendance on certain extra lectures, the fee for membership in college societies, and usually a share of the cost of class entertainments giving during the year. These expenses may be decided by the young woman herself, as may also the cost of the pretty extras for comfort or decoration that she may add to her room.

Care of the Nails.

Cleanliness of the nails is a very important essential. If possible, never use a knife-blade, but at the toilet a nail-brush and plenty of soap and water should always be called into service. Surgeons long ago learned that deposits under the nails were a menace, and that through them wounds were easily poisoned. This led to extreme care in the matter of personal cleanliness on their own part and on the part of all their assistants. Before an operation is performed all who touch the patient or the instruments which are to be used must first clean their hands thoroughly with soap and water, being especially careful to have the spaces under the nails absolutely clean. After this the hands are put into disinfectant solutions.

A House Warning.

After the guests had assembled the mother, with a dignity that made it a pretty ceremony, passed from room to room, and with a lighted taper illuminated the house. The master of the house next lighted the fires that were laid on various hearths, and as the logs crackled and blazed and light and warmth were summoned to the house, all the guests sang "Home, Sweet Home." Later, when bread was broken in the pretty dining room, the daughter of the house, a little maid of four summers, lighted the lamp on the table, and hospitality was added to the other fires that make a house a home.—New York Evening Post.

To Freshen Crapes.

A hint for those who unfortunately are obliged to wear crapes: When it has been crushed or spoiled, to make it look like new iron it between two sheets of newspaper, care being taken that the iron is just the right heat, hot enough to seize it without burning.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

GREAT VARIETY IN THE STYLES FOR THIS SEASON.

Tailor-made Gowns Are Still in Vogue—Bodices Made Double-breasted Over a Shirt Front—The Jaunty Eton Jacket Will Not Go.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondence:

MANY tailor-made gowns of severely plain cut are now seen, and the favorite cut for bodices seems to be a buttoned-up Eton affair. By Eton, is meant, not the ugly, popular modification of that jaunty little jacket, but the Eton proper that fits close at the back, a little point setting in at the waist line to a little below that line and buttons snugly to the high collar in front. Bodices are made double-breasted over a shirt front, six sham buttons being used, and each so big that the front of the bodice is hardly seen. Skirts are fitted over the hips and set out close in front and at the sides. At the knee a quilling of ribbon is used or a band of Hercules braid, and below this comes a flaring round skirt. This is a favorite pattern, and since the round part may contrast with the fitted part of the skirt, it is a fashion that lends itself willingly to the remodeling of old skirts.

The initial illustration depicts an afternoon dress in old rose flowered crepon, trimmed with old rose silk.

IN PINK AND BLACK.

The four-gored skirt has a slight train, and is trimmed at the hem with a ruche of the silk. The round waist fits tightly and is belted in at the waist by a narrow gold girdle. It is set off with epaulettes which extend to the middle of both back and front. Down the front there is a pleated silk ruffle which conceals the hooks and eyes used for fastening. The sleeves are a plain Empire puff and deep cuff, and are without trimming. This is a very stylish and pretty dress, and particularly suitable for a young matron.

Silk homespun is not attaining the instant popularity expected, probably because it is a genuinely fine goods. Every thread is silk and the weave is the popular sacking-like effect. It will wear forever and is sold cheap enough to make one consider using it for curtains. It lacks the wiry crispness of the wool homespun and cannot be fitted as closely as the usual silk can because of the loose weave. But it makes lovely skirts, and as for petticoats, what could be warmer and more serviceable? But there! that is rank nonsense. Who wants a petticoat either warm or serviceable! What is wanted is a little light silk and lace affair that will wear about twice, or so it seems. We are told that long waists are again in fashion. Does patient woman change her corset every time fashion thus changes, and do her lungs, liver and things all get boosted up and down like an elevator all the time! Nature is long suffering, and that's a fact. An exquisite outdoor toilet is depicted in the next sketch. It is made of anemone crepon and trimmed with insertions of black lace. The ruffled collar is of mousseline de sole with a narrow edging of white lace, and the hat is of fine black felt, covered with ostrich feathers of the same shade as the dress.

MOTHER AND DAUGHTER PROMENADING.

Two well-dressed promenaders are the mother and daughter of the third picture. The former's costume is in almond-green foulard strewn with small white spots. The corselet and tiny vest are of white guipure and the sash of almond-green ribbon is knotted at the side. The black felt hat is trimmed with a large satin bow of a shade to match the dress. Red cashmere with narrow stripes running through it is the fabric of the little girl's dress. The yoke is cream guipure and the epaulettes are red surah. The big hat is of fancy felt lined with almond-green (to match mamma's dress, perhaps) and trimmed with a large bow of fancy red and green ribbon.

DOTTED AND PLAIDED.

The material used in the next costume shown has a white ground strewn with small black dots and plaided with thin red lines. The skirt has a bell-shaped upper part and a circular lower portion, which measures five yards in width at the bottom, but the top is just wide enough to fit the other. The seam is covered by two rows of red ribbon, the lower one covered with white lace. The skirt is lined with foulardine and has a frill of the same inside. The bodice has a fitted separate lining over which the back and fronts are draped, the fabric being joined to the lining by the side seams. The fullness in back is laid in pleats at the waist, while the stuff is taken bias for the fronts and is drawn to the figure without any seams. It hooks in front, the opening being concealed by the full blouse front, which gathered to the neck has an elastic at the waist and is sewed firmly to one side while the other loops over and hooks under the bretelle collar. The blouse front is taken on the bias and threaded by three red ribbons each covered with lace. The collar narrows toward the front and is divided in the center of the back where both ends are held in place by a ribbon rosette. The belt is composed of two rows of ribbon, the lower one covered with lace. It hooks over like the blouse front and is adorned with a rosette on both sides.

TWO SKIRTS HAVING FIVE ROWS OF TRIMMING.

The balloon sleeves have fitted linings and are finished by a ribbon which also composes the standing collar. The stuff of the sleeves has only one seam and is about one yard in width at the top. The material is taken on the bias and pleated into the armhole. The top is stiffened, or the fabric, being too soft, would sag. The deep bretelle collar is edged with a narrow frill of lace put on without any fullness.

The last two toilets portrayed are both dresses capable of varied use, and both are at once handsome and in touch with present acceptances. That at the left hand is in black wool brocaded in oval-shaped silk designs. It has the skirt in three flounces, each edged with black lace. The bodice is of pale-green surah ornamented with two rows of lace insertion. The other gown is in gray cashmere and the skirt is enhanced by two flounces of gathered gray silk. The waist is of white surah, the front covered with rows upon rows of pearl beads.

Copyright, 1893.

Electric Lamps in the Sea.

Experiments were recently made at Toulon for illuminating the bottom of the sea with electric lamps. The apparatus employed was sunk six fathoms deep and it illuminated the bottom to a radius of 100 feet. It is thought that the lamp will be of the greatest value for surveying wrecks or reconnoitering for concealed torpedoes.

REV. HAYDEN RAYBURN,

Who Has Married Nearly Twelve Hundred Couples.

Rev. Hayden Rayburn, of Kokomo, Ind., has probably united more couples in marriage during his long life than any other man. At the beginning of this month he had performed 1,162 marriages and is still keeping busily at it. Mr. Rayburn is now 81 years old, and performed his first ceremony in 1848. In those days Indiana was very unsettled, and he was often summoned twenty-five or thirty miles to tie the nuptial knot. He always complied cheerfully with these requests and made the long journeys on horseback. Later, as the country improved, he abandoned horseback riding and made the journeys in a carriage. This he continued until 70 years of age, after which out-of-town wedding parties desiring his services were required to come after him with a carriage, and, as he expressed it, return him "as good as found." This did not in the least detract from his popularity nor lessen the demand for his services. Five years ago, being 77 years old, and admonished by increasing infirmities incident to his age, he refused to respond to calls, though expressing a willingness to accommodate all who might call at the parsonage. During the latter period he has married nearly 400 couples, all of whom went to the Rayburn home, where the ceremony, in many instances, was witnessed only by the venerable minister's good wife.

"I don't know why it is the people still want me to marry them," said the good old man recently, "unless it is because I married their fathers and mothers, and grandfathers and grandmothers. I've had pretty good luck, though, and that may have something to do with it. Out of the 1,100 and odd couples I have married I know of but three or four instances where they did not stick. I know of but three divorces in the whole lot. I don't know as it has done any good, but I generally give the youngsters a little lecture after the ceremony, and I don't know but it does them good. I know it don't cost me anything, and if it's any benefit to them they are welcome to it."

New Figures.

Among some of the figures recently danced at a cotillion were the following: Fencing foils, in which two gentlemen fenced with foils tipped with powder puffs, the one who first left his white mark on his adversary claiming the privilege of the dance with the lady. Airball figure, two balls thrown in the air, and the competitor who first secured one had the choice of a partner. The wheelbarrow was another successful and amusing figure. Two barrows filled with light trifles were rapidly wheeled from one end of the ball room to the other, the man who was able to reach the goal first without upsetting the contents securing the dance. The giant muf was a welcome novelty, the ladies and gentlemen thrusting their hands into it, and when it opened the interlocked hands decided the question of partners for their owners. Still another was the mellinite bomb, which, bursting, showered bits of paper.

How He Collected It.

"If you think you've got such a dead sure thing on that claim against me, why don't you sue me for it?" asked the man with the double chin. "I could sue you and collect it easily enough, and you know it," replied the man with the bushy eyebrows, "and would have done it long ago, but for the reason that it would have brought your other creditors down on you like a thousand of brick. I don't want to break you."

"I'll pay it this afternoon, every cent," said the other, rubbing his jaw thoughtfully. "But that won't go with the next man that tries to work it on me, by George!"—Chicago Tribune.

Origin of "Pants."

The words pantaloons, breeches and trousers are now used interchangeably, but originally the significations were quite different. Pantaloons were at first nothing but long stockings worn in Italy as a sort of religious habit by the devotees of St. Pantalon. Breeches originally reached from the waist half way to the knee, and finally to the knee, where they were fastened with a buckle. Trousers are the present style of leg-gear, a combination of the former two.

Infinitesimal.

In order to realize the size of the water molecule you must imagine a drop of water to be magnified as big as this earth, and then a molecule would be between the size of a small shot and a cricket ball.

Thinly Populated.

Though western Australia is nearly nine times the size of the United Kingdom, its population was estimated in March last at but 59,718, with 10,000 more males than females.

WORN BY THE WOMEN

SOME OF THE VERY LATEST IDEAS IN DRESS.

Many New Designs in Dress Calculated Only to Make Money for the Dress-makers—Those Flary Little Coats that Resemble Penwipers.

Basques Coming Back. New York correspondence:

ESPIE the fact that skirts are ordered to be tight at the hips, it should make no difference, for we shall have fold and fullness just the same if we want them from the waist. Coat skirts are made very wide and full at the back, hanging in organ-pipe folds. There is something very chic and cute about these flary little coats scaling loping over the close skirts, and Miladi looks more like an idealized pen-wiper than ever. No matter what the fashion is, she manages to look like an idealized something, and one thing is as sweet as the other, so why fuss! Besides, the dressmakers must live. It seems too bad that the disused basque is on its way back. It is not a garment made on lines calculated to show the figure to advantage, neither does it picturesquely conceal it. The basque is almost always made postilion back, or in some one of the masculine cuts which does not suit the feminine

THE OVERSKIRTS BEGINNING.

figure, emphasizing ungracefully as it does the wider hips of women. The difference between the round waist and the basque is that the latter shows some part of it below the waist line. A bodice, properly speaking, extends from the waist line to the arms; it does not include sleeves and frequently does not include armholes. The prettiest basques are those which have merely a circular addition to a round waist, but those with continuous breadths extending below the waist line are again in favor. The part below the waist is made full. A wide-hipped woman must avoid this effect. It really does seem as if woman will not keep away from that trying horizontal across the hips. No beauty is added to the slender figure by cutting it thus in half, and a stout one is made unspeakable. For how short a time were women content to wear round waists and confine circular trimming to the space from foot to knee on the skirt! Already we are putting bands or frills about the hips, or making skirts to our waists and accomplishing the usually fatal line in that way. When will fashion adopt for her motto, "Let well enough alone?" Alas! That is easily answered. Never. In the initial illustration is shown effectively the prettiest of these two methods of adornment. Here the skirt of lavender crepe is trimmed about the bottom with ruffles each four and one-half inches wide. These stick out perkily and add nicely to the pretty flare the skirt already has. The ruffles are practically repeated at the shoulders, and the waist is further ornamented by a broad Empire lace girdle, and yoke of the same. The balloon sleeves have a long lace cuff, and a sash is worn with long ends hanging. The second and third illustrations are alike in one respect, which is that they show the early developments which point toward the return of the overskirt. This, surely, is another unwished-for visitation. But what else is signified by the elaborate trimmings on skirts at and just below the hips? Just such ornamentation as is seen in these two pictures, and by the double skirt effects now so eager seized upon. Verily, the motto quoted should be framed upon Fashion's wall. In the dinner toilet of the second picture the material is white open-work muslin with half-inch strips of white and pink, the whole strewn with hand-embroidered dots. The border is pink with fine black lines. The skirt is in two parts, a gored upper half and a circular lower one. The seam where both are joined is hidden by a band of lace underlined with pink satin, and a frill of lace. With the toilet is worn a fichu collar, pointed at the waist in front and back, and gathered in a standing collar; it is edged with lace insertion and a lace frill put on straight like that on the skirt. Through the thin muslin is seen the square décolleté of the bodice.

YET ANOTHER STARTING POINT.

WITH ZOUAVE EFFECT IN GUIPURE.

Quite a new style of bodice is that shown in the next picture and one very prettily suited for morning wear. It is sketched in black and yellow Pekin, the black stripes being strewn with oval yellow spots. The bodice drapery crosses in front in Empire style and is set off with guipure in zouave jacket form. This simulated zouave is very effective, especially when costly laces are employed, but inexpensive and pretty ones are always to be found by searching. The narrow pointed waist-band makes a pretty finish and is particularly well adapted to the cross-over or surplice bodices now so much worn. The latter are not suited to women of full figure, but a half hour's observation on the streets almost any day will disclose a dozen large women in surplice waists, and that means twelve mistakes, for in each and every case width and rotundity are magnified unpleasantly.

Two stylish callers are depicted in the last picture. The standing figure displays a costume of heavy black sicilienne trimmed with yellowish Moorish lace. Around the shoulders there is a cape-like frill of the silk with an insertion of lace, and falling on this are three pointed flaps of silk, two in front like revers and one at the back. The bodice is finished with a pointed yoke of lace and a wide girdle of folded silk is worn. The silk is taken on the straight for the sleeve puff, and the cuff below is trimmed with three lace bands. The skirt is three and a half yards wide and is lined with surah. It is ornamented at the bottom with two four-inch frills of silk, and there are repeated higher up in conformation with the prevalent use of trimming at or below the hips. At the right hand there is a toilette composed of strawberry and green striped silk, and trimmed with black lace. The wide skirt is trimmed at the hem with a bias fold of green velvet, over which falls a seventeen-inch flounce of black lace, finished with a narrower bias fold of the velvet. The bodice has a round yoke of strawberry silk covered with black lace and finished with bretelles of lace headed by a bias velvet band. Both of these dresses are very handsome models.

SWELL VISITORS.

Many bit effects have attachment to fall over the hips and usually these pieces are cut into "battlement" squares which are sometimes edged with a tiny frill. In other words, a little while ago belts were elaborated downwards, then they were turned upside down and worn reaching up under the arms, while now they go both ways.

Copyright, 1893.

FANCIES OF FASHION.

GREAT VARIETY IN THE STYLES FOR THIS SEASON.

Bands on Skirt Grow Like the Peach in the Orchard—Stylish Mourning Costumes—The "Swagger" Military Cut—Many New Effects Are Seen.

Gotham Fashion-Gossip. New York correspondent:

NEW way of "banding" skirts comes out every week now. This fashion commenced with a few parallel bands of ribbon or velvet, changed to permit a great many of them and now the strips of ribbon can make almost any pattern. This initial, for instance, shows one variation. This has a costume of gray suiting, trimmed with green satin and silk. Each end of the spiral band of the skirt ends in a large rosette. The bodice has a narrow plastron of green silk which is finished on either side with bands of black guipure insertion. The rest of the front of the bodice is made of cream-colored silk, while the back and sleeves are of the gray stuff. The search for odd effects in skirt adornment has led some daring dressmakers to follow festoon lines about the skirts. These are either trimmed with lace actually festooned held up with bows of ribbons or knots of flowers, or else the ruffles are put on the skirts in wavy lines. Frequently there are only two festoons, the ruffle or puff curving down across the front and the back of the skirt, and being caught up at the sides. The bunch of ribbon or knot of flowers becomes more and more a reminder of curtain drapery and horticultural collection. But the question just now is not is it pretty, is it graceful, but is it the fashionable thing? If it is, go ahead.

THE GARB OF GRIEVING.

The second and third pictures in this column present tasteful models of stylish mourning. The first dress is made of black cashmere trimmed with crape. The moderately wide skirt is lined with silk and garnished with two bands of crape, one four inches wide, the other two inches, with a two-inch space between them. The round bodice is draped loosely with cashmere and hooks in the center. It is trimmed with bretelles of unlined crape seven inches wide, and has a standing collar of crape.

At the left in the third picture there is displayed a dress in second mourning. The material is a rough cashmere, and the skirt is trimmed with three rolls of crape around the bottom. The bodice is plain behind, but has a pointed plastron of crape in front, finished by a roll of the same on either side, with a second roll covering the first dart, and continuing to the shoulders. The toilet has a pretty collar-ette in three parts, each edged with crape. The puff of the sleeve is divided by a crape band and the cuff is made entirely of it. The companion figure is attired in deepest mourning. The fabric employed is a shaggy black froule trimmed profusely with crape. The skirt has a slight train and is covered with crape about half-way up. It is lined with black lusterless silk. The round bodice is entirely covered with crape, back and front, and the circular cape is edged with an eight-inch band of it, which continues up the front. The small crape bonnet supports a long veil, which is embroidered along its edges with a small design in lusterless black silk.

TWO OTHER EXAMPLES.

If the fashions keep turning out such horrible examples of the dreaded ruff, women will escape the infliction altogether. It is bad enough to contemplate the pictures without risking getting into such things. A fashion to "take" must be introduced in an attractive and not exaggerated form. True it is that the fashion once settled it will be pushed to the most hideous extremes and stuck to through them all till it dies of its own over-development, but in the beginning there is more sense shown. One of the offered models has a ruff effect of three upright and stiffened frills that pass stiffly about the neck and down the front to meet at a point at the waist line. The awful part of this is that the frills maintain their stiffness and uprightness all the way, and at the waist even stand at right angles to everything else.

MORE CHEERFUL ATTIRE.

Two pretty street dresses are depicted in the fourth illustration. That at the left is composed of dark-blue foulard and trimmed with white lace and apple-green surah. The skirt is trimmed in the novel way mentioned at the description of the initial, with three serpentine ruffles, each edged top and bottom with narrow white lace. The round bodice has a pointed yoke of gathered green silk finished with bands of guipure lace. The remainder is laid in tiny pleats and trimmed with vertical bands of lace insertion three inches wide. The other gown is made of pale-blue and white striped organdie, trimmed with insertions of embroidered batiste. The skirt is lined with white satin and garnished on the inside with a pinked satin frill. The blouse waist is plain in back and the hooks in front are hidden by a strip of insertion. The draped fronts have also two bands of the same insertion on either side. These fronts are loose and are joined in the shoulder seam. The belt is a plain band of batiste. The sleeves have a large, full puff and a long cuff trimmed with two bands of insertion.

Elaborate braiding is the rule on handsome gowns, and it is so elaborate that it vies in richness of effect with embroidery. Silver and white are often used on dark dresses. Velvet revers and collars and sleeves and boleros are masses of applique work of all kinds. In the new gown all this means expense. But it is likewise a suggestion for the doing over of old gowns, and though fresh velvet may make a better foundation for embroidery, still the velvet so old that it can be used in no other way looks well when richly covered with handsome work. The coat of the final sketch is profusely embroidered in military fashion. In considering this garment it should be borne in mind that while circular capes and wraps of all descriptions remain as popular as ever, nothing is more becoming to slender, youthful figures than the three-quarter jackets. This model is fashioned of a light-weight tobacco-colored skirt set off with black braid. It is tight-fitting with ample skirts, which have a large directive pocket flap on each side, edged with braid and trimmed with three diagonal rows of the same, finishing in tiny round rosettes. The front of the skirt has a similar rosette in each corner. A small pelerine cape is made independent of the jacket and fastened to it with hooks in front. It has a turned down collar, is edged with braid and garnished with two rosettes as shown. The pointed gauntlet cuffs are trimmed in the same manner. Copyright, 1893.

OF "SWAGGER" MILITARY CUT.

A REVIEW of the personnel of the English House of Lords does not show a preponderance of strength or intellectuality.

OLD INNS OF ENGLAND.

The Leather Bottle and Other Picturesque Resorts Made Famous in Literature.

There exists in England a society for the preservation of ancient buildings, but its members devote themselves exclusively to abbeys, cathedrals, churches, and old baronial structures; village inns are beneath them. Lovers of the picturesque are therefore under obligations to Herbert Railton, an English gentleman who has just published a book on "Coaching Days and Coaching Ways" in which is described with pen and pencil the most notable of these delightful old relics.

THE SIGN OF THE LEATHER BOTTLE.

Many of these inns have most interesting histories. The old Tabard was known to Dr. Johnson and his friends, and "Ella" and Dickens and Thackeray knew it as a terminus. What a pity it is gone, like many others that, since the book was written, only five years ago, have disappeared, and live only in the book. Then there are the inns associated with the immortal Pickwick—the Leather Bottle at Cobham and the Bull at Rochester. Fire has played havoc with the former; the interior of the latter is much as it was in Samuel Weller's days. There is also the Bell at Edmonton, of John Giltin fame; the Fa'stuff at Canterbury, famous for its village fighting men; the Star at Alfriston, which was once a monk's house, and where even now on Sundays and feast days, if they be so minded, the singers, if your company is kindly, will sing you a carol or hymn with great heartiness.

HERE IS A GRACEFUL COIFFURE.

In the Full and Careless Style Now Coming in Fashion.

Here are two views of a coiffure in the full and careless style which the imitation of the "1830" and "1832"

A GRACEFUL COIFFURE.

modes is bringing into use. The sides show the wave obtained by crimping pins when not natural, and a few loose locks hang down upon the neck, while over the brow there are small curls below a turned-back wave. A loop of ribbon and a few flowers give added grace to this coiffure.

He Didn't Mind One More.

A certain wealthy young club man is just now telling, without mentioning any names, his last narrow escape from matrimonial toils.

At a country house visited by him recently were several interesting and accomplished young ladies, among whom he divided his attentions about equally, although one of them was continually thrust forward by the designing mother. Just as he was about to take his departure the latter proceeded to consult him upon a matter which she alleged was causing her no little distress.

"It is reported," said she, "that you are to marry my daughter Mary. All the neighbors are talking about it. What shall we do? What shall we tell them?"

"Oh," responded the considerate young gentleman, "just say she refused me. I've been so unfortunate in my love affairs, you know, that the report of one more disappointment won't hurt me and you'll be spared all further annoyance."

Mumch Deck.

At Belfast the Alexandra graving or dry dock, completed in 1889, has a floor length of 800 feet, while from outer sill to back of wall the distance is 850 feet. The inside width at the top is ninety-two feet and the bottom fifty feet. This dock can be divided into three separate docks or used as one large dock.

Great for Fish.

The Japanese eat more fish than any other people in the world. With them meat eating is a foreign innovation, confined to the rich, or rather to those people who prefer it to the national diet.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAUK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 20 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

GIVE US TRUE MEN AND WOMEN.

God give us men and women a country like this demands,
Great hearts, strong minds, true faith and ready hands;
Men and women whom the lusts of office cannot kill,
Men and women whom the spoils of office cannot buy,
Men and women who possess opinions still,
Men and women who love honor and despise a lie,
Brave men and women who live above the fog in public duty and in private thinking;
For while the rattle with its thumb-worn creeds,
Its large professions and its little deeds
Mingles in selfish strife, poor freedom weeps,
Wrong rules the land and waiting justice sleeps.

Mrs. Lense and Mrs. Digge are busy night and day in the fall campaign.

To the women of Kansas we say,
"Stand by the party that stands by you."

The Cornerstone of Lansing, Mich.
comes to our tables each month full of good things.

In all the years the republican party were in power in Kansas, my sisters, what did they do for you?

While the women may differ in politics they will work together for their own enfranchisement.

Subscribe for the FARMER'S WIFE now and keep posted on the woman's movement in this great campaign.

Every one who possibly can should attend the state suffrage convention at Holton. See announcement in another column.

Dear brother, the women propose to carry the amendment. Do you intend to sit on the fence and see the procession pass by?

Eleven county conventions of the People's party have declared themselves in favor of enfranchising the whole people.

The women do not wish to be understood as fighting the men. They are simply fighting the miserable laws that men have made.

Mrs. Annie D. Weaver has made a splendid campaign in Iowa this fall, and many are the compliments she has received through the press, all of which she richly deserves.

It is sad indeed to see a man betray his friends. But when a woman proves false to the confidence and trust of her friends, then we find ourselves asking the question, "Is there any good to be found in this world."

The political war in Kansas in 1894 will be that of the enfranchisement of women. Shrewd politicians will try to divert your attention from the important fact, but the war is on, the women are in it and victory is already ours.

Gov. Lewelling could not have selected a better person for police commissioner than the lady whom he appointed. She is in every way fitted for the position, and being personally acquainted with her, we can vouch for her doing her duty in every particular. No one need have any fears of her being turned from the path of duty. She will always be found at her post, and we give due notice that no joints will do business by the help of her vote.

In all the reports of the republican county conventions, we can only learn of but one that endorses the suffrage amendment. That's strange. We supposed, of course, that all republicans were suffragists. They have not even done as well as the democrats of Colorado have. At two of their conventions they declared themselves in favor of enfranchising the women. Even in Kansas we know of a great many democrats who think it a disgrace to all mankind that the women are classed with criminals and insane people, and when the time comes, say they will not only vote, but will work for the amendment.

Society and Society Women.

Frances Willard in Corner Stone.

Even as we thus move on in these every day affairs all of which pertain to that "common religion" which involves the reign of righteousness upon the dusty highways of our common life, so I have thought we are moving onward in the social world. There is less etiquette and more reality; less veneering and more real grain of the wood. Once the business of well-to-do women was society. What did that mean? That the be-all and end-all was to dress in fashion, dance a minuet in stateliness, preside at a dinner of several hours' duration with mastership, and so on. Now, to be sure there are large circles of women to whom the décolleté dress, whirling waltz, progressive euchre party and box at the theatre are the world's chief charm. But the spell of this sort of life is broken. The special enclosure known as "society" grows smaller and less fascinating to the great, many-sided world of women. Christianity is emancipating us, and showing us so many other things to do. Women more gifted, cultured and rich than those who give themselves wholly to society devote themselves nowadays to things they find so much more worthy of them, that "society women" have become a sub-division, quite clearly marked, of the real womanhood that has a broad, free life and outlook on the world. Just as in the early days, one who did not take wine was almost ostracised, but is now respectfully regarded and even praised, so "not to be in society" is no longer a mark of singularity, but a "differentiation from the type" that is clearly recognized and held in high esteem. Perhaps "society" itself will pass away. Who knows? One feels like saying this below one's breath, and yet who knows? There are so many better things to do than to sit for two hours as devotees around the stomachic altar of a dinner table, or to spin in a waltz, taking attitudes elsewhere indecent or intolerable. But society dissected down to the marrow, yields but these two spectacles and these too will pass away. Banish wine from the dinner, dancing from the "evening entertainments," and "society" with its bare arms and exposed busts, its late hours and indigestions, would collapse. Nothing is surer than that wine is to be banished, and that with the growing up life and dignity of womanhood, dancing, and the outrageous mode of dressing that goes along with it, will one day be held as a mere relic of barbarism. Indeed, the choicest natures, could their roll be called, have shunned "society" because, though it fed them on the most succulent viands of the real, it was too gross and glaring for the ideal which was above all things else dear to them. The time is not far distant when a young woman "coming out" will not be accompanied by such a description of her personal appearance as a skilled groom might give of Maud S., and when her debut will be made into philanthropic circles, not into the envious and heartless atmosphere of ball rooms. The time is coming when "receptions" will bring the rich and poor side by side, and no drawing room will be too fine for the honest workman and his family to enter, that they may greet the princely friends who have loved them and sought for them that justice which is the highest form for philanthropic endeavor. The time is coming when the vulgarity of using stimulants gambling in circles of "progressive euchre," waltzing in the arms of men, disrobing in public that one may be "in style," wearing high heeled shoes and camels' humps, describing the wardrobes of ladies and enumerating the dishes of their tables in the public prints, will be counted as the almost unbelievable phenomena and the last fevered gasp of the gilded age now hastening to be gone.

Woman, "Be Not Afraid." Exercise Your Supreme Right.

For the Farmer's Wife.

If woman of this age has a God-given right, supreme above all other rights, it is to know and live the truth.

The science of all truth is being given to "whomsoever will;" yet we hear intelligent women who have heard somewhat of our science say: "I am afraid to study your science—I am afraid to hear more of it, because I might believe it; then I should want to live it, and my husband, or my family, are so prejudiced against, and would be so opposed to my believing it that I couldn't stand it; and it might end in the breaking up of my family. Then what would become of John and the little ones?"

If this is God's truth, sent in his love to the world for its redemption, sent with his foreknowledge of what it will inevitably effect in the way of breaking up homes, etc., is it not reasonable to suppose it is right and expedient for his work to break up some homes; that is, homes that the reception of God's truth can break up? Such homes have in them, before the truth reaches them, the inherent elements of discord and disruption; and a house divided against itself cannot stand. Does not the truth of any age set the members of a household at variance? Could judgment, which is the separation of truth and fallacy, good and evil, and the gathering together of people of like principles into orderly groups, so that order may be established in humanity, come without breaking up homes?

We read of a time to come when "the nation and kingdom that will not serve Thee shall perish." How, then, can a family, which either wholly or partly opposes his work and refuses to accept his Messenger, expect to maintain its unity? All who oppose the Lord will utterly perish; so whole families may go down together, and those who wish may take comfort in that idea. But those who would be saved must step forward—break the family tie if need be—and be ready to follow the Lord's commands.

What does he command? Hear the truth and live by it. Especially does he call woman to this right and duty. No woman has a right to say, "I am afraid to investigate for the truth;" nor has she a right to live otherwise than according to her highest convictions, no matter how it affects her family relation. She may plead duty, but she has, and can have, no higher or more solemn and binding duty than to serve the Lord by obeying his commands. When she knows, or may know if she "be not afraid," the truth and what it demands of her, she will not be held guiltless if she withhold herself for fear of consequences. If God demand a certain thing, think ye not that he is able in his wisdom and love to attend to all consequences, and make results more beneficial for those you consider need you than you yourself could? He can see their real states and needs; you cannot.

It is a necessity in the upliftment of humanity for God to destroy the selfish family love;—not the father love, nor the mother love, nor the brotherly, sisterly love, but only their narrow, sordid, soul-dwarfing limits, which make every man's hand against his neighbor in the accursed competitive strife, and perpetuate hell. We would cultivate and expand the love faculties until they would reach out and gather the whole race, God's great family, into one bond of sympathy and good-will.

So long as we devote the best part of our love and life to one little family group, are we not perpetuating the contest of man against his brother, and breaking God's command to "Love one another?" Can the reign of brotherly love, that the world sometimes dreams of, ever be instituted in conjunction with the reign of individual family love? Most reformers seem to think so. The home is the bulwark of the nation, the patriot says. Of what nation? The nation pitted against nation; not the nation of God. His nation, in which will unite all nations of the earth, will have its foundation and bulwark in love of humanity. This means joy and life to the world. "And there shall be no more death," because "man's inhumanity to man," resulting from family selfishness and bearing its bitter fruit of death, will be transformed by the baptism from on high into love to God and the neighbor. This will decidedly break up families, but it will build the great family; and the more we open our hearts to recognize our relation to humanity, the richer we are in family love, both given and received, and the nearer we come to the Father's heart.

To our fearful sisters we would say, "Be not afraid; the Father-Mother love is sufficient unto ye who give up all to serve the Lord, and is sufficient also to care for the dear ones whom ye think need your services more than the Lord does. Trust in the Lord, and thereby gain courage to seek the truth and live by it."—Alice Fox Miller.

SOLVED THE QUESTION.

For the FARMER'S WIFE.

If you and I are one, dear,
One from one leaves naught,
Must we learn the lesson
By this problem taught?
One from one leaves nothing,
Oh this awful sum.
One and one make two, dear,
Yet one and one are one.
If one and one make one, dear,
As true as true can be,
Then what am I but you, dear?
And what are you but me?
Then if I am surely you, dear,
I shall vote next fall,
And it may depend on my vote
If you can vote at all.

By JOSEPHINE RAYLEY HAGUE.

WOMAN'S PROGRESSIVE POLITICAL LEAGUE.

[This column is controlled by the Kansas Woman's Progressive Political League. Items relating to women are solicited. These columns will be printed and furnished free to papers desiring the same. The W. P. P. L. is also prepared to furnish stationery bearing printed suffrage mottoes, also suffrage "stickers," at extremely low rates. Address Mrs. Bina A. Otis, president, Topeka, Kansas, or Editor W. P. P. L., box 235, Leavenworth, Kansas.

Will our readers kindly write the editor who was the first woman to hold a seat in their county convention of any political party.

Anderson county had two lady candidates for register of deeds; Miss Alice Gregg was chosen and will make the race. Success be with her!

Anderson county populists passed the following resolution: We are in favor of equal rights to all and special privileges to none, and that the legal rights of our citizens should not be abridged on account of sex.

Until woman is accorded perfect justice, until she stands in deed and reality, as well as in name, squarely on an equality with man, it will be idle to dream of race higher in soul development and more morally robust than the present. Hence, here again lies a patent duty.—B. O. Flower, in August Arena.

The old political parties may have neglected their opportunities at the Kansas fair, but the Woman Suffragists do not belong to the old set. The enterprise of the more or less fair advocates of feminine ballots deserves something for their pluck and energy, if only a vote of thanks.—Kansas City Star.

Mrs. Ella W. Brown, of Holton, Kansas, is the first woman to serve as city attorney in this state. For seven years she was a teacher in the university at Holton, after which she studied law in the state university at Lawrence. The present mayor, who came in upon a reform wave, appointed Mrs. Brown city attorney. She is an active, tireless worker and is the district president of the Kansas W. C. T. U.; she is also the author of a little book which furnishes a concise study of parliamentary rulings. This should be in the hands of each member of any circle or club. Send ten cents to Mrs. Ella W. Brown, Holton, Kansas, and receive a sample copy.

Equal Suffrage Society.

The tenth annual meeting of the Kansas Equal Suffrage society will be held at Holton, November 8th, 9th and 10th. The executive committee will meet at 2:30 p. m., November 8th.

Mrs. Carrie Lane Chapman will be one of the speakers in the convention. Other speakers will be announced later.

This meeting is of unusual importance and full delegations from all auxiliaries are expected. The hospitable people of Holton have proffered entertainment. Let all friends of the pending amendment be in attendance.

A meeting of the suffrage amendment campaign committee is called at 10 a. m., November 11th at Holton.

LAURA M. JOHNS, President.
ANNA L. DIGGS, Vice President.
ELIZABETH F. HOPKINS, Corresponding Secretary.
MARTIA L. BERRY, Treasurer.
MAY BELLEVILLE BROWN, Librarian.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

Pointers for World's Fair.

Footprints on the sands of time this year will be turned toward Chicago, where the great Columbian exposition is to be held.

While walking may be good, the majority of Kansans will prefer riding in a solid Santa Fe vestibuled train.

Perhaps you don't know that the Santa Fe route has the shortest line between Topeka and Chicago, by thirty-six miles; that absence of grade crossing lessens the number of compulsory stops, and that three trains each way each day afford ample room for all travelers.

Luxurious palace sleepers, fine dining car service and free chair cars; better than the best of other lines.

Leave Topeka 2:40 p. m. on Columbian Limited; 4:35 p. m. on Chicago Limited, or 5:05 a. m. on Daylight Express.

Drop in and talk it over with Rowley Bros., city ticket agents, southeast corner Sixth and Kansas avenues; Arnold & Stansfield, North Topeka, or W. C. Garvey at depot.

"The Woman's Standard,"

AN EIGHT-PAGE MONTHLY.

Devoted to the interests of the home, and the legal and political status of women.

Fifty cents a year in advance; three months on trial to new subscribers 10 cents. Sample copy free.

THE WOMAN'S STANDARD,
DES MOINES, IA.

L. HARLBURG,

FIRST CLASS

BLACKSMITHING AND

GENERAL REPAIR SHOP.

Country Work Solicited.

Prices Low as the Lowest.

CALL AND SEE ME.

922 Kansas Avenue,
NORTH TOPEKA.

FOR YOU A CLAIRVOYANT diagnosis of your disease FREE. By sending me a cent in postage, a lock of your hair, name, age, and sex.

DR. M. E. HILL, MECHANICSVILLE, IOWA.

Married Ladies Send the for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail St. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1088 Broadway St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

Married Ladies Send the for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

$25 a week made writing at home by LADIES. Particulars for stamp. EASTERN TOILET CO., Stillwater, Me.

For the Boys A Watch or Kodak. No money out. Write Box 230, Sidney, Ia.

GOITRE OR THICK NECK. I have a positive, Cleanly, Harmless Cure. Come if you can, or write me at 28 Livingston St., Cleveland, O. DR. J. CASKEY. It is no iodine smear. Cure made Permanent.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful Sea Shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address, CHAS. HUGHINS, Pensacola, Fla.

1840-1893. MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been used by Millions of Mothers for their children while teething for over FIFTY YEARS. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhea. TWENTY-FIVE CENTS A BOTTLE.

WORLD'S COLUMBIAN EXPOSITION

Official SOUVENIR—1893

In beautiful and bright colors, and the designs handsomely etched on silk, taken from Oil Paintings and the celebrated, world-renowned models now on exhibition at the World's Fair. On the top is the famous portrait after Moro, of Christopher Columbus, in the center is an exact reproduction of the Santa Maria in full sail, showing the brave crew that assisted in discovering America, on the bottom is a design showing two Globes—the Old and the New worlds—one on one side is Christopher Columbus, surrounded by his crew, representing the first landing on our shores, and on the other a complete bird's eye view of the World's Fair. Is pronounced one of the handsomest and most attractive mementoes yet issued as a Souvenir of the great Exposition. Can be used as a Badge, Book-Mark, or as an ornament for the parlor.

Adopted by Societies, Clubs, Churches, and the public in general. Price, 15c. each, or two for 25c. AGENTS WANTED Everywhere. Price per Dozen, $1.00. Special terms for large lots. Mailed and delivered free to any part of the United States or Canada. J. McLEAN & CO., 157 S. Clark St., Chicago.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies —OR— Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

Tom Watson on the War Path.

Virginia Sun.

Thomas E. Watson is still on the war path. The democrats of the state are aghest at the enthusiasm of the people over his speeches. One of his late meetings was at Indian Springs. A new tabernacle has just been completed at this place by the Indian Springs Holiness association, and in it the meeting was held. It has a seating capacity of 6,000. It was filled, and nearly 1,000 remained on the outside. It is estimated that the number of people who have heard him at the last eighteen meetings would aggregate 60,000. His meetings are almost always opened with prayer, which is followed by the entire audience singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," or "Glory Land," and then Mr. Watson speaks for two hours or more. It is claimed that accessions amounting to thousands have been made to the cause in the last six weeks.

He now has engagements extending into October, and invitations are pouring in upon him from portions of the state where arrangements have been made for him to speak. The gravest mistake ever made by the democrats of that state was in cheating Thomas E. Watson out of his election last fall.

A General Shaking Up.

John Madden in the Advocate.

A general shaking up like the one we are now going through, while dangerous in many of its phases, is bound to result in a readjustment of conditions. Large bodies cannot be impressed with the new until they see the old crumbling to pieces around them. Much suffering and sacrifice proves the metal of the people, and demonstrates their fitness or unfitness in the way of popular sovereignty. It tends to destroy party idols and render ridiculous hero worship. The Cleveland of one year ago, who led the forces of his party to victory, has become a Coriolanus who heads a foreign force against the ramparts of his country. It remains to be seen whether a devoted constituency will follow him longer in carrying out his unpatriotic designs upon the nation, and render a truism his boasted declaration that "paternalism has no place in government," or whether they will repudiate his policies and by wise legislation give to the people that security of life, liberty and property for which their fathers bled in the darksome days of war, and for which their sons toiled in the days of dangerous peace.

They Squirm.

Advocate.

The commotion produced in the United States senate by Senator Peffer's resolution asking for information as to whether National banks are conducting their business according to law, has only been equalled when Senator Stewart introduced his resolution for the appointment of a committee to inquire how many United States senators were owners of National bank stock. Senator Stewart said he was getting tired of the constant charge of New York papers that senators who favored free coinage of silver were owners of silver mines and were influenced by selfish motives. He had not owned any interest in silver mines for fifteen years. Recent events had led him to believe that some senators were owners of National bank stock, and that this very much hampered them when they were asked to take steps to secure a compliance with the laws by those corporations. He would like a committee to inquire how many senators are thus hampered and who they are. It is needless to say the committee was not appointed; but the resolution stirred up the animals in about as good shape as did Senator Peffer's resolution.

Spread Our Doctrines.

Journal of Knights of Labor.

The people's party of Ohio are evidently enlisted for the war. While McKinley and Neal are busily engaged in threshing the old straw of tariff discussion—an occupation about as profitable and edifying as sawing the wind—the populists are carrying on an aggressive educational campaign. From Brother Charles R. Martin, the efficient and energetic secretary-treasurer of the state executive committee, we have received a number of pamphlets and leaflets, one of which is illustrated with well-executed half-tone portraits of the populist standard-bearers. In small compass these pamphlets give a very succinct epitome of populist doctrine, and they ought to be in the hands of every thinking, independent farmer and workman in the Buckeye state.

Farm Notes.

Des Moines Farmers' Tribune.

The political hog is a poor investment. He serves but one purpose and that is to 'squall' if he don't get about everything in sight. I wouldn't advise anyone to cultivate him, and yet he is preferable to the partisan donkey that knows only enough to bray when the 'boss' cracks his whip. They are both an incumbrance on any well-regulated political farm.

Party fences have, for some time, been in bad shape. They should be looked after in season. If not attended to those ugly "critters" the chronic office seeker and ward "heeler" will do no end of damage. Don't forget the fences, make them office-seeker high, demagogue strong, and political-trickster tight. Without good fences a raid may be made upon the caucous crop or the ballot bin.

Senator Stewart's Challenge.

Senator Stewart fairly put the administration and its friends on the defensive when he hurled at them this challenge:

Let his (the president's) friends deny that he has used patronage to control legislation. Let his friends declare to the country that he has not attempted to control legislation. Let them make clear to the country that patronage has not been given to those who support his measures. Let them make it clear to the country how the sentiment of congress has been changed. Let them make it clear how the overwhelming majority which had been claimed here in favor of free coinage has been changed into a monometallic majority.

If and If.

Dubuque Telegraph.

In 1890 and again in 1891 the democratic state convention of Iowa demanded, according to Governor Boies, the restoration of silver to its "ancient estate," which was unrestricted coinage at 16 to 1; in the first named year twenty-one other democratic conventions did the same, and to-day, if administration pressure were not employed to prevent it, the democratic majority in congress would pass a bill for free coinage at the existing ratio.

Colorado for the People's Party.

New Nation.

"The terrible financial strain we are under," writes a Colorado subscriber, "is making populists very fast, and you need not be surprised to note that every county in this state goes for the people's party this fall. When they reach the people's party resting-place it is an easy grade to nationalism, and many scarcely stop until they proclaim themselves in favor of absolute government control."

Populists Confident.

The populists opened up their Leavenworth county campaign by a well-attended meeting at Lansing, which was attended by every guard at the Kansas penitentiary who could be spared from duty. A glee club was present, as were also the populist candidates for the county offices. Several city populists from Leavenworth went out to the meeting.

There are already half a dozen populist papers published in Oklahoma, any one of which can give you good evidence to show that the territory is on a fair way to become a populist state.—Advocate.

Old party papers talk about "restoring our money to a sound basis" by further contracting it. They might just as well talk about putting flesh on a half-starved hog by reducing his feed.—Farmers' Tribune.

An inadequate supply of money is the greatest debt engendering agency in the world. It is the great engine of force which, through interest, enables the few to live at the expense of the many.—Farmers' Tribune.

Resolution passed by Kelton, S. C. alliance, September 9: Resolved, That it is the sense of this alliance that a stay law would be detrimental to our people, and that we are opposed to it with the present lights before us.

Under the paternalistic system of government the farmer, the laborer, the mechanic, in fact, all classes who represent honest toil and legitimate effort, would receive protection, and government would take on the greatness of its people.—John Madden.

DECIDED TO LIVE.

Found After All That Life Was Not Perfectly Hopeless.

"It is always darkest before dawn" is a saying aptly illustrated by an anecdote given by Hume Nisbet in "A Colonial Tramp." While in Melbourne Mr. Nisbet one evening stepped under a veranda to avoid a shower. A young woman was there before him, and from her harassed face and her restless pacing up and down he judged her to be in trouble. So it proved. Suddenly the woman approached him and said:

"Would you mind doing me a favor, sir?"

"No! That is, if I can. What is it?"

"I want some medicine from the chemist over there, but he will not give it to me; perhaps he would let you have it."

"Perhaps. What kind of medicine do you want?"

"A shillings' worth of laudanum."

"I'll try," I said, and taking the money from her was about starting off when a thought occurred to me, and I asked:

"What do you want it for, miss?"

"Toothache. I have it frightfully to-night."

"No, you haven't," I said quietly. "It is heartache that ails you, and you want to kill yourself."

"You are right," she said, "I do want to kill myself. Now I suppose you will be for giving me up."

"No. I would rather help you to die if you are quite sure that you are done with life. But are you sure?"

Then she told me how she had offended her kindred, the Jews, by becoming a Christian, how they had cursed her and discarded her. She was a tailor, and most of the trade was in the hands of the Jews, and they would not employ her, and she could not get work elsewhere. She had tried every shop in Melbourne.

"Then I'll get you the laudanum," said I; "only I want a favor from you first."

"What is it?"

"I want you to live until to-morrow night, and try all round once more. If you fail of success meet me here to-morrow at this hour, and I'll do my best to get you the laudanum."

She agreed to that, and I returned the shilling. Next night I waited in vain for the young woman to appear.

Six months afterward I was waiting at the postoffice for letters when a pretty, laughing-faced young woman came up the steps, with a young man beside her. As soon as she saw me she darted forward and shook me warmly by the hand. It was the young Jewess who had wanted the laudanum.

"I got a job the next day," she said, "so I did not need to come to you. Better still, I got a husband. I say, dear," she cried to her companion, who had joined us, "this is the young man who made me go the rounds again."

Then turning again to me, she said:

"This is my husband; I got a place after all, in a Christian shop, the first I tried, and he was the foreman there. We have been married two months. I'm very happy," and she laughed in a pleasant manner.

MOST WONDERFUL OF PEARLS.

The "Southern Cross," a Gem Found by a Fisherman in Western Australia.

Black pearls used to be held as of small value, comparatively speaking. They were first made fashionable by the Empress Eugenie, wife of Napoleon III, who possessed a famous necklace of them which fetched $20,000 at auction after the overthrow of the imperial dynasty. This did not include the single great pearl forming the snap, which was purchased by the Marquis of Bath for $5,000. Mexico, Tahiti and Fiji supply the markets of the world with black pearls. The most extraordinary pearl in the world, according to the New York Advertiser, is known as the "Southern Cross." It is probably the most remarkable thing of its kind that nature has ever produced. So far as is known it occupies an absolutely unique position in the history of pearls. It consists of a group of nine pearls naturally grown together in so regular a manner as to form an almost perfect Latin cross. Seven of them compose the shaft, which measures an inch and a half in length, while the two arms of the cross are formed by one pearl on each side. All the pearls are of the luster.

This astonishing freak was discovered by a man named Clark, while pearl fishing in Western Australia. He regarded it as a miracle and, entertaining a superstitious dread of it, he buried it. In 1874 it was dug up again and since then it has changed hands many times. Its value is set at $50,000. How it came about that these pearls were grouped together in such a manner no one has as yet been able to explain satisfactorily. It has been suggested that a fragment of serrated seaweed may have got into the shell of the oyster and that the succession of teeth along the margin of the front may have caused deposition of nacre at regular intervals, so as to form a string of pearls in a straight line. The cross was found in the shell of the mollusk, just as it was taken from its native element, without any possibility of its having been subjected to human manipulation.

Good Plan to Scare Creditors.

A man residing in a cabin near Mahoney's Boiler Works has fallen upon a novel scheme for keeping his creditors away from him, yet it does not always work. The man in question has a family, and evidently believes in providing the necessities of life for it. A few days ago he went up to a store at Centerville, and, with a face the very picture of innocence, stated that he was a painter by occupation and received his salary weekly; that he wanted $18 worth of groceries on the spot, but could not pay for them until payday. The goods were furnished and the man went on his way rejoicing. Monday was "pay-day" for him, and the next day one of the firm made out a bill and went after the $18. As he approached the cabin in which "old smoothy" was living fat off the goods he noticed a large sign, "Scarlet Fever," sticking above the door. The sign made no difference to the collector. He moved up close to the entrance and was not seen by the inmates until within a few feet thereof. The entire family, consisting of a man, woman and child, were in the front room, but as soon as they saw the collector the man ran into the rear room and hid. He was called out, however, and compelled to acknowledge that he was broke and that the scarlet fever sign was simply a ruse to prevent people whom he owed from bothering him. —Butte Miner.

History Repeats Itself.

There is one sequence of events which has repeated itself again and again in the history of the world. Athens threw off the yoke of its tyrants, and established a republic, some of the other Grecian States following her example. After a period of democracy, Greece succumbed to the military despotism of Alexander the Great. Rome began her great career under kings. The misgovernment of the Tarquins drove the people to found a republic, but the liberties of the Romans were ultimately destroyed under the military despotism of the Caesars. In the seventeenth century, England deposed her King, and created a commonwealth; in a few years the nascent republic perished under the military despotism of Oliver Cromwell. About a century ago the French people rose against their King, and abolished monarchy. But the French democracy in its turn succumbed to a military despot, and Napoleon Bonaparte established the Empire. On a smaller scale, a similar sequence has occurred again and again amongst the States of Central and South America. These coincidences are not accidental; they illustrate laws of human nature, and would doubtless be repeated did the proper conditions recur.

Chinese Books of Quotations.

A Chinese literary man is nothing if he is not allusive. To write either prose or poetry without constant references to historical events or personages is regarded as a sign either of stupidity or of lack of education. As the only history with which Chinamen are acquainted is that of their own country, and as every Chinaman writes, the practice of using historical allusions has become a fine art, and the most obscure characters and circumstances of past ages are necessarily dragged into writings to prevent endless repetitions, and to display the minute acquaintance of authors with the records of their country.

In nine cases out of ten this acquaintance is only simulated and to support the deception endless manuals of familiar quotations are published to supply a semblance of the knowledge which is wanting.—The Athenaeum.

Waiting for Volume II.

The well-known Russian poet, Puschkin, who was always over head and ears in debt, had a volume of his books splendidly bound and sent to the Czar, with this inscription on the title-page: "The works of Puschkin, dedicated to His Majesty."

The Emperor duly received it, and in his turn sent him a book of blank pages, among which were several bank-notes of 1,000 rubles each, which he had forwarded to the poet with this autograph inscription. On the first page was written: "The Emperor's works, to the poet Puschkin."

The following day the Emperor met the poet at the Imperial Theater, and said to him: "By the bye, Puschkin, how did you like my poetry?"

"Sir," replied he, "the first volume filled me with enthusiasm, and I await the second with great impatience."

Female Fruit Raisers in California.

In fruit-raising countries one-third of the ranches are either owned or managed by women. In Fresno County, the great raising-growing district of California, only one woman has failed in business. In Santa Clara County one-third of the $55,000,000 worth of taxable property is owned by women. Nine-tenths of the employees of canning factories are women.—New York Sun.

WHEN some politicians are weighed they are found wanting—every office in which there is a vacancy.

OUR BUDGET OF FUN.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

Jokes and Jokelets that Are Supposed to Have Been Recently Born—Sayings and Doings that Are Odd, Curious, and Laughable—The Week's Humor.

Let Us All Laugh.

THE tip-top fellow is never low down.—Picaune.

THERE isn't mushroom for doubt that toadstools are deadly.—Troy Press.

HE—I think you love me. Am I right? She—No, sir, you are left.—Fashion Review.

THE man who takes the cake thinks he is only receiving his desert.—Boston Transcript.

PHYSICIANS are made, not born—no boy ever yet took naturally to medicine.—Elmira Gazette.

IT is cruel to dock horses, but they never complain; the victim is no tail-bearer.—Buffalo Courier.

A NEWPORT (Ky.) girl married a fellow seven feet tall. She had loved him long.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

LOVE is said to be blind, but it generally gets there ahead of the old man just the same.—Galveston News.

ONLY in rare instances is a man justified in borrowing money to pay the tax on a dog.—Philadelphia Press.

IT is the inside way to the wayside inn which makes the inn popular among outsiders.—Texas Commercial.

THE latest method of eloping is by bicycle. In such instances it is love which makes the wheels go round.—Buffalo Express.

AT the electrical examination: "What is the best insulator we know of?" Candidate—"Poverty."—La Science Examiner.

THERE are two things in the world upon which there has never been any improvement—the wheelbarrow and kissing.—Hardware.

"I HEAR Clara has contracted a mesalliance." "Poor girl. It was only a week ago she contracted hay fever."—Detroit Free Press.

MANY a young man has a great future ahead of him. The great difficulty is that it persists in keeping there.—Washington Star.

HOW CAN I become a ready conversationalist? "Persuade yourself that you have a chronic disease of some kind."—Buffalo Express.

BURGALAR—"Your money or your life?" Head of the family—"For goodness' sake, don't shoot. You'll wake the baby."—Detroit Tribune.

WHENEVER you have a proposition to get something for nothing it will pay you to walk around it by the furthest route.—Doylestown News.

"PERRY GRAFFER won't be able to write any more jokes for a good while now." "Why?" "He fell and broke his humerus."—Indianapolis News.

AN editor's excuse for discontinuing the publication of his paper was that everybody else stopped the paper, and so he thought he would.—Tid-Bits.

THAT a woman has no idea of distance is known by every husband who has heard his wife boast how far she makes her dollars go.—Acheson Globe.

BRACE—"I wish my creditors would have that sign before them on the first of every month." Bagley—"What sign?" Brace—"Post No Bills."—Puck.

TRAMP—"Madam, I have gone through many things." Woman—"Yes, and you can go through that gate again as quick as you can. Here, Tige!"—Drovers' Journal.

HE—"If you will give me just one kiss, I'll never ask you for another." She—"George, it is bad enough to tell a falsehood, without insulting me at the same time."—Boston Transcript.

NEARLY every druggist in the large towns of Maine (there are only two exceptions in Augusta) is under indictment for violation of the liquor law. This shows how it is winked at.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Mrs. BINKS—"Why so unhappy?" Mrs. BINKS—I hate that Mrs. Nix-door with a deadly hate and I'm perfectly miserable over it." Mr. BINKS—"She doesn't know it." Mrs. BINKS—"That's why I'm unhappy."—New York Weekly.

HIS FIRST RESTAURANT DINNER.—Waiter—"You're not gwine t' forget de waitah, sah?" Silas Haymow—"Not much. I never forgits a face after I've once seed it. If yer ever up near Bristol, drop in. I'll be glad to see yer."—Puck.

FOGGINS, SR.—"My son, you know that of all things I hate falsehood. And you, sir, have had the face to tell me it was a quarter of 12 when you came home last night, when I myself heard the clock strike 3 as you entered. What can you say for yourself?" Foggins, Jr.—"Figures may lie, but I am truth itself, and if my memory fails me not I have always been taught, even by you, that three is a quarter of twelve."—Columbia Spectator.

AN OLD LETTER.

Here lies a single letter
Just dropped from—who knows where Some merchant to his debtor:
"Stay! No, the hand was fair
That penned the graceful writing,
And pressed the crimson seal.
Alas! Time's touch so blighting
The faded lines reveal."

Here tears have left their traces,
In many wavering blurs;
Kind tears, their course effaces
Those messages of hers.
Yet here and there a glimmer
Of quaintly fashioned phrase
Evokes a light from dimmer
And less harmonious days.

"She knows the skies above her
Are those same skies that hold
In guard her absent lover,
Where battle smoke is rolled;
And so she trusts God's guiding eye,
We cannot read the rest
Behind the tear-trace hiding;
And surely that is best.
Wander of old love-glory,
Whose day was long ago,
What is thy hidden story
Proffers us not to know.
Why should we thrust our fingers
Into the guarded past?
Only the brown page lingers
Tattered and frayed, at last."

Let pitying hands, then, place thee
Upon the glowing fire.
Here let the flames embrace thee,
Here be thy funeral pyre.
Cold, careless eyes shall never Over thy fragments run.
Vanish from sight forever;
Go, for thy work is done!
—New York Sun.

AMEN AND AMEN.

"Oh, oh, I am killed! I am killed!"
and both papa and mamma ran out into the hall where the cries of distress came from.

"But you are not, Jennett, or you could not cry so," said papa half impatiently as he lifted his little daughter to her feet.

"But my wrist is broken," and the brown eyes looked up into the gray ones, as if there to read the awful consequences should the fact be true.

"No, neither killed nor broken," mamma said soothingly.

"But I fell down free steps," and the little face was still drawn.

"Well, well, you are not hurt much,
Jennett, so do not fear," and Mr.
Summers sat his little girl down after kissing her.

But she continued to moan and worry until papa said:

"Now, Jennett, I will get me another little girl down town if you don't hush. Come, be a lady."

"Bigger than me?"

"No, just as big, so when you are naughty I can have another one."

"Do they keep them at stores?"

"Yes, yes; plenty of them."

The tears were all gone now, and two little hands rested firmly on her father's knee as she read the story from his eyes, even while she was yet speaking. Another little girl—one to be loved even as much as she; one to go to when she was naughty, so papa had said. Her dear papa not hers alone! The tears came nearer and nearer.

"And if I am dead?"

Then papa saw how his words had wounded, and he felt sorry. He lifted her up, but the tears could not be staid. She cried a little until his kisses soothed her to sleep, and he laid her down and the momentary remorse at the same time.

Nothing was further from his thoughts as he halted the passing car.
Mrs. Summers covered her little girl warmly and hurried down to receive callers.

But soon Jennett awakened and called for mamma.

"No, no," the nurse said. "Mamma is busy."

"I won't bother," and she started for the door.

"You must not go," nurse said sharply. "There is an old witch down there who hates little girls."

Jennett then paused and finally went to the window. Turning around by and by, she saw the nurse busy at her table with her work, so she slipped down stairs.

Mamma saw a timid little face at the door and said, "Come on in, darling." She pressed close to her mother while she eyed the visitors curiously.

"Oh, such a dear," Mrs. Cooler smilingly murmured.

"Such perfectly gorgeous eyes!"
Miss Cora replied.

Jennett looked at each as she spoke and came to the conclusion that the last one was the witch—the witch that hated little girls for she was the oldest of the three.

"Come and see me," Miss Cora entreated. Now, Jennett was not timid generally, but she would not go.

"But she will come to me," and Mrs. Cooler rocked forward to caress
her.

"Oh, mamma, this is a witch and hates little girls," and Jennett clung around her mother's neck. "Take me away, mamma. I don't like her a bit," she screamed.

"Hush, child, what do you mean?"
and Mrs. Summers' face burned painfully.

"Hush, and tell mamma all about it." She was a sensible woman in some things and knew the best way to prove it a freak of a child's brain was to let the ladies hear the confession.

"What made you fear the lady?"

"Nurse—"

"Nurse—well go on."

"Nurse said there was a witch down here, and she hated little girls," and she still hid her face.

"Naughty nurse! Why did she say that?"

"She was afraid she would hate me," came the tones in all confidence.

"It's a shame," mamma said, "and I will tell nurse so."

But no coaxing could change the little lady's mind, and the visitors departed in a little while.

But mamma forgot all about it, and she was very busy all the afternoon.

Jennett went for a walk with nurse and found mamma all dressed for an evening party when she came home.

"You are booful," she cried gleefully.
"May I go, too?"

"Oh, no, dear."

"Why can't I go?"

"Little girls are best off at home."

"Aunt mammas, too?"

Mamma paused, but did not reply.
Nor did she forget the little eyes looking up into hers as she went on again with her wraps.

"I wish I had two mammas, so"—
"So what, darling?"

"So I wouldn't have to stay alone so much."

"But nurse's here," and mamma went down to papa.

"Goodby, kitten," papa called up the stairway.

"Goodby," came the little voice, but then papa and mamma couldn't see the little face and the tears on the lashes.

"Come up to bed now," nurse said
as Jennie finished her simple supper.

But the little eyes could not stay shut, and the little heart so "pained" for mamma.

Down stairs was some one who wanted to see nurse, so she fell back on her old mode.

"Now shut your eyes quick and go to sleep or a big, black dog will come out of the closet and bite you."

Closed were the little eyelids now, nor did they tell of the hurried beatings of a timid heart under the counterpane. Not a muscle moved and nurse's duty was done.

But for hours it seemed to the lonely little girl, did she wait and fear the ugly dog.

"Such flushed cheeks," and mamma called papa into the room after they were home again.

"Covered too warm," papa thought as he kissed the rosy mouth. "You had better caution nurse about it."

"Do you s'pose papa will get another little girl if I am sick?"

It was morning, and mamma was trying to have Jennett eat her eat-meal.

"Why?"

"Cause I can't eat it, but—"

"No, no, darling. Papa wants only you." Glad little eyes watched her mother's face—but then—papa had said that.

The little girl was herself again in a few days, her naughty self, too, one morning as papa went off after another little girl, so he said.

"No, he's alone," and Jennett turned from the window where she had been so long.

"Who is, pet?"

"Papa," and his step was in the hall.

"Where—is she, papa?"

"Where is whom?"

"The other little girl."

"Oh, down town."

The little girl down town became as real to Jennett as the President is to us. They were not bad parents, oh, no, only thoughtless and ignorant of the longing of a little heart.

"Mamma is going down town," Jennett, said Mrs. Summers one day.

"Please, may I go, too?"

"No, no, Mrs. Allen goes with mamma," she answered, rather impatiently. "You can go with nurse—for a walk."

"Is you going to see papa's little girl?" and the lips quivered.

"Oh, you foolish child, no," and Mrs. Summers laughed. But Jennett only turned to the window, and was so quiet, so very quiet that her mother came up and looked over to see what her daughter saw.

"What is it, Jennett?"

No answer, and the little form was lifted on to her lap.

"Why, darling, what is it? And you are surely crying. What for?"

"I wish—I wish you would ever let me go, too. I want to see papa's—"

"Now, my dear, don't think of that. You could go, but nurse is willing to care for you, and you can go to the park."

"Yes, but I love you best."

Mrs. Summers paused—but there—no, Jennett must not go this time, for they were to call on some very fashionable friends that day.

"I will tell you. Stay with nurse, and I will bring you a baby doll all dressed in long clothes," and Jennett slid down happy.

The moments passed, and mamma was home again. At the hall door was Jennett, eager for her doll.

"Oh, that's so, I forgot to stop, dearie, but never mind. See, papa wants a kiss."

She had a lovely time and told Mr.
Summers all about it. Jennett ate nothing, and nurse put her to bed.
In the night both parents were awakened by a choking cough—a cough once heard never to be forgotten.

When the doctor came he said it was croup in its surest form and little hope remained.

"What can I do?" the mother cried. And then she thought of her mother and her mother's God. She could pray! And she went into her own room and told her Lord all about it. With it all came a sense of her own unworthiness, her estrangement from God and her perfect ignorance in training a little child. She arose from her knees, but not comforted—only sustained—with such a flood of accusing memories. By and by Jennett lay in her mother's arms, greatly relieved, if not out of danger. She looked up at her mother's tearful face and said:

"Oh, don't cry, mamma. I am better," and then fell asleep, to wake every few moments with half confused memories. It was agony to both parents to catch the half whispered words and know what impressions the little mind had of late received. Now it was the new doll coming to her when mamma came, then "papa's girl" was sick, and papa held her instead of his own little daughter. "Oh, but she must not die!" Mrs. Summers cried in agony.
Her voice awakened Jennett.

"If I do, mamma, you can have papa's girl," she said so quietly that her words fell like a voice from another world on the guilty hearts of her parents.

"I have no other girl, darling," her father replied. "I only told you so in fun. I love none but you."

"But you said so, papa—always."

And Mr. Summers could not meet the trusting gaze.

"But it was only a joke, Jennett.
We only want you, only you," and the tears splashed down on the hot cheeks as mamma bent over her.

And seeming satisfied the little eyes closed again.

"It was all wrong, Emma," and Mr. Summers looked up. "If she believes, we should tell her no untruth, or we'll shake her faith in everything good."

"I am so sorry I forgot her doll!"
But the excuse did not bring relief this time. "We have been thoughtless and"—

"Cruel, Emma," and her voice, trembling, ceased. They sat in silence a long time, each absorbed in painful reflections. At last Mrs.
Summers knelt by Jennett's side.

"Husband, before God I promise to never tell another untruth or deceive her in any other way. He'll save her unto us, I will make her education and happiness my care and never forget how near she was to leaving us." She laid her hand upon his knee, and he placed his ever it, and said, "Amen and amen."

Just the comfort of confession seemed to bring such peace that both felt their vow was heard, even though their darling left them. Mrs. Summers never did anything by halves.

Nurse was seen and confessed to her mode of frightening the child into obedience, and now she confessed to letting the child play in the water while she was visiting with friends, and if I had staid with her to take her," Mrs. Summers reflected. "Ah,
I almost forgot a mother's place."

But Jennett soon found that her mother was a very kind mamma, to think so much of her, and never again did she hear of "papa's girl." It was a lesson which only needed attention to learn, and their attention was called in his own way.—Minneapolis Tribune.

"Of What Were You Presidents?"

The ignorance of some Englishmen in American affairs, and American history is something appalling. This is illustrated in one particular at least by the following incident:—

Not many months ago, a certain
New York newspaper had on its staff a young Briton, a university graduate and a man who took honors in the dead languages at his college.

Some time before the death of ex-President Hayes the young man was sent to the Fifth Avenue Hotel to obtain an interview with that gentleman, who was then stopping temporarily in the city.

Arriving at the hotel the young man sent up his name, and shortly afterward was ushered into the presence of Mr. Hayes.

"Are you ex-President Hayes?"

queried the Englishman, not wishing to be mistaken in his name.

"Yes," replied the ex-President.

"What can I do for you?"

"Oh, I was sent to interview you," returned the reporter, and he at once set out to obtain Mr. Hayes' impressions of New York and the country. The ex-President conversed entertainingly for a few moments, and the Englishman took his leave.

No sooner had he got outside the door, however, than a thought struck him. He must know more about the man with whom he had talked.

Opening the door again, he thrust his head in and said:—"I beg your pardon, Mr. Hayes, but would you mind telling me of what you were president?"

Nothing Could Be Surer.

A scientific writer says that if a drop of oil from a foul pipe be placed in the mouth of a snake the action is instantaneous—the reptile becomes rigid and powerless. This will be a useful item for a person in the bush, and the knowledge should render them secure from snakes. If a man sees a snake all he has to do is to squeeze the animal's jaws until it opens its mouth, place a drop of oil from a pipe inside and, while the snake is rigid, walk out of danger.
Nothing could be simpler.—Sheandoah News.

The mercury came high this summer, but we must have it.

THE QUEEN OF ENGLAND.

Latest Portrait of the One Living Embod-ment of the Idea of Royalty.

Her Majesty the Queen of England and Empress of India stands in this reverent and practical close of the century to the world at large as the one living embodiment of the idea of royalty. Other monarchs may seem august to their own subjects, but to the world generally they are merely figures set up at the head of the government, to be abolished as soon as some more convenient system may be arranged. The sentiment which surrounds the Queen is based on the real power which she has always shown. She has never surprised or puzzled her people; still less has she ever disappointed them. The feeling has grown steadily through all her reign. She was Queen when most of the people now on earth were born, and never for a moment has she ceased to be the Queen. To the English populace all their nobility

QUEEN VICTORIA.

cannot make a pageant brilliant without the Queen.

She is a very little old woman, stout and red-faced and not beautiful, but there is no one in her kingdom, with its hundreds of high-born beauties, who carries with her the stateliness and dignity of her Majesty. She is not haughty, for her motherliness is traditional; she is not resolute for many times she has modified her own opinions to agree with those of her Ministers; she has not a remarkably strong mind, for her books show only ordinary ability.
She impresses the world, because all her life long she has honorably and seriously borne her crown, has been true and good and kind; has realized that the welfare of a nation was involved in what ever she might do;
that for her mistakes many others must suffer; that her responsibilities were great; that the world was worth living in, and her people worthy her never-ceasing care. This picture of the Queen shows her as she presided over the wedding of her grandson, the Duke of York. If that occasion was really her Majesty's last state appearance before her people, as was rumored at the time, she studied to please them by putting aside her mourning and wearing rich white lace with her stately black gown.
The picture was taken at Osborne,
July 23.

At the Bureau of Information.

Some odd requests are made at the postoffice bureau of information in New York. Recently a German assailed the clerk with this query: "I wrote a letter to my wife in Subright a week ago, and don't get a letter from her yet. Can you tell me why she don't answer?" The clerk couldn't tell him. One afternoon in winter, when it was already dark, a man who was very much intoxicated thrust a lot of papers at the clerk and asked him to find out the owner's name and address from them. "Tell me where I live, and who I am," he said. When told he wanted the clerk to take him home, and the chief official had him put on a street car. A countryman took the clerk of the bureau of information in his confidence in his style not long ago: "I want to marry a lady who is in the hotel with me. Can you tell me where I can find a good minister?" "What denominations?" asked the clerk. "Baptist or Methodist, I don't care which."
When the clerk directed him to a clergyman near from his hotel, the countryman said: "Couldn't you come up with me to act as witness and to give the bride away?" A Swede came to know the whereabouts of a photograph gallery at which they could have their pictures taken to send to the old folks in Sweden. During the last week a well-dressed man made this request in a matter-of-fact way:
"Will you lend me a pencil and a bit of paper? I want to have my address on me, so that if I am killed by the cable cars the police will know who I was." The pencil was given him.
He did not return it.

WAS A WOMAN OF BUSINESS.

A Nebraska Widow Who Picked a Husband and Married Him in Short Order.

We were camped alongside of an emigrant train in Nebraska, says a writer in the Louisville Commercial, and just after supper a woman about 40 years of age, who was smoking a pipe, came over to our fire and sized the crowd up, and said:

"I've got sunthin' to say. I'm a plain-spoken woman. When I've got a thing on my mind, I don't beat around the bush."

We looked at her with curiosity and surprise, and she leaned against the wheel of a wagon and continued:

"I've been a widder for three years.
Over that I've got a span of mules, a good hoss, a new wagon filled with housekeepin' stuff, and I kin rake up about $80 in cash. I cum along with the party to take up a claim. I'm good-tempered, healthy and can swing an axe or hold a plow with most anybody. As I said, I'm a plain-spoken woman. If there's a critter among you who wants to get married, let him stand up while I take a look at him."

The eleven of us promptly stood up.

"Git into line," she continued, with a wave of her hand. "I hain't after beauty or eddecashun, but I can't take up with a fellow who'd skeer a wolf to death."

She passed down the line and then returned half way and said to a middle-aged man named Remington:

"You'll do, I reckon. There's a preacher in camp, and 'twon't take fifteen minutes to settle things. All of you as want to see the marryin', come on."

We followed the couple, who were made man and wife inside of twenty minutes, and next morning as we passed the wagon on the road the woman looked out and bowed and said:

"Sorry for the other ten of ye, but perhaps you'll meet up with the other train soon and strike luck."

Colossal Recumbent Figure of Brick.

One of the most curious colossal figures in the world is the recumbent Buddha in Pegu, which was discovered in 1881 accidentally by a railway contractor who was exploring a jungle. It is built of brick, and represents Buddha lying on his right side, with his left hand extended on his leg, and one foot showing under his robe. His head rests on piles of boxes or cases, his eyes are open, and his expression is benevolent and intelligent. Human beings standing on the ledge of rock which forms his couch look like men in front of a great building. The height at the shoulder is 70 feet and the length about 270. It is supposed to have been built in the fifteenth century. On the Irrawaddy River, below Prome, is a cliff two miles long and about 300 feet high, which is carved in rows of Buddhas, some of which are twenty feet high, and in many cases richly gilded. Robert Boyle, a recent traveler in Burmah, describes the view of the city of Pagan from the river as "one of the grandest and most impressive sights he has ever seen." This old capital contains an enormous number of Buddhist temples of various styles of architecture.
—Washington News.

Practical French.

Two French teachers were discussing matters relative to their profession.

"Do your pupils pay up regularly on the first of each month?" asked
one.

"No, they do not. I often have to wait for weeks before I get my pay, and sometimes I don't get it at all.
You can't well dun the parents for the money."

"Why don't you do as I do? I always get my money regularly."

"How do you manage it?"

"It is very simple. On the first day of the month, if money for lessons doesn't come, I give the following sentences to translate and write out at home: 'I have no money.'"

"The month is up." "Hast thou any money?" "I need money very much."

"Why hast thou not brought the money this morning?" "Did thy father not give thee any money?"

"The next morning the money usually comes."—Youth's Journal.

A Cable Car Stopped by a Mule.

It is seldom that a cable car gets the worst of it in a collision, but a mule proved victor yesterday evening. As a car coming east was just about to enter the curve at Washington Circle, a large black mule wandered up K street and crossed the track.
Then he turned and was coming back, and the car but a few yards away. The driver did his best, but the two collided. The mule was knocked about four feet, but landed safely, and walked away whisking his tail. Not so the cable car. It had become safely locked on the track, and it was fully ten minutes before they could unlock and start it.—Washington Post.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

TOPICS OF INTEREST TO FARMER AND HOUSEWIFE.

Two Ways of Shocking Corn—The Care of Apples—Value of Reputation to a Farmer—Setting Cuttings—Box for Wetting Hay, Etc.

Setting Cuttings.

In setting grape, currant, or other cuttings in the open ground a trench is often plowed or dug, the cuttings placed in position, and the earth thrown back. Many make the ground as mellow as possible, and with a pointed stick or sharpened iron rod make a hole of the proper depth and inclination, and insert the cutting. The operation can be greatly expedited and cheapened, says the American Agriculturist, by the handied foot dibble shown in the illustration.

FIG. 1. FOOT DIBBLE. FIG. 2. GUIDING BOARD.

Fig. 1. A blacksmith can make one from an old fork. Cuttings are usually placed about four inches apart in the row. Hence, have a three tined fork made with straight tines four inches apart, five inches in length, three eighths of an inch in diameter and pointed at the ends. The operator walks by the side of a line or mark and forces the fork into the ground, four inches apart, at any inclination desired. If the ground be hard the foot is used to press the fork down. A uniform depth can be secured by running the tines through a light strip of wood shown in Fig. 2. After the cuttings are in place, the dibble should be again pressed into the earth within two inches of the cuttings, and moved slightly to press the earth firmly against the cutting at the bottom. Test this by trying to pull out the cutting. Walking along both sides of the row fills all interstices, and growth is assured as far as proper setting is concerned.

Shocking Corn.

There are various ways of building a shock, says C. F. Curtis in Rural Life, but we have settled down to one of two ways, depending upon the corn and other conditions, viz.: The solid shock or standing shock built close around a jack. The former is made by placing the first armful flat on the ground, the next across it at right angles, and followed by filling in the other angles and building up solid from the ground, keeping as much of the fodder corn from coming in contact with the ground as possible. The jack used in the second method is made from a 2x4 scantling fourteen feet long, with two legs supporting one end about four feet from the ground; the other end rests on the ground, and about three and one-half feet from the upper end put a four-inch fence board seven feet long through a mortised hole in the scantling. Let the intersection of the board and the scantling be in the center of the shock, and make a good big solid one and bind it tight at the top. When the shock is finished remove the jack by sliding the board out first, and you will then have a large, well-built shock partially quartered, permitting the access of sufficient air to prevent the fodder from spoiling, even if quite green.

I had some fears when I began to use this method that the jack would leave the shock too open and cause it to bleach and take water, but it does not. Corn may be put up in this manner as green as it ever need be cut if not wet with dew and it will come out in perfect condition. The method is not so satisfactory if the crop is somewhat green, and it has the further disadvantage of being more subject to the ravages of field mice, but it beats the old plan of tying the tops of four hills together for a foundation.

Care of Apples.

There is no question about the importance of so far as possible preventing the bruising of the fruit. From what has been said in strong terms concerning the barrier of a tough skin which nature has placed upon the apples it goes without saying that this defense should not be ruthlessly broken down. It may be safely assumed that germs of decay are lurking almost everywhere, ready to come in contact with any substances. A bruise or cut in the skin is therefore even worse than a rough place caused by a scab fungus as a lodgment provided by the minute spores of various sorts. If the juice exudes, it at once furnishes the choicest of conditions for molds to grow. An apple bruised is a fruit for the decay of which germs are especially invited, and when such a specimen is placed in the midst of other fruit, it soon becomes a point of infection for its neighbors on all sides. Seldom is a fully rotten apple found in a bin without several others near by it being more or less affected. A rotten apple is not its brother's keeper. The surrounding conditions favor or retard the growth of the decay fungi. If the temperature is near freezing, they are comparatively inactive, but when the room is warm and moist the fruit cannot be expected to keep well. Cold storage naturally checks the decay. The ideal apple has no fungous defacements and no bruises. If it could be placed in a dry, cool room, free from fungous germs, it ought to keep indefinitely until chemical change ruins it as an article of food.

Value of a Reputation.

Have you ever observed that some farmers can get a better price for exactly the same grade of cattle than can be obtained by other men? There is nothing mysterious about it. It is simply because they have a reputation for that kind. This is a principle of profit in cattle growing too much overlooked. Get a reputation for having superior stock all the time, and you will always get the top price, or a little more, because there will be some one on the watch to buy your cattle when they come on the market. Use the best class of sires even if you have only grade cows, and it will help not only the actual quality of your product, but your reputation as well. A pure bred bull of a high record dairy family you well know will stamp its quality on your dairy herd, and the merits of your cows will become so well known that you will be able to procure fancy prices. The same thing holds good, only perhaps not to so pronounced an extent, in breeding beef cattle for market.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Box for Wetting Hay.

The illustration represents a box used for wetting hay. To use, crowd a feed of hay into the box, set an empty pail under the open gate and pour the water over the hay from another pail. If one pouring does not wet sufficiently, reverse pails and pour again. Ground grain may then be mixed with the wet hay, if one wishes, although I prefer to sprinkle it on after putting the hay into the manger with a fork. If one has sufficient room, the box may be made long enough to wet hay for two or more horses. For convenience, it should stand in front of the manger. The bottom of the box slope about an inch to the foot in length. In wetting hay this way, all surplus water quickly drains out and the hay does not need to be cut. It requires no shoveling over, or mixing over in order to get it all wet.

BOX FOR WETTING HAY.

Hedges for Shady Places.

It is often desirable to have hedges along lines where trees are already growing. Evergreens are wholly unfitted for these situations; only deciduous shrubs can be employed. Among the best of these are the various varieties of Privet. They stand dry ground better than almost anything else. It is not so much the shade which injures the hedges in these situations as it is the drying of the ground by the roots of the trees. When we imagine the enormous amount of moisture transpiring from thousands of leaves of trees, we can readily see how dry the ground must be which has to supply this moisture. But those who have practical experience understand this without a thought of the philosophy involved.—Meehans' Monthly.

Brief Hints.

The fumes of a brimstone match will remove berry stains from the fingers.

Tar stains are removed by applying oil, and then removing the oil with benzine.

In packing gowns they will be found to crease very little if paper is placed between their fold.

Moist hands are frequently relieved by bathing them in lukewarm water containing a teaspoonful of borax or ammonia.

If a shelf in the closet is infected with red ants, carpet it with flannel and the tiny insects will not attempt to invade that limited precinct.

A sponge large enough to expand and fill the chimney after having been squeezed in, tied to a slender stick, is the best thing with which to clean a lamp chimney.

In some of the tests in bluing it has been discovered that certain properties in poor bluing, combining with qualities of certain soaps, will produce an iron rust or stain in the clothing.

To draw linen threads for hem-stitching take a lather brush and soap and lather well the parts where the threads are to be drawn. Let the linen dry, and the threads will come out easily, even in the finest linen.

Freedom of Contract.

American Law Review.

In regard to its relations with the wage-worker, the corporation steadily claims the right to be treated as on a par with the wage-worker in the making and taking of contracts, and the courts of justice generally concede to the corporation that right. What mockery to whosoever one of the contracting parties is free! What mockery to talk about the freedom of contract as between the corporation, which has everything, and a day laborer, who has nothing! * * * The wage-earner has nothing to eat, and the corporation has everything. It is the corporation that is respectable, and the starving wage-earner that is the nuisance—the thing to be avoided—the thing to receive charity at the end of a pole. Laws cannot be passed for his protection, providing that certain oppressive contracts shall not be made with him. I say again that if human government has any just office to perform, it is to arbitrate between the man who has everything and the man who has nothing—between the man who is up and the man who is down—between the man who is on top and the man who is beneath.

The owner of a horse has an interest that it shall be well fed, warmly housed and kept in good condition. The late slave-owner had the same motive in respect to his human chattel. But the corporate manager has no such motive. He is as insensible to the sufferings of the wage-earner as the Emperor Vespasian was to the sufferings of the five thousand slaves who died in building the Coliseum. Other slaves, captured in war, were crowding in from the frontiers to take their places. So the worn out wage-worker of the corporation that falls by the wayside finds his place immediately filled by the hungry pauper that crowds forward from some human breeding-ground. Those who in turn crowd forward, begging the poor privilege of being the slaves of the corporation, of being its tenants at will for the mere right to live, what shall we say of them? They constitute the "Darkest England" of our population. The "Submerged Tenth," the "Disinherited," the "Outcast," the "Lost." That "Darkest England" exists in Missouri, and it exists in Kansas.

Dangerous Menaces.

Montgomery, Ala., Herald.

Observers of current events, whose visions are not affected by partyism, may well feel apprehensions and dread at the drift and trend of affairs in this government, which do not receive even a passing notice from the press, yet capable of prompting the inquiry; are we drifting to anarchy and despotism?

Consider some of the facts and measure their effects. It has been currently reported, and not denied, that the attorney general of the United States is enjoying a retainer of $25,000 a year from one of the most heartless trusts in the Government, while drawing a salary of $8,000 as chief of the department of justice. One of the most important duties which devolves upon him is to instruct subordinates in the discharge of duties, and he is particularly in exclusive power in directing the execution of the law against combines and trusts. If this is true it is an assured fact that no trust will be interfered with during his incumbency. If it is true, he ought to be made to choose which master he will serve; the people, who would have the law against trusts enforced, or the trusts, that do not desire an enforcement of the law. As he receives larger compensation from the trusts it is a foregone conclusion that he will serve that interest. If he should refuse to surrender his employment by the trust, and also to resign, he ought to be impeached. If these statements are facts, and they are conceded to be facts, corruption in high places has attained a bold and defiant attitude, which should arouse the people to the dangers which beset the government from dry rot at its head.

Exploded Falsehoods.

Montgomery, Ala., Herald.

The gold-bugs ought to have known this while their subsidized organs were propagating falsehoods a few weeks since. Only a short time was necessary to explode them.

For instance, all of them are asserting that the Sherman act was the cause of the panic. It has not been repealed; yet all these papers are asserting the return of confidence. If confidence is returning, the Sherman act repeal did not cause it, for that law to-day is exactly as it has been since 1890.

It was also asserted that the tariff was instrumental in causing the panic; yet confidence is returning and the tariff act has not been changed.

The exportation of gold to Europe was also claimed as the result of the continuance of the Sherman act; yet it has not been repealed and gold is returning more rapidly and in larger amounts than before it left.

The refusal to supply the government with more gold coin was also urged as a reason for it, and the issue of $379,000,000 of bonds was urged as the only way to restore confidence. The bonds were not issued, yet confidence is returning.

Recall each and every cause assigned by the gold-bugs as the cause of the panic and none of them have been removed, yet confidence is returning.

The plan to frighten the people and influence congress to repeal the Sherman act has signally failed in every respect, yet confidence is returning.

The Covert March of the Tyrant.

Montgomery, Ala., Herald.

No people ever lost their liberty at one foul swoop. The aggressions of the usurper, the covert march of the tyrant and the stealthy tightening of the cords of the despot are always adroit and seemingly justifiable. His horde of petty tyrants and hirelings are always ready with plausible pleas of public necessity or special demands of the public weal. A monarchy dare not even be advocated by anyone high in authority; yet the incidents to its accomplishment can be openly and notoriously practiced without any effort being made by congress to stop its practice or to punish those guilty of flagrant transgressions which lead to it.

The highest official in the government is abusing his power, prostituting his prerogatives and assuming kingly prerogatives without protest. How long will the unbridled audacity of this man be permitted to trample law under foot, violate his oath of office, assume kingly prerogatives, and defiantly flaunt his usurpation in the face of the people without some representative of the people calling a halt and demanding that law shall be supreme and that every duty and obligation of every public servant shall be faithfully performed.

This is not a political question nor a partisan issue, but law against anarchy, legal authority against usurpation and the supremacy of republican institutions against autocracy and monarchy.

The Prussian State Railroads.

Seattle, Wash., Post-Intelligencer, Rep.

Prussia, a poor country naturally, has made a successful financial experiment in state railroads. Her railroads, built by the state, paid, in 1889-'90, the interest on their cost, the interest on the state debt, and a surplus of $35,000,000. This annual surplus has diminished, but last year it was $22,500,000. In addition the railroads have paid off $137,500,000 of their debt, instead of constantly adding to their cost as all railroads do here. The railroad system of Prussia includes 15,530 miles—about three times the mileage of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy, the Southern Pacific, or the Chicago, St. Paul & Milwaukee. There is not in this country any group of 15,000 miles of railroad which distantly approaches the financial results of the Prussian roads, under official state management.

New Wine in Old Bottles.

New Nation.

A sign of the times is the action of both the democratic and republican parties in Massachusetts this year in borrowing two people's party planks for their platforms, namely: the plank calling for an inheritance tax, and that calling for the Swiss system of the initiative and referendum. This is good for the people's party, but we fear it will prove disastrous for the old parties; for saith not the scripture: "No man also seweth a new piece of cloth on an old garment, else the new piece that filled it taketh away from the old and the rent is made worse. And no man putteth new wine into old bottles, else the new wine doth burst the bottles." *

The squeezing process now going on has reduced property values to panic prices. One dollar is now worth as much property as two dollars were last January, and is still increasing in value. In short, property has no money value in Texas, at present.—Southern Mercury.

OUR HEALTH.

"An Ounce of Prevention Is Worth a Pound of Cure."

Physicians and trained nurses alone fully realize how much sickness and suffering there is in the world. Our hospitals and sanitariums are full of sick people. There is hardly a private residence in which some one of the family is not ailing. With this constant reminder before our eyes of the inestimable value of good health it is surprising that we do not guard our health more jealously. The pleasure of "feeling well," of being free from pains and aches is one of the greatest in life, and those who have healthy constitutions can, by the exercise of reasonable care, live to a good old age and all the time feel well.

Physicians are daily asked not only how the sick may be healed, but how the well may stay well. And they reply that it is largely a question of hygiene—of diet, sleep, exercise, and fresh air. Immunity from many common diseases is largely a question of taking care of one's general health and vigor. Seeds of disease which would find a foothold in an enfeebled frame are repelled by a healthy constitution. To maintain this happy condition wholesome food, abundant exercise, plenty of sleep, and fresh air, personal cleanliness, temperance in all things, and the avoidance of worry are indispensable. Worrying and fretting contribute more towards ill health than is commonly supposed. Persons of cheerful dispositions, of cool temperaments and unimpaired nature enjoy, as a rule, the best of health. Those of a nervous, excitable disposition seem to invite disease by their worryment.

We are at times inclined to scoff at the Chinese. But in some respects they are wiser and more civilized than Americans. In China there are many good physicians, but the Chinese custom of engaging their services differs widely from our own. Well-to-do families there pay physicians so much a year for keeping them well. According to the agreement the physician is to visit them periodically, weekly, or oftener, and is to receive a certain sum at the end of every six months for keeping the family well. If anyone is taken ill the physician must visit the family as often as is necessary, and charge nothing extra. So, it is to the physician's advantage to keep his patients in good health. If this wise custom were only the practice in America undoubtedly there would be much less illness, and physicians would be more welcome visitors at our homes. To those of a frugal turn of mind it may seem rather extravagant to pay a physician for simply looking one over and advising one how "to keep well," but in the end it would prove the wisest, and often the most economical, plan. An experienced physician can give a thousand good suggestions in regard to the preservation of health.

Her Little Mistake.

"What do you think I did this morning?" one summer girl asked another in a cable car recently on their way home from a midsummer shopping jaunt.

"Goodness knows!" ejaculated the other. "You are always doing the unexpected."

"Well," continued the first girl, "I had two things on my mind that I dared not forget—a book I wanted very much and the purchase of a silk waist. So what did I do but walk into a bookstore, go up to the first man clerk I saw and ask:

"Do you know how much silk it takes to make a shirt waist?"

"O!" gasped the other girl. "What did he say?"

"That's the funny part of it. He surveyed me with the utmost seriousness and answered promptly: 'If you want big sleeves it will take five yards; that is, unless the silk is wide.'"

"Of course I was completely stunned, for it had dawned on me what I was doing, but I made a great effort and said gratefully, 'Thank you very much—very much. Now, will you please show me Mrs. Blank's last novel.' Then I bought the book and retired in good order. There would have been no sense in exposing my feeble-mindedness to that clerk, but I'd give a good deal to know how he keeps so well posted on dry goods."

Power of a Blade of Grass.

What may be termed, in the sense of the question, the lifting power of a blade of grass is the force spent in keeping it erect and in recovering from the pressure of the wind. Then, if we take the length of the average blade of grass to be four inches, and its weight two grains Troy, and remember that the upper portion of the blade has to bear the most of the force of the wind, we may take the lifting power as approximately equal to that which would be required to lift the blade of grass three inches from the ground every second. This force, reduced to figures, will be 70 grain-inches per second, or 7,200 an hour. As 7,000 grains Troy equal a pound avoirdupois, this, in twenty-four hours, is equal to a force such as would be required to lift twenty-four and one-eighth pounds one inch from the ground, or one pound twenty-four and one-eighth inches, or a trifle over two feet.

HUMPHREYS'

This PRECIOUS OINTMENT is the triumph of Scientific Medicine.

Nothing has ever been produced to equal or compare with it as a CURATIVE and HEALING APPLICATION. It has been used 40 years and always affords relief and always gives satisfaction.

Cures PILES or HEMORRHOIDS—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding—Itching and Burning; Cracks or Fissures; Fistula in Ano; Worms of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.

WITCH HAZEL OIL

Cures BURNS, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant.

Cures BOILS, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Fistulas, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Scabies or Scald Head. It is infallible.

Cures INFLAMED or CAKED BREASTS and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable.

Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.

Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

Your Stomach Distresses You

after eating a hearty meal, and the result is a chronic case of Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Dyspepsia, or a bilious attack.

RIPANS TABULES

Promote Digestion, Regulate the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Purify the Blood, and are a Positive Cure for Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, and all other Diseases arising from a disordered condition of the Liver and Stomach. They act gently yet promptly, and perfect digestion follows their use.

Ripans Tabules take the place of an Entire Medicine Chest, and should be kept for use in every family.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

1 Package Mending Tissue, mends Stitches, Buttons, etc., better than needle and thread; 1 Package Solder mends all kinds of Tinware; 1 Package of Starch Goss for polishing collars and shirt bosoms; 1 Hair Crimper; 1 Paper Needles, 8 darning worsted, lace, glove, and mending needles; 6 Hat, Shawl, and Carpet Pins; Illustrated Book on Sewing, Knitting, etc.; 100 designs for Ties, Cushions, etc.; 34 Songs, including "Ta-ra, Boom, ta-ra," words, and music; sent by mail, post paid, for $4.00. Address: Howard Mfg. Co., 62 Wash. St. Providence, R. I.

"The World's Fair Hatcher" Send in stamps for new illustrated catalogue. It will pay you. 36 Cents of High Quality. Address: RELIABLE Incubator & Brooder Co., Quincy, - Illinois.

New occasions teach new duties; time must upward still and onward who would keep abreast of Truth."

WATCH FOR THE FIRST NUMBER OF

NEW OCCASIONS

a Monthly Magazine of Social and Industrial Progress, edited by B. F. UNDERWOOD. New Occasions will not be the organ of any party or clique, but will offer a free field for the discussion of living questions. It will ride no hobby, but will help in solving the great problem of securing justice for those who do the work of the world. 10 cents a number; $1.00 a year. No free samples.

New Occasions and any two of the following 50 cent books post paid for $1.00. Circulars free.

The Russian Refugee, a Tale of the Blue Ridge, by H. R. Wilson; 618 pages.

Why Government at All, by W. H. Van Ornum.

The Coming Climax, by L. C. Hubbard.

The Rice Mills of Port Mystery.

An Ounce of Prevention, Jacobson.

Liberty and Life, by E. P. Powell.

Inquinto Island, by Hador Genone.

The Last Tenet, by Hador Genone.

The Faith that Makes Faithful, Eight great sermons, by Gannett and Jones.

The Genius of Galilee, an historical novel by Anson Uriel Hancock, 507 pages.

John Auburnton, Novelist, Hancock.

The Auroraphone, by Cyrus Cole.

Lessons from the World of Matter and the World of Man, Theodore Parker.

Send six cents in stamps for a catalogue, and a copy of W. H. Van Ornum's remarkable address, just published, "How we can all get Rich."

Charles H. Kerr & Co., Publishers, 175 Monroe Street, Chicago.

The Rocker-Washer has proved the most satisfactory of any Washer ever placed on the market. It is warranted to wash an ordinary family washing of 100 PIECES IN ONE HOUR, as clean as can be washed on the washboard. Write for price and full description. ROCKER WASHER CO., FT. WAYNE, IND.

Liberal inducements to live agents.

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 31 Broadway, New York.

Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the

Scientific American

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

It is worth the attention of the 100,000 people living within a line drawn from Wabunsee to Snokomo, Waushara Osage City, Wakarusa, Tecumseh, Oskaloosa, Ozawkie, Netawaka, Onaga, Pottawatomie and Wamego, thence to the place of beginning, embracing within this area the county of Shawnee and the city of Topeka, beautiful for situation upon the banks of the classic Kaw. A little to the north lies the village of Menoken, while to the east rises the heights of Tecumseh, to the west is a beautiful undulating sunset country, and to the south is the rich garden-like valley of the placid Shunganunga.

I ask again, is it not worth your attention that DOWNING is making the finest of Pictos, the high artistic finish of which gives such general satisfaction.

617 Kansas Avenue, - TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUGHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & I. U., BURBTON, KANSAS.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.

Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.

Send for Circulars and Prices.

J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by CLARA BEWICK COLBY.

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopaedia of History. Illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla binding, price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete in one volume, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and character of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopaedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, T. R. Ontario.

"A vast amount of trustworthy matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stand long on the bookshelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cents for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopaedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manilla binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable Cook Book has 320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following: Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Cakes and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuits, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, and gives information about those things which ladies particularly wish to know, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest Fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to Housekeepers; charming and helpful talks with Mothers; valuable information for lovers of Flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra-fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

JOHNSON & FIELD CO.

RACINE, WISCONSIN.

The "Racine" Farm and Warehouse Fanning Mills, Land Rollers and Broadcast Seeders, ELEVATOR MACHINERY and SUPPLIES, Gas and Steam Engines.

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

Our line of BICYCLES consists of over 30 different sizes and models, HIGH AND MEDIUM GRADE from $20.00 to $170.00, for every class of riders.

We guarantee to give you the best value for the money, and guarantee every wheel. Don't buy a Bicycle until you see our catalogue and get our prices.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

TEN REASONS

FOR USING

DOBBINS ELECTRIC SOAP.

THE REASON WHY it is BEST from a sanitary point of view, is because of its absolute purity.

" " " it is unscented, is because nothing is used in its manufacture that must be hidden or disguised.

" " " it is cheapest to use, is because it is harder and dryer than ordinary soap, and does not waste away; also because it is not filled with rosin and clay as make-weights.

" " " no boiling of clothes is needed, is because there is no adulteration in it—it being absolutely pure, can do its own work.

" " " it leaves clothes washed with it whiter and sweeter than any other soap, is because it contains no adulteration to yellow them.

" " " it washes flannels without shrinking, bringing them out soft, white and fleecy, is because it is free from rosin, which hardens, yellows and mats together all woolen fibres, making them harsh and coarse.

" " " three bars of it will make a gallon of elegant white soft-soap if simply shaved up and thoroughly dissolved by boiling in a gallon of water, is that it contains pure and costly ingredients found in no other soap.

" " " it won't injure the finest lace or the most delicate fabric, is that all these ingredients are harmless.

" " " we paid $50,000 for the formula twenty-five years ago, is that we knew there was no other soap like it.

" " " so many millions of women use it is that they have found it to be the best and most economical, and absolutely unchanging in quality.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR IT.

DOBBINS SOAP MFG. CO.,

SUCCESSORS TO

I. L. CRAGIN & CO.,

CHICAGO, NEW YORK, BOSTON,

PHILADELPHIA AND CINCINNATI.

WORK FOR US

a few days, and you will be startled at the unexpected success that will reward your efforts. We positively have the best business to offer an agent that can be found on the face of this earth. $45.00 profit on $75.00 worth of business is being easily and honorably made by and paid to hundreds of men, women, boys, and girls in our employ. You can make money faster at work for us than you have any idea of. The business is so easy to learn, and instructions so simple and plain, that all succeed from the start. Those who take hold of the business reap the advantage that arises from the sound reputation of one of the oldest, most successful, and largest publishing houses in America. Secure for yourself the profits that the business so readily and handsomely yields. All beginners succeed grandly, and more than realize their greatest expectations. Those who try it find exactly as we tell them. There is plenty of room for a few more workers, and we urge them to begin at once. If you are already employed, but have a few spare moments, and wish to use them to advantage, then write us at once (for this is your grand opportunity), and receive full particulars by return mail. Address, TRUE & CO., Box No. 400, Augusta, Me.

LADIES

This is just what you want. The "Knap" is a perfect syringe. Notice there is an inlet pipe to which is attached a bulb or fountain, the outlet pipe has four feet of rubber tubing. The three great points to make for the "Knap" are: First—that every part can be easily cleaned; Second—it can be used when lying down, without soiling the bed or clothing, as the syringe absolutely prevents leakage; Third—hotter water can be used with perfect comfort with this syringe than can possibly be borne with any other, as the outlet can prevent the heated pipe from coming in contact with the sensitive parts. As hot water stimulates healthy action, physicians universally recommend the "Knap." One writes, "Just what I have been looking for, for years." Another says, "Cannot see where it can be improved." Another, "A boon to womanhood as it admits the use of hot water, where others do not." Put up in several different styles, fountain bag, bulb syringe, or nozzle only with escape tube, also with combination hot water bottle which can be used as a fountain. Best quality of rubber only used. Printed guarantee with each one sold. Agents make big money. One lady writes, "Made $4.00 in one afternoon." Another $4.00. Exclusive territory given. Five Thousand Sold Last Year. Send stamps for descriptive circular, price-list, terms and outfit for agents, in sealed envelope. First-class Lady Cleaners Wanted in every city and town. Chicago Medical Specialty House, Prop., 323 Dearborn St., Chicago.

A MAN

NAOQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Or Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining-Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Points of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address E. ST. JOHNS, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Mgr., Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

FREE

$10.00 worth of lovely Music for Forty Cents. Full size Sheet Music of the brightest, liveliest and most popular selections, both vocal and instrumental, gotten up in the most elegant manner, including four large size portraits.

CARMENCITA, the Spanish Dancer, PADEREWSKI, the Great Pianist, ADELINA PATTI and MINNIE SELIGMAN CUTTING.

ADDRESS ALL ORDERS TO THE NEW YORK MUSICAL ECHO CO., Broadway Theatre Building, New York City.

CANVASSERS WANTED.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND

TANSY PILLS

Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail. If your Druggist don't keep them accept no Substitute but send 5c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS. DECEMBER, 1893.

VOL. XII, NO. 4.

DAYS OF EVIL.

PART I.

Is't true dear Lord that on this ball terrestrial,
Thy righteous kingdom nowhere now is found;
Greed, avarice, and sins too often bestial
Seethe, mark and mar, and everywhere abound, Thy ride rears its head, e'en in the courts we call thy temple,
Envy, bitterness and strife there find a place;
And in the world's wide ranks too ample
Injustice rude still shows her ugly face.

Alas our pained hearts shrink to find too much of truth
Within this kernel lies, and turn to thee
For consolation strong, that yet forsooth
The day shall dawn, when righteous shall rule humanity.
Thy kingdom come, is breathed by million souls,
And humble though the supplicants be,
And eyeing time increasing rolls
Though distant seems that gladsome day, yet wait we Lord on Thee.
some earnest hearts presage the good is nigh
The heaven worketh in the ruler mass.
O, burst the bands! Divine One at the cry
Of surging woes, and let these days of evil quickly pass.

THY KINGDOM COME.

PART II.

Thy kingdom come! O, wondrous words,
What mean we, as we pray them day by day?
Doth ought of their divinest import speak,
Or do we tell them off, as parrots may?
Great Father! help us that we strive with reverent mind,
To comprehend more clearly what Thy Son hath taught:
Give us an inspiration swift and keen,
Broad, deep and strong; with pitiless draught
To do thy bidding here, as angels do in heaven.
Thy kingdom come! That surely meaneth love!
Love that shall fill all hearts to overflowing brim.
An ever active fount of the sublimest good,
Leaving no room for slime of serpent grim,
Nor poison's stilet, or noxious weed
Wherewith his hideous progeny delights to feed.
Thy kingdom come! That meaneth life;
Life to the lovely plants of Paradise
Without a faded leaf, a blighted bloom!
Life to the spirit's fairest fruits of goodness size
Or frailest vine with tendrils weak that find no room
Beneath the stripe of untoward winds from changing climes.

Thy kingdom come! Yes love, and life;
Light, life and love, commingle in the everlasting Son
Whose reign shall stretch to farthest space,
Till universal homage to His will be done.
Haste then, O, haste! approach with quickening pace,
And place Thy foot upon the head of earth's unequal foe
Till not a vestige of his force remain, but Thou art all in all.

MRS. SARAH HARGRAVES.

A NEW STAR IN THE WEST.

The telegram announcing the result of the vote on the suffrage amendment in Colorado was cheering news to the advocates of political equality and the liberation of woman from the influence of ancient customs.

Five thousand majority leaves no uncertain feeling about the popularity of the amendment, indeed, the fact that party affiliations were not recognized in this campaign gives us just cause for rejoicing. When the popular mind recognizes that principle and justice is about party policies and prejudices, the tide against universal suffrage is sure to turn as it did in this instance.

The Woman's Journal gives us a bit of interesting history in regard to the work in the Centennial state.

The American Suffrage Association, appreciating the importance of securing a footing in the territory before the meeting of the constitutional convention in 1875, appointed by Mrs. Margaret W. Campbell, now Iowa's beloved pioneer worker, to go to Colorado and advance the interests of the cause. Mrs. and Mr. Campbell traveled over a large portion of the state in a light buggy, and when the constitutional convention met the result of their work was three important concessions. School suffrage, that the first legislature should submit women suffrage to the voters and that any future legislature might extend suffrage to women, subject to a popular vote. On this last provision, largely depends the result of the present success.

Not by any means should we overlook the part of our heroic Carrie Lane Chapman, in this final campaign. For six weeks she has worked continuously, giving addresses and crystalizing and uniting the scattered forces and adding new recruits to the movement. All this work was done without salary or compensation.

We will watch the result of the victory in Colorado with much interest, trusting that our new star may prove a beacon light to the watchers amid the mists of conservatism and indifference; that from its benign influence we may reach the ideal it represents—a true Republic.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION CONVENTION.

A mass convention of the Sixth Congressional District E. S. A., met at Osborne, Nov. 24th and 25th, pursuant to a call from the district president, Mrs. A. A. Welch. The first session was held Friday evening in the M. E. church. Mrs. Welch stated in a few well chosen words the object of the convention, and pointing to the rear of the rostrum where hung a beautiful flag on which only two stars shone on its azure field, with a third star just emerging into sight, said, "Behold Kansas coming to take her place by the side of her sister states, Wyoming and Colorado." She then introduced Mrs. Laura M. Johns who spoke in the interest of woman suffrage. The audience listened with rapt attention while she brought forth argument and story, both pathetic and ludicrous, to show the inequality of the sexes in the race of life. After this came a fine recitation by Miss Georgia Linton, of Cedarvale, Kansas.

The second session convened in the same place, Saturday, at 10 o'clock a. m. After prayer by Mrs. Johns, the president appointed the necessary committees, and the balance of the forenoon was devoted to an informal conversation on plan of work. The most harmonious feeling prevailed, party prejudice was for the time laid aside, and all worked in unison for one common cause. The meeting then adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m., to give the committees time to report.

The afternoon hour found the officers in their chairs, and business was resumed. Excellent papers were read by Mrs. C. W. Smith of Stockton, Mrs. Alice G. Young of Downs, also one from Miss Katie Chapin of Downs. An interesting autograph letter from Susan B. Anthony was read, in which she gave encouraging words and timely hints on manner of campaign work.

The committee on "plan of work" advised a thorough canvass in which the work was to be carried into every town and voting precinct in the district, and every woman who could possibly do so, be a bearer of the suffrage gospel. The resolutions pledged the convention to support in a non-partisan spirit the pending amendment. The "grippe" epidemic was prevailing in the town and many who had expected to take part in the convention were unable to be present.

To Mrs. Welch, district president, is due much credit for the success of this convention. She spared no personal effort to awaken an interest all over the district.

After singing the Doxology, the good-bys were said and the convention adjourned.

A cordial invitation was then given everyone present to attend a reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. McBride, in the evening.

Mrs. M. H. JORDAN, Sec.,
Alton, Kansas.

THAT GLORIFYING HALO.

The Democrats of Clay county, in convention assembled, passed the following resolution, which is surely worth a wider circulation, for it is a curiosity of its kind, and it is not often that "poor, weak woman" has the opportunity of ascertaining how much she is "glorified" by man—on paper. Here is the resolution:

"The home where joy is duty, and love is law, is the dearest and sweetest institution in existence."

"Woman, who is the queen of this heart empire, is our special pride and joy, as she has been for three thousand years last past. Her universe is of the widest realm of sentiment, and glorifies with tender halo all that makes life worth living. Her mission is to intercede for the erring, comfort the unfortunate, encourage faint of purpose, uplift the fallen,

KANSAS

WOMEN!

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

THE THIRD STAR OF THE WEST: Wyoming, Colorado and Kansas.

The Great Amendment Campaign Now Open.

The question of Equal Suffrage to be settled November, 1894, when Kansas, like Wyoming and Colorado, will give full enfranchisement to women.

The "FARMER'S WIFE" the Leading Exponent.

The Editor and Publisher has sufficient income to support themselves. The FARMER'S WIFE pays no salaries. EVERY DOLLAR received will go towards carrying the

AMENDMENT To a Successful Issue.

GET US A CLUB!

And help the cause along. Don't delay. Get the FARMER'S WIFE in every family at once. Send for Subscription Blanks and Club rates.

Single Subscriptions, 50 cents a year.

EMMA D. PACK,

TOPEKA,

KANSAS.

kiss away the tears of grief, make pleasant the ways of man, whose ministering angel she is indeed, touch with deft fingers and limitless tact the asperities of every day life, and make them as grassy paths beside the shady brooks. But she never was intended by fostering evolution, which has made her the complete product of ages of tender solicitude, to go into politics. Its cleanest caress would pollute; its very touch would contaminate. Hence we protest against any measure which in the slightest has this for its object, and are unanimously opposed to woman suffrage."

How very kind and considerate of them to map out missions for us. And to think that for three thousand years—and that is a good long spell—we have been the special pride and joy of man, and we have been "glorified with tender halo all that makes life worth living."

I have heard, at least, of a good many women who have considerable more to do in every day life than to sit around "glorifying with tender halo," or anything of that sort. I have heard of now and then one who has unfortunately been of a more practical business turn of mind and who has taken in washing to support the family, but then she may have been glorifying or casting a halo, while she was doing so. Probably she was.

Samantha Allen, in her book, "Sweet Cicely," tells of the man who "just loved to see his wife churn," as it showed off her beautiful arms to such good advantage. He sat on the porch, and read the newspaper, kindly reading portions aloud to her for her instruction while she churned, "anon or thereabouts" casting admiring glances at her as she worked, and praising her for her beauty of form. The same man always laid in bed while his wife got up, split the kindlings, made fire, milked the cows, and got breakfast ready, being careful all the time not to awaken him, for he assured her that in his morning nap he was always dreaming lovely dreams of her and did not wish to have them disturbed.

Such a wife casts a halo, no doubt, but really and truly, such flattery is enough to make one sick, especially, when it is carried out in every day life. If there are those who object to equal suffrage, I beg of them to make some other and better excuse in the future.

That woman "was never intended by fostering evolution which has made her the complete product of ages of tender solicitude," to go into politics, is not so clear to most women as it seems to be to those around whom she has been casting her halo, and woman, who suffers the same punishment as man for violated laws, has some claim to a voice in the making of the laws which condemn her, and if, as was asserted, "the cleanest caress of politics" is so polluting, and its "very touch contaminating," surely our nation must be on the verge of moral wreck, and it is high time that a new element was introduced, and an effort made to cleanse it of its foul pollution.

Were I a man, I believe I should be loth to confess that such a state of things has been brought about by associations of men. I would not care to give women such an advantage in argument as that my sex had made of politics such a cesspool of pollution that its very touch would contaminate anybody.

Really, now, I would like to take a peep into the homes of those Democratic men who resolved so charmingly (?) I would like to see if there is a halo around them, I have seen picture halos, but never a real one. I should like to know if they are very much more angelic themselves than the average of men, and if their wives are all so tenderly cared for that none of the stern realities of life ever reach them, though I noticed that one item of her mission was defined as making "pleasant the ways of man, making them as grassy paths beside the shady brooks." Probably the rest of the mission was intended to revolve around this one point, and give her plenty to do. I should think it would.

Were I to venture a guess as to the author of that resolution, I should say he was either a widower looking around for another wife, or else the man Samantha Allen described, who had such lovely morning dreams.

Mrs. D. L. WEATHERBY.

ENFRANCHISED.

The Kansas Farmers For Us.

The Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union of Kansas, held their annual convention in this city December 6th, 7th and 8th. During their meeting they passed the following resolution, which speaks for itself:

WHEREAS, We acknowledge the truism that taxation without representation is tyranny, and that governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed. Therefore,

Be it Resolved, That we use all honorable means to crystalize this sentiment into fact, and enfranchise a sex that has for more than a century been taxed and has supported a government in which she has no control.

The Farmers' Alliance, though dead, (as the Republicans say) are still able to pass some good resolutions. Let every woman in Kansas stand by the party that stands by them.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE WORLD OF WOMEN

A GOLDEN GRIST FOR OUR FAIR READERS.

Education Does Not Tend to Make Young Women Averse to Marriage—Cured Her Hubby of a Bad Habit—The Use of Slang.

Educated Women and Marriage.

A CORRESPONDENT asked the New York Press if it is not true that thorough education tends to make young women averse to the idea of marriage. The Press says there can be but one answer to such a question. Of course it does not. Why should it? Does a thorough education make men unwilling to marry? Is it not rather true that in all civilized countries education has developed sentiment and generosity among men, that it has increased their admiration and respect for the feminine sex and made them better husbands? What education does for men in that respect it surely must do for women. There is no fear that the world will ever be educated beyond marriage. The potent attraction of sex will last while the universe endures. Men and women will continue to be drawn toward each other by that mighty and subtle force which we call love. Education is not the foe of affection, but its surest friend and ally; for education creates refinement and refinement glorifies and ennobles love. The theory that men are repelled by learning in the women they admire won't stand the test of examination. Every man of capacity and common sense will seek out the woman of education for his wife in preference to the woman whose mind is undisciplined and vacant. Fortunately the opportunities for mental discipline and improvement are so varied and so accessible in the United States to-day that there are few bright, determined girls who cannot gain for themselves a good education if they really desire to do so. Our correspondent need not worry about the imaginary pernicious effects of feminine education on marriage. American young women will not lose the womanly qualities that constitute their greatest charm by acquiring knowledge about themselves and the universe in which they live. When the right man comes they will be as ready to accept his heart and hand as ever their great-grandmothers were. And if education enable them to support themselves in honorable independence until the right man makes his appearance, so much the better for the human race.

A Tactful Wife.

I know of a nice, tactful woman, hardly more than a bride, whose husband did not come home one night. But he did the next morning, and stammered apologies about "business," "man from the West" and other such matters that had nothing to do with it. To his great surprise and intense relief she accepted his explanations sweetly, unquestioningly. Another night fell. Anxious to make further amends for his tardiness, he came in fairly early, expecting to be met with the usual sweet smile of his wife. But the sweet smile was not there; neither was the wife nor any word of explanation, nor did she return. An awful night of it that man spent, and when the little lady returned the next morning he was ready to heap scorn or anything else handy upon her apologetic head. But she didn't apologize—not she. Sweetly she bade him good morning, went about her usual duties amiably, but vouchsafed not the slightest explanation. The man went off by himself and thought awhile. When he came back in an hour he was a changed man. He told her so, said she did perfectly right, and he was a brute. Then they made up in the good, old-fashioned way. He said it should never happen again, and it hasn't. The woman who keeps her temper in spite of knowing and insisting upon what she wants, gains her point. That man is just as proud as he can be of his "bright wife."—Chicago Times.

Slang.

The following, to which I heartily subscribe, has been sent me: "A high school girl in the full meridian of her teens, if not a little past, shocked her father the other day by exclaiming: 'I am as hungry as a dog.' He begged her to substitute wolf or even hound for dog, but she declined, saying they did not express the degree of hunger she felt. I am sure she never heard such an expression about her home, and must have caught it from some would-be smart girl, though it savors more of the masculine. Woman ought to consider herself the guardian of verbal refinement, which is suffering impairment in these rapid material times. She should hold aloft the standard of elegance for her brothers and her lovers to keep them from indulging in vulgarities of speech. Great are her example and influence for or against slang, especially for. When she stoops to vulgarity a man drops to it like a shot."—Courier-Journal.

A Woman Journalist.

Mme. Edmond Adam is perhaps the leading woman journalist in Paris. She is politician, author and editor. She has been honored by the municipality of Paris in having her name given to one of the streets of the capital, an honor rarely bestowed on a person during his lifetime. It isn't much of a street, to be sure, the Rue Juliette Lamber, but it is young, and may grow some day. Under Napoleon III. Mme. Adam had a salon in opposition to the imperial government. She was young and handsome then, with soft, pretty hair and bright blue eyes. She was an intense Republican and a great friend of Garibaldi. She is a good speaker, and can talk on almost any subject. Her dinners are decidedly interesting. One-fourth of her guests are usually officers of the French army, another fourth is composed of political men, and the others are artists and literary people. The dinners are followed by receptions, which are attended by Cabinet Ministers, Deputies, Senators, diplomats and journalists.

Who Goes First?

I have been consulted by my charming hostess as to the order of precedence to be followed at informal dinners in this country. I find all Newport somewhat stirred up over this question. The presence of a royalty and the establishment of the Paucettes there have led to various complications in other households. I gave the rules for English precedence in a former paper, and it is needless to repeat that royalty always goes first. As for the rest, I will simply quote a remark I heard last summer, which amused me greatly and is more than ever to the point. Lady R. asked a clever New York man how the vexatious question was determined in America. She wanted to know in what order people were sent to dinner. "In the order of cash," was the reply.—Vogue.

A Busy Woman.

Mrs. E. J. Nicholson is said to be the only woman in the world who owns, edits, manages and publishes a great daily newspaper. She was first a contributor of poetry to the columns of the New Orleans Picayune, which she now owns, under the name of Pearl Rivers, and some years ago was made literary editor of the paper by Col. A. M. Holbrook, its editor and proprietor, thus being the pioneer newspaper woman in the South. After a time she became the wife of Col. Holbrook, and at his death inherited the paper, much encumbered by debt, with a dubious outlook. She assumed the responsibility courageously, and, with able assistants, has put it again on a substantial basis. A few years ago she married George Nicholson, who was business manager of the paper.

Sexes in Europe.

The Woman's Suffrage Association of Belgium, shows by the latest census held in Europe that the continent's population comprises 170,818,561 males and 174,914,119 females, the latter's plurality being 4,095,558. Among sixteen European nations the female sex preponderates, most strongly in Portugal and Norway, least in Belgium and France. In six countries—Italy, Roumania, Serbia, Bulgaria, Greece, and Bosnia—the male sex is in the majority. In Italy the proportion is 995 to 1,000, in Bosnia 895 to 1,000.

Lacked Two Votes.

The bill before the Michigan Legislature appropriating $20,000 to a gymnasium for the women students at the State University lacked two votes in the House. The House economy was not sound. Comparatively speaking, young women who are to be the mothers of the race, need, rather than young men, the advantages of a well-conducted gymnasium.

Intermittent.

Dr. Thirdly—Sorry your husband isn't out to church to-day; is he ill? Mrs. Hicks—No, he isn't ill, exactly—just one of his weekly attacks of being homesick.

Tempted to Give It Up.

A foreigner expresses himself after the following fashion on the absurdities of the English language:

"When I discovered that if I was quick I was fast, if I stood firm I was fast, if I spent too freely I was fast, I was discouraged; but when I came across the sentence, 'The first one won one one-dollar prize,' I was tempted to give up English and learn some other language."

WRAPS FOR WINTER.

WHAT TO WEAR WHEN BITING FROSTS COME.

The Subject of Outdoor Wraps Is One Calculated to Reduce the Average Woman to a State of Utter Bewilderment—Varied in Style.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondent.

ROARING winds and biting frosts must be guarded against and stylishly, mind you. But there comes the rub, for the subject of outdoor wraps is one calculated to reduce the average woman to a state of utter bewilderment, so varied are they in cut, fabric, trimming, and adaptation to the many functions of society. They are classed for the carriage, street, church, reception—everything, in fact, and are getting to be almost as eloquent in meaning as the graded width of crape on a fashionable mourner's costumes. In some things they are alike, as all are much longer and fuller over the skirts than formerly, and all have the collar over the shoulders, and high collar at the neck faced and trimmed so as to be turned down at will. The great thing to be achieved is width of shoulders and of hips, especially if it be of the close fitting kind. Nothing but the abnormally slender waist saves the ments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading fashionably dressed woman from looking the amazon when she puts on her coat, buttoned closely, with collar fluted and crinkled and skirts fluted on like the pipes of a church organ, or, less poetically speaking, a half-open umbrella. Skirts are correct, for sometimes you can see three of them fastened one over the other, to a close fitting body. These voluminous skirts, with the big sleeves drooping at the shoulder under the heavy collar, the collar waving in and out with fullness, make a moving spectacle over which one wonders at the inventions of genius.

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be satisfied. Broad shoulders, wide hips, and a clear conscience—all these and even a depleted purse could not make you unhappy.

The ruling black and white is used quite often in children's cloaks. One stylish little creature is remembered wearing a cloak to her heels, being lined with white satin. Black satin cloaks have for some years been stylish for children of 4 and up, and this season they are also worn with insertions of white lace over white satin. A tiny creature of 6 wears a great velvet hat in black, with seven big drooping white plumes curling about her face. This with a black velvet cloak made with a cape ermine-lined was enough to turn the eyes of all the other little girls green with envy, but, bless their hearts, they don't care what they wear; it is the mothers who suffer in their minds when their own particular baby is outshone. A less elegant but more serviceable garment was for a school-girl, and was a pretty coat made double-breasted of heavy felt twill in a dull tobacco-brown. A collar of long

Coats are made of velvet, plush, beaver, and heavy diagonal cloth, or satin, as the taste indicates. Black is the color most in vogue in coats to be worn with all costumes. Black and white combined is the reigning taste just now. For this effect ermine is again brought into use as a trimming in capes, collar-ettes, collars, and bands, so the woman who can produce this costly fur from among her treasures is conscious of being ultra-stylish in dress, as well as of wearing a badge of royalty. In the initial picture there is shown a coat with a cape, both made of blue cheviot. The foundation coat has the regulation sleeve, and is, of course, double-breasted. The circular cape is joined to a round yoke, and both cape and yoke are finished by ruffles of cheviot put on with a heading astrakhan, big sleeves and black-pearl buttons completed it. It was loose-fronted and fitted into the back with a strap belt. The skirts of the coat reached the knees, and it was lined throughout with black satin. Such a coat worn with a plainly made gown with gored skirt finished with several rows of black braid, and with bodice plain but for big sleeves, would make an ideal school rig. Too much cannot be said in favor of dressing the school miss of 15 very simply. The passing vagaries of the styles should leave no impression upon the quiet prettiness of her dresses and cloaks. Her garments should fit trimly, but not tightly; colors should be dark, and material heavy and good, without being rich. To allow a school-girl of 15 or 17 to overdress, is to rob her of all the delight her pretty dresses and furbelows should bring her when in a few years she comes out, to say nothing of the injury done to figure and carriage, by the wearing of unsuitably made clothes.

Dear little hoods, made loose and soft of dark velvet, lined with soft light satin and edged with fur, are worn with evening wraps. Nothing could be more becoming to a young, round face than such a hood drawn close, and nothing more gentle to an older or more faded one, if the hood is worn loose and drawn forward, so the face is prettily shadowed, yet emphasized by a harmonizing color in the hood's lining.

Copyright, 1892.

and garnished with three rows of black braid which also comes down the front. Capes are the prettiest outside garments and best suited for general use. The second figure shows one made of the light tan cloth, which still holds its place. It has an elaborate collar-ette of the fichu style, edged with crinkled Thibet goat fur. This fur, by the way, is used in black and white, and is also dyed in colors.

The next sketch shows a three-quarter length cloak that is belted in to fit tightly in the back so as to form deep boxpleats at the bottom. The collar may be made of the same material as the cloak—which here is of the fleecy cloth so much in vogue—or of satin, velvet or moire. It is sewed on full to make it flare at the shoulders and is trimmed with otter. The neck band is also otter, which stands up about the neck and chin in the regulation style. These things are rich and costly in appearance, yet the economical woman can get the effect at slight expense by making her outside garment of two materials. A close bodice, double or single breasted, with several full circular skirts flaring at the bottom, and a very obstreperous collar-ette may be manufactured of remnants, rich in themselves, but inexpensive. The big sleeves, the collar-ette and one of the skirts may be of a material different from that of the body, and style and economy both be

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

Cribbing Corn in the Field—How to Keep Frost Out of the Cellar—Fruit May Be Had at Little Cost—Farm Notes.

From City to Farm.

Some one has said that there is a tendency in certain quarters to use the word "practical" as a shield to protect themselves against the necessity of brain work. It is often used to excuse our own ignorance. Now this is true of quite a number of farmers living near me. There are quite a few city men who have bought farms around here in the last six years. Most of them don't know a great deal about farming by practice, but they know it all in theory and do lots of experimenting. They generally take to stock, as raising corn and potatoes is too slow for them. I am free to say that if they stick it out for a year they generally stay with us. Still a good many "peter out," and some "practical" farmer picks up a farm with good buildings, fences, trees, etc., at his own price. So plenty of my neighbors are disposed to laugh at those new-comers. They seem to forget the successful ones, and these, as I think it over, especially the fruit-growers, are men who have had good business training in the cities. I know that these men plan better, make every hour count for more, and cut down the small expenses that lots of us country-born farmers don't seem to notice at all. I started to say that we ought to encourage this coming from the towns to farms. It will give us many new ideas and most generally kind and agreeable neighbors. There is room for more.—American Farmer.

How to Keep Frost Out of the Cellar.

It has been my plan to keep frost out of my vegetable cellar by keeping a lighted kerosene stove there during the coldest nights. I began this plan about a dozen years ago and it has worked well. I use one of the largest patterns, as my cellar is a large one. If a farmer has no kerosene stove at hand, on an emergency he can raise the temperature of his cellar from near freezing to seventy degrees in a few minutes by saturating a dozen old newspapers with kerosene and burning these in coal hods, two at a time. Have the kerosene poured on them just sufficient to saturate.

By using two hods the unconsumed fragments in the one fire can be put in the other before it is lighted, which will insure there being no fire there when repacked with paper. The precaution needed is to have a clear space above and around the hods of six feet and be sure that there is no fire left in the hods, and that its temperature is not at ignitish heat when pouring the kerosene on the paper. A quart used in this way will in a few minutes raise the temperature of a cellar of average size thirty or more degrees. It is a dangerous plan in the hands of a careless man, but a careful one may be able sometimes to save himself from a loss of hundreds of dollars by its timely use.—J. H. Gregory, in Grange Homes.

Winter Care of Sheep.

I have learned by experience that success in sheep husbandry depends largely on proper housing, feeding, and general management during fall and winter. Have attained success as follows: 1. Avoid as much as possible exposure to inclement weather. 2. Don't crowd too many sheep into small inclosures, which is detrimental to thrift. 3. Winter feed, bright clover hay and corn fodder for bulk, and for grain rations equal parts in bulk of oats, corn, and wheat bran, in a ration of ten quarts per feed twice a day to forty head. In addition, double handful of oil meal once daily. 4. All weak sheep feed separately (especially cared for). All breeding ewes separated from main flock at least ten days before yearning, to become accustomed to new quarters. 5. Regular watering indispensable to thrift.—National Stockman.

Cribbing in the Field.

It saves a good deal of labor in husking corn to throw the ears in a box as they are husked. Some will fall outside when husking is attempted, but it is easier to pick up the scattering than to leave all on the ground. There is a further saving in the fact that these boxes at night may be piled one on another to the height of four, five or six tiers, and a couple of wide boards laid lengthwise of the crib will protect them from rain or snow. Those who grow sweet corn for seed often provide boxes to hold their entire crop, and leave the corn thus cribbed in the field until it is dried out enough to market. With slatted boxes built up one row wide corn will dry out very fast. The boxes need not be very expensive.

Leaves for Bedding.

If a farmer grows grain he has no need to collect fallen leaves in the woods for either bedding or manure. They are not better for their purpose than is straw, and their manurial value is not so great. The tree leaves that fall in the woods are needed where they fall, not merely for manure for the tree, but to form a mulch and protect the soil from deep freezing. The feeding roots of trees in forests are near the surface. Even falls of snow and a mulch of leaves protect them so long as the forest is left alone. The leaves are not worth the labor of gathering for their manurial value. They may sometimes be used by farmers who have no straw for bedding purposes.

Sowing Clover.

When you come to the time of sowing clover do not go by any arbitrary rule as to amount of seed. The amount needed for an acre depends upon the soil and the time of sowing. If all the seed sown there is enough seed in three quarts to make a fine stand. Properly a less amount would be sufficient if this could be insured, but it must be remembered that even under the best conditions all the seeds do not germinate. Many plants fail to get rooted, and of those which do start a great number are afterwards killed by heat and drouth, frost, and insects. The later one sows the more seed will be needed, as the soil is not so favorable for germination as it is earlier. Many farmers use only a bushel to eight acres, and they wonder why they do not have a full stand. The reason is that they had not enough seed to satisfy all the losses and yet leave enough seed to produce the stand. A bushel to four acres is a safer allowance, although that may be a little more than is often needed. Perhaps a bushel to five acres is as near as we can get for the average land.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Light Stables.

It is important to have light stables. Light is always conducive to health, either for man or animals. An illustration was made by a stockman on two calves sixty days old, the one weighing 180 pounds was put in a light stable, and another weighing 182 pounds, was put in a dark stable. They were fed exactly the same and given the same care in every respect, and after three months' time they were again weighed. The one in the dark stable weighed 360 pounds and the one in the light stable weighed 430 pounds. Here is a very marked difference, and it is attributable solely to the effect which light has on the health and growth of young stock.—Independent.

Fruit at Little Cost.

Those who own but little land, or who are able to plant but few trees, may still make provision for a fine future supply. Let the owner set off a small portion of ground for a small orchard or fruit garden, even if he cannot plant it at once. He may procure two or three or half a dozen trees, and set them out in line. The needed care for this number need not interrupt his other business for a few years, when they will begin to bear. These few first sorts may be early or autumn apples, which when they begin to show their rich promise will convey substantial enjoyment to the family who have watched their growth. In each coming season more may be added, and in time a handsome and thrifty orchard will occupy the ground. If pains are taken to plant only the very best which may be done by setting only a few at a time, an orchard of choice fruit will be the result.

The Stability of Dairying.

Dairy products, despite all commercial panics, have held their price better than any others. This is partly perhaps because the drought in many sections lessened the production of milk, butter, and cheese. But it is true also that taking a series of years together dairy products vary in price less than any others that the farmers can produce, and the business is, therefore, safer than most other kinds of farming. The product can be cheapened by selecting the best dairy stock and weeding out animals that prove inferior.

Farm Notes.

Mature horses are best for family drivers. Even when well broken a horse is less reliable before he is seven years old than afterwards. He is also more subject to colic and other troubles.

In some classes of farm products, over production has not so much to do with the depression of prices as has poor quality. This applies equally to products so widely different as cattle and fruit.

Keep the horse hungry is the advice of good horsemen. By regular feeding of just what the horse will eat up clean they need never have the colic, which is usually from over-eating, or from eating sour feed left in the box.

Land too rough for cultivation should either be seeded with good grasses for sheep pasture or planted with timber or fruit trees. There is comparatively little land which we are warranted in permitting to remain absolutely idle.

A small farmer can hardly afford to load himself up with expensive machinery for cultivating every separate crop. Very often the farmers of the neighborhood can unite to advantage in such purchases. Practice co-operation when you can.

REAL RURAL READING

WILL BE FOUND IN THIS DEPARTMENT.

Directions for Packing Apples—How to Preserve Fence Posts—Fattening Steers—Banking Up Cellars—Notes About the Farm.

Packing Apples.

The President of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association gives the following directions for packing apples: Choose a solid place in the ground, and place a barrel upon a solid piece of plank. Lay the first course of apples with the stem down. The packer should not take especial samples for this course, but take them as they come and place them so as to make a solid row in the bottom. The next row should also be put in carefully, with the blossom end down. After that, as each basketful is put in, the barrel should be carefully shaken down on that plank. When the packer comes to the top of the barrel he evens them off according to the variety. One variety will press down closer than another, and that is where a little judgment and experience are required. A man must know very well how he is packing in order to know how many to put in the barrel—whether he will fill it to the chine, an inch above the chine, or further. Then the last row has to be placed so as to be in an oval position before you put the press on, with the stems up, so that they will press down evenly and level, and afterward on opening the barrel you can not tell at what end you commenced. That is when a barrel is packed properly and it will carry and carry thoroughly.

Fattening Steers.

One of the best ways of fattening steers, says Benton Gabbert, is to commence on good grass with pumpkins. The best pumpkins can be grown by planting between the apple rows where the sun shines. The vines cover the ground, keep down weeds and are a benefit to the trees. But I have digressed. The steers soon learn to love them, and a carload of steers will eat a large wagon-load daily. Commence with a little corn with the pumpkins, increase slowly, for the steers will eat corn sparingly, until you have them on full feed. When on full feed, let them: water in trough should be handy. This is necessary, a full-fed steer is very lazy, and will suffer for water if it is a bad place or far to go, and when he does go will drink too much. A water fountainer is the worst fountainer, and only happens when water is troublesome to get. The steer must be kept comfortable—a roomy shed with hay loft above. Hay given each time you feed sparingly, with a dry bed to rest on, makes the model feeding pen.

Watering the Cows.

Cows in full flow of milk must of necessity drink a great deal of water. Therefore warm the water in winter to about 60 to 65 degrees, and then your cows will drink all they want at least once a day. But if water is very cold and the weather cold a cow will go sometimes a day or two without tasting water, and when compelled by thirst to drink will gorge herself with ice water before she stops drinking, and for the balance of the day will stand in the yard rounded up and shivering with the cold. Of course she has consumed the greater part of the feed given her in the morning to warm up the ice water she drank and has nothing left to produce her usual amount of milk at evening, and without thinking the dairyman will wonder why his cow does not give more milk. To day I wonder that all these years past I did not know and realize how much cheaper it is to warm water in cold weather for cattle with wood or coal instead of warming with hay and grain.

How to Dry Wet Shoes.

When, without overshoes, you have been caught in a heavy rainstorm, perhaps you have known already what to do with your best kid boots, which have been thoroughly wet through, and which, if left to dry in the ordinary way, will be stiff, brittle, and unlovely? If not, you will be glad to learn what I heard only recently, from one whose experience is of value. First wipe off gently with a soft cloth all surface water and mud; then, while still wet, rub well with kerosene oil, using for the purpose the furred side of Canton flannel. Set them aside till partially dry, when a second treatment with oil is advisable. They may then be deposited in a conveniently warm place, where they will dry gradually and thoroughly. Before applying French kid dressing, give them a final rubbing with the flannel, still slightly dampened with kerosene, and your boots will be soft and flexible as new kid, and very little affected by their bath in the rain.—Harper's Bazar.

To Make a Fowl Tender.

When it is drawn and stuffed it is wrapped in two thicknesses of brown paper, tightly bound with twine, so that none of the vapor or steam may escape. According to its size and age, the fowl is allowed to cook in a very hot oven within its envelope of paper from an hour to an hour and a half. When the fowl is taken out remove the paper, which is to be burned with all the grease it may contain. The bird is now dredged with flour, replaced in the oven and basted every few minutes with the juice which may flow into the pan. As soon as it has assumed a deep brown color it is served with a rich gravy. Full-grown pigeons cooked in this manner are said to be equal to squabs.

To Preserve Fenceposts.

One way—the only one—is to char the posts, but a modern and much better plan is to get a barrel of coal tar from the nearest gas works, pour some of it into a very large kettle under which a brisk but small fire should be kept burning. While the tar is hot dip the end of the post which is to go into the ground into it. Let it drip and lay it on a log until dry, which will be but a few hours. The post is then ready for setting, and treated in this manner will resist decay for 15 or 20 years. Of course the post must be stripped of the bark before it is dipped in the tar.

Mixing Varieties of Fruit.

Only a farmer putting up fruit for his own use is justified in placing different kinds in the same barrel. To sell fruit thus mixed destroys the reputation of the seller for fair dealing and injures the market for all fruit of the class. There is more of this fraudulent mixing of fruit than there should be. It has materially injured the sale of American fruit in England. There the Newtown Pippin is the variety most in favor, and other apples resembling this have been placed in the same barrel. Only fruit from well-known American growers will sell for full price in English markets now.

Banking Up Cellars.

It is a mistake to suppose that manure is better than earth to bank the cellar with. The common idea is that manure is warmest, because it will ferment. But there is little heating in the quantity used for banking a cellar until warm weather comes, and then the manure becomes an intolerable nuisance. Not even an earth bank outside is needed if a space is enclosed tightly on the inside, reaching from the top of the wall to one or two feet below the surface of the ground outside. This confined air space keeps out cold better than does anything else.

Cold Coming Through Windows.

A very light henhouse is pleasant in summer, spring, and fall, but in the coldest weather the single thin plates of glass transfer the inside heat to the outside atmosphere altogether too rapidly for comfort or profit. Windows for poultry houses ought to be doubled in winter. The air space between the windows will keep out cold, and both glasses being free from ice will make the house lighter than one ice-covered window could do. Glass is not expensive and doubling the quantity of sash in winter pays in every way.

All Around the Farm.

More, infinitely more, farm machinery rusts out from exposure than wears out in legitimate use.—Western Rural.

An orchard that is not pruned in four or five years becomes so injured that it is almost impossible to get it into proper condition again.

The sheep industry seems to be at a low ebb in some sections. We know of farmers who have been offered as low as $1 per head for good sheep this fall.—New York Independent.

Farmers and dairymen should know that all advices—whether patented and peddled or given freely away—to make butter come in half the usual time, are humbugs. Good butter cannot be made in double quick time.

If you are keeping sheep with an eye to the value of the wool product, you must maintain the animals in an even condition through the winter. Sheep which are half starved will have weak spots in their wool in the spring.

A good place to do book farming is around the fireside in the winter evenings. Take up the study of certain crops and learn all that you can about them, and be prepared to put the knowledge into practice next spring.

Good feet are the foundation, in more than one sense, of a good horse. In fact, a good horse can no more stand on bad feet than a good house can stand on a bad foundation. See that your animal is sound from the ground up.

The prices for butter have been remarkable good this summer, and a good article has found ready sale. In fact, the dairy industry is about the only one that has not felt the pressure of hard times to any great extent.—The Independent.

The windmill serves many purposes, and after a man once has one on his farm he ever after wonders how he managed to get along without it. It will raise water for stock, grind and chop the feed and irrigate the garden. There are few farms where they will not well repay their cost.

SUBJUGATION OF THE DESERT.

Surprising Results Obtained by Irrigation in the Southwest.

We have a vast domain of arid land which, under scientific irrigation, will some day support a great population. The Mormons have compelled the desert to produce fruit, grasses, and cereals in abundance, and Joseph Smith's followers may justly claim to be the pioneers in the practice of that sort of agriculture on a large scale in this country, though the ancient mission farms and vineyards of Southern California were irrigated in a crude way. What the Mormons did half a century ago at the Spanish missionaries more than a century earlier still, the modern farmers of California, Colorado, Arizona, New Mexico, and half a dozen other States and Territories are now repeating with profit and on a rapid increasing scale, until 3,000,000 acres of land, comprising 54,000 farms, are now under irrigation and the average value of their products ranges from $8.25 to $49 per acre.

Surprising results are obtained on these lands where man is his own rainmaker, for the soil is of the richest, and once the irrigation system is in operation there is no interruption by drought. The magnificent crops of corn, alfalfa, wheat, and hay obtained, the wonderful yields of fruit and the possibility of uninterrupted pasturage for cattle have given a great impetus to irrigation in the far West and the next few years will witness a rapid expansion of the productive area of that region. Less than one-half of one per cent. of the total arid region of the country is now under irrigation, and of the 883,000,000 acres so classified there are 616,000,000 acres upon which water would produce crops. Of the remaining vacant public lands, ninety-five per cent., or about 542,000,000 acres, are in this region.

The free arable lands having been taken up and land that was cheap a few years ago rising rapidly in value it is easy to see that the next step must be the reclamation of the "Great American Desert" by irrigation.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Crazy France.

It became positively dangerous during the Revolution to pronounce the word royal or king, and especially the name of any monarch who had reigned in France. The innocent King of "Twelfth Night" was suppressed, and the nomenclature of the "devil's picture boards" thoroughly revised. For a little while the king of diamonds and of clubs became indiscriminately the "executive power" of diamonds or the "veto" of clubs, but the card manufacturers, Urbain Jaume and Jean-Demosthene Dugoure, averred in Le Journal de Paris (March, 1793) that "a staunch Republican, even when playing a game, ought not to use expressions which constantly remind all his hearers of a state of despotism and inequality." Hence, they inform all and sundry that for the future the products manufactured by them will bear entirely new titles, the tyrants will become gentil, their consorts "liberties," jacks "equalities," and aces "laws."

The term, "reine-abeille," the term applied to the unique honey bee in the hive by French naturalists, was changed into "l'abeille pondreuse." Citizens whose name happened to be Leori (King) were invited to change it into Laloi, (law), and the sight of a King, even under adverse circumstances, grated so terribly upon the patriots' nerves that one day a shop was sacked in the Palais-Egalite because its window contained an engraving of Charles I. on the scaffold.

Nowhere did the objection to words quasi-distinctive of the old regime become so tyrannical as in the playhouse. The slightest allusion to the monarchy provoked a disturbance; nay, a riot, which nine times out of ten had to be quelled by the intervention of the authorities. Cliton, in Corneille's Menteur, says:

Elle loge a la place et se nomme Lucrece Quelle place? — Royale.

The last word had scarcely left the actor's lips when the house rose at him as one man. "Il n'y a plus de Place Royale; c'est la Place des Piques," they howled, and, in spite of meter and everything else, the line had then and there to be repeated, as corrected by the audience.—The Fortnightly Review.

She'll Soon Own the Universe.

The persistence of the crank is one of the most extraordinary attributes of the genius. When Gen. Grant was in the White House a woman named Thurstan came to him with a deed on parchment from the entire State of Maine. She asked him to accept it in trust for the people, and pay her an annuity in consideration thereof. Subsequently she made a similar application in reference to a like paper which proved her title in fee to the whole United States. In return she demanded an allowance of $300,000 per annum. Since March 4 last she has been seeking an interview with Mr. Cleveland. She owns all Europe now, and is anxious to hypothecate the property.

"They have thrown me overboard," said a disappointed politician, "but I've strength enough to swim to the other side."

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAOK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

TERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

You find this article marked with a blue "X" in the margin, it is a notice to you that your copy has expired and you are requested to renew it so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1894.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PAOK, EDITOR.

Dear brother, if you are not for us, you are against us.

Don't say you are for equal suffrage, and then do all in your power to keep our party from endorsing it.

The year 1894 will be an eventful one. The carrying of the amendment will make it a historical year.

There will be something to say in answer to Hon. David Overmeyer's speech on equal suffrage in our next issue.

Mrs. Binna A. Otis, wife of Congress Otis, has been elected vice president of the Kansas Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union.

The Democrats will declare against the amendment. This is not strange; they never could see anything until their brains were knocked out—politically, we mean.

You may talk about equal suffrage being a non-partisan movement, but if the amendment carries, which it is almost sure to do, some party will take and have credit for the victory. This is as true as the sun rises and sets.

Robinson received about seventy thousand votes for governor three years ago. The Democrats had a resubmission plank in their platform. Now, if they declare against the amendment and put Hon. David Overmeyer at the head of their ticket, they will, by an energetic canvass of the State, probably succeed in getting thirty-five or forty thousand votes. Kansas people are not built that way; they are for reform.

The campaign of 1894 is already foretold. The Democrats will howl and oppose the suffrage amendment. Republicans will stake their issue on the late legislature's unpopularity and the downfall of the late under Populist rule. The Populists hold to the issue of land, money and transportation. They will all be drowned in the vast army of women, who will proclaim on the hills and in the valleys, in the cities, villages and hamlets; aye, their voices will be heard in every school house and church; not begging or demanding, but asking simply justice, that they may have an equal voice in making the laws that they are compelled to obey, that they may raise morals to a higher standard and purify the ballot box. Then, and not until then, will each and every political party place its brand and true men and women on their tickets, and no unworthy or disreputable person will be permitted to hold office. It is so in Wyoming; it will be so in Kansas. Mark our prediction.

A very live subject now is, "The proper education of women to meet the problems of the present time." One is often astonished at the amount some women accomplish, with such slight preparation, when they are forced to rely upon their own efforts; and often a total lack of business knowledge, has robbed many a woman of her home, and much misery has been caused because women knew nothing of the affairs of the world, conducted on business principles. We heard one mother say not long since, to her daughter, "Don't study arithmetic, I will never need it." We would like all the young women that are readers of "Word and Works," to inform themselves; the study of many of them is delightful, but it becomes ignorance in many directions. Be practical, the truly womanly woman is none the less lovable, because she exercises her intelligence in matters which relate to the welfare of humanity. With what great force does practical knowledge come to the woman who has been shielded from such. The friend she meets in her parlor is not the same she meets in his office; business rules must apply regardless of sex. The financial education of women is so neglected, that ignorance of business is often considered constitutional. A father quite often gives his son a stated salary that must cover all his expenses; he soon learns how to spend and how to save; he learns to estimate accurately the cost of his living and to ascertain whether a thing is worth to him what he must pay for it. A girl's position is exactly the reverse; her wants have always been supplied without any exertion or decision on her part. How is she to acquire habits of forethought, economy and prudence; there is little in her surroundings to teach her these things. Many women that get along "somehow" would have made good managers, if they had been properly trained. Give the girls an allowance, then they will learn how they can afford to dress, how to bring their expenses within a certain limit. They will have something to do, and will know if it is best to buy one good article or must the amount cover a whole suit. If girls were given the same practical aptitude and experience as their brothers, there would be no reason to complain of financial incompetency of women.

WORKING GIRLS' CLUBS.

They Will Hold a Big Convention in Boston on the Second Monday in May, 1894.

The date has at last been set and some necessary preliminary arrangements made for the big convention of working girls' societies which has been agitating the minds of club members all over the country ever since the last big meeting, which was held in New York three years ago. This second convention, which is to be held in Boston, is expected to mark the beginning of a new epoch in the history of the working girls' club movement; the relation of the clubs to industrial questions and labor problems will be taken up and discussed in a way that has never been done before, and an effort will be made to bind the clubs all over the country closer together in some sort of a national organization. A meeting of the committee of arrangements was held recently in New York. Delegates were present from Boston, Brooklyn, Chicago and New York, and some interesting questions were discussed. The principal thing of course was to decide upon the date for the convention, the place having been fixed upon several months ago.

It was settled that on the second Monday evening in May, 1894, the convention of working girls' clubs would open in Tremont temple, and Boston's two delegates went home vowing that the 3,000 delegates and representatives who are expected to invade the Hub on that occasion should find such an enthusiastic reception and hospitality as would throw all the previous efforts of the New York association in the shade.

There are to be both delegates and representatives. The former will be elected by the various clubs in the different state associations and will have a vote on all questions to be decided by the convention. The representatives will be those who represent clubs having similar objects and interests as the working girls' clubs, but not accepting entirely their principles of self support, self government and co-operation. These representatives will in most instances represent clubs associated with some other organization, such as the Friendly club, which is a branch of the Beth-El sisterhood, St. Bartholomew's and the Notre Dame club.

There are at least twenty-five such clubs in New York alone, and while not eligible to membership in the New York association because they are neither self-supporting nor self-governed, they are recognized as working along the same lines as the regular clubs.

At the convention these representatives will be admitted to all sessions on equal terms with the delegates, but they will not be entitled to a vote on any question concerning the clubs.

Among the interesting subjects which have already been given out for the consideration of the club members, and upon which papers are to be written, expressing all shades of opinion, are, "What stand are the working girls' clubs to take on the labor question, and what effect are they likely to have upon its solution?" and "What is the effect of working for pin money upon those who work for a living?"

HANS DUNDERKOPF'S VIEWS OF EQUALITY.

BY JULIA B. NELSON.

Hans Dunderkopf stood on the stack, His wife stood on the load; An advocate of equal rights Came walking down the road,

Said he, "I have a paper here For all good men to sign Who think that woman's rights should be The same as yours and mine."

Said Hans, "I sign dot paper, shoer, I always tink, you see, Dat on dem farm mine frow got right To work as much as me."

"It likes me not to plow alone, I quicker wheat can sow Den when mine frow undt mine pig girl To help me forth shall go."

"Dey seed, dey drag, dey pflanzen corn, Dey vorken mit dem hay, Dey bindt dem barley first goot up, Den shock it. Vot you say?"

"I helps to do dot vork ins house? Ach! nein, I like dot no, I be no woman anyhow. I not can cook undt sew."

"Das vasser bringen? Das ist leicht, I made mine frow von yoke. If I muss selbst das vasser bring I got no time to schmoke."

"Mine frow sie feedt mine hoes all, I quicker wheat can sow Sie clean dot stable out, Sie milkt dem cows, sie feedt dem kalbs, Undt lead dem all about."

"Sie coffee make funt times ein day, Sie bring it twice mir ows Die dun be hot, I rest me den While sie bin gone zum house."

"O yah, sie makes das morgen fire In vinter das ist fine, Se an Ich stehe ins varmer bett Bis breakfast ganz allein."

"Sie vant me not das fire to make, Sie tink I know not how, Mine hands not right for woman's vork. I cannot milk von cow."

"But ven it comes to farm vork, I do dat always half, I always bleef in equal rights, Mine freund, vot for you laugh?"

"To see the equal rights von grant. They're not the rights that I Would ask my mother, sister, wife, Or daughters dear to try."

"Women are taxed as well as men, The laws they must obey, Should they not vote as well as we At each election day?"

"Jfine Gott! Die vimmnen at die polls Undt vote? Dot vote you mean? It couldn't vas! It never vas Undt never will be seen."

"Mine cracious! If Katrina dhere Should try to be a man, Undt veat die britch undt go to vote, I tell her somethings den."

"Sie findt quick undt who ist der boss, Der tolt ist to pay, I got not time to talk mit you, Katrina, pitch das lay."

WYOMING THE FIRST STAR.

Woman Suffrage. Important Testimony—It Has Emptied Jails and Poor-houses—It Has Secured Peace and Order.

The Wyoming legislature, at a recent session, unanimously adopted the following concurrent resolution:

Be it Resolved, By the second legislature of the State of Wyoming, that the possession and exercise of suffrage by the women in Wyoming for the past quarter of a century has wrought no harm and has done great good in many ways; that it has largely aided in banishing crime, pauperism and vice from this State, and that without any violent or oppressive legislation; that it has secured peaceful and orderly elections, good government and a remarkable degree of civilization and public order, and we point with pride to the facts that after nearly twenty-five years of woman suffrage not one county in Wyoming has a poor house, that our jails are almost empty, and crime, except that committed by strangers in the State, is almost unknown, and as the result of experience we urge every civilized community on earth to enfranchise its women without delay.

Resolved, That an authenticated copy of these resolutions be forwarded by the governor of the State to the legislature of every state and territory in this country, and to every legislative body in the world; and that we request the press throughout the civilized world to call the attention of their readers to these resolutions.

WHY WOMEN SHOULD VOTE.

I believe that the great vices in our large cities will never be conquered until the ballot is put into the hands of women.—Bishop Simpson.

I believe that the enfranchisement of woman would be a direct benefit both to woman herself and to the state.—Rev. Chas. F. Thwing.

In view of the terrible corruption of our politics, people ask, can we maintain universal suffrage? I say no, not without the aid of women.—Bishop Gilbert Haven.

I have not found a respectable reason why women should not vote, although I have read almost everything that has been written on the subject on both sides.—M. J. Savage.

In quite early life I formed the opinion that women ought to vote, because it is right, and for the best interests of the country. Years of observation and thought have strengthened the opinion.

I fully believe that the time has come when the ballot should be given to woman. Both her intelligence and her conscience would lead her to vote on the side of justice and pure morals.—Bishop Hurst.

I believe that the admission of women to the suffrage is in the line of God's providence, and that it is approved of by the spirit of the Bible and the experience of history.—Rev. William Burnet Wright.

As to woman suffrage, I know of many prejudices against it, but nothing that deserves to be called a reason. The reasons are all on the other side.—Professor Borden P. Bowne, Boston University.

We need the participation of woman in the ballot box. It is idle to fear that she will meet with disrespect or insult at the polls. Let her walk up firmly and modestly to cast her vote and if any one ventures to molest her the crowd will swallow him up as the whale swallowed Jonah.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Voting would increase the intelligence of women, and be a powerful stimulus to female education. It would enable women to protect their social, industrial, moral and educational rights. * * * Woman's vote would be to the vices in our great cities what the lightning is to the oak. * * * I believe that this reform is coming, and that it will come to stay.—Joseph Cook.

I leave it to others to speak of suffrage as a right or privilege, I speak of it as a duty. What right have you women to leave all this work of caring for the country with men? Is it not your country as well as theirs? Are not your children to live in it after you are gone? Are you not bound to contribute whatever faculty God has given you to make it and keep it a pure, safe and happy land?—James Freeman Clarke.

THE NEW CHARTER.

We clip the following from the New Charter, published by N. W. Wilkins of Santa Cruz, California:

We believe in the home, but there will never be an ideal home except where love and equality reign.

The strong can take care of themselves. The weak and defenseless should be made secure in all their rights.

The woman who thinks that men have a natural right to rule over women is too slavish to be anything but a slave.

I admire feminine beauty, but the loveliest women I have seen are those whose eyes shine with intelligence and purity.

If the American men were not better on the average than the laws they have made relating to women, life would not be worth living for the women.

The constitutional amendment for equal suffrage in Colorado carried overwhelmingly. Step by step the women are marching on to equality and freedom.

So long as good citizens, in the name of party, vote for men that they wouldn't invite into their homes, just so long will we have bad laws and a bad administration of law.

The man who votes for a system that compels him to rob his little children of school, and put them at work at starvation wages to eke out the family subsistence, is a fit subject for disfranchisement.

Both men and women are trained to believe that God has two codes of morals, one for men and another for women. The most regretful thing about it is, that the average woman bows submissively to the supposed double code.

Starve a woman and you starve her unborn child. Cramp her soul life and you dwarf the soul of her child. Burden her with work, deprive her of happiness, abuse her and merit her hate and you are sowing the seeds of evil that will find a harvest in her offspring, stamped prenatally with everything that affected the mother, physically, mentally and morally.

Say! we are getting awfully anxious to see the good times and advancing prices that the gold bugs promised should follow the repeal of the Sherman law. Everything seems to be still going down. What's the matter with their old machine, anyhow? Had it got to going down hill so fast that they can't stop it?

Women have work and duties, and men their work and duties for which each are adopted. Each are subject to the laws, therefore should have a voice in making them. It no more follows that a woman should shoulder a musket because she votes than that a man should nurse a baby because he votes. Millions of male voters go through life without becoming soldiers, but a very small proportion of women go through life without becoming mothers, and maternity is grander than soldiering. If sacrifice gives the right to vote then women have earned that right. Maternity is the grandest sacrifice of which I know anything.

TO SPEND $20,000.

The National Woman Suffragists Raising Money for the Kansas Campaign.

The Woman Suffrage campaign in this State will be commenced next month and waged without ceasing until the close of the campaign in Kansas next fall.

The National organization will contribute a large campaign fund to the work and will arrange for the best suffrage speakers in the country to assist the local organization in the campaign.

Miss Susan B. Anthony says that the campaign will be conducted just like the men run their politics, and that $20,000 will be put into the work between now and election.

One of the discouraging features of the work, however, is the fight between Mrs. Lease and Mrs. Johns, and Miss Anthony has been delegated to patch up the row. Considerable feeling has been manifested because Topeka, Atchison and Kansas City have secured Mrs. Lease in behalf of the cause of suffrage, and Dr. Eva Harding, president of the Topeka Equal Suffrage association, has received a great many anonymous postals and letters protesting against Mrs. Lease speaking at all in the interest of suffrage.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

THE WESTERN RURAL.

The Western Rural and American Stockman, published at Chicago, is without doubt the leading journal of its class, having been in the field for more than thirty years, and is the only Semi-Weekly journal in the world. The Monday edition is devoted to commerce, transportation, finance, crop conditions, markets, and a summary of telegraphic news from all parts of the world.

The Thursday edition is devoted to farm and household affairs, a department being devoted to every branch of farm and garden culture and live stock. Also to literature, science, hygiene, education, poetry and a young people's department. Each of these two editions is complete in itself, and the subscription price for both editions being but $1.25 the subscriber gets two complete and valuable papers for one subscription price. With this low price of $1.25 there is also given a beautiful 12-color picture of the wonderful World's fair and Chicago, entitled the "Dream City," 16x26 inches, for framing, as a souvenir of the "White City" that is now but a dream. We will club the Western Rural and American Stockman with the FARMER'S WIFE, at only $1.75, every subscriber receiving both editions of the Western Rural one year and the picture of the "Dream City" free. Sample copies of the Western Rural, both editions, will be sent to any one by addressing, MILTON GEORGE, Publisher, 324 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

HOW'S THIS!

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Props., Toledo, O.

We the undersigned, having known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligation made by the firm.

West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Walding, Kinnon & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, Ohio.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Testimonials free.

Morphine, whiskey and tobacco habits cured by the Keeley treatment in Kansas only at the Keeley Institutes at Topeka, Leavenworth and Kansas City, Kansas.

Unlike the Dutch Process No Alkalies

OR—Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and easily digested.

Sold by Grocers everywhere. W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

SONG OF THE STARS.

When the daylight fades in the evening shades,
And the blue melts in the gray,
We pitch our tents in the firmaments
To guard the Milky Way.
And we gather the broken sunbeams up
That the day has left in its path,
To kindle and build the glow, and glid
What our sparkling camp fires bath.

With fond carresses we jewel the tresses
Of the moon as she mounts the skies;
And the heavens we sprinkle with many a twinkle
That leaps from our sparkling eyes,
But when the storm cloud rolls his car
In thunder across the sky,
And the lightning dashes in fitful flashes,
We hide, till the storm goes by.

The sun is our master, and no disaster
Can come to his night of rest.
For with constant eyes on the dim horizon
We guard the East and the West.
We sometimes find where the comet hides,
And we frighten him out of his lair,
Till he speeds through the night like a fox in his night,
To his home in the great nowhere.

We sometimes pause in our journey because
We see ourselves in the glass
Of the silent lakes or the sea that takes
Our picture as we pass.
But when the daylight quivers and breaks,
And the gray melts into the blue,
The tears we shed o'er our fallen dead
Are found in the morning dew.

STORY OF A VALISE.

Returning from New York City by the E— Railroad a few years ago, I bought of the trainboy a copy of a Cincinnati paper, in which I read a long account of the robbery of the city National Bank of L—, Ky., and the sudden disappearance of its teller, Harry W. Swope. As usual in such cases, he had been a trusted employe, a member of the church and a society young man. The robbery was a particularly cool one, the gentleman having quietly slipped $90,000 in notes into a valise on the previous Saturday afternoon after bank hours and walked out into the cold world. That was the last seen of him, and it was not until after the bank opened on Monday morning that anyone suspected anything wrong. The affair created an immense sensation, "society" was shocked, the church scandalized and the bank directors furious. The newspapers printed long stories of the Dr. Jekyll-and-Mr. Hyde sort of existence the young man had led for a number of years, and numerous friends of the "lately departed" knowingly shook their heads as they told the reporters that they knew something like that was sure to happen soon.

This sensation so interested me that when I reached Cincinnati I scarcely realized the express was, as usual, an hour behind time and had failed to make connection with the train to L—. I should therefore be compelled to take the last train going west that night, which would cause me to stop over night in a one-horse town in Indiana that did not contain a single comfortable hotel.

I knew Mr. Swope by sight, having come in contact with him on a number of occasions while doing business with the bank of which he was teller. The L— papers I bought in the Union Depot gave further details of the affair, and contained also the announcement that the bank directors had offered a reward of $1,000 for Swope's capture and 10 per cent. of the cash returned, which would make a total of $10,000 if the rascal was caught before he got rid of his booty.

After eating an unsatisfactory lunch I took a seat in the general waiting-room of the depot and ruefully awaited my train. As I did so I noticed a young man approach my seat, and placing his valise on the floor alongside my own, to which it bore a resemblance, sit down while he looked cautiously around at the clock on the wall and then at the officials moving about.

How long he sat beside me I don't remember, but after a time he slowly arose and walked over to the telegraph office at the farther end of the room. Before he came back a strong-lunged individual in uniform stepped up to me and bawled out the names of the towns to which the train about to start was bound for. Hurriedly picking up my valise, I made straight for the gate and was soon aboard my train for the West.

The journey was made with the usual discomfort and monotony. The depot at N— Y—, Ind., where I had to stop over from 10 p. m. till 5 the next morning had been rebuilt since my last visit to that town, and remembering too well my hotel experience there a year before, I resolved to spend the night in the depot waiting-room with a few other passengers who shared my misfortune.

All that night the face of the stranger who had occupied a seat beside me in the Cincinnati depot haunted me. There was something about him that reminded me of Teller Swope. He was just his size and build; his mustache, to be sure, was wanting, but that he could have shaved off this appendage was to be considered a matter of course. The gold spectacles he wore very much resembled those I had associated with the face of the intellectual-looking teller, and I had observed on his fingers a number of rings, jewelry that Mr. Swope was said to be very partial to. As I turned the matter over in my mind the more convinced I felt that I had lost a splendid chance of capturing the thief and securing a $10,000 reward.

When 5 o'clock at last came round I boarded the train for L—, not in the best of humor, and two hours later arrived at home feeling very blue. After taking a slight breakfast I went down to the office, where the big robbery was still the talk of the clerks. Each of them had a theory of his own as to where the thief had gone, and when they appealed to me for my opinion I dolefully recounted my experiences of the previous evening. Of course they unanimously agreed with me that I had very foolishly allowed the fugitive teller to slip out of my fingers.

Just before going out to lunch a messenger boy languidly entered the office and handed me a note from my wife. Thinking it was the usual commission to get a yard or two of "roods like the sample inclosed," I thrust it into my pocket and started out to dinner. I had not gone far before I suddenly stopped and took out the envelope the boy had given me, opened it and read it. At first I could not understand what it all meant; then I turned it over and went through it again. It read as follows:

"DEAR GEORGE:—Come home at once. In opening your valise to get your soiled linen to send it to the laundry I discovered it packed with bank notes. What does it mean? Is anything wrong? Come home at once."

My first thought was to hasten home, but upon reflection I resolved to step around to the bank and acquaint the officials there of my discovery. I found the President of the bank in his private office, engaged with several lynx-eyed individuals whom I suspected from their appearance to be, as it turned out they were, detectives.

When I was granted an interview and explained my discovery it created, very naturally, a sensation. At first the old gentleman was inclined to regard me as a crank, but when I asked him to allow a clerk to accompany me home he seemed to be satisfied I was in earnest. He consented to my proposal, but after a moment's thought he said an escort was unnecessary, thinking, doubtless, that the handsome reward would be a sufficient inducement to insure the safe delivery of the precious valise.

As I left the bank and turned up the street in the direction of home I was joined by a young man who came running out of the bank after me, hat in hand. He said "the old man" had reconsidered the matter and sent him to accompany me back with the money. This seemed to me to be quite satisfactory, and as the fellow was a very genial young man owe immediately fell into discussing the robbery of his bank. He congratulated me on my good fortune, and knowingly hinted that "the old gentleman" would treat me cleverly in the way of reward.

I said this young man was a very genial fellow, but somehow I soon began to feel an instinctive distrust in him. I plied him with questions concerning the habits and business methods of the missing teller, but he returned evasive answers. In one or two little things he contradicted himself, and finally, when I unexpectedly asked him how long he had been employed in the bank, he replied, after looking at me in a dazed sort of way: "Oh, about a year or two." At once the thought came to me: What if my "escort" was one of the young men I had seen outside the President's office; perhaps he had overheard our conversation, and had planned this neat scheme of playing the role of a clerk of the bank sent me for "protection," as he insinuatingly put it. If so, I readily saw that he intended to make an effort to get his hands on the valise and then seize the first opportunity to bid me good-by.

This theory was strengthened when I noted that my "protector" seemed gradually to become very uncommunicative, and the conversation during the rest of the journey referred to passing objects and sights. Try as hard as I could, I failed to get anything satisfactory out of him concerning the robbery.

When I reached home I politely asked the young man to take a seat in the hall while I stepped up stairs to get a glimpse of the treasure. I found my wife at the head of the stairs, very excited. In an adjoining room we examined the valise, and at a rough estimate we placed the amount at about the figure the newspapers said Swope had carried off with him—somewhere about $90,000.

I did not tell my wife of my suspicions of the young man down stairs, but I resolved at once to arm myself in order to be prepared for the worst. It is a well known fact that in Kentucky the sixth commandment has long ago been declared unconstitutional, and I quickly made up my mind that if my bodyguard showed any sign of playing me false I would let him have a dose of cold lead.

Contrary to my expectations the young fellow made no offer to carry the valise as we started on our journey back to the bank. At the end of the short street on which I lived we stopped to take a car. My friend had again become very affable, and as we stood on the corner he offered me a cigar. I took it, thanked him; and placing my valise carefully on the ground between my feet, I struck a match to light it. Just as I was in the act of doing so I received a blow from the left that sent me staggering into the middle of the street. At the same moment my "protector" disappeared in the other direction.

"Look here, young man," said a gruff-voiced fellow in uniform at my side, as he shook me violently, "I thought you told me you were going to take the train west to-night. It has just pulled out and you're left."

Opening my eyes, I looked around the waiting-room in a confused way and then reached for my valise. It was nowhere to be found.

My brusque arouser instantly took in the situation, and, with a look of intense disgust on his face, said, as he turned away:

"I guess that student-like sport who was sitting beside you has taken care of your baggage. He passed me a few moments ago on his way to the train with a couple of valises. Next time you go traveling, young man, you had better take some one along with you to care for you while you sleep."—James C. Moffett, in New York World.

THE ORIGIN OF ANTHRACITE.

A Probable Solution of One of the Long-Standing Mysteries of Science.

The main difference between anthracite and bituminous coal is that the former is devoid of volatile matter. Heretofore the volatiles generally accepted to account for this difference was that presented a half century ago by Prof. Rogers, while conducting the first geological survey of Pennsylvania. Observing that the anthracite beds lay in the eastern part of the State, in close proximity to the Archean axis of elevation, he surmised that these coal beds had, so to speak, been "cooked" upon the elevation of the Appalachian chain; that is, he supposed that the heat and pressure accompanying the Appalachian elevation, acting most vigorously near the axis, had distilled and removed the volatile matter of the cross-beds nearest it.

To adjust the theory to increasing facts, Prof. Lesley added the supposition that the heat involved in this theory was brought up by conduction when the superincumbent layers of rock was extremely thick, which have since been mainly removed by the erosive agencies which have been active over the regions for millions of years.

The inadequacy of these theories has led Prof. J. J. Stevenson of the University of New York to propound another and simpler theory, which was ably defended by him at the recent meeting of the Geological Society of America.

He would account for the lack of volatile matter in anthracite coal by the simple fact that it had been long exposed to that kind of decay which takes place in vegetable matter when immersed in water; and which consists chiefly in the loss of the hydrocarbons which constitute the volatile elements in bituminous coal. On this supposition the anthracite beds are those which were formed earliest in the swamps and lagoons of the carboniferous period and remained longest devoid of the covering of sedimentary deposits which subsequently preserved them from further change.

This theory is confirmed by the fact that there is no such strict relation of the anthracite beds to the Appalachian axis of elevation as Prof. Rogers had supposed, and by many other considerations which Prof. Stevenson is about to publish. This simple case seems adequate to account for all the phenomena, and probably solves one of the long-standing mysteries of geological science.—The Independent.

Preventing Horn Growth.

A correspondent of the Indiana Farmer writes: I have taken horns off four young calves successfully with caustic potash. The best time to apply is when the calf is two or three weeks old, or as soon as you can feel the little horn button. The hair should be closely clipped around the little horn. Take one end of a stick of caustic potash in your fingers—its best to hold it in a cloth to prevent it slipping and also to keep it off your fingers. Dip the other end in water until it is slightly moistened. Then rub it on the little horn, being careful not to get it on the skin around where you have clipped the hair. One application is enough to remove the horn if applied when young. No inflammation or suppuration has taken place in any of the trials I have made. We have one calf that has one horn. Did not do a good job or the calf was too old. The place turns black, soon sloughs off and the calf does not seem to mind it. The caustic potash may be had at any drug store in the form of round sticks, smaller in size than a lead pencil, and should be kept from exposure to the air, as it readily absorbs moisture.

Sad Memories.

"Madam," said the tramp, "take back yer loaf of bread. I return it unbroken."

"What's the matter?"

"It brings back too many sad memories. I can't tech it."

"Does it," she asked gently, "make you think of the bread your mother used to bake?"

"No'm. It makes me think when I wuz doin' time on the rock-pile."—Washington Star.

The more a woman's hatcosts, the worse it looks.

SIGN TALK ON THE PLAINS.

A Language Without Words, Yet It Is Silent for Every Occasion.

Garrison life has developed some experts in Indian folklore among army officers. One of these is Lieut. H. L. Scott, of the Seventh Cavalry. Lieut. Scott has made a study of the sign language of the plains Indians. In the days of Indian outbreaks and wars there was a practical phase to this study, but now that peace prevails and there are only reservation Indians, Lieut. Scott's acquisition is remarkable chiefly for the scientific interest which attaches to it.

One day during the Folklore Congress Lieut. Scott borrowed four Indians of various tribes from Buffalo Bill's camps, and, with only such language as he used to explain to the palefaces what he was saying, he carried on a long conversation by signs. The Indians were Painted Horse, Flat Iron, Horses-Come-Last, and Standing Bear.

The Lieutenant's hand moved nimbly when he asked Painted Horse where he lived. The old Indian looked homesick for a moment, and then he made a superb motion picture of a rock with trees on it.

"Pine Ridge," interpreted Lieut. Scott.

Painted Horse, having found his hands, kept them going, while his face remained expressionless. Lieut. Scott added:

"He says his relatives live there, and that he has come a long way and has arrived here."

One after the other the Indians joined in the sign conversation with as much enthusiasm as an Indian can manifest. They told their names and where they were from and to what tribes they belonged. They understood the Lieutenant and each other as well. When Painted Horse said Horses-Come-Last was a Brule Sioux, Horses-Come-Last immediately worked his hands to say that was a mistake; he was an Ogallalla. Having started, Horses-Come-Last, a magnificent-looking Indian, signed that he knew Gen. Miles, who was sitting near, and he wanted the General to say something to him. Gen. Miles told Lieut. Scott to tell Horses-Come-Last that he remembered him very well as an Indian who had done good service in the Montana campaign. Lieut. Scott interpreted by signs, and immediately Horses-Come-Last showed his pleasure.

Lieut. Scott has had some striking evidences that the Indians of the plains meet on common ground, when they resort to the sign language. He was present when Chief Joseph of the Nez Perces addressed several hundred Indians. The chief told of his march from Washington Territory across Idaho and into Montana to the vicinity of the Yellowstone Park, a masterly military feat, without a parallel since the retreat of Xnenophon's ten thousand. In the crowd to which the chief gave the narrative were Aricares, Mandans, Gros Ventres, Nez Perces, Cheyennes, and Sioux. They were the representatives of six different spoken languages. Yet Lieut. Scott could see that there was perfect comprehension of the narrative. Not a word was spoken. Chief Joseph used nothing but the sign language, but the Indians all followed him.

A literal translation of the sign language is the best illustration of its formation. Take the following sentence:

"I shot with an arrow last night an eagle which was sitting upon a limb of a tree and it fell to the ground."

The Indians will convey this information by sign language as follows:

"Night—before—trees—looking—I saw bird—curved beak—limb of tree—arrow—bow—aim—shoot—transfix—whirl downward—strike the ground."

Lieut. Scott has taken part in numberless talks where the assemblages included Indians from nearly every prairie tribe from Texas to the Canadian line. Practically the same signs were used by all.

"I must give," he said, "my unqualified adherence to the belief that the sign language of the plains Indians does exist, and that it has reached a high development."

Lieut. Scott has tried to trace the origin of the sign language. All of the Indians tell him it is of great antiquity. The Cheyennes and Arapahoes tell him their ancestors got it from the Kiowas, who invented it. But the Kiowas claim they got it from the Cheyennes. Lieut. Scott believes there was no invention of the sign language, but that it was of gradual and general development. As tribes of Indians become permanently separated they cease to have use for sign language in communicating with other tribes; then they drop the use of it. The Indians around Fort Totten, on Devil's Lake, have been away from other Indians and associated with white people some years. Only the oldest among them retain any knowledge of the sign language. The Northern Cheyennes are the best sign talkers. Comanches are the poorest. This Lieut. Scott accounts for by the fact that the Comanche language was the court language of the southern plains. Many Indians of other tribes understood it. Hence there was less occasion for the Comanches to perfect themselves in the signs.

"If you could witness," said the Lieutenant, "the scenes enacted in many of their lodges during the long nights of winter, in some isolated village upon the buffalo range, or sheltered from the wind in a mountain fork, when some one of the elder and more skillful men, fired with enthusiasm by the memories of his youth, was relating the stories of the warpath and adventure, the ancient customs of his people, or the ceremonies of his religion to a silent band of dusky warriors, then only could you realize the great force, the intense meaning, and the exceeding beauty of the sign language of the plains Indians."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

German War Dogs.

The time-honored injunction to "let slip the dogs of war" is being provided with a new meaning in Germany. That country is determined to be prepared for the next European war, and is leaving no stone unturned to render its military organization as effective in every branch as possible. Amongst the preparations in progress for the next campaign is a regular system of dog drilling. Not only are dogs used by the ambulance corps to seek out the wounded, bring them brandy, water, and soup, fetch the ambulance attendants and help to draw the injured on little hand-carts, to the field hospital, all of which services they perform with wonderful accuracy, intelligence and skill, but they are now attached to some of the regiments as regular four-footed soldiers. In this capacity, the first lesson they have to learn is silence. They are taught to repress the outbreak of barking, by which they would announce their presence to an enemy, and to replace this mode of signaling by a low growl audible only to their friends. This is a difficult lesson, but a more tedious task is to follow. This is to teach the war-dog that while all dogs are dogs, men are divided into friends and enemies, and the way to distinguish them is by the color of their trousers. The way this fine distinction is impressed on their intellect is by dressing soldiers up in Russian and French uniforms, and making them beat an ill-treat the dogs and abuse them in French and Russian; whereas soldiers in German uniform are told off to pet and caress the canine recruits, and regale them on that delicacy dear to all beings born in the Fatherland—the sausage. At night the dogs can render good service at the outposts, their quick sense of hearing enabling them to announce the approach of footsteps long before they have been detected by duller human ears. The dogs are also trained to carry dispatches in a little satchel, which is buckled on the light iron collar they wear. Gray Pomeranians make the best soldier dogs, on account of their great muscular strength, their quickness in learning, and their unobtrusive color. For ambulance service, however, Prof. Bungartz, the animal painter, who is much interested in this branch of the Red Cross Society, and has himself trained many dogs for it, declares that Scotch collies are the best breed.

He Came at Last.

"John," exclaimed the nervous woman. "There's a burglar in the house. I'm sure of it."

John rubbed his eyes, and protested mildly that it was imagination.

"No it isn't. I heard a man down stairs."

So John took a box of matches and went down. To his surprise his wife's suspicions were correct. Seeing that he was unarmed, the burglar covered him with a revolver and became quite sociable.

"Isn't it rather late to be out of bed?" he remarked.

"A-er-a-little bit," replied John.

"You're too late, anyhow, because I've dropped everything out of the window, and my pals have carried it off."

"Oh, that's all right. I'd like to ask one favor of you, though."

"What is it?"

"Stay here until my wife can come down and see you. She has been looking for you every night for the last twelve years, and I don't want her to be disappointed any longer."—Washington Star.

The Bay View Reading Circle.

Ever since the well-known Chautauqua Circle was started there has been an insistent demand for a short, well-planned and low-priced course of reading for the thousands for whom the above circle course is too expensive, and requires too much time. The Bay View Reading Circle has been organized to meet the demand. Many of the leading educators and ministers of the country are among its promoters, and Mr. J. M. Hall of Flint, Mich., is the Superintendent. To him application should be made for information. The circle has a four years' course of reading, and has the advantage of specializing subjects. The first year is the German year, beginning with November. There is so much aimless and haphazard reading, that the well-planned and attractive Bay View course ought to meet with instant favor.

HAVE you ever noticed that some days you seem to walk up hill all day.

Rightmire's New Party.

Chairman J. W. Breidenthal received the following letter from Governor Waite, of Colorado, and the Topeka Advocate publishes it:

"I have just received a private letter from Mr. Rightmire of your city, containing a call which he proposes to issue for a national convention to meet at St. Louis, March 20, 1894, to organize a new party upon the silver issue. I had previously learned from the public press of his operations. I declined to sign any such call and gave him my reasons, which are in no sense confidential and are substantially as follows:

"The people's party was organized July 4, 1892, that is, its platform was then adopted, candidates nominated and a campaign opened. Of course in one sense it was not a new party—its principles date back to the time of Christ—but practically it is new. In four months it had perfected an organization in every state, and at the presidential election it carried five states and polled twenty-seven electoral votes, a progress well nigh miraculous in its rapidity and not excelled even by the republican party in its infancy. It is now coolly proposed by Mr. Rightmire to 'whistle this party down the wind,' throw aside every advantage that has been gained and organize a new party.

"Wall street has two classes of supporters. One kind like Sherman and Cleveland, McKinley and Carlisle, are openly in the interest of the money power. Whatever monopoly demands, they are eager to grant. Another class of Wall street's allies profess to be opposed. Their 'role' is to obstruct, to divide and destroy all opposition to monopoly.

"Of course I do not maintain that the principles enunciated in the Omaha platform are inspired or infallible. It may be judicious in the coming presidential election to amend the Omaha platform. In my judgment the men who assembled at Cincinnati in 1891, and at St. Louis and Omaha in 1892, were and are honest men, patriots desiring the common welfare. Why not appeal to the people's party in national convention assembled or if greater haste is necessary, make such an appeal to the people's party national committee as shall warrant them to call a preliminary national convention to consider what changes, if any, shall be made?

"Our national convention would have full authority to amend the platform, and its recommendations would doubtless be adopted, the present organization in all the states preserved, and the great army already arrayed in opposition to Wall street unified; but the proposition to destroy our present organization and create a new party divides our forces and perhaps destroys our last hopes of success. However honest or well intentioned the marplots may be, they could not, even if they were in the direct pay of Wall street (which I do not charge), cause a more deadly injury to the people than this attempt to destroy the people's party. Respectfully yours, DAVID H. WAITE."

Both Equally Bad.

Atlanta Constitution.

There are two classes of wreckers in this country, with very little difference between them, so far as results are concerned. What is the difference between the red-handed socialist, with his dynamite bomb, who threatens to blow up everything in the country if he and his friends can not have their way and the money king, who, after absorbing most of the currency of the country under monopolistic republican legislation openly proclaims that if the people do not vote to suit him, and shape financial legislation in his interests, he will cut off their supply of money and create a panic that will wreck their industries and commerce? When we consider the consequences of their action, what is the difference between these two classes? Of the two we prefer the red socialist, because when he goes to work we can catch him and hang him. The money king has friends enough to help him out of his scrape, and if he is badly crowded, he can skip to Europe, where his methods are at a premium. The poor devil who yields to a fit of anger or insanity and attacks society may injure a few individuals, but there his mischief stops. The plutocratic devil, on the other hand, is armed with far-reaching and destructive power. He is able to carry out his threat of locking up the money of the country and driving the masses into poverty if they do not serve his selfish greed. The two extremists we have described menace the progress and prosperity of the people. They are enemies to society, liberty and good government. One is no better than the other.

Officers Elected.

The Kansas State Farmers' Alliance, in session at Topeka, elected officers as follows:

President.—W. S. Hanna.
Vice president.—Mrs. B. A. Otis, Topeka.
Secretary and treasurer.—J. B. French, Topeka.
State lecturer.—S. M. Scott.
Assistant state lecturer.—G. E. Miller.
Chaplain.—A. C. Hillman.
Doorkeeper.—J. S. Elwood.
Assistant doorkeeper.—R. D. Lester.
Steward.—A. C. Estor.
Member judiciary committee.—S. J. McNaughton.
Delegate to National Alliance.—James Shearer.
Alternate to National alliance.—R. A. Patterson.
Delegates to St. Louis convention.—W. S. Hanna, John G. Otis and J. F. Gish.
Literary committee.—Sister Troudner, W. S. Hanna and Sister Ruggles.

That's What's the Matter.

Linn County Farmer in the Advocate.

Very many politicians who have swayed the scepter of a party come to regard farmers and laborers as a distinct and separate class who scarcely constitute political or hardly human society, but who are tolerated as servants for the real members of the body politic. When they discuss questions of government and political economy, they speak of farmers and laborers patronizingly as though they existed by the grace of the aforesaid real citizens and should be duly and properly thankful for it. The non-producers of the country have controlled things long enough and with disastrous results enough. Let us try what results will flow from the control of affairs by the toilers and producers themselves, the bona fide people. And to that end we must relegate the Mortons and all that gentry to that political bourne from whence no traveler returns.

Leave it to Statesmen.

Kansas Farmer.

The Wilson bill leaves raw sugar on the free list, but the refiners who have established an immense monopoly under the protection of the McKinley and former tariffs fight vigorously at the prospect of having to compete with foreigners with the bare advantage of $4.50 per hundred on their product, and urge that the machinery, etc., which they use is protected, and that therefore it is a hardship to reduce the refiners' protection as proposed. If farmers should make this kind of a kick in favor of their interests they would be denounced as cranks and as meddling with that which they do not understand, and ought to leave to statesmen.

Hit the Little Man.

Always. Never hit the big one. Hoke Smith did not dare to stop the pension of $100 per month which Congressman Black, of Illinois, draws upon the false claim of total mental and physical disability.

Nor did he stop the pension of Governor Crittenden, our representative in Mexico. He draws a fat salary from the government as minister and also draws a pension upon the ground that he is "unable to earn a living."

Our Republican Secretary of State, Gresham, likewise draws a pension.

Why doesn't Mr. Smith hit some of these big fellows?

Wallop Us Again.

Atlanta, Ga., People's Party Paper.

The Virginia Sun reports our vote in Virginia at 75,000. This bears out our estimate as given last week.

Therefore we have gained 63,000 votes in Virginia since November 1892.

Just wear yourselves out whipping us that way, gentlemen! Wallop us one more time in that style. We like it.

A young unmarried man gave up his situation in a shoe factory in Brockton, Mass., to a married man out of work, with a needy family to support. In three weeks another young man is to exchange with the first, and by a series of agreements the needy workman will have constant employment.

Pacific Coast Farmers and Laborers Getting Together.

New Nation.

The California farmers alliance recently held a four days session at Fresno. Committees of the federated trades of Sacramento and the labor council of San Francisco waited upon the alliance. After a conference, it was unanimously voted by the alliance that any proposition from the federated trades shall be submitted to the sub-alliances through the state officials of the alliance. The alliance voted to send five delegates to the American Federation of labor convention at San Francisco in January and the same number also to the Federated trades of the Pacific coast at Sacramento in February. The local labor organizations are rapidly accepting the terms of the agreement, which will put the wage workers and farmers of the coast in line together for the economic reforms of the day. The alliance at Fresno voted in favor of state insurance and incorporated in the resolutions an editorial of The New Nation upon that subject. The action of the alliance executive officials in recommending to members a private New York insurance company was disapproved of. If California does not adopt a state insurance policy within five years, we miss our guess. Light is breaking all along the Pacific coast.

The Golden Calf.

Hon. Hugh McCulloch, comptroller of the currency, in his report for the year 1894, page 25, makes some statements of facts which we commend to the worshippers of the golden calf as mighty "interesting reading." He says:

"Gold has been a favorite article to gamble in. It has been forced up and down by those tricks and devices that we so well understand at the stockboard. The reverses of our arms have been used by the operators for an 'advance' to send it up, and our military successes have been turned to the advantage of those who were interested in a 'decline.'"

Immense interests have been at work all over the country, and concentrated in New York to raise the price of coin, and splendid fortunes have been apparently made by their success. The royal importer and manufacturer of the east and the producer and provision merchant of the west have locked hands with the enemies of the republic in a common effort, although for a different object, and sometimes have produced results which have created serious apprehensions that the union might be lost for want of means to prosecute the war, or rather on account of the unnecessary costliness of the war. Hostility to the government has been decidedly manifested in the effort that has been made in the commercial metropolis of the nation to depreciate the currency as it has been by the enemy in the field; and unfortunately the effort of sympathizers with the rebellious states, to prostrate the national credit has been strengthened by thousands in the loyal states whose political fidelity it might be ungenerous to question.

Plan of Campaign.

Denver News.

When the house and senate reconvene in regular session it is the plan of the silver men to keep the financial question well to the front at every stage of the session, and it will be found playing a part in the discussion of every great issue between the parties, from the tariff question to the repeal of the federal election laws. Now that the silver purchasing law is repealed, the president is to be called upon to show his fealty to the spirit of the last democratic platform by favoring financial legislation looking to the restoration of silver to its old time realm. Every stage of the tariff discussion will be punctuated by pertinent queries from the silver men, tending to prove the demonization of silver, and not the McKinley tariff, is responsible for the commercial depression of the times.

The proposition for an issue of bonds to meet the embarrassments of a depleted treasury and, indeed, every great public question that comes before the next congress for solution will find opposed to its consideration a band of silver men who will combat the adjustment of any and all grievances until the cause of silver receives the attention of the Fifty-third congress. Indeed, the ultimate policy may be that the silver men may assume the role of organized obstructionists in the attempt to force from the American congress the same consideration that Parnell and his Irish followers finally wrested from the British parliament in the years that are gone.

Minnesota Mortgages.

New Prague Times.

A great deal of talk has been indulged in regarding the mortgage indebtedness of the people of the west and especially Minnesota. The census reveals the true state of affairs. The mortgage indebtedness of this state, according to that is $197,745,989. The yearly interest on that amount, reckoned at 8 per cent., is $15,819,679.12. The population of Minnesota, according to the late census, is 1,301,826. A little figuring will show anyone that the people of Minnesota, in the aggregate, are bound to pay the money lenders, annually, over $12 for each man, woman and child in the state.

Very Easily Answered.

Tom Watson's Paper.

Our contemporary, the Evening Organ, asked this very serious question yesterday:

"Why is it that the worst beaten democratic candidate for governor was Lawrence T. Neal, of Ohio, a free silver man?"

The answer is simple. Let it be taken from the Atlanta Journal's own files.

After an editorial ecstasy on the fact that in quick succession the democratic conventions of Massachusetts, New York, Ohio, Iowa and Nebraska had endorsed the position of the administration on the financial question, our esteemed contemporary, The Evening Journal, said in its issue of September 29th:

"Mr. Neal is running for governor of Ohio on a platform which endorses the president's position in toto."

In the same outburst of ecstasy it said that "Governor Boies, of Iowa, was nominated on this line."

Surely there must be some mistake here. The same organ now says that national issues had nothing whatever to do with McKinley's 83,000 plurality in Ohio, nor the republican majority of 35,000 in Iowa. It is a sad case of "before and after taking."

Cuckoos.

Tom Watson's Paper.

This democratic leader having killed "Free Silver," now says that the democrats must not bother the tariff.

All right, Marso John. The "cuckoos" will all echo just what you and Cleveland say.

How sweet it is to be a cuckoo.

No wear and tear of mind; no painful investigation of questions or policies; no wrestling with mental problems; no thrill of independent resolve; no pride of opinion; no strength of character; no memory for the past; no scruple about consistency; no convictions upon any given subject; no principles, no creed, no conscience; no honesty, patriotism or shame!

That's a Cleveland "Cuckoo"! When Cleveland speaks the cuckoo echoes the word. Pity the cuckoo,—and despise him!

One of them is named John B. Gordon. Another, Daniel W. Voorhees. Another, Roger Q. Mills. Another, John G. Carlisle.

All these men denounced John Sherman and his anti-silver views.

All of them voted with John Sherman and carried his anti-silver views into effect.

Because Cleveland said so. Because they got patronage. Did they get any money?

Looks Sealy.

St. Paul Great West.

When the English plutocrats are demanding the issue of British bonds to get money to run the British government, and declare a "panic" without this issue, it looks sealy for the world. What does this mean? Simply that capital has made a mighty surplus—and must have bonds to put the surplus into—so that toil tribute will give them income on the surplus without risk of business—or crowding the marts of business. It is highway robbery of the most stupendous kind. If the government must need money why not tax this gigantic surplussage of wealth?

The populists of Iowa have gained about 25 per cent. over last year, the republicans lost about 7 per cent. and the democrats about 20 per cent. Who feels blue?

The populist vote in Iowa, Massachusetts and Virginia has trebled since last year.

FLEETS OF THE DESERT.

Means of Commercial Intercourse in Asia and Africa.

If the camel is the ship of the desert, the caravan is its fleet and the camel drivers are its navigators. Camels, on account of their powers of endurance, are the means of commercial intercourse in many parts of Asia and Africa, and have been so used from the earliest period. A caravan is merely an organized company of travelers formed for the purpose of mutual protection. All caravans are under the command of a chief, and the members are subjected to discipline. Formerly caravans were frequently plundered by organized bands of robbers and desert dwellers, and even yet tribute is often laid by wandering Bedouins upon caravans passing through the African desert. Drivers are usually selected from men remarkable for their endurance, hardihood, and courage. At present in Africa Bedouins monopolize the business, being naturally fitted for it owing to their wild, roving lives in the desert.

A CAMEL DRIVER

LITTLE MAN WITH A BIG HEAD.

Abe Hummel is 5 Feet 1 Inch Tall, but He Wears a 7 3-4 Hat.

When "Abe" Hummel, the well-known criminal lawyer of New York, wishes to travel incognito he registers as Abraham H. Hummel. He was born in England forty-five years ago, but with his hat on does not, according to the Commercial Advertiser, look more than 25.

He stands 5 feet 1 in his silk stockings, weighs 109 pounds, wears a mustache, but no hair on the top of his head. He is pretty well known in the courts in criminal and theatrical cases. For fifteen years he has been in partnership with William F. Howe. At first the reputation of the firm rested on the contrast in the size of the two partners: now it rests on Hummel's brain. "Abe" wears a 7 3/4 hat.

ABEL HUMMEL

Comfort in the Nursery.

A bamboo screen with silk curtains, or better still, those of some washable material, is a most useful adjunct, writes Elisabeth Robinson Scovill in a useful article on "Furnishing the Nursery" in the Ladies' Home Journal. It can be used to shield the crib from a draught, to screen a corner, or shut off the washstand when it is in use.

If the nursery is far from the kitchen a small refrigerator will be found a great convenience. Tin ones can be purchased for about three dollars that answer the purpose admirably. There is room for the supply of milk for the day, beside the ice, and they are easily kept in perfect order.

If the baby is fed on artificial food, some means should be provided for heating it; an alcohol lamp, a contrivance to fit on the gas burner, or a covered saucepan alone, if there is an open fire.

No nursery should be without a thermometer, and when it varies much from 68 degrees the source of heat must be attended to.

A clock is always interesting and amusing to children, and as they grow older is useful in teaching them to tell time.

Besides a closet for the playthings that are owned and used in common, each child should have a receptacle for its own peculiar treasures, which it should be required to keep in order. The top of the chiffonier is a good lodging place for the fragile belongings whose destruction by the heedless younger ones is always so heartbreaking to the careful owner. A low cupboard, divided into compartments, is the best if it can be had. A small bookcase must not be forgotten, with room for the toy books of the babies, as well as for the books of the other members of the nursery.

Long Has She Reigned.

Queen Victoria has now passed the record of Henry III., who ruled fifty-six years and twenty-nine days, and has reigned longer than any English sovereign save George III., who ruled from Oct. 25, 1760, to Jan. 29, 1820, a period of fifty-nine years and ninety-seven days; and she may live to equal that.

The man who makes the most noise in a quarrel is usually believed to be in the right.—Atchison Globe.

LADIES This is just what you have been looking for—a perfect syringe. Notice there is an inlet pipe to which is attached bulb or fountain; the outlet pipe has four feet of rubber tubing. The three best points we make for the "Knapp" are, first—that every part can be easily cleaned; second—it can be used when lying down, without soiling the bed or clothing, as the shield absolutely prevents leakage; third—hotter water can be used with perfect comfort with this syringe than can possibly be done with any other, as the outer one prevents the heated pipe from coming in contact with the sensitive parts. As hot water stimulates healthy action, physicians universally recommend the "Knapp." One writes, "Just what I have been looking for, for years." Another says, "Cannot see where it can be improved." Another, "A boon to womanhood as it admits the use of hot water, where others do not." Put up in several different styles, fountain, bulb, syringe, or nozzle only with escape tube; also with combination hot water bottle which can be used as a fountain. Best quality of rubber only used. Printed guarantee with each one sold. Agents make big money. One lady writes, "Made $6.00 in one afternoon." Another $4.00. Exclusive territory given. Ten Thousand Sold Last Year. Send stamps for descriptive circular, price list, terms and outfit for agents, in sealed envelope. First-class Lady Canvasers Wanted in every city and town. Chicago Medical Specialty House, Prop., 55 Dearborn St., Chicago.

HUMPHREYS'

This PRECIOUS OINTMENT is the triumph of Scientific Medicine.

Nothing has ever been produced to equal or compare with it as a CURATIVE and HEALING APPLICATION. It has been used 40 years and always affords relief and always gives satisfaction.

Cures PILES or HEMORRHOIDS—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding—Itching and Burning; Cracks or Fissures; Fistula in Ano; Worms of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.

WITCH HAZEL OIL

Cures BURNS, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant. Cures BOILS, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Fistulas, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Scurfy or Scald Head. It is infallible.

Cures INFLAMED or CALLED BREASTS and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable.

Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.

Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price.

HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

Your Stomach Distresses You

after eating a hearty meal, and the result is a chronic case of Indigestion, Sour Stomach, Heartburn, Dyspepsia, or a bilious attack.

RIPANS TABULES

Promote Digestion, Regulate the Stomach, Liver and Bowels, Purify the Blood, and are a Positive Cure for Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, and all other Disorders arising from a disordered condition of the Liver and Stomach. They act gently yet promptly, and perfect digestion follows their use. Ripans Tabules take the place of an Entire Medicine Chest, and should be kept for use in every family.

SOLD BY DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

Scientific American Agency for

PATENTS

CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS, DESIGN PATENTS, COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK. Oldest bureau for securing patents in America. Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American.

Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly $3.00 a year; $10.00 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

FREE

$10.00 worth of lovely Music for Forty Cents, consisting of 100 pages full size sheet music of the brightest, liveliest and most popular selections, both vocal and instrumental, gotten up in the most elegant manner, including four large size portraits.

CARMENCITA, the Spanish Dancer, PADEREWSKI, the Great Pianist, ADELINA PATTI and MINNIE SELIGMAN CUTTING.

ADDRESS ALL ORDERS TO THE NEW YORK MUSICAL ECHO CO., Broadway Theatre Building, New York City. CANYASSERS WANTED.

LA MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains between MINNEAPOLIS, PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Ticket & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

LA MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains between MINNEAPOLIS, PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Ticket & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

LA MAN

ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

THE GREAT ROCK ISLAND ROUTE

SOLID VESTIBULE EXPRESS TRAINS

Of Through Coaches, Sleepers, Free Reclining Chair Cars and Dining Cars daily between CHICAGO, DES MOINES, COUNCIL BLUFFS, OMAHA, LINCOLN, DENVER, COLORADO SPRINGS, and PUEBLO.

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.

Fast Express Trains between MINNEAPOLIS, PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and Prominent Cities of the Mountains in the West and Indian Territory on the South.

Via the Albert Lea Route.

For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address E. ST. JOHN, JOHN SEBASTIAN, Gen'l Manager, Gen'l Ticket & Pass. Agt. CHICAGO, ILL.

$2,500 in Prizes FOR TELLING THESE WORDS.

C-R-S--SH-L-D-A-S

The above letters and dashes represent words of very pleasant associations at Christmas season. What are they? Each dash stands for an omitted letter. When the omitted letters are supplied the words will be found. We will pay the following rewards for correct answers received before February 15th, viz.: For the first correct answer, $2,500; for the second correct answer, $1,000; for the third correct answer, $500; for the fourth correct answer, $250; for the fifth correct answer, $125; for the sixth correct answer, $62.50; for the seventh correct answer, $31.25; for the eighth correct answer, $15.62; for the ninth correct answer, $7.81; for the tenth correct answer, $3.90. The prize money will be paid in cash. The puzzle is only one of the many puzzles which will be found in the History of Egypt, a complete, up-to-date, and most interesting work, published by HOMES AND HEATHS PUBLISHING CO., NEW YORK CITY. We make our offer on the understanding that the puzzle is to be solved by the use of the History of Egypt, and that the puzzle is to be solved by the use of the History of Egypt, and that the puzzle is to be solved by the use of the History of Egypt.

CYCLOPEDIA of HISTORY.

Alden's Cyclopedia of History, illustrated. Complete in 2 volumes, of about 1,000 pages, nonpareil type, shown by these lines. The set in cloth, $1.25; half-morocco, $1.75; postage, 20c. Issued also in six volumes, in strong manilla bin "in", price for the set, post-paid, $1.00.

It covers the history (from B.C. 5004 to A.D. 1892) and the description of all nations, ancient and modern (except the United States, which will be published and sold as a separate work), and of all the principal geographical divisions of the earth.

2 Cents will secure, post-paid, The History of Egypt, complete, with many illustrations, which will show the appearance and "character" of the remainder of the work.

The best Universal History for general use; it is certainly the cheapest historical work ever published; the equivalent of its contents can be found in no other cyclopedia selling at less than $30.00, and in no other will the history and statistics of modern nations be found brought down to so late a date.

"Compact and concise, very serviceable, of trifling cost."—The Week, Toronto.

"A vast amount of trustworthy matter covering a wide range."—School Journal, New York.

"An astonishing amount of valuable information carefully arranged."—American School Board Journal, Milwaukee.

"A great deal of information in small compass; a useful addition to a reference library."—News and Courier, Charleston.

"Much in little" is forcibly exemplified; will never stay long on the book-shelves, because of its handiness."—Home World, Chicago.

"A marvel of cheapness, seeing it is a marvel of excellence. We commend it for a large sale."—Illustrated Christian Weekly, New York.

"Remarkably interesting and useful, handsomely printed, with type which in spite of its size is so beautifully clear as to offer no objection."—Republican, Springfield, Mass.

Our Offer. By special arrangements with the publisher we are able to offer this excellent and remarkably cheap work to the subscribers to this paper on terms of extraordinary liberality, as follows:

To any person sending five yearly subscribers to the FARMER'S WIFE at 50 cents each, $2.50, and 20 cent for postage, will receive Alden's Cyclopedia of History in set of two volumes, cloth binding, free.

To any one sending six yearly subscribers and 50 cents each, $3.00, with 20 cents to pay postage on book, will receive, free, the set, two volumes, in Morocco.

Any one sending four subscribers at 50 cents each, $2.00, will receive the set, free of postage, in Manilla binding.

In addition to the above we will send the History of Egypt Paper to the first 100 sending for the above books. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A LARGE AND VALUABLE

Cook Book Free

We are enabled to offer our readers a most attractive combination, by which all may obtain a copy of the "Modern Cook Book" absolutely free. This handsome and valuable

320 Pages, Over 1,200 Recipes and Hundreds of Illustrations.

The recipes are the choicest selections from 20,000 that were received from practical housewives living in all parts of the United States, to which were added hundreds of the newest, best and most practical recipes of this progressive age, all of it set in new and large type, and the whole book handsomely illustrated.

IT HAS A BEAUTIFUL, ILLUMINATED COVER.

It is an elegant and admirably arranged volume of recipes for practical, everyday use. Among its points of excellence are the following:

Practical Suggestions to Young Housekeepers, Necessary Kitchen Utensils, Suggestions and Recipes for Soups, Fish, Poultry, Game, Meats, Salads, Sauces, Cutsups and Relishes, Breakfast and Tea Dishes, Vegetables, Bread, Biscuits, Pies, Puddings, Cakes, Custards, Desserts, Cookies, Fritters, etc. Also for Preserves, Candies and Beverages; Cookery for the Sick, Bills of Fare for Family Dinners, Holiday Dinners, etc. A Table of Weights and Measures; Chapters on the Various Departments of Household Management and Work.

IT WOULD BE CHEAP AT $1,

As it is the Latest, Best and Most Practical Cook Book Published, More Nearly Meeting the Wants of American Homes than any other.

Any person accepting our offer will receive this paper one year, and also that charming home journal, the Ladies Home Companion, one year, together with the Cook Book, all mailed, postpaid, for less than the regular price of the two papers alone.

The Cook Book is offered absolutely free to induce thousands of our readers to become acquainted with the Ladies Home Companion, the publishers looking to the future for their profit, as they believe you will always want the Ladies Home Companion if you try it one year. Do not lose this opportunity to get the newest and best Cook Book free.

THE LADIES HOME COMPANION is a large and popular 16-page journal, published twice a month, and is mostly written by ladies. Original or Selected Stories by eminent authors are found in each issue. A special feature is the variety of departments, each of which is conducted by a special editor. It gives the latest fashions, arranged for practical use; timely hints to housekeepers; cheering and helpful talks with Mother; valuable information for lovers of flowers; a pretty and pleasant page for pretty and pleasant children. All handsomely illustrated. It is not an ultra-fashion paper, but a journal for the home circle, full of common-sense ideas and suggestions for home happiness and comfort.

OUR OFFER! Send us $1.00 and you will receive the FARMER'S WIFE one year and also the Ladies Home Companion one year (twenty-four numbers). Every one accepting this offer will receive the above cook book, postpaid. Address,

THE FARMER'S WIFE, TOPEKA, KANS.

TEN REASONS FOR USING DOBBINS ELECTRIC SOAP.

THE REASON WHY it is BEST from a sanitary point of view, is because of its absolute purity.

" " " it is unscented, is because nothing is used in its manufacture that must be hidden or disguised.

" " " it is cheapest to use, is because it is harder and dryer than ordinary soap, and does not waste away; also because it is not filled with rosin and clay as make-weights.

" " " no boiling of clothes is needed, is because there is no adulteration in it—it being absolutely pure, can do its own work.

" " " it leaves clothes washed with it whiter and sweeter than any other soap, is because it contains no adulteration to yellow them.

" " " it washes flannels without shrinking, bringing them out soft, white and fleecy, is because it is free from rosin, which hardens, yellows and mats together all woolen fibres, making them harsh and coarse.

" " " three bars of it will make a gallon of elegant white soft-soap if simply shaved up and thoroughly dissolved by boiling in a gallon of water, is that it contains pure and costly ingredients found in no other soap.

" " " it won't injure the finest lace or the most delicate fabric, is that all these ingredients are harmless.

" " " we paid $50,000 for the formula twenty-five years ago, is that we knew there was no other soap like it.

" " " so many millions of women use it is that they have found it to be the best and most economical, and absolutely unchanging in quality.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR IT.

DOBBINS SOAP MFG. CO., SUCCESSORS TO I. L. CRAGIN & CO., CHICAGO, NEW YORK, BOSTON, ———— PHILADELPHIA AND CINCINNATI.

It is worth the attention of the 100,000 people living within a line drawn from Wabunsee to Snokomo, Waushara, Osage City, Wakarusa, Tecumseh, Oskaloosa, Ozarkie, Nettawaka, Onaga, Pottawatomie and Wamego, thence to the place of beginning, embracing within this area the county of Shawnee and the city of Topeka, beautiful for situation upon the banks of the classic Kaw. A little to the north lies the village of Menoken, while to the east rises the heights of Tecumseh, to the west is a beautiful undulating sunset country, and to the south is the rich garden-like valley of the placid Shunganunga.

I ask again, is it not worth your attention that DOWNING is making the finest of PHOTOS, the high artistic finish of which gives such general satisfaction.

617 Kansas Avenue, - TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE NATIONAL ALLIANCE AID DECREE.

A Co-operative Life Insurance Association for the Members of the Farmers' Alliance only.

The cheapest Life Insurance in the world. Secure a policy for those who are dependent upon you. See Local Organizer, or address, H. BAUCHMAN, Bom. of Ins., F. A. & L. U., BURTON, KANSAS.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.

Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State.

Send for Circulars and Prices.

J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by CLARA BEWICK COLBY.

Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

JOHNSON & FIELD CO. RACINE, WISCONSIN.

The "Racine" Farm and Warehouse Fanning Mills, Land Rollers and Broadcast Seeders, ELEVATOR MACHINERY and SUPPLIES, Gas and Steam Engines.

Send for Catalogue and Prices.

Our line of BICYCLES consists of over 30 different sizes and models, HIGH AND MEDIUM GRADE from $20.00 to $170.00, for every class of riders.

We guarantee to give you the best value for the money, and guarantee every wheel. Don't buy a Bicycle until you see our catalogue and get our prices.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED

Vol. XII, No. 5

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, JANUARY, 1894.

VOL. XII. NO. 5.

DEACON STANDSTILL'S OPINIONS.

ELLEN FRACKER PRATT.

I haint no b'liever in woman's rights,
As they talk 'em up today,
But I b'lieve in their going to church,
An a learnin' how to pray.

If my old woman 'll do her best
In that there line o' work,
And stay to hum the rest of the week,
And none of her dooties shirk,

It's my belief she'll get her crown
When she goes to tother side,
Long afore them suffragists
With their polyticks cut and dried.

What ternal rights do women need
Besides what they hev got;
Haint food and clothes pervided for,
Haint theirs the easy lot?

And yet my daughter, Sary Ann,
Is getting so pesky high,
She vows she's goin' away from home,
And some perfession try,

She likes to argufy with me,
'Bout woman and her "sphere,"
Such notions as she's taken to,
I swan they're mighty queer.

They're bound to come when women's tongues

Are left to their own waggen—
Now John, my son, he's something like,
But then I haint a braggen,
Because, our folks, they really say
He patterned after me—
Tall and manly, and holds his views
'Gainst women voters, see?

Poor John! he married two years ago
A smart and pretty creatur
As ever breathed, I do declare,
It did me good to meet her.

But after while she seemed to change,
And first we knew she'd fled,
Nothin' to tell her whereabouts,
Only, "Think of me as dead."

Then Sary Ann, with her sharp tongue, Declared 'twas "tyrant John
That drove her to't, dear innocent,
And she was glad she'd gone."

Perhaps he was a bit too harsh,
And p'raps she needed tamen—
Most women do—I haint the man
To be my son a blamen.

Now my wife, Tilda, didn't balk
When we two hitched together;
She seemed to know it wasn't best,
'N I never struck her nuther.

I haint no fault to find with her,
The mother of Sary Ann,
Exceptin' she's dissatisfied
'Cause I don't lend a han'

T'wards helpin' 'thet girl o' ours
In getting a persillion.
Lord! does she think that I'm a goin'
To help her to perdition?

Yon give a woman a easy rein,
And let her hev her head,
And where's her lord and master, sir?
—He might as well be dead.

She'd hev him home by ten o'clock,
A readin' the paper beside her;
He'd hev to ask a nickle of her
If he wanted a drink of cider!

I tell you, brethren, the only way
To keep the women quiet,
Is to shet down on the magazines,
Them's what makes the riot.

They get too smart to work at home
Fer food, and clothes, and shelter;
They want to get out in the world,
And go it helter-skelter!

Don't talk to me 'bout women's rights,
Why brethren don't you see,
If they're allowed the upper hand
They'll carry the night latch key!

While you and me can stay at hum
'N sew our buttons on,
'N rock the baby, while darnen socks,
'N wonder where she's gone.

'N mebbe she'll tell and mebbe she wont,
You know how 'tis yerself—
But one things certain, she'll rule the roost,
And you'll be laid on the shelf.

The banks will all be busted sure,
If women get the ballot—
They'll be so 'fraid to trust the men,
They'll hang on to the wallet.

I haint no friend to the liquor saloon,
But what 'll the rum-seller do,
If their occupation's taken away?
There's a question fer me and fer you.

I tell you brethren, rum will go,
And so will the home, if we dare,
To allow a woman president,
To sit in the White House chair.

I don't want my wife, nor my daughter, sir,
To shoulder the burdens we bear,
'N brethren I know you'll agree with me,
In pecteren the weak and the fair.

The lords of creation, we was made,
The good book tells us so,
There isn't a lordess mentioned there,
That's enough fer me to know.

I'm goin' to stand by that thar book,
'N do my dooty square,
'N fight agin women's rights—
Brethren, let us unite in prayer.

—Woman's Standard.

The Little Red School-house.

KANSAS

WOMEN!

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

THE THIRD STAR
OF THE WEST: Wyoming, Colorado and Kansas.

The Great Amendment Campaign Now Open.

The question of Equal Suffrage to be settled November, 1894, when Kansas, like Wyoming and Colorado, will give full enfranchisement to women.

The "FARMER'S WIFE" the Leading Exponent.

The Editor and Publisher has sufficient income to support themselves. The FARMER'S WIFE pays no salaries. EVERY DOLLAR received will go towards carrying the

AMENDMENT To a Successful Issue.

GET US A CLUB!

And help the cause along. Don't delay. Get the FARMER'S WIFE in every family at once. Send for Subscription Blanks and Club rates.

Single Subscriptions, 50 cents a year.

EMMA D. PACK,

TOPEKA,

KANSAS.

WHY NOT?

My next door neighbor, a quiet home-body, whom one would suppose thought little of the great questions of the day, dropped into my arm chair for a rest and a chat, after a hard day's washing. What do you think of woman suffrage?" said I. I had just been reading the FARMER'S WIFE, and, of course, that subject was still in my mind.

"Now that's jist what I've bin a thinkin' of all day, as I was a rubbin' an' a bilin' and a rinchin', of all the queer things that ever I heerd on, that we wimen can't vote is the queerest I've talked to John 'bout it, but, jist 'tween me and you, I don't b'lieve he knows why, one bit better'n I do. He al'as tells me of them resolutions of the grand, old democrat party, an' honest, I don't b'lieve he's very proud of 'em, specially that one 'bout the 'bone of contention'; he alus clears his throat or holds his paper higher or twists 'round, or sumthin' of that kind, when he comes to that part of 'em. I feel sorry fer him when he gits to talkin' of them resolutions, fer John an' me's alus bin honest with one 'nuther, an' he jist looks so sheepish like, when that subject's brought up; jist fer all the world like he'd dun somethin' he's 'shamed of. Now what I can't see is why, if the home's bin happy when the man voted, in the name of all 'at's wonderful, will it be onhappy if they both vote. Do they reckon she haint got as much sense 'bout what she wants, nor as much conscience 'bout the good of the country as him? Won't two votes, both cast fer the good of the home an' the state, count more'n one? I ses to Brother Joel, when he was up 'tother day, ses I, 'do tell me why the wimen can't vote.' He jist laughed like he'd heard a great joke, and ses he, 'Why because the men won't let 'em.' 'But why won't they?' ses I. 'Well, now,' ses he, 'you've got me.' 'Joel, ses I, 'air they ever a goin' to let us vote?' 'Not if the democrats kin hev their way' ses he. An' then I vowed to send up no more prayers fer the success of that party. I'm sorry, too, John's alus bin a democrat, I don't know why; Joel ses it's 'cause his father was. Do you reckon people's born with them ideas in their heads? Not that I care particular to vote, but there's lots of good women as does.

An' then the men say the country is in a bad way, an' this law's wrong, an' that law's no 'count; an' they've got things in sich a muddle a tryin' to run the world so long themselves, that it does seem to me they'll never get things righted 'less we help 'em; an' why they don't want our help, I can't fer the life of me see. We wimen alus hev to bar the blame fer what goes wrong in the house. Did you ever see a boy who took to walkin' in the crooked path, but what folks shake their heads an' say, 'I knowd his mother'd spile him?' Did you ever see a man go to ruin but what some woman had to shoulder the blame fer his onrighteous ways? Now, I'd jist like to know if we must be held responsible for their sins, why we oughtn't to hev the legal say. The good most of us hev our say; thank the good Lord, they can't stop that, though they do say as there air wimen as dursn't open their heads 'bout votin' when their men's 'bout. But why can't we have the legal say at the ballot box as to what laws shall be made, so as to help us, an' what shall not be made to hinder us, in a bringin' up our boys an' a holdin' up our men.

You read of wimen a fillin' every callin', from preacher to pilot, and from professor to poultry raisin, an' they can't make me b'lieve it's right fer us to not hev one legal word to say about the makin' of the laws as governs all them ways of earnin' our bread. We're tried by law, if we don't walk jist straight; we're taxed by 'em, them of us as has anything to tax; we're married by 'em, an' divorced by 'em; an' our property is taken an' divided up, that is if we hev any when our men dies and leaves us to bring up our children alone.

From the time we're laid in our cradle till we're laid in our grave, we're governed an' hedged in by laws, good an' bad, an' I jist wish some one would rise up and tell me one good, sensible reason why we wimen can't vote to hev them laws somethin' like we want 'em."

"The only reason I can think of," said I, seeing she had had her say and was preparing to go home, "is the one Joel gave you, but I see nothing good nor sensible in that."

"But air they a goin' to let us vote?" "Oh, yes, we shall vote in Kansas after this year, no doubt of that."

"Well, fer the life of me, I can't see why they don't," said the dear, old soul as she tied her shawl round her head and went out. AUNT LOUISA.

NEW ZEALAND WOMEN VOTE.

A recent dispatch from San Francisco says: "The only interesting news from the south seas brought by the Mariposa today was about the working of the female suffrage act in New Zealand. At the recent election, women, for the first time in the colony, voted on an equality with men, and no distinction whatever was made between the sexes, everyone over twenty-one being eligible to vote. The candidates had committees of ladies as well as gentlemen, and the members of the ladies' committees were as keen as the oldest electioneers in bringing voters of their own sex to the polls. They made provision by which any woman having a baby had a member of the committee to relieve her of family cares while she was recording her vote. The women had their own committee rooms and complete electioneering organization. It has frequently been objected that it would be impossible for women to go to the polling booths on account of rowdism, but there was nothing of the kind. No provision was made for separate polling places for women. They went to the same booths as the men, and in no single instance was there any annoyance. It has been said if the franchise were given to women they would be influenced largely by character, and would take care to banish from politics men of notoriously loose lives. It is claimed that this has been carried out in the present election."

WOMAN'S MISSION.

Extract from an Address by Mary T. Lathrop of Michigan.

I do not know what you may think of the woman's crusade, but let me say, as a woman who stood inside it, that the womanhood of this nation never laid such a tribute at the feet of its manhood. If you want to find out what a boy is worth, go ask his mother. By the time she goes into the jaws of death to give him birth, and then puts into him her days of love and nights of care, and he stands before her strong and clean and tall at twenty-one, she can tell you what he is worth, from the crown of his head to the soles of his feet, and when the legalized dramshop takes hold of him and tears him down, fiber by fiber, and puts oaths on the lips she used to kiss, and crushes out his mother's hopes, it is no wonder she makes outcry.

If you want to know what a home is worth, go and ask a loving woman who has kept herself as pure as God's lilies for her marriage day, when, with a great shine in her eyes, she puts herself over into the hands of one man, for better or for worse, for richer or for poorer, until life's end. And when the dramshop, with its fearful curse, crosses the threshold of the home they built together and takes down her strong tower of hope, stone by stone, and degrades the father of her children, it is no wonder woman makes outcry.

What was the woman's crusade? It was a long smothered sob breaking into a cry; it was a midnight prayer coming abroad at noonday. You men sometimes say to us, as we stand in places like this, "Home is your kingdom." We do not dispute it; we know it better than you know it, but it was our kingdom that was outraged. You say to us, standing ballotless and defenseless before this vampire of our civilization, "You do not need the ballot; we defend you by love and by law." Do you, when for eighty-five years, by well defined license legislation, motherhood has been uncrowned and her children slain by law, and you have made no protest against it? You have prayed about it in prayer meeting, but when it comes to the sweep of empire in the ballot box and in political organizations you have made no protest.

Oh, men, I cannot believe that a civilization is worth much that cannot protect its women and its babies! And grand as you are, and strong as you are, and true as you are, you will never be able to protect your women, and your children and the dramshop at the same time. Oh, in shame, in very shame, either get up and strike down this enemy of the home, and of wifehood, and of childhood, or else put the ballot into the hands of your women for their own protection.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PAOK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

MATRONS AND MAIDS.

THOUGHTS FOR WOMEN OLD AND YOUNG.

The Wife Knows More Than Her Husband About Many Things—Treatment of the Finger Nails—Cure for Headache—The Skirt of To-day.

The Management of the Finger Nails.

THE correct management of the nails is to cut them of an oval shape, corresponding with the shape of the fingers. Never allow them to grow long, as it makes it difficult to keep them clean; nor too short, as it causes the tips of the fingers to become flattened and enlarged, and to turn upward, which gives the hand an awkward appearance. The skin which grows in a semi-circle on the top of the nail requires much attention, as it is often drawn on with its growth, dragging the skin below the nail so tight as to cause it to form what are termed aqnaills. This is to be prevented by separating the skin from the nail with a blunt, half-circular instrument. Many persons cut this pellicle, which causes it to grow very thick and uneven, and sometimes damages the growth of the nail. It is also injurious to pick under the nail with a pen or penknife, or point of the scissors. The nails should be scrubbed with a brush, not too hard, and the semi-circular flesh pressed back with the towel, without touching the quick. This method, if pursued daily, will keep the nails in proper order. When the nails are badly formed or ill-shaped, the ridges or fibers should be scraped and rubbed with a lemon, and well dried afterward; but if the nails are very thin the above remedy will not do them any good, but might cause them to split.

The Wisdom of Wives.

A man's wife often knows more than he does about a great many things, and while he need not lower himself in her estimation by admitting her mental superiority, it is sometimes well for him to silently recognize her superior intelligence, and profit by it. If he is a wise man, he will not be too ready to come into accord with the opinions of his wife, but will affect a great deal of wisdom of his own, even though he knows that he has none. It never increases a wife's respect for her husband to know that he is her inferior in anything, and it certainly does not increase her respect or her affection to have him intimate by word or look that she does not know anything at all. The judgment of the average woman regarding the disbursement of money is often better than that of the average man, particularly when it comes to spending money for domestic purposes. It takes a shrewd tradesman to get over the average sensible woman, while a tradesman finds it easy to work off stale goods on the average man; and the most conceited man might as well acknowledge frankly that his wife can attend to most of the affairs of her own household better than he can attend to them for her. Women very often have the most acute perception regarding business affairs. If men would only "talk business" with their wives, instead of taking it for granted that women "don't understand anything about business," there would probably be fewer failures. Many a successful business man owes his success to the keenness of judgment of a partner whose name does not appear in the firm or over the shop window, and who is not supposed to have any connection with the business, and that partner is his wife, in whom he is wise enough to confide. The exchange of confidence and a mutual respect for each other's opinions would do much towards making the wheels of domestic happiness run along smoothly.

The Skirt of the Day.

The skirt with gored front and sides and full back breadths has proved one of the most satisfactory patterns of the medium class gowns, such as the average woman depends upon so largely. Home dressmakers find this skirt easy to make. It hangs well, can be cut from goods of any width, is neither too full nor too scant, and is the best "all-round" skirt in use.

By any one with the least knack it can be cut without a pattern. When the seams are sewed it should be laid on a table large enough to support its full width, or on the floor, and trim off around the bottom by eye. The only mistake likely to be made in fashioning this skirt is in trimming too little off of the gored seam at the side of the back. This has a tendency to sag, and if not carefully shaped with reference to the back will hang longer than the straight breadths. Of course the seams should be begun at the top, as in placing a straight and gored edge together there always must be a difference in length.—New York Times.

The Kitchen.

I have in mind one city kitchen, which certainly is a model of its kind. The mistress objects to whitewashed or papered walls. Instead, hers are painted in a real coffee color, which can be wiped regularly, thus removing dust and stain. As the next best substitute for a hard wood floor she uses linoleum, which she keeps oiled and waxed as she would the former, were she fortunate enough to find such a luxury in the city house. She has a wire screen closet in a cool place for vegetables and berries which she does not like to put on the ice, and she has a large shelfless closet under a wooden awning in the back yard for such articles as stepladder, lawn mower, and ironing board, which generally are left to accumulate in the extension or must be carried up and down the cellar stairs. She denies the statement that girls do not appreciate a clean, convenient sanitary kitchen, for more than once, she claims, the kitchen has been an inducement for good help to return in the fall.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Dust Cloaks.

The summer dust cloaks are so stylish in appearance and becoming that they are worn on nearly every out-door occasion. One of soft ecru crepon is in the shape of the chateaine robe of the pilgrim, having straight fronts and loose-hanging sleeves, with bows and ends of satin ribbon at the throat and waist. Another is of shot green and gray silky brilliantine trimmed with black lace. A third is fawn colored crepon, with narrow rows of brown silk stitching by way of trimming. This is very neat, the stitching being ornamental without detracting from the usefulness of the wrap. Black silk lined with color makes a more serviceable dust cloak than one of a light color, and one equally if not more "dressy." It should fit snugly at the waist in the back, the cape folded over in flehu manner, allowing just a glimpse of the lining to give a little "tone," and lighten the somber character of the garment.—New York Evening Post.

Collecting Hat Pins.

Women have abandoned spoon collecting in a measure. No wonder! Some of them have a hundred or two of every size, shape, and design. The latest thin—a real summer diversion—is collecting silver hat pins. You will notice the elaborateness of some of these sharp implements, if you take any note of millinery elsewhere than in shop windows. Most of these pins would serve for daggers in case of need, being sharp enough and strong enough to dispatch a man. Fancy Juliet carrying her dagger in her hair, though to be sure Theodora took the gold pin from hers to dispatch Marcellus.—Boston Journal.

A Wedding Gift.

One of the most unique wedding gifts to the royal couple was a birthday book with covers of yellow tortoise shell, mounted in gold, with the words "Leaves of Remembrance" in diamonds, placed diagonally on the front. In one corner, in enameled gold, is the coat of arms of the Princess May; in the opposite the coat of arms of the Duke of York. The interior of the book contains twelve leaves of ivory, on each of which is painted a design in keeping with the name of the month, together with beautifully executed portraits of near relatives.

Not Much Changed.

Here comes along a diary written by a lady of fashion some fifty years ago, and among other complaints, which are like echoes of those we hear every day, are these: "Our streets are not wide enough for the carriages, nor the week long enough for one's engagements. There isn't enough money, or enough time to spend it in. In short such a mess!" Also, the writer of the diary, Lady Georgina de Ros, says: "No wonder girls are delicate if they eat mutton chops before dinner!"—Chicago Journal.

Tasting Sailors' Food.

When Emperor William tasted the food of his sailors on board his yacht at Cowes he did only what is prescribed in the United States navy and probably every navy in the world. When the Italian man-of-war the Giovanni Bausan lay at the Brooklyn navy yard the young gentleman acting as officer of the deck a certain day excused himself to a visitor and turned aside to taste with due solemnity a portion of the sailors' noonday meal held up to him on deck. The same thing occurs at early morning, when coffee is served, and at night when the sailors have supper. The officer of the deck is the representative of the commander, and when the former tastes the sailors' food he does it vicariously for the latter. Emperor William merely did for himself what the United States naval commander does through the officer of the deck.—New York Sun

SLOPING SHOULDERS.

THESE ARE NOW THE PROPER THING.

Methods by Which the Desired Slope Is Brought About—Four Kinds of Trimming on One Skirt—Two Beautiful House Dresses.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.
New York correspondence:

FASHIONS once determined are for the most part easily followed. To say that this color or that is the fashion, that this material is the rage and that the latest is simple, and to conform to the style so set forth is a mere matter of pocket-book and taste. But when fashion lifts her silver voice and says sloping shoulders are the only ones to be recognized, and you must all prove you have them by wearing your gowns off your shoulders, then the girls have a task that does not altogether depend on purse and judgment. But nothing daunts a woman when fashion leads the fray, and the girls are setting to work to make sloping shoulders for themselves. Almost every fashionable girl's list of resolutions for the new year includes a solemn promise to herself to spend an hour a day on her shoulders. That may sound paradoxical, but it isn't. She means an hour a day in the cultivation of slope to her shoulders. It comes, hard because only a little while ago she was at work squaring them, but who minds a little hard work. She lifts weights, she stands with as heavy a weight as she can hold in each hand, the arms hanging at the sides and the shoulders dragged down by the weight. Then she practices her neck to get rid of the swelling cords that show because of the pull on her shoulders, and it is a good long while before she can learn to let her shoulders fall and at the same time wear her neck flexed and unstrained at the cords. The exercise makes her neck a thing of beauty, whether she really accomplishes sloped shoulders or not.

EACH POSSESSES NOVELTY.

There is a good deal, in looking as if you had sloped shoulders, in adopting a sort of shoulder poise. It tricks the eye. Very many of the off-shoulder evening dresses impress the observer unfavorably. A model much more modest and suitable for a young woman is shown in the initial cut. This dainty demi-toilet is made of pale-blue crepon, with a perfectly plain bell skirt. It is confined at the waist by a draped satin belt, and epaulettes of the same cover the shoulders. First, in the illustration below, comes one of the novelties of this season, a velvet bodice in a contrasting shade of the skirt, but with sleeves that harmonize. This model has a black velvet bodice with reddish lavender sleeves and skirt. The wide bell skirt is garnished near the top with two velvet ruffles each five inches wide, while a third but narrower ruffle forms the basques of the bodice. The shoulder-straps are made of cheviot and harmonize with the stanning collar. The garniture of the bodice consists of narrow passementerie bands. The companion costume to the last described is made of a faded lavender bengaline trimmed with lavender and green changeable mirror velvet. The latter is taken for the sleeves, revers with loops (a new innovation) as well as for the long pointed plastron in back. The sole trimming of the skirt consists of three rows of machine stitching around the bottom. The bodice is pointed at the back and the reverse lap over in front and are ornamented with large buttons. They are cut in loops over the shoulders, and continue down the back hooking in the center, and ending in a point at the waist where four loops of velvet finish it. It is the same as if a plain plastron with bretelles were reversed and the back taken for the front. The bottom of the bodice is finished with a deep circular basque ornamented like the waist.

HARNES TRIMMING.

FOUR KINDS OF TRIMMING ON ONE SKIRT.

In the third illustration comes a gown of white and pale-green changeable watered silk, trimmed with a vivid green silk crepe and garlands of wax beads. The festoons of beads at the hips are attached to the belt, forming the sort of harness for skirt ornamentation which is now often seen. Yoke and zouave harness is to be had, too. This is entirely made of bands of jetted or jeweled galloon. A yoke is outlined front and back, and from this bands converge from the collar. Bands are draped from the yoke band to pass in zouave jacket fashion over the bust and under the arms. Such an affair worn over a low neck and gauzy bodice is most effective, the bands on the bare neck showing very handsomely.

A dinner dress made of yellow satin trimmed with white silk gauze, pale golden-brown moire and velvet ribbons and white lace with the design faintly outlined with fine gold threads is to be seen in the fourth picture. On the skirt there is a gauze ruffle, and above it are two plain bands of velvet ribbon, then a wide band of watered silk ribbon and again a zigzag trimming of narrow moire ribbon. The bodice is garnished with a puffy plastron of gauze, square at the bottom with a small V at the top, and is finished with pleated gauze basques. The sleeves have two puffs finished with a lace frill and a long cuff. The stuff of the toilet is a new quality of satin which is very soft and pliable and drapes beautifully. The idea of making one toilet do duty as an evening or theater dress as well as for less ceremonious occasions is surely worthy of copying and the model shown at the left in the last picture is especially suitable for such a combination. The bodice is cut in a round decollete, but when filled in with a guimpe of the same or of contrasting shade it does very well for a theater or visiting dress. The model has a gored foundation skirt with slight train, made of black faille, and the upper skirt is made of black chantilly all-over lace and is joined to the lower skirt only by the skirt band. The lace skirt is banded with four rows of rep ribbon and finished around the bottom with a lace frill headed by narrow jet passementerie. The decollete bodice of black faille is covered with lace only in front and has lace bretelles that run into epaulettes over the shoulders. The guimpe is also made of black faille and covered with lace, and when worn gives the bodice the appearance of having a round lace yoke back and front, edged in back with a lace frill. The puffed sleeves reach to the elbow and are draped with lace as well as finished with a frill of the same. Beside this costume is seen a house dress whose bodice has very wide revers, quite a popular cut at present. Heavy bluish-green diagonal is used for it, garnished with a bright red plaid silk. The circular skirt is plain and the tight-fitting bodice has jacket revers which form deep points on the shoulders and are alike back and front.

TWO HOUSE DRESSES. ONE OF DOUBLE USE.

Copyright, 1903.

QUEER ARCHITECTURE.

Three of the Famous Leaning Bell Towers in Italy.

Of the bell towers or campaniles of Italy the most famous is the campanile of Pisa. Hundreds of tourists visit this yearly not so much because it is beautiful as because it is curious. Instead of rising perpendicularly it is built leaning, standing like a tree which the winds have bent in its growth. It is 179 feet high and is 13 feet out of perpendicular. The tower is built of white marble and is encircled by eight rows of pillars rising one above the other. It was begun in the twelfth century and was 200 years in building. During its construction the foundation settled, throwing the building out of plumb. Notwithstanding its leaning position, the tower is perfectly solid. In its upper story there are seven bells, one of which is a giant of six tons weight. In Bologna there are two leaning towers. One of these, the Torre Asinelli, is 320 feet high and four feet out of the perpendicular. The defect is due to accident in its construction. The other tower, the Torre Garisenda, was actually begun with the intention of building a leaning tower. The builders could not, however, carry it beyond 163 feet high, and at this height it is ten feet out of perpendicular. The two towers stand near each other in a square in the center of Bologna.

FACTS ABOUT PERSIA.

Some Queer Institutions of That Oriental Land.

There are some queer institutions in the Orient. Thus, in Persia, there are two kinds of marriage. One is permanent, and in this the husband is restricted to four wives. In the inferior grade of marriage, which is a contract entered into for a limited period, 90 years being the regular maximum, a man may marry as many women as he can support. These inferior women perform menial services for the proper wives, yet, singularly, the children of both classes are regarded as equal.

A PERSIAN MENDICANT.

Among a great portion of the people, probably on account of limited means, polygamy is not practiced.

In Persia, as in Hindostan and other Eastern lands, religious mendicancy is a regular institution. The cities and towns swarm with mollahs, or common priests, who eke out their existence owing to the credulity of the people.

The chief races that go to make up the population of Persia are the Turks, Kurds, Leks and Arabs. The Leks are of genuine Persian blood and are the descendants of the early inhabitants of the country. A large number of the people lead nomadic lives and live on the produce of their flocks and herds.

Royal Wits.

Prince Henry of Prussia has a pretty wit. When his imperial brother William ("Der Reisende Kaiser") remarked to him recently that the doctors had ordered him (William) to try at least a month's entire change of air, the prince remarked, dryly: "Better try a month in Berlin"—which is supposed to be his home. In much the same vein is a good story told in a London paper of his little son, Prince Eitel Fritz, who has just reached the mature age of 10. "Papa," once remarked the little fellow, "is always away from home. It is a good thing mamma remains with us, else there would be nobody here when the babies are born!"

Passing of the Alligator.

The alligator is threatened with speedy extermination. He grows slowly, but he grows as long as he lives, and a twelve-footer is said to be about 75 years old. Over 2,500,000, according to an estimate from Florida, have been killed in the last dozen years.

Pretty.

Gold alloyed with 20 per cent. of aluminum takes on a brilliant ruby tint.

ANOTHER ROYAL WEDDING.

Czarowitz of Russia to Marry the Daughter of the Prince of Wales.

Announcement has been officially made of the betrothal of the Grand Duke Nicholas, eldest son and heir-apparent of the Czar of Russia, and Princess Victoria, second daughter of the Prince of Wales. This will make a triple matrimonial connection between the royal families of Russia and Great Britain. To begin with, the Czarina, mother of the prospective bridegroom, and Princess Alexandra of Wales, mother of the bride-to-be, are sisters, while the sister of the Czar is the wife of the Duke of Edinburgh, second son of Queen Victoria. Should the Czarowitz outlive his father his English-born wife, if she too is living, will become Empress of Russia.

THE CZAROWITZ. PRINCESS VICTORIA.

The Grand Duke Nicholas was born May 18, 1868, while the natal day of Princess Victoria was July 6 of the same year. The Czarowitz bears a striking resemblance to his cousin and future brother-in-law, the Duke of York.

Princess Victoria has had little opportunity to distinguish herself. She is—as all princesses are conceded to be—amiable, and by courtesy at least is beautiful.

SAFETY LOCK FOR POCKETBOOK

An Ingenious Device for Protecting the Money One Carries.

The various kinds of pocketbooks are innumerable, and it seems almost impossible that anything new in regard to them could be conceived by the human brain. Yet some inventor has launched upon the trade a purse which at first sight presents no marked peculiarities. Externally one cannot help but notice a total absence of hook or spring for locking the purse, and no matter how much one may press or pull, it does not open. The hand which holds the article in question in the accompanying sketch furnishes the key for the solution of the puzzle. To open it requires that it be held as indicated, and raised on a level with the eyes. Through this elevation a small counterweight is displaced, which is attached to the hook of the lock, and by which two small springs are released, thus allowing the purse to open automatically.

A NEW POCKETBOOK.

Saving Crops in Oregon.

Farming is business and the crops must be saved in the far West. A visitor at the Polk Butler settlement on Des Chutes Ridge, Ore., a few days ago, noticing that the schoolhouse was still closed and the fall term, long overdue, has not yet begun, asked when school would commence. "Not till the wheat gets dry," was the reply. "Why, what's the school to do with the wheat?" was the natural query. "We're drying it in the schoolhouse," was the explanation. Wet wheat was spread all over the schoolhouse floor, from three to five feet deep.

A Curious Coptic Custom.

The Coptic patriarch of Alexandria is never allowed to sleep more than fifteen minutes at any one time, and if the attendant should allow the holy one's nap to extend beyond the allotted time the penalty is decapitation. Upon being aroused at the end of each quarter hour the patriarch arises and spreads his rug upon the floor, kneels upon it, bows his head three times to the east, and again retires.

Nice Climate.

At Great Falls, Montana, the mercury has been known to drop 25 degrees inside of five minutes.

Is This Authentic?

It has been calculated that 800 shots were fired for every man wounded during our late civil war.

Mountains of Fuel.

The great ocean steamers use from 190 to 220 tons of coal per day.

HOW PINS ARE MADE.

CUT, POINTED, HEADED AND PACKED BY MACHINERY.

Wonderfully Ingenious Mechanism Which Turns Out the Little "Bachelor's Friend" at the Rate of 7,500 an Hour—How They Get Their Polish.

Hardly Touched by Hand.

The machine that makes pins turns out 7,500 of these tiny essentials in an hour. Before the pin is finished it goes through very many operations, which are described in the Youth's companion as follows: A reel of wire hangs over the machine, the free end of which passes between two rollers. As the wire leaves the rollers it passes between two matched dies until it touches a gauge. Just as it does this the dies come together and clamp it firmly in a groove in their face. At the same time the machine cuts it off the proper length. The gauge then moves away, and a little punch forms the head by striking the end which rests against the gauge. When this is finished the dies separate and deliver the pin into one of the great many grooves in the face of the wheel about a foot in diameter, and just as wide across its face as the pin is long.

SEVEN THOUSAND PINS AN HOUR.

When the pin is taken by the wheel it has no point, but as the wheel turns it rubs the pins against an outside band, which causes each one to roll in its groove and at the same time carries them past a set of rapidly moving files, which brush against the blunt ends and sharpen them roughly. They next pass against the faces of two grinding-wheels, which smooth the points, and then to a rapidly moving leather band having fine emery glued on its face. This gives them the final polish, and as they leave the band they are dropped into a box underneath the machine.

After this the pins are plated with tin to give them a bright, silvery appearance. They are prepared for plating by being first immersed in weak sulphuric acid to remove all grease, and then dried by being placed—a bushel or so at a time, with about the same quantity of sawdust—in a machine called a tumbling barrel. This is simply a cask suspended on a shaft which passes through it lengthwise. Two or three hours' rolling in sawdust cleans the pins and wears away any little roughness which the machine may have caused.

THE FIRST POLISHING PROCESS.

Pins and sawdust are taken together from the barrel and allowed to fall in a steady stream through a blast of air. The sawdust, being the lighter, is blown over into a large, room-like box, while the pins, being heavier, fall into a bin below. After this they are spread out in trays having sheets of zinc in their bottoms, which have previously been connected with one of the wires of an electric battery. The trays are then placed in a tank containing a solution of tin in muriatic acid, and the other wire of the battery is inserted in the solution. Electrical action immediately begins and deposits metallic tin on the entire surface of each pin.

They are then washed in a tank of water and put into other tumbling barrels with hot sawdust. When they have been dried and cleaned on sawdust, as in the former instance, they are put into a large, slowly revolving copper-lined tub, which is tilted at an angle of about 45 degrees. As this revolves the pins keep sliding down the smooth copper to the lower side. This constant rubbing against the tub and against each other polishes them. It was the practice formerly to allow pins of all lengths to become mixed in the different operations, and, after polishing, to separate them by a very ingenious machine, but it has been found more economical to keep each size to itself.

THE FINAL TUMBLING OPERATION.

From the polishing tub the pins are carried to the "sticker," where they fall from a hopper on an inclined plane in which are a number of slits. The pins catch in these slits and, hanging by their heads, slide down the incline to the apparatus which inserts them in the paper. As the number of pins in a row on the paper and the number of slits are the same, an entire row is stuck at once by an ingenious device, which takes one pin from each slit and inserts them all at once in the two ridges which have been crimped in the paper by a wheel that holds it in place to receive the pins. At the same time the wheel crimps the paper it spaces the rows, so that when filled with pins the paper will fold up properly.

This whole machine is so delicate in its action that a single bent or otherwise imperfect pin will cause the machine to stop feeding until the attendant removes it; yet its operation is so rapid that one machine will stick 90,000 pins an hour. As the long strip of paper on which the pins are stuck comes from the machine it is cut into proper lengths by girls, who then fold and pack the papers in bundles ready for shipment.

LONDON'S THATCHED COTTAGE.

Quaint and Picturesque Relic Which Is Soon to Be Torn Down.

The last thatched cottage in London is about to be torn down. Few Londoners even are aware of the existence of this quaint relic of a time when life was a much simpler thing than it is to-day. But the almighty pound crushes out sentiment in the modern Babylon just as the almighty dollar does in this country, and as a consequence this unique object will in the near future give place to the ever-extending piles of brick and mortar.

LONDON'S LAST THATCHED COTTAGE.

The cottage is set in a little bit of country scenery hedged in by the prosaic environment of a London district. It stands on some ground adjoining the disused grave-yard in connection with Paddington Green and adjoins St. David's Welsh Church. The building consists of two dwellings with rough-cast walls, wooden porches and quaint little windows. The thatched roof is large, and from it peep out several dormer windows. There is a fair-sized piece of ground attached to the cottage, and some trees grow therein, giving it, in a measure, the surroundings which a thatched roof naturally suggests.

Maids in Their Nighties.

An astonishing exhibition of girlish charms at the Opera-House last evening furnished a theme for an immense lot of gossip in this town to-day, says a Patterson (Pa.) special to the Philadelphia Record. A camp of the P. O. S. of A. gave a benefit entertainment, the chief feature of which, according to the official program, was a "nightgown drill." This drill was just what the name implied.

The lights in the room were slightly lowered to give the scene a more realistic effect. The audience sat breathless for a minute or two, and then from the wings of the stage emerged a vision of maiden loveliness. A pretty girl of interesting years walked slowly before the footlights. Her only robe, so far as the charmed spectators could see, was a white flowing gown of the simplest make. The soft material clung nicely to the prettily rounded shoulders. Those delicate curves of the young woman's physique seemed all the more entrancing beneath this bewitching garb. Her hair fell loose upon her shoulders. Her snow-white feet and ankles twinkled beneath the filmy lace at the bottom of the gown.

Hardly had the audience recovered its breath before another girl, dressed just as the first, appeared. Then another and another, until seventeen bewitching girls, with loose-dung hair and twinkling feet, were upon the stage. Each young lady carried a lighted candle. They marched back and forth across the stage and performed various evolutions. They refused to respond to an encore.

An Impenetrable Country.

Although the Orange river has been known to colonists longer than any other in South Africa, but little more information can be gathered about it now than early in the century.

Spain's Amusement.

Bull fighting is in full swing in Spain just now, fights taking place in every village of importance.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How to Protect Young Fruit Trees from Rabbits—Profits from Poultry—When a House Should Be Watered—Matters About the Farm.

Cheap and Effective Tree Guards.

It is astonishing how much damage two or three rabbits can do to a young orchard in a single night. Four years ago I had an orchard of seventy trees planted, on open ground, between my house and that of a neighbor. The orchard was well cultivated, and the ground kept entirely clear of weeds and trash; and as my neighbor kept two hunting dogs, which made it their business to kill every rabbit that ventured into that locality, I thought it entirely unnecessary to provide any protection for the trees. Late in the winter there came a light fall of snow, accompanied by severe cold weather. I looked over the orchard the following morning, and not a track of any kind was to be seen, but the second morning I noticed a few rabbit tracks, and, to my great surprise I found that fully one-third of the trees had been gnawed, four of them being completely girdled. The tracks showed plainly that the mischief had been done by rabbits. My neighbor brought his two dogs, and we hunted the entire locality over, but could find only two rabbits, in the stomachs of which we found tree bark. We followed their back tracks and found that they had come from a swampy tract, six miles distant.

FIG. 1. WOVEN TREE GUARD. FIG. 2. PROTECTED TREE.

I immediately bound up the wounds on the trees with strips of cloth, and, as soon as the ground thawed a little, I took four-inch drain tiles broke them open lengthwise, and, removing the cloth, inclosed each of the trees with one of them, binding them together with small wire. These tiles were then filled with fine soil, and kept full until the first of October, when they were opened and the trees examined. In every instance the wounds were entirely healed, the bark having grown over them, and the trees were in a healthy, thrifty condition. In a few cases, roots had started out from the edges of the healing wounds, but the autumn drouth had stopped their growth. During the last three years I have tiled quite a number of injured trees for neighbors and friends, and in every instance they have healed completely.—G. Frederick in American Agriculturist.

Profits in Poultry.

There is one source of revenue from poultry keeping that is too often neglected. It may be because it is not generally known that all kinds of feathers are salable. The demand is increasing every year, and most country merchants will take them and sell them on commission. The fowls must be dry plucked, and the feathers clean and in good condition. The tail and quill feathers should be packed separately from those which are softer. Separate the several kinds, and also separate those from different kinds of poultry. The proceeds from the feathers should repay the cost of picking and all the labor of preparing the fowl for the market.

Poultry keeping when the business is properly conducted and with an eye mainly to egg production, is extremely profitable. Experiments in feeding and in computing the value of eggs show that if no estimate is made for labor one dozen eggs can be produced at a cost of about 6 cents for food, or about half a cent an egg. If all the food consumed by the fowls went directly to egg production the profit would always be very good; but much depends upon whether the hens convert this food into eggs, flesh, or the support of their bodies; but, as we have said, when the feeding is properly conducted, the profit produced is a satisfactory one. Another fact which should also be considered is that when eggs are marketed they carry from the farm but little of the nutritious elements of the soil in proportion to their value.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Banish the Weeds.

The Germantown Telegraph says: "With any of the class of cultivated crops where there is a real neglect of proper cultivation, the effect is felt in the crop harvested. This fact is demonstrated by a little observation, and a few moments' consideration of the case leads to no other conclusion. Wherever vegetable growth is going on, there is being taken from the soil elements of fertility, and if these are diverted to a noxious growth then they are lost to the main purpose of the farm. To say nothing of the unpleasant appearance produced, the effect upon any crop is very damaging in the diminished crop production. Take the case of corn and potatoes and with the eye as a judge, we believe that a neglect in culture that allows a rank growth of weeds, will reduce the yield of both fodder and grain at least one-third. This is especially the case where large weeds are allowed to grow among potatoes, and in and about the hills; the crop will be light and of small size. No farmer can afford to put his fields to such use. If he cannot properly attend to the matter of cultivation himself, or cause it to be done by others, he had far better confine his effort to a smaller surface and such an one as can be sufficiently and properly attended to. It is to be feared that sufficient attention is not paid to the eradication of weeds. These are the pests of our farms that exert so powerful an influence in the withdrawal of our fertility. Hold as much as possible for the use of crops."

How to Save the Manure.

How to save the barnyard manure in the best condition is the problem every farmer ought to solve. If left alone during the winter a large portion of it, and that the best of it, is washed away by the melting snows and rain. We like the plans of Prof. Georgeson, of the Kansas Experiment Station. He forms a large basin in the barnyard and piles all the manure upon it. The liquid manure cannot escape, but remains in the depression till taken away in the spring. He thus describes the basin:

"A large basin was scooped up, some five feet deep in the middle and gently sloping to all sides, so that a heavily loaded wagon can be pulled up without unduly straining the team. The bottom was found to be of a clayey nature, so that seepage could not take place. The whole was done in a satisfactory manner by the use of plow and scoop, with one team and two men, in a couple of day's time. So the expense connected with the improvement was merely nominal. I believe I can say that the manure has value since we began piling it in this basin. There has been no waste from drainage, and there has been less actual shrinkage due to the decomposition than in a heap lying high and dry."

Watering a Horse.

It would be better for a farm horse if he could be given water at some time between morning and noon and noon and night. There seems to be a variety of opinions touching this point. It is almost a universal habit to give farm horses water but three times a day—morning, noon and night. There seems to be no better reason for this than that it is convenient to do so, and that it would be inconvenient to do otherwise as a rule. All agree that the horse ought to have what water he needs rather than what he wants. If left to go thirsty a half day after eating heating food at hard work there is no limit to the amount of water he wants, except what he will hold, when he reaches the trough. To fill up on cold water when the animal is in a heated condition is one of the most damaging things that can be done a horse, and yet because it happens to be convenient to let him do this, the practice has come into vogue. Most farmers could find a way to remedy the matter if they would, and it would be humane for them to do so, and profitable, likewise.

Agricultural Atoms.

Ground bone makes a lasting and satisfactory fertilizer.

The most nutritive part of the wh at goes with the bran.

Do not let any weeds go to seed around your house and barn.

An even temperature of 50 degrees is a good one for the winter hen house.

Do not be in too big a hurry to store the corn. Let it be well cured before cribbing.

Better do a little and do it well rather than undertake to do too much and fail to do anything well.

When trimming shrubs and bushes cut out the wood; leave the new for next season's bloom and fruitage.

Never permit a piece of land to lie idle because it is rough. Stock it with sheep and they will at least pay the interest and taxes.

Keep the work teams in good condition. There is no advantage in letting them run down now and being obliged to feed up later on.

A box of coal ashes in the hen yard give the hens lots of employment. They find a lot of grit among it, and have fine sport wallowing in the dust. But never give them wood ashes.

The North American Bee Keepers' Association recommends that apiarian societies of the various states memorialize their respective legislatures to enact laws that shall forbid the spraying of fruit trees during time of blossoming.

The Hessian fly is so called because it was supposed to have come from Germany during the revolutionary war in wheat imported for the use of the Hessian mercenaries in the British army. It has traveled west at the rate of fifteen or twenty miles a year.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAUK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1912. Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Be true to your friends, has always been our motto.

It pays to do right. If nothing more than to possess a clear conscience.

All ministers of the gospel ought to be in the fore front in the fight against the power that is crushing the life out of the poor toilers of this country, and making life unbearable for so many, simply because they see no ray of hope or avenue of escape from drudgery, and many times starvation.

If we have had the good fortune to win a true friend, one on whom we can depend, one in whom we can trust, let us be true to them, stand by them, and if need be fight for them.

When the women of Kansas have the right to cast their vote for an officer no one need apply only those who represent the ideal and pure statesman.

Never in the political history of the country has there been a party in power that has recognized the women as the People's party has done. They have been given places of trust and honor, notwithstanding the remonstrances against the appointments have been pouring in from the enemies. Considering all this is it any wonder that our women are working unceasingly for the prosperity of the party that works for them.

The women of Kansas are for purity of government, honesty of purpose, and obedience of law. Furthermore, they are for having the laws made "By the People," as well as obeyed "By the People."

We are all needed in this work, and we must each one of us work along the lines that are best adapted to us if we would be successful and win our cause. Just as surely as water finds its own level, just so surely will we win if we but stand firm for principle.

If our men of Kansas are ready for reform in its truest sense then let every man vote for the amendment in '94.

If it is the duty of a Christian to set a good example and do his part in the work of saving sinners, it is necessarily his duty to see to it that, so far as he is responsible, the government is so administered as to make it easy for its citizens "to do right and hard to do wrong." How can he do this without taking some interest in politics and using his vote on the side that antagonizes sin?—Portland Herald.

That is just what the Christian women of Kansas are asking for. The privilege of casting their ballot on the side that antagonizes sin. For in Kansas we have Christian men and women both, who are demanding good government, and our heart goes out in sympathy to the State that can only boast of Christian men.

The women of Kansas stand united on the pending amendment, and they expect their husbands to stand by them as they in times past have stood by them.

The wives and mothers of Kansas are pleading for that small but mighty weapon—the ballot. The only means of protection. Men cannot; they will not say to them, after so many of their homes are gone, (not through any fault of theirs,) that they have no rights which men are bound to respect. We do not believe the men of Kansas will; but we do believe they will vote as cheerfully to break the chains of slavery from their loved ones as they did to free the colored men.

In a republic there is but one way to settle great questions of government upon which the people are divided, and that way is through the ballot box.

It is amusing to see the dear men stand up and stroke their pet mustache and talk about sheltering the women from the fierce storms of life, and the very first time they get a chance send men to our legislative halls who make laws that rob them of their homes. We have been sheltered so long by such people and fared so slim we now beg for the privilege of sheltering ourselves.

If times are good and no cause for the cry of distress that is always greeting us whichever way we turn, why is it that whole families are obliged to work to make a living, receiving only the wages that one should receive.

FLORID PLATFORM MAKING.

What a New Jersey Paper Thinks of the Kansas Democratic Platform.

Of the making of political platforms there is no end, and the composition of some of them presents a combination of mock gravity strongly tempting one to laugh them out of court.

In Kansas a campaign for woman's suffrage is being waged, and of course it becomes absolutely necessary for the political parties to say something on this intensely interesting issue, and if possible to say it so that the deliverance will not repel votes, if it does not attract them.

The Kansas democratic convention made an effort in this direction which for floridness of style and fulsomeness of compliment approaches the ludicrous. The resolution is as follows:

"The home where joy is duty, and love is law, is the dearest and sweetest institution in existence. Woman, who is the queen of this heart empire, is our especial pride and joy, as she has been for three thousand years last past. Her universe is of the widest realm of sentiment, and glories with tender halo all that makes life worth living. Her mission is to intercede for the erring, comfort the unfortunate, encourage faint of purpose, uplift the fallen, kiss away the tears of grief, make pleasant the ways of man, whose ministering angel she is indeed, touch with deft fingers and limitless tact the asperities of everyday life, and make them as grassy paths beside the shady brooks. But she never was intended by fostering evolution, which has made her the complete product of ages of tender solicitude, to go into politics. Its cleanest caress would pollute; its very touch would contaminate. Hence we protest against any measure which in the slightest has this for its object, and are unanimously opposed to woman suffrage."

These Kansas democrats have a tender solicitude for woman, so marked that it almost indicates the presence of self interest, and it is a remarkable proof of democratic longevity, that the party has recognized and nursed this solicitude for the full period of three thousand years. Such a tenacity really exceeds the patience of woman.

There would also appear to be a considerable amount of tactful wisdom in this platform utterance. While democratic politics last, and some other kinds for that matter, woman's sphere as an intercessor for the erring, is likely to grow, and if these erring politicians could not rely upon the public indifference and the law's delay regarding much of their erring, it is probable that woman's work of interceding would become largely beyond her capacity. As for woman being able with her deft fingers to make the asperities of political life like "grassy paths beside shady brooks," we doubt it, notwithstanding our great belief in and respect for woman's capacity.

As for kissing away grief, we confess if woman wants to have her hands full, she is likely to be accommodated, if the incongruities, injustices and evils of our time are continued, as part payment for prolonging the life of the existing systems and methods, which are largely the result of the kind of politics into which the chicken-hearted democracy of Kansas do not want woman to go.

There is a suspicion, however, amounting in many cases to a conviction, lurking around in the vicinity of a good many moral men, to the effect that if women were allowed to have a voice and a vote in government and law making, many of the griefs, public and private, which cause tears to flow, would gradually be eliminated, and men could enjoy the womanly caress with the tears and grief left out.

But seriously, if the above platform utterance embodies the stock "arguments" which the suffragists of Kansas have to meet, the women of that state will have the full voting privilege conferred upon them before many moons. As a result it is to be hoped that good women and good men may be able to make politics so decent and morally tolerable that no man or woman will be compromised or defiled by touching them, because politics will have lost their pitch-like characteristics.

REVOLUTION.

[From the Watch Fire.]

Prepare for war in time of peace. The right prevails and evils cease. Revolution is something always needed. And its force and power should be heeded. You love your country as you love your life. And to raise its morals should be your strife. With plighted faith you try to take it in. Whilst its laws create and encourage sin. Paul preached righteousness, temperance and judgment to come. And like a faithful soldier, his works were done. The work is as urgent now as in former days. For intemperance is advancing in various ways. The force is strong enough, if the cause is heeded. To give all the strength and power needed. To suppress or control it, by Christian laws. If all would join without finding flaws. It will cause some trials and heated strife. Not for taking—but for saving life. And the misery and woe on every side. Which is moving onward with fearful stride. Is there a man that dare take the lead Among the churches of various creed; To rally the forces of women and men To work in a form which no church can condemn?

If salvation alone will do the work, Then fall in line, ye sainted ones, do not shrink! Send out your missionaries; filled with Gospel truth.

To guide and teach the age and youth. In form and manner for which you pray, And God will guide and protect you in the way. Think not that they will come to hear you preach Unless you first the need of preaching teach. To thought and reason they must first be brought. Then, in hope and faith they can be easily taught. Every Prohibitionist is ready to join your ranks. Without feeling or thought of curious pranks. To save drunkards in any form or source, They pledge their lives in their Christian course. Oh, men of God! come out and take the lead, And they will join your ranks in mighty speed. Look at the Borough of Pittston, your home, Two hundred are selling grog, and more than fifty license own.

Does not your silence give consent to this? O! what a strange way to lead to heavenly bliss, Ye chosen servants of God! why not unite, Call out your forces and prepare to fight? For the Captain who gave you commission to win this battle Not by passing resolutions or fluent talk or prattle, But in Apostolic form, that out of darkness brings a light That destroys the wrong and builds up the right. The laws of the Lord you must and should obey, To render unto Caesar that which is Caesar's, is not out of the way, But what is demanded of you, you have a right to ask of others, If you do not do it, you are not acting the part of Christian brothers.

CHEERING WORDS FROM PROMINENT PEOPLE EVERYWHERE.

To the young men who have so cruelly threatened to leave Colorado when women were emancipated, we would suggest that there is now a war going on in Mexico, caused by the management of the male element of the race. Those cruel discontents can now go down to that country and make a name for themselves shooting some smaller man. There is nothing above ground that the rooster likes better than getting rid of the other rooster. It flatters his physical vanity as nothing else does, unless it is to overcome a stubborn female. The climate is glorious and young men may distinguish themselves. —Queen Bee.

"I believe that woman suffrage would strengthen and invigorate us as a nation: not cripple us. It would keep straight a national backbone that too often bends under the weight of political errors brought about by blundering male suffrage."—Noah Davis, ex-Judge of the Supreme Court of New York.

"I do not expect to see woman suffrage come upon the stage arm-in-arm with the millennium. If the movement works any reforms it will be the reclaiming of national buildings and thoroughfares from their masculine uncleanness. I anticipate a national house-cleaning such as this country has never beheld; and the cleaners, a vast army, fully armed with mops, brooms and buckets, will be made up, not of men, but of women. Why not? In private homes the housekeeper is a woman, why should not the housekeeper in our national homes be a woman.—Jennie de la M. Lozier, President of Sorosis.

Woman suffrage would first reform woman. The reformation would be in converting woman from a condition of apathy and indifference to her absurd position, to a state of lively interest in all departments of life; for responsibility educates, and care broadens our lives. With woman suffrage will come the greatest revolution in the world's history. It will have no precedent, but will stand alone, the noble achievement of—shall we say—the women of the Nineteenth Century.—Lillie Devereux Blake.

Woman suffrage will do more than reform, it will revolutionize. It is not merely a sociologic question, it is a solution of many. It will bring the present period of unrest to an end. Woman suffrage will effect radical changes for the better, in government, in religion, and in social life. It will give to our sex equal representation in the government's legislative and judicial branches. It will substitute the more civilized principle of reformation for the barbarous punishments now practiced in our jails and prisons. It will put police matrons, not in some, but in all, of our station houses.—Elizabeth Cady Stanton.

Russell Sage, millionaire and financier, says in Demorest's Magazine for January: "I believe when women vote we shall have wiser government, cleaner politics, more ballots and fewer bullets. I have not formulated my views as to what reforms woman suffrage would affect, but I fancy good would accrue, not only to women, but to men. When men and women labor together there is compactness, completeness, thoroughness, in the result, that is often wanting when the sexes work separately. If men have experience, women have insight: if men use logic and reason, women use instinct and intuition; if men are nasty, cruel, brutal, women are diplomatic, merciful, refined. Combine these qualities and you have a unit that approaches perfection. Women look at suffrage through the spectacles of morality and spirituality; but men, being more practical, very naturally see the question from a material, a financial point of view. As for myself, I do not believe that the ballots of women would bring about any radical reform to the code of ethics which now governs financiering—at least not for a long time. For the average woman, and this I say with much deference, is seldom as successful in business as her male consort, because woman is usually more generous than man. Yet women are remarkably far-sighted in business matters, and doubtless many of the immense fortunes made by men are largely due to the counsel of women possessing the characteristics which I have named."

A WEAK WHEEL.

[From the Des Moines (Ia.) Woman's Standard.]

Not long since, a speaker discussing on the subject of woman's equality expressed the idea that the suffrage movement tended to emphasize the unequal relation of the sexes rather than to obliterate these inequalities, and that such emphasis was a detriment to the cause, not an advantage.

The old adage, "where ignorance is bliss, 'tis folly to be wise," is the essence of such a sentiment. So long as a husband and wife bound by the laws of affection, are raising a contented and happy family, it is not necessary that they know that the civil law recognizes that one of the two have a legal right to the children, but just as soon as discord breaks the peace of that home what was before blissful ignorance now becomes a painful knowledge.

Oliver Wendell Holmes' story of the shay affords a good illustration for this thought. Every part of the shay was equal to every other part so that during the century of its existence there was no need for repairs, but had one wheel been less weak than the others, ere the day of its dissolution that one wheel would have emphasized its inferior condition by rendering the wagon useless.

So with this system of government that recognizes in its principle the right of every individual to self-government, and the right to remonstrate against injustice to classes—if there was no discrimination in laws, if each person was recognized as having the inherent rights of a human being—in fact if the government was perfect, as it is impossible for man's laws to be, we might hesitate about emphasizing the difference that Roman law and inherited customs have given us, but we know that the government shay is weak because the wheels of citizenship are not of equal strength, and we want new material put in to strengthen this weak one. The wagon is not useless, but it is making such deep ruts with the stronger wheels that it will require good driving to get them out.

We believe in the equality of all things, and that governments should be adjusted, as is the universe, where there is not more of one force than is balanced by some opposite force, thus keeping a perfect harmony. With our system of government, it is the duty of every citizen to study the science of government, so that each individual man and woman, may learn what laws will correct existing evils with the minimum amount of punishment, building up a system that will produce the greatest good to the greatest number, to emphasize those that need strengthening and thus bring about an equalization of all things.

One class of persons see the greatest evil arising from our system of capital punishment, and they proceed to emphasize that principle. Another class points to the liquor traffic as the greater source of evil, while still others attract the social evil, and so on, through a list of reforms all of which will find expression in the government that confers the most happiness on mankind.

FARMERS FOR EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

While the Grange from its beginning has recognized the equality of women with men, both in the enunciation of its principles and in the conduct of its affairs, the National Grange in its resolutions has hitherto only referred the subject of woman suffrage to the various state Granges.

This year a step forward has been taken. The National Grange, in its 27th annual session at Syracuse, N. Y., last month, passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the National Grange is in favor of granting to women the same privileges at the ballot box as are granted to men.

This resolution, says the American Grange Bulletin of Cincinnati, O., "contains the germ of justice, which will come to fruition in due time."

The delegates to the National Grange represented over a million farmers and their families. The terse resolution adopted crystallizes the sentiment that is rapidly growing in farming communities. The National Grange is to be congratulated upon its action, whereby the woman suffrage movement gains a strong and valuable ally.

The Farmers' Alliance and Industrial Union of Kansas, at their annual convention held recently in Topeka, passed the following resolution:

Whereas, We acknowledge the truism that taxation without representation is tyranny, and that governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed; therefore be it

Resolved, That we will use all honorable means to crystallize this sentiment into fact, and enfranchise a sex that has for more than a century been taxed and has supported a government in which she has no control.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE IS DEMOCRATIC.

"Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed." This fundamental principle of the democratic institutions of the United States is an application of the natural law of self-preservation. The structure built upon this idea is not a strict adherence to the principle. Although the system of representation is a partial fulfillment of the idea, it is not conducive of a general understanding of the principles of a perfect government. To illustrate. The theory has long been advocated that man, the voter, should be woman's representative at the polls, and the inevitable followed, being deprived of the right of self-representation the woman takes little or no interest in political affairs.

The time was, when woman could not hold property, but with the right of possession and the consequent taxation, came the desire to know the use to which the taxes were applied. So with increased privileges came the increased desire for self-government.

The principle of the consent of the governed being essential to good government implies that each individual knows what will best serve his interests, yet the idea of a representation would tend to decrease the interest and general knowledge of affairs of state so that while we may shun the aristocracy of the crafty, because knowing something of the affairs they pose as exponents of ideas and are raised to office on their own representation, that their theories of government will produce what we call "good times."

$100 Reward, $100.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, F. J. CHENEY, & Co., Toledo, O. Sold by druggists, 75c.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

THEY'RE ALL THE GO FOR EVEN-ING TOILETS.

Modes in the Metropolis.
New York correspondence:

A black and white line drawing of a woman in a long, fur-trimmed coat and a large bow in her hair, holding a small object in her right hand. The drawing is a full-length portrait, showing the woman from the top of her head to her feet. She is wearing a long, flowing coat with a thick fur collar and cuffs. Her hair is styled in an updo with a large, ornate bow on top. She is holding a small, dark object in her right hand, which appears to be a key or a small tool. The drawing is done in a simple, sketchy style with cross-hatching for shading.

AS BAGGY AS A MAN'S COAT

The third picture in this column displays a rich and handsome theater wrap made of white cashmere with designs in different shades of Oriental colors. It is lined with quilted white broche silk, and trimmed about the bottom, at the neck and down the front with bands of Mongolian goat. In the second illustration there is a black silk coat, the neck and fronts

A TEALING HEAD

A novelty is the theater boa, which is very large and thick, of feathers or fur, and attached to it is a deep frill of fur or velvet that forms a cape over the shoulders and back and a jabot to each side of boa in front. Another novelty is a cape formed of two deep points of satin of bright hue and covered with lace. These points fit down the front and back, to the waist line and out over the shoulders. A shoulder piece of fur is arranged so full at each shoulder that it hangs to either side over the

A SKIRT WITHOUT A SEAM.

THE Duchess of Cleveland is so enthusiastic a botanist that she has gone to South Africa to add new specimens to her already fine collection of trees and plants.

STORIES TOLD BY FUNNY MEN OF THE PRESS.

Sprinkles of Spice

troit Free Press.

The Western Rural and American Stockman, published at Chicago, is without doubt the leading journal of its class, having been in the field for more than thirty years, and is the only Semi-Weekly journal in the world. The Monday edition is devoted to commerce, transportation, finance, crop conditions, markets, and a summary of telegraphic news from all parts of the world.

Official SOUVENIR—1893

1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2005, 2006, 2007, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2011, 2012, 2013, 2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2018, 2019, 2020, 2021, 2022, 2023, 2024, 2025, 2026, 2027, 2028, 2029, 2030, 2031, 2032, 2033, 2034, 2035, 2036, 2037, 2038, 2039, 2040, 2041, 2042, 2043, 2044, 2045, 2046, 2047, 2048, 2049, 2050, 2051, 2052, 2053, 2054, 2055, 2056, 2057, 2058, 2059, 2060, 2061, 2062, 2063, 2064, 2065, 2066, 2067, 2068, 2069, 2070, 2071, 2072, 2073, 2074, 2075, 2076, 2077, 2078, 2079, 2080, 2081, 2082, 2083, 2084, 2085, 2086, 2087, 2088, 2089, 2090, 2091, 2092, 2093, 2094, 2095, 2096, 2097, 2098, 2099, 2100, 2101, 2102, 2103, 2104, 2105, 2106, 2107, 2108, 2109, 2110, 2111, 2112, 2113, 2114, 2115, 2116, 2117, 2118, 2119, 2120, 2121, 2122, 2123, 2124, 2125, 2126, 2127, 2128, 2129, 2130, 2131, 2132, 2133, 2134, 2135, 2136, 2137, 2138, 2139, 2140, 2141, 2142, 2143, 2144, 2145, 2146, 2147, 2148, 2149, 2150, 2151, 2152, 2153, 2154, 2155, 2156, 2157, 2158, 2159, 2160, 2161, 2162, 2163, 2164, 2165, 2166, 2167, 2168, 2169, 2170, 2171, 2172, 2173, 2174, 2175, 2176, 2177, 2178, 2179, 2180, 2181, 2182, 2183, 2184, 2185, 2186, 2187, 2188, 2189, 2190, 2191, 2192, 2193, 2194, 2195, 2196, 2197, 2198, 2199, 2200, 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, 2206, 2207, 2208, 2209, 2210, 2211, 2212, 2213, 2214, 2215, 2216, 2217, 2218, 2219, 2220, 2221, 2222, 2223, 2224, 2225, 2226, 2227, 2228, 2229, 2230, 2231, 2232, 2233, 2234, 2235, 2236, 2237, 2238, 2239, 2240, 2241, 2242, 2243, 2244, 2245, 2246, 2247, 2248, 2249, 2250, 2251, 2252, 2253, 2254, 2255, 2256, 2257, 2258, 2259, 2260, 2261, 2262, 2263, 2264, 2265, 2266, 2267, 2268, 2269, 2270, 2271, 2272, 2273, 2274, 2275, 2276, 2277, 2278, 2279, 2280, 2281, 2282, 2283, 2284, 2285, 2286, 2287, 2288, 2289, 2290, 2291, 2292, 2293, 2294, 2295, 2296, 2297, 2298, 2299, 2300, 2301, 2302, 2303, 2304, 2305, 2306, 2307, 2308, 2309, 2310, 2311, 2312, 2313, 2314, 2315, 2316, 2317, 2318, 2319, 2320, 2321, 2322, 2323, 2324, 2325, 2326, 2327, 2328, 2329, 2330, 2331, 2332, 2333, 2334, 2335, 2336, 2337, 2338, 2339, 2340, 2341, 2342, 2343, 2344, 2345, 2346, 2347, 2348, 2349, 2350, 2351, 2352, 2353, 2354, 2355, 2356, 2357, 2358, 2359, 2360, 2361, 2362, 2363, 2364, 2365, 2366, 2367, 2368, 2369, 2370, 2371, 2372, 2373, 2374, 2375, 2376, 2377, 2378, 2379, 2380, 2381, 2382, 2383, 2384, 2385, 2386, 2387, 2388, 2389, 2390, 2391, 2392, 2393, 2394, 2395, 2396, 2397, 2398, 2399, 2400, 2401, 2402, 2403, 2404, 2405, 2406, 2407, 2408, 2409, 2410, 2411, 2412, 2413, 2414, 2415, 2416, 2417, 2418, 2419, 2420, 2421, 2422, 2423, 2424, 2425, 2426, 2427, 2428, 2429, 2430, 2431, 2432, 2433, 2434, 2435, 2436, 2437, 2438, 2439, 2440, 2441, 2442, 2443, 2444, 2445, 2446, 2447, 2448, 2449, 2450, 2451, 2452, 2453, 2454, 2455, 2456, 2457, 2458, 2459, 2460, 2461, 2462, 2463, 2464, 2465, 2466, 2467, 2468, 2469, 2470, 2471, 2472, 2473, 2474, 2475, 2476, 2477, 2478, 2479, 2480, 2481, 2482, 2483, 2484, 2485, 2486, 2487, 2488, 2489, 2490, 2491, 2492, 2493, 2494, 2495, 2496, 2497, 2498, 2499, 2500, 2501, 2502, 2503, 2504, 2505, 2506, 2507, 2508, 2509, 2510, 2511, 2512, 2513, 2514, 2515, 2516, 2517, 2518, 2519, 2520, 2521, 2522, 2523, 2524, 2525, 2526, 2527, 2528, 2529, 2530, 2531, 2532, 2533, 2534, 2535, 2536, 2537, 2538, 2539, 2540, 2541, 2542, 2543, 2544, 2545, 2546, 2547, 2548, 2549, 2550, 2551, 2552, 2553, 2554, 2555, 2556, 2557, 2558, 2559, 2560, 2561, 2562, 2563, 2564, 2565, 2566, 2567, 2568, 2569, 2570, 2571, 2572, 2573, 2574, 2575, 2576, 2577, 2578, 2579, 2580, 2581, 2582, 2583, 2584, 2585, 2586, 2587, 2588, 2589, 2590, 2591, 2592, 2593, 2594, 2595, 2596, 2597, 2598, 2599, 2600, 2601, 2602, 2603, 2604, 2605, 2606, 2607, 2608, 2609, 2610, 2611, 2612, 2613, 2614, 2615, 2616, 2617, 2618, 2619, 2620, 2621, 2622, 2623, 2624, 2625, 2626, 2627, 2628, 2629, 2630, 2631, 2632, 2633, 2634, 2635, 2636, 2637, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2641, 2642, 2643, 2644, 2645, 2646, 2647, 2648, 2649, 2650, 2651, 2652, 2653, 2654, 2655, 2656, 2657, 2658, 2659, 2660, 2661, 2662, 2663, 2664, 2665, 2666, 2667, 2668, 2669, 2670, 2671, 2672, 2673, 2674, 2675, 2676, 2677, 2678, 2679, 26

MISS JANE, SIR CUPID AND I.

We walked in a garden of roses,
Miss Jane, Sir Cupid and I—
Nay, rather, she walked by herself,
And never could answer me why.

The more I thought her, still farther
An farther she drifted ahead,
Laughing and scattering roses—
Roses, the white and the red.

At last she gave me her "reason!"
Says I "ought to have known!"
"Sir Cupid"—and—"three are too many,"
Says I "walk with me if alone!"

So, lost in the maze of the roses,
Fore or she drifted before;
And I said, with a sigh, to Sir Cupid:
"I'll follow the truant no more!"

The next time I drew near to the roses
I listened, I heard a faint stir
And when I looked to the garden
The rascal was walking with her!

Then softly I crept in and caught her;
She blushed, but would not be free,
By keeping Sir Cupid between us
There was room in those alleys for three.
—McClure's Magazine.

CIRCASSIA.

Where the rough mountain road led up from the valley beneath it, turned abruptly into a narrow gorge, and there, in the dusk of the falling evening, Kendal Trance came upon a strange scene. At first he scarce distinguished the two figures and the respective attitudes they held. He saw an arm raised, saw it descend with manly and dunt vigor, then urging on his horse, he was at the side of the combatants, and he faced the slim youth and the tall, massive girl, blond and muscular as a Norse war goddess, whose round arm, firm as marble in the twilight (her coarse homespun sleeve was turned up from the elbow), had hurled itself against the youth's head.

"For shame," cried Kendal Trance, who knew the youth, a pitiful fellow enough, "what's the meaning of this?"

But it was the girl who replied, standing there with heaving chest and a frown dark as midnight upon her straight brows:

"He kin let me be after this," she remarked, scowling toward the victim of her own magnificent strength. "I cuffed him till he'll recognize it when he sees me next!"

"Did you insult this girl?" came quickly from Kendal. The girl looked up at him in the dusk. His face had a pallor under the brim of his slouch hat.

"I kin help myself if he did!" she suddenly spoke, the defiance of her mood turning largely against this would-be defender. "I don't want none of your jawin'." And she was gone, with a bound in the thicket of the hillside.

"Aw! she be a shee-devil," muttered the chastised delinquent, after her. "That what Se'cashy be!—What I done anyway?" I grabbed her ez she was a walkin' along, just fur a kiss. She's owin' it ter me, fer she knows she's set me plumb crazy with those eyes o' her'n; and I done axed fer it, and when she turned about on me I sees sparks, and I grabbed her, and she flung out! Aw, she be a devil!"

"Serves you right. Leave her alone after this," brusquely said Kendal, spurring his horse. The sickle of the moon was coming up above the mountains. The lonely road was full of strange murmurs from the woods. Kendal Trance set his lips together. This had been one of the days when the past (not so long passed) had surged upon him till he sickened, and the details of the present life had become impossible. The revolted bitterness of his mood was distinct upon him, as an evil taste in the mouth.

Two days later it was Sunday. Kendal Trance talked to the people then—they called it "preachin'"—even as he tried to teach them during the week in the school-house. They straggled in—women with babies in their arms, men in muddy top-boots, carrying their guns. The doors were open and the Autumn sunshine made a pale glare without. In the blue calm of the Indian summer the red and yellow trees stood motionless. Kendal began to speak and forget his hearers. He spoke passionately, carried on by the long pent up stress of contending emotions within, losing sight of his initial text, of the concrete and practical notions for everyday application, which he generally sought to instill into the dull minds of these, his ignorant fellow-creatures. When he stopped he saw the slow wonderment drawing in the eyes of his hearers as they fled out. They had understood nothing, but that impassioned poetry of speech had stirred some dormant chord within them. As he reached the door himself he saw a tall girl in blue homespun leaning against the outside wall. She had heavy masses of blonde hair wound above a massive throat. He recognized her. It was the girl called in the mountains "Se'cashy"—the parentless girl who lived alone in the cabin in the woods, and whom he had met on the road two nights before—the girl Circassia. He nodded to her absently.

That night, as he sat under the lamp, not reading, there was a sharp tap at the door, and before he could reply the door was flung open and Circassia entered. She stood an instant irresolute, her scowling glance absorbing the details of the room, its books, its papers. Then she burst forth, turning those strange blue eyes upon him.

"I want'er learn some book stuff!"

She tossed her thumb toward the books on the shelves. "I ain't never keered for book-larnin', but I want it now. Folks sez you teach ter the schule. I wanten come," she ended, roughly.

"Very well. What makes you wish to learn now?"

"I heern you this mornin'; that's the reason why!" she said, defiantly. "I ain't ketched on ter what yer said. But I wanten; that's why I come. Yer been't like other men 'round yere. I hates men. But I kin abide ter listen to you."

All this she spoke with her hand still on the knob of the door. Through all her uncouth savagery Kendal's aesthetic instinct (that cultivation of the eye which was second nature to him), perceived, as it were unconsciously, her strange beauty. The words of her pitiful, worsted admirer on the roadside two nights before, "she done set me plumb crazy with those eyes of her'n," flashed back upon him. They were remarkable eyes. Blue-green in the lamplight, with something involuntarily virginal in the core of their bold brilliancy. And even as he thought it she was gone, with a clang of the door.

And thus, with a new pupil in the mountain settlement, 3,000 feet above sea level, the winter began for the man who, at 30, blasted in the world which had hitherto known him, by an unjust suspicion, had left in revolted disgust, his career and the glittering hopes of the future and buried himself in these wilds, far from civilization, there to lead (with such little good as he could do in passing, to the ignorant humanity around him) the life of an embittered recluse.

The snows lingered, and the thaws were long in coming that year. A stray messenger from the nearest postoffice made his way, but with difficulty, to the settlement. Thus a letter, addressed to Kendal Trance, reached its destination a week later than it should have done.

Written by a cousin, a woman (and a young woman), it began with a sort of cry of despair at the recent conditions of his life, and then eagerly broke to him the glad news. "The good news that has made us all live again, dear Kendal, and that will bring you back to us in honor, back to the place which is waiting for you, and in which we all feel that you will do great things yet!" A full confession had finally been made by the man who, after embezzling funds belonging to high a civic charge to which he was committed, had at first cunningly contrived to throw the appearances of guilt on the younger man associated with him, on his partner in business, Kendal Trance. Kendal Trance's reputation was now washed whiter than ever, and his fellow citizens in the rigid far Eastern town, had conferred together to request his return from voluntary exile, and to receive him, when he should come, with such ovations as the place had never known. "And Lawrence and I are going to fetch you ourselves, Kendal." Thus the letter concluded. "We shall find you out in your mountain hermitage, and force you to leave it and to come back to your rightful life, with us."

The letter reached Kendal and was opened by him in the little school-house by the wayside. The scholars had left, the morning lesson completed; but, as he slowly raised his head, crushing the letter in his hand, he saw that he was not alone. Circassia lingered, behind the others, near the door. The door was open and he could see the road outside, heavy with the Spring rains and thaws. And then the two new figures came within his range of vision—a man in a light topcoat, a pretty woman in traveling dress, and with such gloves and boots as he had not seen for two years.

"Kendal!" It was the writer of the letter, with her brother. She was still young; she was emotional; she had always, half-unconsciously to herself, held a place in her heart for this particular cousin, which he could at any time have taken possession of, and thus doing, have taken possession of the whole. The tears rushed to her eyes now and she clung to his shoulder a little, prettily, as he held her hand. Her brother meantime wrung Kendal's disengaged fingers in a manly grasp and said simply:

"Well, its all right, old man. I needn't tell you how glad we are?"

A moment later the three were walking slowly toward the settlement. But Circassia stood by the schooldoor still and watched the retreating figures.

The last night!

The books (Kendal's sole real companions for two years) were packed, the boxes stood ready. The lamplight fell on the little dismantled room of the one boarded cottage of the settlement which he had made his home. He was leaving it to-morrow. He was going back to his "rightful place in life." With a sense of perfect satisfaction in that justice had been done him at last? No. He threw open the window and leaned out. The spring night was oratorical and filled with mysterious stirrings. And the restlessness of nature was in the man's blood, likewise; a deep bitterness for the past injustice which no reparation could wipe away, mingled with some other feeling of which he did not care to analyze the constituents.

Behind him the lamplight flared up in a sudden gust of wind. The door had opened, and as he turned he faced Circassia.

"If it's true—true you're goin'!"—her eyes swept about the room, with its littered signs of preparation, "I got ter know it—now!"

He came slowly toward her without replying.

"They were a sayin' it all over the settlement, that you was—was again!" Her hand went up to the homespun gown, as if the light stricture oppressed her, and her eyes were black in the lamplight. "And when I see her—her—that lady—yesterday—I 'lowed she'd take you with her!"

He saw her breath come fast and then the passion within her broke loose.

"I hates her—I hates her! I hates the likes o' her, and the likes o' the man that's with her, her brother they says! I hates 'em, and the big town you're goin' to! I hates 'em all—all; because—because I loves you!"

Magnificently she made her confession, as the savage she was, unabashed and unafraid, with a wild sort of dignity in the imperious poise of her beautiful blonde head. She threw her love in his teeth, not as a suppliant, but as one who confers a royal favor.

"I loves you!" she repeated. "And I—Circassia—my wild mountain bird—my beautiful savage. Circassia, my girl, I, too, love you!" he said, then, at last, with a long breath.

"Not going with us?" repeated Kendal Trance's pretty cousin, sitting in her pretty traveling dress the following morning in the "hotel" of the village in the valley, five miles below the settlement.

"Not going?" she murmured, turning white, and then her brother who, as agreed upon, had just driven up to the settlement to meet Kendal, and to bear him away, told his remarkable tale. Kendal, since the night before, had changed his mind. He would not return to civilization now, not till he brought with him the mountain girl who, put into a boarding-school, was for two or three years to be trained to be his wife.

"His wife? Great heaven!" Long the brother and sister talked, the latter, trembling a little, with a great bitterness in her soul. At length—

"But this is suicide!" she cried. "What can a man like Kendal do with such a girl—for you say you saw her this morning? He is mad."

"Perhaps," said her brother, meditatively, and then, with a remembrance vivid before him of Circassia as he had seen her for the first and last time—Circassia, beautiful and haughty as a Valkyrie—as the wild dream of a poet—he added: "I don't know, though—I don't know."—New York Mercury.

Very Married People.

It is usually considered a noteworthy circumstance for a man or woman to be married three times; but of old the num or would have been thought little of. Saint Jerome mentions a widow that married her twenty-second husband, who in his turn had been married to twenty-two wives—surely an experienced couple!

A woman named Elizabeth Masi, who died at Florence, 1768, had been married to seven husbands, all of whom she outlived. She married the last of the seven at the age of 70. When on her deathbed she recalled the good and bad points of each of her husbands, and having impartially weighed them in the balance, she singled out her fifth spouse as the favorite, and desired her remains might be interred near his.

The death of a soldier is recorded in 1784, who had five wives, and his widow, aged 90, wept over the grave of her fourth husband. The writer who mentioned these facts vainly added, "The said soldier was much attached to the married state."

There is an account of a gentleman who was married to four wives, and lived to be 115 years old. When he died he left twenty-three "children" alive and well, some of the said children being from three to four-score years old.

A gentleman died at Bordeaux, in 1772, who had been married sixteen times. In July, 1768, a couple were living in Essex, who had been married ninety-one years, the husband being 107 and the wife 103 years of age. At the church of St. Clement Danes, in 1772, a woman of 85 was married to her 8th husband.

Pretty Names in England.

With regard to your list of outlandish names in the British Isles (writes a correspondent,) I would observe that there are no such places as Alvager or Coxhol, which would be Alsager and Coxhoe. But there are plenty more quite as foreign-looking as the rest you have quoted, e. g.: Pontac, Quy, Belcoo, Mogeely, Alre, was Ingestre, Insch, Drax, Gamling, Gilwern, Cropedy, Abv, etc. Of course if you go to the Celtic districts of Wales, Scotland, or Ireland you may get any number of uncouth names, but this is perhaps hardly fair.—London Globe.

CLOAKS AND WRAPS.

PRESENT STYLES WILL PREVAIL NEXT WINTER.

Some of the Popular Designs that Are Shown—Capes with Long Stole Ends Are Much in Favor—High Collars Are Worn.

Fashion's Foibles.
New York correspondence.

BOUT the same styles in cloaks and wraps as those now worn will prevail next winter, so the woman with a few dollars to invest is made frantic by the number of bargains offered. The display in cloaks is simply appalling, but, of course, you take risks from moths and storing over summer. A popular design is that with very full skirts, sleeves very large and drooping at the shoulder and narrowing to the wrists. The capes so popular for shoulder finish of cloaks are less worn, or take the form of epaulette capes that are only over the shoulder and do not cross either front or back. Capes are worn, and are likely to be always favored. They are very full and mostly set on yokes. When the capes are in series, they fall from the shoulders instead of from the throat. Capes with long, stole ends like that in the first initial picture are much in favor. Made of broadened velvet shot with green and a dull yellow, its fronts are trimmed with wide bands of velvet ribbon, which are ornamented with three rows of narrow jet passementerie and are held down at regular intervals with bunches of jet leaves. The cape is lined with pale-green silk and is finished with an epaulette collar. The inner sides of the tabs as well as the standing collar are trimmed with dark fur, preferably sable.

For theater wear are shown some cloaks that recall rather too forcibly

EMPIRE MODELS OUTDOORS AGAIN.

those worn by the gentlemen in Venice in the time of Shylock, or of the sort displayed by Paulo, the handsome brother of the hunchback made famous on the stage. These little capes hang half off the shoulder and are finished with turn-over collars. They drop full and are made of the richest plush or brocade, being lined with contrasting satin or silk. Truth to tell, such little garments are rather an accessory to the dress than a covering, and they are sufficiently dainty and cost enough to have a more established position in the economy, or, to put it in another way, in the extravagance of woman's dress. If you are clever enough to make one of these at home, you may use upholstery or curtain goods of the finer kinds and expend about half what dress goods would require. Some kinds of upholstery velvet are all cotton at the back, but for all that present a most beautiful right side surface, and come in rich and exclusive designs and colorings. To be sure, there is not much wear of the kind dress goods get in it, but for sleeves or a cape it is most suitable, being of splendid width and very cheap compared with the dress material it replaces.

The Empire styles have for some time been relegated to house wear, and of late the tendency has been toward discarding them even for indoor gowns. But now a newly stylish cut of coat is offered, wherein the loose fronts and back are sewn to a yoke, the seam being hidden by a wide strip of braid, which recalls the Empire belts. The sleeves are very full, as shown in the accompanying sketch of this garment, and the collar is composed of a double ruching made of braid. The whole is lined with satin and thinly wadded, and is well suited for middle-aged wearers.

COMFORT THE FIRST CONSIDERATION.

Very high collars are generally worn and add to the length of the neck, which is good luck for the average woman who is in danger of being swamped in the detail of stylish covering. Seal skin and velvet are combined in a unique design. The former fits like the little jackets worn by pages in fashionable modistes' establishments; that is, fits closely, fastens right up the middle of the front, is cut very short on the hips, and curves to a little Eton point front and back. To this sort of a bodice very full satined skirts of velvet are added. A slight modification of this fashion makes the bodice part double-breasted and employs very handsome bronze buttons.

NOT A GOWN TO BE HUGGED IN.

To turn from such studied elegance to two garments which are so simple as to seem to be made with a view to comfort first of all is quite a change. But such things are sometimes lent a simple touch or two which, without display of great expense or necessitating the outlay itself, publish clearly to the feminine half at least of the world, that the wearer is in touch with Dame Fashion's requirements. A jacket and a three-quarter cape appear in the third picture which are entirely unostentatious and comparatively inexpensive, yet which are stylish garments.

Very rich velvet is used in skirts for street wear over cloth. The velvet is fitted closely over the hips, the gores spreading to the full width of the velvet, and the breathers are then allowed to spread separately, so that the underskirt of cloth appears. The velvet is silk back and unlined, and the selrages show. This same idea is carried out for ball gowns with velvet and tulle, the tulle billowing out under the velvet in charming contrast. In the street dress pictured, dark-green velvet is used for the zig-zag stripe about the skirt, for the yoke, belt and cuffs, and a band of it edges the shoulder frills. In each instance, except the yoke, there comes just above the velvet a zig-zag pattern of chenille. The dress goods are a grayish-green woolen stuff.

The final pictured model is an example of the draped overskirt, of unpleasant memory, which promises to be fashionable by spring. Elaborate dressers among actresses display costumes which include the overskirt, and already an occasional one is seen upon the street. The material of the costume shown is silver-gray silk trimmed with dark grayish-red velvet. The foundation skirt of taffeta silk is covered with velvet at the parts exposed by the opening of the front. The edges of the panel front are finished with gray silk passementerie, which is seen in three rows at the bottom of the skirt. The overdress is cut longer than the skirt, and is caught up as indicated. It parts behind to show a velvet strip, similar to those in front. The bodice has a velvet jacket finished at the top with a serpentine ruffle, and the narrow circular basque is also made of velvet and lined with silk.

ZIG-ZAGGED WITH VELVET AND CHENILLE.

Copyright, 1894.

RAGGED hedges index ragged carpets, rusty stoves, dilapidated barns, tumble-down sheds, unsheltered farm machinery, and other things in similar shape about a run-down farm.—American Agriculturist.

Senator Peffer's Great Speech.

Mrs. Diggs in the Advocate.

On December 18 Senator Peffer introduced a bill which might and should have become a law inside of a week. The purpose of the bill was to afford immediate relief to the destitute and unemployed. The secretary of the treasury was authorized and required to deliver to the legally constituted authorities of such states as should apply a fund to be used for the relief and employment of the helpless poor; this fund was to be provided from the silver dollars now in the treasury not covered by certificates outstanding, also the silver bullion now lying idle in the treasury vaults. Sixty-three million dollars was the entire amount called for. Upon this bill Senator Peffer made one of the most forcible, sensible, practical and withal pathetic speeches ever made in the United States senate. He gave a startling array of facts, showing the appalling condition of citizens of our great country. No possible point showing the entire feasibility of the bill was left uncovered, the case was made so plain. Here were the needy and suffering millions. Here lying useless and piled ceiling high were the silver dollars and the bullion waiting to be coined. Here in session was the law-making body in whose power it lay to rescue human beings and to "promote the general welfare" as they were bound by their sacred oath of office under the constitution of the United States to do. Easy, simple, plain path of duty. There was no possible risk to run, no loss to any human being, no "fat" money in the case, nothing but good, honest silver dollars set free from their wicked incarceration in the prison vaults of the United States treasury and given leave to go forth on a glad mission of succor to millions of hungry, sick, famishing and helpless men, women and poor little children. Can any man on this continent rise and tell why this bill of our good, true, populist senator should not have been acted upon immediately? Did this wise and just bill and the sensible and human speech of Senator Peffer's call for any comment in the senate? Not one word. It was simply referred to a committee, where it will sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

Another Witness.

R. T. Van Horn.

Liko Van Alen, William Waldorf Astor is nothing if not English, you know. He has changed his residence from New York to London to become a British subject, and has started a publication which he calls the Pall Mall Magazine, to which nobody with bare hands is allowed to contribute, and whose names must be signed to the articles to insure their respectability.

In the September number of his magazine is an article signed by Mr. Astor himself, on the silver repeal question, from which we quote the closing paragraph. Please read it:

"It is not likely that in this practical age the financial centers will suffer a thing so delicate and vital as their standards of value to be trifled with at hazard. And so long as this remains the case, it may be confidently affirmed that it will be impossible to accomplish any money scheme of world-wide bearing which encounters the joint condemnation of the city of London, Wall street and New York."

Mr. Astor is so far beyond the vulgar masses that he has no call to play the politician and demagogue, but speaks out in plain terms his opinion. It is the money people who will not suffer "their standards of value to be trifled with." Governments, congresses, commerce, trade, industry and enterprise must all be subordinated to what these rent collectors and interest collectors are good enough to tell us is "their" standard.

We give this because it tells the story exactly as it is. There is no disguise or subterfuge about it. There is nothing about "parity," or "the world's" money, or any of that sort of young robin feed at all, but the plain announcement that London and Wall street will not allow any interference with their affairs. We are, on the whole, rather glad that the foresight and speculative genius of old John Jacob Astor has placed one man in a position to tell the truth in an important matter. We commend it to all these so-called statesmen who voted as Mr. Astor states they were suffered to do. Read it over again.

A Gem from John Ruskin.

"And for you there will come a time of better payment; some day, assuredly more pence will be paid to Peter, the fisherman, and fewer to Peter, the Pope. We shall pay people not quite so much for talking in parliament and doing nothing, as for holding their tongues out of it and doing something; we shall pay our plowman a little more and our lawyer a little less, and so on; but at least we may even now take care that whatever work is done shall be fully paid for, and the man who does it paid for it, not somebody else, and that it shall be done in an orderly, soldierly, well-guided, wholesome way, under good captains and lieutenants of labor; and that he shall have the appointed times of rest, and enough of them; and that in those times the play shall be wholesome play, not in theatrical gardens, with paper flowers and gas sunshine, and girls dancing because of their misery, but in true gardens with real flowers and real sunshine, and children dancing because of their gladness; so that truly the streets shall be full (the streets, mind you, not the gutters) of children playing in the midst thereof. We may take care that working men shall have at least as good books to read as anybody else, when they're time to read them, and as comfortable firesides to sit at as anybody else, when they've time to sit at them. This, I think, can be managed for you, my working friends, in good time."

Make the Comparison.

National Watchman.

In New York last week the following shares in national banks were sold:

Two shares Fourth National Bank, 200.
Fifty shares Phoenix National Bank, 120.
Eleven shares Phoenix National Bank, 113.
Seven shares Central National Bank, 115.
Forty shares Bank of America, 190.
Forty-four shares Mechanics National Bank, 180.
Thirty-four shares Fourth National Bank, 200.
Twenty shares National Bank of Commerce, 174.
Sixteen shares First National Bank of Utica, N. Y., 177.
Twenty shares People's Trust company of Brooklyn, 250.
Fifty shares Central National Bank, 120.
Four shares National Park Bank, 292.

These shares cost originally, some years ago $100 each. Let every farmer who reads this compare the present value of his farm with its value ten, fifteen, twenty or thirty years ago when these banks were started. In addition to regular dividends the stock in these banks have advanced to the prices given above.

On the other hand the farm has paid no profit, and has depreciated fully one-half in value. Why? Because for the past twenty-five years the farmers of the country have been persistently voting the profits and value of their farms into the money of the country, and the banks own the money.

Worse Than the National Banking.

Oregon City, (Ore.) Herald.

Springer's banking bill, which is printed in another column, is President Cleveland's pet scheme. As will be seen, it provides for a currency similar in character to greenbacks, but it must pass through the hands of the usurer before it reaches the channels of trade, and it is to be made payable in metallic money, which does not exist. It is more objectionable than the national banking scheme, for the reason that it can be made more general, on account of making other than national bonds available as a basis.

A Georgia Daily.

Georgia populists are making a strong effort to start a daily paper under the management of Hon. Thos. E. Watson. The capital stock has been fixed at $100,000, a considerable portion of which has been subscribed.

A daily in the hands of T. E. Watson will give the populists a strong boom in the south.

In 1886 it took 12,000 bushels of grain to pay the president's salary. Now it takes 160,000.

Twenty-five members of the Mississippi legislature have renounced their allegiance to the democratic party, and declared their intentions to support the people's party. Cleveland's repudiation of the democratic platform is the cause of their leaving. That is the way the people's party is dying.

How Intelligent People Are Fooled.

San Diego Vidette.

We are constantly being told that we are the most intelligent people on the face of the earth, but does it really look like it? Fancy an intelligent people who make their own laws not knowing that they can make their own money, and instead of doing so, going cap in hand to London, Paris, and Berlin, borrowing hundreds of millions of dollars from foreigners at high rates of interest in order to develop their own resources! This is what we have been doing during the last thirty years. There is not, and never has been, any earthly reason why the people of the United States should go abroad for money. It is the business and duty of the government to supply us with all the money the trade of the country needs. If there is a single legitimate enterprise in this country hanging fire for want of money to pay for the labor, or for raw materials needed, it is a reflection on the intelligence of the people of this country. Take any example you like. Let us say a district in California needs irrigating; a reservoir site exists in the mountains; all that is needed is "capital" to build a dam, pay for the labor, pay for the pipes and flume, pay for the surveys, etc. Tens of thousands of idle workmen are waiting for a job. To bring water from the mountains to the land would quadruple the value of the land at one stroke and give an increased value of $10,000,000 to 100,000 acres of land. Here is an enterprise than which nothing in the world could be safer. Ten thousand families could start ten acre fruit orchards on these lands and make 10,000 homes.

The land owners, the pipe makers, the lumber men, the surveyors, the laborers, etc., are all willing and waiting to interchange their various products and services, but simply for want of currency, for this is the plain English of "capital," it cannot be done! And yet we boast that we are the most intelligent people in the world!

The Bank of England.

Kansas City, Mo., Journal.

And now the old lady of Threadneedle street is arraigned for loose morals—in finance. It is a serious thing—and our president and Wall street have just bulldozed America into her power.

The whole financial legislation of the world is now in the interest of the money lender, and has made the Bank of England the gold-clearing house of the globe. If the bank breaks, the world is broke. People now begin to see where the civilization stands financially.

The United States must have a money system of its own. Suppose the Bank of England was to fail to-morrow, and gold not to be had, what would be our only hope of salvation? Simply the issue of legal tender paper, and making silver standard money. If this is the only remedy for disaster, why put off its use till disaster comes? Would it not also do for prosperity?

This question the people would like to answer if party leaders would only let them have chance to do so. Some of these days they will take the bit in their mouths and find a way to do it.

The money that measures values, pays taxes and debts, must not be controlled by those who speculate or invest in margins—for when they break, as fail they must some time or other, the world is broke. It is financial insanity to attempt to do the business of the world by such methods. We must have our own money and our own money system. What that is may be this or that, but it must be our own.

Impossible to Believe.

St. Paul Union.

I read the telegram in the Inter-Ocean twice before I could believe it. Ex-Banker Shureman, of Bloomington, Ill., pleaded guilty to twenty-nine indictments for embezzlement, and the court sentenced him to one year on each count, stipulating clearly, however, "that the SENTENCES WERE ALL TO BEGIN AND END TOGETHER, so that Shureman will have to serve but one year in all."!!!! His embezzlements amounted to about $80,000. Pretty good salary for one year's term. But who ever heard of a poor man serving several sentences at one time? Rich men live so very fast, you know, they can go through "time" in a hurry. When the daily papers boldly tell such instances, are the poor dupes, those whose toil pays the sums taken by the embezzler, so blind they cannot see that all the legal machinery is to grind the poor, and serve the rich? Are they so brutalized as to voluntarily support a despotism, like the slaves of Rome who made triumphal arches to greet the victorious Roman murderers on their return with more slaves and wretches from their country? Such instances are sickening to a sense of justice. A poor man, for stealing a sack of flour to keep his children from starving, will be sent to prison for two years; yet a rich man, for twenty-nine crimes of great magnitude, gets one year! Well did Jefferson understand his subject when he said that banks were more dangerous to liberty than a standing army.

National Committee.

National Watchman.

At the meeting of the senators, representatives, and national committee of the people's party at the rooms of Senator Stewart it was resolved to open national headquarters here in Washington, and Hon. H. E. Taubeneck was selected to take charge of the work. Funds were pledged to defray the expense and a vigorous campaign may be expected. Chairman Taubeneck will enter upon his duties the first week in January, and everything will be done possible to enable the people of all the states to give an expression at the polls in the next election of their condemnation of the plutocratic methods that now rule the nation. All reports from the different states are encouraging and reformers everywhere should take fresh hope and work as never before.

State Committee.

At the meeting in Topeka of the populist state central committee, the sessions have been in secret.

A member of the committee said that he believed the populist state convention would be held in July. One of the subjects that is bothering the committee is the place to hold the convention. Topeka is the natural place on account of its hotels and other conveniences, but the radical middle-of-the-road men are unalterably opposed to it. Secretary of State Osborn leads the opposition. He wants the convention held as far away from Topeka as possible. He says the party can't expect fair treatment from the Topeka newspaper correspondents, and he is in favor of excluding them from the hall.

The accounts of the last campaign were audited. The necessary amount to meet deficiency is said to have been raised; with a surplus left over to begin this year's campaign.

Why Not.

Tulare Citizen.

If the government can carry a letter across the continent for 2 cents, why can it not send a telegraphic message correspondingly cheap?

If the government can build and manage a navy, why can it not build and operate a railroad?

If the government can run the treasury department, why can it not run the banks?

If the government can support an army of men in idleness, why can it not support an army of laborers at some useful occupation?

If the government can serve the people at less cost than private corporation why does it not do so?

Of Government.

J. D. Miller, in Kate Field's Washington.

One angel met another on the Jasper street, taking earthly observations.

"What are you looking at?"

"Men."

"And what do you see?"

"I see wise men living under laws made by fools and knaves, and submitting of their own wills."

"Strange," said the other. "And how do they justify such a system?"

"They don't justify it. They say it's all wrong."

"And why do they submit?"

"That I cannot tell."

"And what do they call such a strange anomaly?"

"Politics."

Cleveland and His Congress.

Memphis, Tenn., Unionist.

Cleveland has undertaken to teach the world that the less money a country has the greater its prosperity, and the best way to pay debts is to destroy a large share of the means of payment. His late special congress enacted a law in accordance with his teachings.

ALMOST A WILDERNESS NOW.

The Island of Hayti Gone to the Dogs, Being Incapable of Self-Government.

Not the least interesting feature of the place is the barracks, where is quartered a portion of Hippolyte's valiant army, says a writer in the Providence Journal. The only attempt at uniform is a suit of blue overalls, generally in the last stage of dilapidation, and a cap ornamented with red, yellow, or blue braid, according to the fancy of the wearer. Some few have shoes or straw slippers, but the majority are barefooted. They are armed, however, with fairly good muskets, and many of them carry ugly looking knives. I saw large numbers of the "soldiers" on the plaza or public square, some playing at dice or cards, some talking, others sleeping, and all lazy, dirty, and ragged. This plaza, which was originally well laid out and which actually boasted an ancient fountain in the center, was littered with refuse, rooted up by hogs and filthy with horse offal and dung. The ancient paved walks which originally traversed it were badly broken and the loose stones were widely scattered by the hogs. Outside of the town and as far as the eye can reach, extends a hilly country covered with forest. In a long tramp through this country we saw no cultivated land. And yet this land is said to be extremely fertile and to yield largely any tropical product that is planted upon it. From an examination of an outcropping ledge of rock I decided that the soil was underlaid with limestone, and such a soil is nearly always rich. But the richness of this island is wasted. For even the old plantations which were well set with coffee, oranges, and coconuts are grown up to tropical forest and yield next to nothing. Right in the midst of a jungle of wild trees and bushes I found traces of an old orange and mango grove, indicated by the remains of straight rows in which these trees were originally planted. And with the decline and ruin of the plantations has declined everything in connection with them. Even the old carriage roads which originally traversed the island and formed a channel for conveying the produce to the ports are now only bridle paths, being completely overgrown with forest and bushes.

And this is Hayti, the Hispaniola of Columbus, the pride and glory of the great admiral! For it will be remembered that, after examining the other large islands of the West Indies, Columbus decided that this one was the richest and best. And later, when under French rule, it was one of the fairest and wealthiest spots in the civilized world. The whole Republic, in fact, is a gigantic farce. No nation has ever shown itself more utterly incapable of self-government than the black Republic. In some eighty years of Haytian independence there have been more than ninety revolutions. The children, with a few exceptions, grow up in absolute ignorance, and with a deep, inborn hatred of the white man. The rulers are blood-thirsty tyrants and the country has degenerated into a tropical wilderness.

The Mistletoe.

The mistletoe, otherwise known as the "true lover's vine," so long and so closely connected with the Christmas season, and its secular festivities, is one of the most remarkable parasitic plants in the world. In ancient times, when found upon the oak, which was seldom, it was an object of superstitious regard among the Druids. It grows in the tops of trees, shooting out from the branches like a scion from one tree grafted into another. It is attached to most of the deciduous trees of the South, but most frequently the chestnut and sweet gum. The mistletoe itself is an evergreen, and pre-ents in winter the strange appearance of a branch covered with leaves of a brilliant green on a tree that is otherwise denuded of foliage. The bark is of a deep green and the wood exceedingly brittle. It is generally believed that the mistletoe springs from seed conveyed by birds or the wind and lodged in a crevice or notch in the bark. When it sprouts, the rootlets insinuate themselves into the live wood, and receive their sustenance from the sap of the tree, after the manner of a graft or bud inserted in a fruit tree. The ancient Druids credited this plant with wonderful magical powers, and the old legends of Britain are full of allusions to it.

Has Over Two Million Volumes.

The general inventory of the famous Bibliotheque Nationale—National Library at Paris—was begun in 1775. It has just been finished under the direction of M. Marchal, assistant librarian. This inventory shows that the Bibliotheque Nationale, which is to France what the British Museum is to England, contains in its collections 2,100,000 volumes, without mentioning the provincial newspapers of France, which are not yet in bound form.—New York Tribune.

He is happy whose circumstances suit his temper; but he is more excellent who can suit his temper to any circumstances.

EVERY MACHINE WARRANTED Don't buy a dryer until you see our new logue and get our prices.

FARMERS WIFE
(TOPEKA)

FEB. 1894-APR. 1894

Missing from our files

This Paper until after the Campaign for 25 Cents.

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, MAY, 1894.

VOL. XII, NO. 9.

SUFFRAGISTS.

One Hundred Meetings Now Being Held in Kansas.

MANY NOTED WOMEN ARE PRESENT.

Full Report of the Great Mass Meeting Held at Topeka, May 9th and 10th.

There were fully 3,000 people crowded in Hamilton hall on the evening of May 9th. Those who got there at 7 o'clock were able to get good seats; those who arrived at 7:30 were in luck to get any kind of a seat, and those who came at 8 o'clock were doing well to get within hearing distance. A reporter who arrived at the latter time was only able to gain entrance by making a jump at the main entrance over a six-foot fence that guards the approach. Every chair in the vast hall was filled, and the people stood up all evening in the four corners of the room.

DECORATIONS OF THE HALL.

The only decorations in the room were some star-spangled bunting stretched from the chandeliers, that were left over from the last ball. There were also some banners of yellow cloth, on which were painted the following lofty sentiments: "Give us the ballot for home protection; for the home is woman's sphere;" "Taxation without representation is tyranny;" "Woman's rights means human progress;" "Give woman the happy privilege of voting if she will; she gains and you lose nothing; she's a womanly woman still."

The members of the local equal suffrage organizations sat on the rostrum alongside of the big speakers and wore yellow badges and smiles of approval.

Mrs. Laura M. Johns, president of the State Equal Suffrage association, was mother, or rather mistress of ceremonies. After music by the Alhambra mandolin club and prayer by Rev. F. M. Porch of the Lutheran church, her first act was to make those standing up to "move along" towards the upper end of the hall and give those by the entrance more room.

Mrs. Emma Pack, matron of the state insane asylum and editor of the FARMER'S WIFE, made the first address of welcome. There were two such addresses, one by each branch of the human family; the other branch being represented by James Willis Gleed. Mrs. Pack said:

Distinguished Guests, Co-Workers, Kansas Neighbors, Associates and Friends from abroad:

I feel that I have indeed been favored and most highly honored, in having been chosen to deliver the address of welcome to a disfranchised class of people who have willingly and cheerfully left their homes now as in times past to come to the rescue and aid their Kansas sisters in this struggle for liberty. Not only, my dear sisters, have I been authorized to extend to you the hospitalities of the best and dearest homes in our beautiful city, but you will receive a warm welcome in every home, in every city, town and hamlet of our freedom loving state. And we welcome you with open hands and happy hearts, for we can assure you that victory will crown your efforts, for the husbands, fathers and brothers of sunny Kansas have unfurled their banner to the world that all may see, and these men have declared that this banner, with the motto of "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none," inscribed thereon, shall wave o'er the homes that dot our prairies.

Though, my sisters, your work will be hard and laborious, yet you can work with cheerful heart, having the assurance that our noble men (regardless of party) will at the coming election prove to the world that they are standing up for Kansas by placing in the hands of her fair daughters that harmless, if used rightly, but all powerful weapon, the ballot. And as I stand here a representative of this class, let me say they are not disfranchised from choice, neither are they disfranchised because it is right. Then why, we ask, are they deprived of that power which all true, loyal, liberty-loving citizens prize so highly. We will not admit it is because they are physically weak, for nine tenths of our women either in a direct or an indirect way stand side by side with men and battle for the broad of life.

Is it because they are morally weak? We think not, for somewhere we have read a story written by as brilliant a man as Bishop Vincent, who declares that women are the moral half of the world.

Is it because they are mentally weak? Surely not. Can you call to mind any great reform which has not been greatly aided and pushed forward by the words spoken and written by able and intelligent women? Is it not a fact that some of the best literature ever placed before the public was written and composed by the mother element of our land?

Is it because she carried not the musket and marched not to the music of drum and fife? Hardly; for have they not proven to the world that they were as brave as any man who followed the flag? Did not the mothers fight the greatest battles ever fought?

Hon. John Madden of Emporia, said: "The greatest battles ever fought were the silent battles, and the greatest warriors ever known were the mothers who fought those battles and won, when with bleeding hearts and throbbing heads they conquered their mother feelings, and with a 'God bless you,' they gave their consent for their pride, their joy, their darling sons, to go and face the cannon's mouth that the stars and stripes might wave over a free people."

Did not the mother element go upon the rostrum in behalf of the four millions who were the chains of slavery?

Again we ask why are these talented wives, mothers and daughters deprived of this priceless treasure, this power of protection? If morality, intelligence, ability and the heroism of a good soldier do not entitle them to the privileges of citizens, pray what characteristics do they lack that is possessed by the present voters?

MRS. EMMA D. PACK.

Our sisters have gone out upon the prairies, with only the blue canopy of heaven as a shelter for their heads, and pleaded for the down-trodden. They have left their homes and firesides from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from North to South, in every hamlet and from every hill-top has woman's voice been heard pleading for the homeless and oppressed as only a woman can plead.

Can you recall to mind any time or place, when or where, they have been found shirking their duty?

During the last few years in which women have been forging to the front so remarkably in the fields of enterprise, they have realized more than ever how helpless they were, they have caught a few glimpses of the abyss, they have heard some distant plaints from the inferno of our civilization, some notes from the sympathy of despair. Enough, however, to hint at the measureless misery of this world of gloom, where bloom no fragrant flowers, and from whence hope and joy, inseparable companions of the crushed soul, have forever departed.

Ah! those notes of despair have not escaped the watchful vigilance of our most distinguished guests and co-workers whom we welcome here tonight. As they have been trying for years with fettered hands to hold back and keep in the rear the ruthless, unscrupulous destroyers of the happiness of millions. Their active, fertile brains have devised ways and plans by which to care for themselves and families if need be, but until our Nation shall cease to be an asylum for the moral wrecks of the world, and until the only true power of protection is placed in the hands of the mother element all over our land, women, with all their ability to build, protect and lift up, will be powerless and unable to build a wall of protection around the little home they have provided or helped to provide for their loved ones. Do men groan 'neath the burden of taxation? It is theirs to throw it off; not so with the women who toil and labor to pay their taxes. Do unjust laws (made by their fellow men) rob themselves and babes of the fruits of their labor, it is theirs to throw it off. Not so with the widowed mother who stands with aching head and crushed heart over the washtub from early morn till close of day, to provide for the fatherless children whom the fathers failed to provide for while living; and perhaps after the days work is done to drag her weary, tired body to some fireless, cheerless room to spend the night in weeping. They cannot throw off this yoke of serfdom and slavery.

Now these brave, unselfish sisters have come to join us in asking for the rights and the liberties for those women as well as for ourselves. And as we join hands, my sisters and co-workers, for the emancipation of our sex, the women of Kansas, Populist, Republican, Prohibitionist and Democrat, all as one, will proclaim to the world in words that will go ringing from ocean to ocean, that we enter not upon this campaign begging for sympathy or for charity, but we simply ask justice; as patriotic wives, mothers and sisters we ask no more, as loyal, true, American citizens we cannot accept less, and of the victory we are sure, for the noble men of Kansas (Heaven bless them) regardless of party, have declared that it is the want of liberty that has cursed the world and kept the hedged-in victims weak. They have declared that it is against the principles of our Saviour to deny the women their democratic liberties. Our forefathers were forced to assert their independence, and we, the daughters of America, look with pride upon the descendants of these noble men for well we know that in November, 1894, our liberty-loving men will assert their independence and demand political freedom for their loved ones.

Brothers, can you blame us for asking for the enfranchisement of our sex, when from every quarter comes the cry of distress and we are compelled to listen. Please remember that women have played no part in bringing about the conditions that surround our people today. But on the other hand they have been compelled to stand helplessly by and see justice trampled in the dust, and as she wrapped her time-worn garments around her, women could only lift their eyes to heaven and exclaim, "Is there no help?" We ask not, neither do we care for notoriety or praise, but we do ask and we do care for the rights of wives and mothers.

Aye, still more we ask and we plead for the right and the power to protect the home that our husbands and our fathers in their blindness have failed to protect; and more we ask for the ballot that we may help you, my brothers, free yourselves from the bonds of slavery which is a thousand times more degrading than the slavery of thirty years ago. Gladly and proudly would we stand by your side and with our ballots help raise the morality of our country, but through man's laws (not through the laws made by the Ruler of the universe, those laws have been trampled upon and ignored) we are powerless and silently we must see injustice and devastation reign supreme.

We plead for the power that will help us lift the burden of taxation from our loved ones, placed there by men whom you selected in times past to do your thinking. We are gently reminded that home is woman's sphere. What about the many thousands of women who have had their homes invaded and destroyed? And by whom, we ask, were those homes destroyed?

Invade a hive of bees and see what will be the fate of the invader. We have no misgiving of the true fullness of the statement when we say that the true woman is yet to be found who has the shadow of a desire to leave that realm called home if man could or would but do his duty and make her comfortable and happy. If he fails to provide for her and her little ones must she be content within the four walls of any place it may please him to call her home. No, a thousand times no, her womanhood will and must assert itself, and for the good of humanity and her family she must break the chains with which she has been bound. And when she takes that stand, in spite of all opposition, like an unfettered bird she will rise and take her place by man's side, his equal in all things, his inferior in none.

A true woman's deepest love is for the home and the loved ones, and entwined and interwoven with this strong love comes a deathless instinct and a desire to protect and save that home from danger. The first battle Kansas fought was a battle to free the chattel slave. Nobly the brave men of Kansas arose in their might and spoke in no uncertain tones when they declared that Kansas never with slavery's chains should be bound. And after the battle how proudly they came home to wives and loved ones. But what must have been their feeling when scarcely the smoke from the battlefield had disappeared so that the pure sunlight from heaven could shine forth upon the state as a free state to know that a still more deadly foe had invaded their homes. Did our men run from that foe. No. Nothing daunted they again buckled on their armor of war and with ballots, not bullets, they fought the battle and boldly announced to the world that King Alcohol never, never should ruin the homes in Kansas. Once more we bow our heads and say with reverence, "All hail to Kansas noblemen!"

Friends, Kansas has not been moving backward since those memorable days. She has steadily and most courageously been pushing and wending her way to front, until today she proudly lifts her head and demands justice for all alike. She welcomed then all tillers and toilers of the soil, all lovers of freedom. And tonight, our honored guest and co-workers, who have come to help us win, (I was going to say third, but will say fourth crown for Kansas,) I bring you greeting and a warm welcome, not only from our Suffrage clubs and all women's organizations in our city and state, but those same brave warriors who fought those battles bid me say to you, "that their home shall be your home as long as you honor them with your presence." They say thrice welcome, noble women, who have come to help us free our loved ones, and lay that small but mighty weapon, the ballot, in the hands of those who have walked side by side with us in the darkest as well as the sunniest days of Kansas.

J. WILLIS GLEED.

Mr. Gleed in welcoming the visitors on behalf of the men of Shawnee county, made a gallant and sarcastic speech. "I propose," he said, "to welcome you from a non-partisan standpoint, and in such a way that nobody in this vast audience will know how I stand."

"This county is divided into two great classes, the majority and the minority. We of the minority welcome you with a reservation. We don't want to break up your meeting, but candor compels us to say we don't believe you have got sense enough to vote. One reason why we don't want you to vote is because we want harmony in the home. We have it now, (laughter). If the wives want tea for dinner and we want coffee, we compromise on coffee and harmony is preserved. If women get into politics our domestic life will be like dogs and cats. (This was said without any reference to Mrs. Catt.)"

"As one of the majority you are welcomed without any reservation, and our hearts and souls go with it. We intend to permit you to vote, and blush to use the word 'permit.' It is said that the fewer privileges you have the more chivalrous treatment you receive. The squaws receive a great deal of this kind of chivalry. The men have been running the government for a long time now and I can't say that our success has been so conspicuous that we can afford to put on any airs."

MISS ANTHONY SPEAKS.

The principal speaker of the evening, Miss Susan B. Anthony, was next introduced by Mrs. Johns. Miss Anthony was greeted with prolonged applause. She looks like the old-fashioned, round-framed pictures at home, and her speaking is rather eccentric. She is not eloquent like Mrs. Lease or emotional like Clara Morris. She made simply what everybody expected of her, a straightforward talk full of oddities and strange conceits. She said in part: "I am glad Topeka extended a welcome from both branches of the human family. Glad of it. I like it. I am glad a majority is with us. Delighted."

"Kansas lost her chance to be the banner state of the union and of the world in this reform by not passing the amendment when we first asked for it in 1867. It was lost that year through political cowardice. I mean it. Political cowardice."

Miss Anthony scored the Republicans for being "neutral" or this subject, and said that while the Democrats openly opposed them they did not expect anything better of them. She scored Editor Eskridge of the Emporia Republican for opposing equal suffrage. She said that his daughter was a reporter on his paper, and if she could report she is surely able to vote.

"I am not a Republican, I am not a People's party man. I am not for any party and will not wave my handkerchief for the success of and of them until they make a campaign on our lines. Then I'll tell how I will work."

"I have received a letter from a Populist who wishes to have me understand that he is in favor of equal suffrage, but does not wish to have the plank favoring it in the platform of his party. I have another letter from a prominent Republican to the same effect. I tell you, friends, that the Republican, Democratic and Populist parties of the state of Kansas will not fail to have a plank in their platform in favor of woman suffrage because they have not been asked to do so."

"If we fail to make this a success in this state this fall, you will be responsible for the most terrible setback that we have ever had. We have had enough of seeming disaster. And now we ask you to make us an example for the cause in New York. In our state as many Democrats are in favor of woman suffrage as Republicans. We have kept things more evenly balanced there. What will they say if Kansas after trying equal suffrage partially fails to enfranchise women wholly?"

Among the other good things she said were:

floating your kites and in turn getting your foot on their necks.

"I was in the New York Sun office not long ago and had a talk with my old friend, C. A. Dana, whom I have known for forty years. He is the author of the old slang phrase that the women can vote as soon as any respectable number asked for the franchise. I asked him what he considered a 'respectable number.' He replied that a petition from 100,000 women ought to settle the question forever. I said, 'Bless you, for forty years we have been taking petitions to the legislature of from 50,000 to 100,000 names, and they have had no effect.'"

"A petition from every woman in the state would not create a ripple in the minds of Boss Croker of Tammany, or Boss Platt of the Republican forces."

MRS. CHAPMAN CATT.

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, of New York, was the next speaker, and she made a most favorable impression on the hearers. There is nothing masculine in her appearance, but on the contrary she was decidedly pretty; which, with a musical voice, were two charming points in her favor. Mrs. Catt in referring to the right to vote did not refer to the "franchise" or "suffrage," but used a little term all of her own; the "electoral arm." She said that thousands of poor girls toiled in the great "sweating" shops in manufacturing towns. Their only relief is marriage.

"Women are getting pretty independent in such things," the speaker said, "and a thousand dollar woman thinks for a good while before marrying a ten-cent man." Mrs. Catt said that for every fallen woman in the United States there are twelve fallen men, and that while woman may have brought sin into the world it didn't take Adam long to catch up. She called attention to the fact that the women of Boston own $150,000,000 worth of property, and in Brooklyn $113,000,000.

"The great question before the people of Kansas is not whether the Republicans shall rid the state of Populists, or the Populists rid the state of Republicans, but whether one-half of the people of the state shall be given their rights."

The speaker called attention to the fact that the philanthropic associations are nearly all managed by women. "In one city," she said, "there are twenty women's organizations for the public good and but one of men and its members are limited to nine—it is a base ball club." She spoke of the work of the Red Cross, W. C. T. U., Kings Daughters, and other organizations through which women are accomplishing much good. "Now all those societies have been silenced in our government," she continued, "and the members are refused the right of franchise, but you say to all men, no matter how long they stand in the scale of humanity, 'Come up to the political urn and deposit your ballot.'"

"You say that taxation without representation is tyranny, but you keep that principle only for fourth of July occasions. You disarm women from voting, no matter how much property she has, but you invite the tramp in the street to come up and express himself at the polls. When the women wealth producers and wage earners ask for a voice in our government, you say go down into the highways and byways and find you a man and marry him that he may vote for you. But then there are not enough men to go around."

MAYOR HARRISON.

Mrs. Johns then introduced Mayor Harrison, who addressed the convention as follows:

"In civil government as in nature there seems to be two opposing forces, the progressive and the conservative. One pushing or pulling forward or upward, and the other pulling backward or standing still. The one favors development and growth, the other is satisfied with existing conditions or is seeking to get back into some former level from which it has been dragged by the momentum of its antagonist. Just at the present time the progressive idea seems to be battling for equal suffrage."

"And two things seem wonderfully strange to me. One that the settlement of this important subject should have been left to the waning twilight of the nineteenth century. And the other that there should be any struggle at all over this question. We would naturally suppose that whenever so large a contingent as one half of the people of any commonwealth or country should ask the privilege of participating equally in its government that they would at once be accorded that privilege without cavil or dissent, and especially so when the petitioning moiety is at least equally as respectable and equally as intelligent as the other portion and also bears its proportion of the burdens of maintaining the government. But so jealous is possession, and so fearful of weakness from division, that the possessor seems loth to divide even with those who are his dearest friends."

"I have heard some objections urged

(Continued on fifth page.)

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

A CURIOUS TRADE.

Men Who Exterminate Ants for a Livelihood.

The fierceness and strength of the ants in warm countries make them truly formidable enemies and when they found a colony directly under the houses of human beings every means has to be used to drive them away. This necessity has created the ant-man. His stock in trade is an enormous bellows, and a load of a certain kind of wood found in the neighboring forests. After stopping up all the openings leading under the house, except a central one, he enlarges that and forms it into a furnace that will admit the pipe of the bellows.

Then he lights a fire, and with the aid of the great bellows forces the smoke into the ant citadels under the surface of the ground. Of course, these are very porous, and when the smoke passes through them, it goes out into the house above. Then the ant-man leaves an assistant to work the bellows, and going into the house stops up every crack that he can find.

Meanwhile there is a wild commotion among those doomed insects whose home is being bombarded with smoke. They understand their danger with the very first puff that reaches them and know that their only hope is in flight. They all hasten to the central chamber, where their precious eggs are stored. At a given signal from their chief each one seizes an egg, then all turn in haste into the subterranean passages that lead into the garden, deserting their homes and carefully stored stock of provisions, but holding fast to the treasured eggs.

But there, before them, are the cruel wreaths of blue smoke. They turn and rush to another passage. The same thing there. As a forlorn hope the poor ants run into the old deserted galleries, or set to work to make new ones, hoping their enemy will not find them there at last.

But the ant-man is patrolling the grounds around the house. As the old or new galleries are cleared out by the brave little ants the smoke penetrates them and comes to the surface in a thin wreath. They are thus betrayed as well as smothered, and a stroke of the spade ends their frantic effort at escape.

All this time fresh quantities of the hot smoke are being forced through their highways and byways, and the frail bodies of the formica are shriveling and dropping along their line of attempting retreat. Soon they cease to struggle. They can not breathe the rarified, smoke-laden air. The next day, when the soil has cooled off, they are found calcined in their once busy galleries, their roasted eggs at their side. Poor little creatures! But their human victims call the ant-man a blessing.

Purifying Air by Charcoal.

Chas. Toope, who has taken a prominent part in the attempts to abate the smoke and fog nuisance in England, suggests the application of charcoal for purifying the air of the houses located in infected districts—all air admitted to be passed through thin canvas bags containing crushed charcoal. He holds that were such precautions taken, many regions now fatal to Europeans could be dwelt in with impunity. Mr. Toope is by no means the first to call attention to the remarkable absorbent properties of charcoal. Forty years ago the chemist Stenhouse described and illustrated the capabilities of charcoal as an absorbent and oxidizer of the products of decomposition of organic matter. He tells how the carcasses of dogs were kept covered with a thin layer of powdered charcoal—but otherwise exposed—without any nuisance arising therefrom. He adds that he has devised a respirator on this principle, to be used in districts smitten with cholera or yellow fever. He found, further, that with such a respirator he could breathe with impunity air containing large amounts of ammonia, sulphuretted hydrogen and other hurtful gases. Stenhouse goes on to show how charcoal can be "platinized," or combined with minutely divided platinum. Charcoal containing even two per cent of platinum causes a mixture of oxygen and hydrogen to combine perfectly in about a quarter of an hour, and this strength of platinized charcoal is stated to be well adapted for charcoal disinfectant respirators.—Pharmaceutical Era.

Sleeping Together.

Two children, even if both are healthy, should not be required to sleep together, says Childhood. They are apt in their sleep to turn their faces toward each other, and thus mingle their breaths. One may be uncomfortable under the amount of covering needed by the other; one may like the sensation of the fresh night air on his chest and hands, and the other be sensitive to the cold. Very rarely are the necessities of two temperaments perfectly adjusted to each other. And frequently one child awakens refreshed and the other tired and irritable, showing that the advantages have been all on one side. It is better to accustom a child to a simple springless cot bed, his exclusive property, than to oblige him to occupy the most luxurious couch shared with another person.

Fog and Mortality in London.

On nearly all sides there is evidence of a gradually diminishing mortality among the causes of the London death rates, and nothing is more certain than the fact that this satisfactory state of things is the direct outcome of the beneficent, practical, and expedient health laws by which the public health is controlled. In the midst, however, of the gradual elimination of the cause which tend to destroy life in London, the fogs remain, constituting always a certain menace, always claiming a high ratio of victims, and always indirectly perpetrating an inconceivable amount of harm. That the death rate for London would show a much better record were fogs to be banished from our midst is indisputable. Let the black pall settle for two or three days over the metropolitan area, and the following issue of the Registrar General's returns would emphatically tell the tale of its death-dealing presence. Any scheme, of course, which would be designated to deal with the devil would necessarily be one of a gigantic nature. But was not the inception of the scheme for the main drainage of London a gigantic one, and, looking at it now, do we not appear to be a monument of engineering skill and a triumph and victory over difficulties which seemed to be almost insurmountable? Let the same enterprise which called into existence the organization of this, perhaps the most indispensable attribute to the maintenance of the health of London, be now turned in the direction of solving the problem of the fogs.—Nineteenth Century.

Cheese Rich.

Nations which use little or no money must make something else their standard of riches. In patriarchal times wealth was estimated by the number of sheep and cattle. Among the Indians a man is quoted "worth" so many ponies; among the Laps so many reindeer; among the Africans so many wives, etc.

In Valois, Switzerland, a man's riches are estimated according to the number of cheeses he owns. By a "cheese-rich man" is meant one as wealthy as Cæsar.

Said one Valois boy to a companion:

"My father is a 'cheese-rich man.'"

"How many cheeses has he?" said the other.

"Oh, at least so many, for we have just made a lot."

"Nonsense!" said the others, smiling contemptuously; "my father has that number the year round, and some of ours are a hundred years old."

When a child is born it is the custom to make a cheese, leaving it untouched during its lifetime, cutting it first at its funeral feast.

Population of the Ocean.

A striking proof of the vastness and variety of the population of the sea has recently been furnished by the results of explorations made by a committee of the Zoological Department of the British Association in that part of the Irish Sea surrounding the Isle of Man.

Out of one thousand species of marine animals collected, 224 had never before been found in that region, thirty-eight were previously unknown as inhabitants of British waters, and seventeen were entirely new to science; indeed, they were animals whose existence had never been suspected.

If such discoveries reward a few weeks of searching in so minute a speck of the sea, how many volumes would be required to contain a list of the still undiscovered inhabitants of the great oceans?

Sugar Tongues.

The use of tongs for taking up heated metals or small lumps of anything was known to the Anglo-Saxons (tange), so were probably in vogue as soon as the use of "lump" sugar became common. Forks were introduced into England by Thomas Coryat in 1608, having seen them in Italy, first known there at the end of the fifteenth century; and silver forks were introduced about the year 1814; but two-pronged steel ones were manufactured at Sheffield soon after Coryat employed one himself. In the time of Queen Elizabeth, Fynes Moryson describes the use of a fork, as he observed it at Venice; in his Itinerary.

A Shower of Feathers.

The eminent surgeon Sir Astley Cooper was fond of a practical joke. On one occasion he ascended the church tower of a village in Norfolk, taking with him one of his mother's pillows, and finding the wind blew directly to the next town, he let off handfuls of feathers, until he had emptied the pillow. The local papers reported this "remarkable shower" of feathers, and offered various conjectures to account for it, and the account was copied into other papers, and was probably received as a perfectly natural occurrence.—Notes and Queries.

THE REAL INCONSISTENCY

In the Opposition to the Woman Suffrage Movement.

BY MRS. J. K. HUDSON.

Few people today doubt that woman will sooner or later secure the right of suffrage, and many foresee the time drawing nearer and nearer when the granting of this right by men will become a party issue.

In the meantime a most paradoxical sentiment prevails regarding that old and formerly circumscribed, but now rapidly expanding area called woman's sphere.

The newest and strongest active force in woman's world is the business woman. She came uninvited, succeeded, and will stay. Everybody accepts and respects her. Mothers, wives and daughters, home-bodies who do not want to vote, women who in conviction and sentiment, or in prejudice and ignorance, generally combat the idea of voting, all lend a helping hand to the business woman. Men in every walk of life encourage and aid her, and no man is brave enough to say that she is out of her sphere. Indeed, men no longer seem to doubt the appropriateness of women in business. They have opened every door to her, have taught her the tricks of every trade, and given her the privilege of competing with them in every profession. Nor have they done this grudgingly, since the early martyrs paved the way, and today any woman can go, respected and protected if she but walks uprightly, where Lucy Stone once met jeers and abuse and threats. Nor is this all. Women are not only tolerated, not only welcomed and fairly treated in the money-making world today, but they are placed there by public opinion and self respect. An unmarried or a widowed woman can no longer remain idle and dependent upon relatives as she was formerly often compelled to do. If she has not been taught some money-earning, bread-winning skill in the days of her youth and prosperity, she must learn it in the days of her adversity—if, sadly, such days ever come to her—that is all. Nothing else will be accepted of her by society in its present state of enlightenment and reformation. This condition being a fact, albeit has grown upon us unawares, what, then, is the foundation, the reason, for the yet widespread opposition to the granting of suffrage to women? How has it come about that women have been given all these business rights and are yet denied political enfranchisement? It is manifestly unjust that a woman shall be taxed to support a government in which she has no voice; it is manifestly unjust that an intelligent woman shall be held amenable to the laws of a republic in which she has no vote, and yet we are not ready to give even the business woman the franchise. Why? Not because we are afraid to trust her to use it conscientiously and intelligently. No. We trust her with everything else, we could with that.

Is it not true, that, proud as we are of the business woman, her career has demonstrated to us some things that to be sure have always been true, but to which the wholesome growth of American family life during many generations had blinded us? We had never learned that men and women are men and women in the office as well as in the home. We had forgotten that the history of the world reveals the story that wherever the barriers of reserve between men and women have been broken down by constant intimacy there the family deteriorates, whether it is in the profligate courts of royalty, in crowded city tenements, in slavery or in idle luxury. The hideous facts in every comic paper in the land concerning the young girl typewriter should make every mother's heart turn cold with the knowledge that she has been accessory to such a condition. And today, speaking for but one woman, though I sincerely believe from the hearts of many, I consider it is a false loyalty to women and a cowardly hesitation in the face of a mother's highest duty, if we longer refrain from saying that there are some positions in the business world that women can not safely and must not fill. No observer of the tendencies of modern life can fail to see that this must inevitably be said sooner or later, and it will be to the everlasting shame of American women if they leave it for men to say. Men have been besieged to give clerical employment to women; good men and bad men alike have been asked to grant positions to young girls that the bravest and strongest of matured women should hesitate to fill and that an angel could not enter. All men know that when a young, inexperienced, innocent girl takes a place in a man's private office to read and write at his dictation day in and day out, to spend hours alone with him for a continuous period of weeks and months, she steps to the brink of the deepest depths a woman ever looks into. Do women, wives, mothers of daughters, need to be told this by men?

It is a beautiful truth in nature that nothing but time teaches distrust to youth. Trust in all things of seeming fairness; belief in its own strength, faith in the happy visions of the future, make up the season of beatitude we call youth—the time that no man would eliminate from another's life if he himself hoped for heaven. But what are mothers for if not to guard this period of trustfulness? Can we longer put our daughters into the most trying position ever yet accorded to women in the history of civilization and demand of them that they maintain themselves in every respect as if they were at home, surrounded by all the safeguards of the household? Not that all women are weak, nor that all men are wicked—far from it—but the truth remains that the nature of men and women is the same it has been since time began, notwithstanding all our advanced ideas concerning woman's capabilities and rights and the broadening of her sphere. This is the world-old fact that we must not lose sight of and that mature men and women, the mothers and fathers of today, must consider in the new adjustment of affairs.

How, if woman is to exercise all the privileges and share the labor of business and be permitted to compete with men, can she consistently be denied the ballot? How can a Christian people permit a woman to put her life in jeopardy in the great battle for bread and grant her no tools, no weapons, no laws, but those that men give her? It is inconsistent from every point of view that woman should be encouraged to do all the things she is doing in business, in public and intellectual life, and yet be denied a voice in making the laws of the land.

None is quite so inconsistent as the business woman herself, when she does not want to vote. She wants to do business with all the privileges that the laws of commerce and finance allow to anyone, but she does not want to know what those laws are nor to be able to defend herself. If she is cheated, men are to blame under existing conditions. But if she is the most inconsistent opponent of woman suffrage, the unkindest one, because the most thoughtless, is the happy wife whose husband is lover, protector, and provider. If she knows nothing of the struggle of the working thousands, of the lives of women who make calico wrappers for twelve and a half cents and hickory snits for eight cents apiece, then her ignorance excuses her—if ignorance is ever now accepted as an excuse from women. But if she knows anything about how the other half of the world-of-women lives, if she knows that the whisky sellers and the whisky drinkers control the elections of the largest cities in the United States, if she has inherited the high sense of duty, and responsibility to her children, and through them to her country, that her mother and her mother's mother nursed from the pioneer mothers of America, she will rebel against the false position into which modern conditions have forced woman—compelling her to support herself and pay her own taxes; holding her amenable to laws she has no voice in; educating her as highly as man while holding her on a political level with criminals and imbeciles, and greatest outrage of all, demanding of her that she maintain her womanhood pure and spotless, knowing that she must be pushed clear over the brink into everlasting disgrace if she fall, while there is no law, legal or moral, that will bear hard equally upon man.

The ballot in woman's hands would strengthen her moral power quite as much as it would her political power, and no one questions that her vote would tend toward better politics. The lower political elements concede that much by opposing woman suffrage, and the purest and wisest statesmen of the time concede it openly and proudly by espousing it. It is the glaring and unjust inconsistency of the times that woman is accepted in business, in the pulpit, in the college, in the counsel and administration of laws that she cannot help to make and yet must obey, on the rostrum, as physician, private secretary, advisor, drudge and nurse, and not only upheld in these positions, but compelled to occupy them by the sentiment of the age, and yet denied the ballot. Good men very generally see the necessity of giving women the suffrage; good women are slow to realize the necessity of it. From a conservative woman's point of view, it is not nearly so important that women be given the ballot or that public sentiment be turned for their own sakes from holding some positions they now honorably occupy, as it will when the natural, human, inevitable reaction sets in against a too great change in woman's sphere. But that woman is in the wage-earning and glory-winning world for all time that the present civilization can foresee is plain, and this being true she needs the ballot for protection. She is entitled to it for what she has done and for what she must suffer, for "men must work and women must weep" to the end of time. No matter how much both men and women may learn, how much achieve, nor how greatly the proportion of the burdens may be changed, the preponderance of work will still belong to man and of suffering to woman, and suffering is not always the easier part. In woman's new field she meets more dangers and has fewer defenses.

As for women—it remains for but a few more men of learning and ability to try to logically oppose equal suffrage, and the sisters will all be converted. A recent notable instance of this kind, on the part of a man who has done more than any other American to open the book of knowledge to women, set scores of people to thinking who never before thought of suffrage for women at all.

From a high conscientious regard for women he opposed equal suffrage from the pulpit. It is safe to say that a hundred persons cast up their mental accounts to see where they stood on the question after hearing that sermon, and ten to one they came out on the side of suffrage. There is nothing so certain in fact to make a suffragist of a woman as to hear a man oppose it. There is no logical reason against it, and of course it is because women are so logical that they are so quick to detect this defect. The mere fact of a man's opposition has nothing whatever to do with it! But I would not slander our sisterhood.

There is a sentimental reason for opposing woman suffrage, and we will fill the day when either men or women forget or ignore it, but it will not stand alone against the woman in business. If she must work she should vote, and it is greatly to the modern woman's credit that she is so often heard to say that, whether she wants to vote or not, if the ballot were put into her hand she would consider it a duty to cast it conscientiously and intelligently. This is the spirit that the country needs on the part of both men and women. One proud thing that women would do if they were given the franchise, would be to teach good men to value it and honor it by using it.

The granting to women the right to vote would not usher in the millennium, but it would be justice. No higher plea can be made for it than that.

A Man with a History.

THE TERRIBLE EXPERIENCE THAT BEFELL JOHN W. THOMAS OF THETA, TENNESSEE.

Afflicted with a Peculiar Disease. His Body Covered with Lumps. Could not eat and thought he was going to dry up. His Recovery the Marvel of Tennessee.

(From the Nashville, Tenn., Banner.)

Mr. John W. Thomas, Jr., of Theta, Tenn., is a man with a most interesting history. At present he is interested in blooded horses for which Maury county is famous.

"Few people, I take it," said Mr. Thomas to a reporter who had asked him for the story of his life, "have passed through as remarkable a chain of events as I have and remained alive to tell the story."

"It was along in 1884, when I was working in the silver mines of New Mexico, that my troubles began; at first I suffered with indigestion, and so acute did the pains become that I went to California for my health, but the trip did me little good, and fully impressed with the idea that my last day had nearly dawned upon me, I hurried back here to my old home to die."

"From simple indigestion my malady developed into a chronic inability to take any substantial food. I was barely able to creep about and at times I was prostrated by spells of heart palpitation. This condition continued until one year ago."

On the 11th of April, 1893, I suddenly collapsed, and for days I was unconscious, in fact I was not fully myself until July. My condition on September 1st, was simply horrible, I weighed but seventy pounds whereas my normal weight is 165 pounds. All over my body there were lumps from the size of a grape to the size of a walnut, my fingers were cramped so that I could not more than half straighten them. I had entirely lost control of my lower limbs and my hand trembled so that I could not drink without spilling the liquid. Nothing would remain on my stomach, and it seemed that I must dry up before many more days had passed."

"I made another round of the physicians, calling in one after the other, and by the aid of morphine and other medicines they gave me, I managed to live though barely through the fall."

Here Mr. Thomas displayed his arms, and just above the elbow of each there was a large irregular stain as large as the palm of the hand and of a purple color, the space covered by the mark was sunken nearly to the bone. "That," said Mr. Thomas, "is what the doctors did by putting morphine into me."

"On the 11th of December, 1893, just eight months after I took permanently to bed—I shall never forget the date—my cousin, Joe Foster of Carter's Creek, called on me and gave me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying they had cured him of partial paralysis, with which I knew he had all but died. I followed his directions and began taking the medicine, as a result I stand before you to-day the most surprised man on earth. Look at my hand, it is as steady as yours; my face has a healthy look about it; I have been attending to my duties for a month. Since I began taking the pills I have gained 30 pounds, and I am still gaining. All the knots have disappeared from my body except this little kernel here in my palm. I have a good appetite and I am almost as strong as I ever was."

"Yesterday I rode thirty-seven miles on horseback, I feel tired to-day but not sick. I used to have from two to four spells of heart palpitation every night, since I began the use of the pills I have had but four spells altogether."

"I know positively that I was cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and I believe firmly that it is the most wonderful remedy in existence to-day, and every fact I have presented to you is known to my neighbors as well as to myself, and they will certify to the truth of my remarkable cure."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are not a patent medicine in the sense that name implies. They were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred), and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company.

"I'll see you again," said a man to a 30-day note he had just signed.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure
Is sold on a guarantee. It cures Incurable Consumption. It is the best Cough Cure. 25c, 50c, & $1.00.

"Plunkitt," said Docketts, "if you had a million what would you do?" "Wish I had another," replied Plunkitt.

Hegeman's Camphor with Glycerine.
The original and only genuine. Cures Chapped Hands and Face, Cold Sores, &c. G. Clark Co., N. Haven, Ct.

It is not easy to elevate the turf business while so many horses are out lowering the record.

Hanson's Magic Corn Salve.
Warranted to cure or money refunded. Ask your druggist for it. Price 15 cents.

Get out your snowshoes, chappies. It has been snowing in England.

CONDUCTOR E. D. LOOMIS, Detroit, Mich., says: "The effect of Hall's Catarrh Cure is wonderful." Write him about it. Sold by Druggists, 75c.

A: Bullion thinks a good deal of his home and grounds and is fond of showing them off. B: (in love with Bullion's daughter, sadly): Yes, he showed me off the grounds last evening.

BEFHAM'S PILLS have a pleasant coating disguising the taste of the pill, without impairing its efficacy. 25 cents a box.

TO BE WILLING for any kind of a sin to stay in your heart, is to be willing for the devil to own the earth.

Jon was the richest man in all his country, and yet he was far richer in Heaven than he was on earth.

God would have his children to still be rich when moth and rust and robbers have taken all they can take.

WHENEVER an oath falls from the lips it is an evidence that the devil is still having things his own way in the heart.

HOME AND THE FARM.

A DEPARTMENT MADE UP FOR OUR RURAL FRIENDS.

Where a Partnership is Advantageous—Improved Method of Setting Bean Poles—Broad Tires on the Farm—A Unique Table Cover.

Sticking Lima Beans.

An ingenious plan for setting bean poles in the most effectual way to prevent them from being blown down by storms is shown in the illustration from an American agriculturist. A forked wooden spike made of seasoned young oak or hickory, about one and one-half inches diameter and two and one-half feet in length, is driven slantingly into the ground by means of a tough, hardwood mallet. After a heavy rain, when the ground is wet as deep as required, give the spike some taps with the mallet to loosen it, then grasp it where the branches fork, withdraw it, and insert the bean, packing the soil with the small end of the mallet. The stakes or poles are set in the ground, as seen in the sketch, the two outer ones slanting to cross each other. The pole in the middle is shorter and set vertical to reach the two which are crossed. By this means when the vines reach the point where the poles cross they will entwine themselves so strongly around the three poles, that with the strong base they have and the firm hold in the ground, a hurricane could scarcely blow them down, and the beans will flourish well.

IMPROVED METHOD OF SETTING BEANPOLES.

The Right Kind of Partnership.

As a rule, partners are not advantageous in moderate enterprises. One exception which will be admitted by the careful thinker is where a father can take his son or sons into partnership with him, and thus start them in life in a business way. Such arrangements are often best for all concerned. The father may need the push and dash that young blood will put into the business, while the son or sons may need the steady, guiding hand of the father. Old men frequently fail because of their too conservative way of doing business, while young men make failures because of taking too great risks or lack of experience. A partnership of this kind is but a natural combination, and if properly managed, leads to great success.

In a business depending upon the public for patronage, a firm of this kind has much in the name to recommend it. No matter how dishonest and tricky men may be, there are few who care to teach their children to follow disreputable methods. A firm composed of father and son is therefore regarded with much favor by the public. There are exceptions to this rule, also, but in most of cases it holds good. A man generally has enough manhood about him to recommend him to strangers who is considerate enough with his own children to take them with him into business enterprises. There are but few things that indicate honesty, integrity, and a noble purpose more than this.

But the advantages of such co-partnerships are not always found in the financial side of the question. Neither is it necessary to be engaged in a business that depends upon the outside world for success before such arrangements can be made to advantage. An undisputed and well defined interest in a few acres of grain, a colt that may develop into a valuable horse, or a bunch of pigs that can be turned into money in the future, may awaken an interest in the mind of the boy that would change the whole character of his life. The reason there are so many poor business men among farmers is simply because they have never been taught business. There is no better way to teach boys business principles than to take them into partnership and develop their minds in the right direction. Give the boys a chance, and it will be their fault if they fail. Otherwise it will be yours.—National Stockman.

Care of Horses.

Driving horses are frequently injured, but never by judicious driving. The injury results rather from neglect of proper care and attention after driving and while unemployed. A driving horse may be injured for a want of providing sufficient exercise. The limbs of the animal and the hoofs may become injured by the animal being confined several days in a narrow stall with no opportunity for exercise; and this is likely to be further aggravated by being obliged to stand upon a plank floor, although it is better to stand upon the bare floor than to stand upon a mass of bedding that is liable to fermentation and injury to the feet. If the horse is to be confined constantly in the stable by all means give it sufficient room to allow perfect freedom in moving about, exercising the legs at pleasure.—Germantown Telegraph.

Avoid watering or heavy feeding after severe exercise and when warm. Many animals are seriously and permanently injured by carelessness in this matter. The animal may be given a little hay to eat while cooling off sufficiently to receive a grain ration. A horse that has been exercised and become wet with perspiration should not be hitched in a draught of air, especially in a cool temperature; much care should be exercised in this direction in winter and the animal should not be allowed to stand for any length of time unless properly blanketed or suitable protection is afforded. Stable blanketing in winter should be judicious; in case of severe perspiration occurring from severe exercise have an old blanket to use unless all perspiration has ceased and the animal becomes dry, then apply a dry blanket.—Exchange.

Keep the Garden Clean.

One may have a garden practically clear of weeds if he will begin and persevere, keeping at it the whole summer, letting no weed get past its first seed leaves. Then they are easily killed by a light, sharp-toothed steel rake drawn over the soil not more than one inch deep. If the ground is examined the young plants may be seen on the surface like short white threads, and one hour's exposure kills them. It is a good plan to use fertilizers in the garden, and for the other and bulky matter get decayed leaves from the woods and swamp muck, mixing them with lime and composting them with the house wastes for the year before the manure is wanted. This is spaded or plowed in the fall, after the crops are gathered, and it will serve every purpose of stable manure, without the risk of sowing seeds with it.

A Unique Table Cover.

A new design for a small table or stand cover is always welcomed by lovers of fancy work. A most effective cover has a design of chestnut burs worked on fawn colored cloth. The burs, in this instance, are made of an olive brown shade of silk in the pompon style, and sewed in the places designated, the leaves and stems being embroidered in silk. Trim with fringe the color of the cloth or of the darkest tone used in the embroidery.

CHESTNUT BUR DESIGN.

Odors and Ends.

A NEW, soft paint brush is a good thing to dust carved furniture with, as the bristles will penetrate the deepest crevices.

NEVER sleep with a bright light shining directly upon the eyes. They should face the darkest and most restful corner in the room.

TO CLEAN nickel-plating, polish with a paste made of vaseline and rouge, and wipe the polished surface with a cloth moistened with vaseline.

PASTE light manilla paper over the back of every picture frame not already protected, as it effectually prevents dust from reaching the pictures.

A BEEFSTEAK cut an inch thick will be cooked rare in ten minutes. A mutton chop cut three-fourths of an inch thick will cook in eight minutes. Veal and pork must be broiled slowly and for a long time. There should not be a trace of pink in the fibers when the meat is done. The chops should not be cut more than half an inch thick. They will be done with twenty minutes' cooking.

A NEW YORK paper furnishes a suggestion for the cleaning of straw hats. It is this: The white, sailor hats of any of the family may be cleaned and whitened by rubbing them with lemon juice. Cut the lemon in halves and rub vigorously, first laying the hat on a clean cloth, on a flat surface, so that it will not get out of shape. After using the lemon, brush the hat thoroughly with tepid water containing half a teaspoonful of borax. Remove the hat band, or cover it in cleaning, so that it will not be discolored.

A MODEL RESIDENCE.

ELEGANT HOME FOR ONE WITH MODERATE MEANS.

Suitable for Any Part of the Country Except the Extreme South—Costs Little More than the Ugly Packing Boxes that Some Erect.

Handsome and Convenient.

The first edition of Palliser's Model Homes contains a design very similar to this, and from which the ideas in this are worked up, with the addition of another room on each floor and another bay-window and a change in the detail on the exterior—in fact, there is scarcely anything left to remind one of the other design; and it is often the case that people will examine a plan and will say that it is just what they want, with such and such changes, and when the necessary changes are made to suit their ideas there is nothing left by which one can recognize anything of the first plan.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

The roofs are all slated, which is decidedly the best and cheapest—when we take everything into account—method of roofing, besides being elegant; and in favorable localities can be laid for $8 per 100 square feet of surface.

For a person of moderate means, wishing an elegant home with the interior comforts and conveniences it contains, we can with confidence rec-commend this design. It is suitable for any part of the country except the extreme South, and the owner of such a house will find that its money value is far above that of a square box of the same capacity, and it costs but a trifle more than the ugly packing boxes that some people seem bound to erect in opposition to all artistic ideas. It can be built for about $2,200. In some instances we have known houses of nice design, properly managed, erected for less money than these square boxes giving but the same amount of accommodation, and which a great many people seem to think it necessary to build if they would do so cheaply.

PLAN OF FIRST FLOOR.

PLAN OF SECOND FLOOR.

Usually too little attention has been paid to roofs and chimneys of houses, and they appear to have been treated as necessary evils, instead of their being made, as they should be, both useful and ornamental. A flat roof for this climate can hardly be called useful, as the action of the heat and cold on it will be more than likely to open the seams of the flat roof, and the force of a sudden shower will find its way through, sadly to the detriment of the interior decoration, as well as to the comfort and the commendable equability of temper of the inmates. In our northern climate we should have steep roofs, so as to readily shed the heavy rains and snows, and we think this cottage is well protected in this respect. The floor plans, we think, need very little explanation, as they fully explain themselves.

(Copyright by Palliser, Palliser & Co., N. Y.)

Nothing to Do.

Of all bores the most formidable is the man who, whenever he has any time to spare, visits it on some busy acquaintance or friend. To the conscientious or methodical worker every moment is precious during business hours. Each minute wasted by himself, or taken idly from him by another, costs him at least some extra exertion, but more often actual loss of opportunity, or fatal delay, in his important affairs. While he is listening to the idle chat of his unwelcome visitor, chat which might be entertaining enough under favorable circumstances, he is wondering how he can contrive to get rid of him without actual rudeness. Having at last done so, he inwardly vows that he will never again be so victimized. But unfortunately the bore gives no warning of his approach; one day in he walks again, saying, "My dear fellow, I was just passing and thought I would drop in and see how you were." "But I am awfully busy," you reply. "Oh, that's all bosh," says the plague. "You don't take me in with that kind of stories, I'm too old a hand. By the by, whom do you think I saw to-day?" You may capitulate; you have the plague on you, and must give in. Mayhap the visitor is some chance acquaintance met while traveling, and who is now passing leisurely through the town but stopping for a little chat over past enjoyments; or perchance it is some favorite relative from the country, who makes an annual trip to the metropolis and has left all cares and concern about his own affairs, with all notion of the value of time, behind him. All are equally unwelcome during business hours; what might be, if time permitted, a delightful interlude, or, at most, a petty annoyance, becomes a real affliction, and not unfrequently exposes the thoughtless cause of it to severe secret animadversion of even the most patient or charitably disposed sufferer.

Gloves.

Gloves were not known in England until near the close of the tenth century, and were then worn with a thumb and no fingers, like mittens. They were larger in every way than they needed to be, and wondrously embroidered and starred with jewels. No gloves were finer than those of the clergy. They were mostly of white silk or linen, cunningly brocaded and sometimes fringed with pearls. One ecclesiastic had a red silk pair, with the sacred monogram worked on the back, surrounded with a golden glory; and later on they had gloves to match their different vestments. In fact, gloves had departed from the primary idea of utility and become a decoration. They were too magnificent for common wear, and were frequently carried in the hand or worn on the girdle. It was by the fine gloves his page had in his girdle that Cour de Lion was betrayed on his way home from the crusade and so fell into captivity. But already the glove was more than a mere bit of foppery. The knight's mailed glove sheltered his hand; it became a sign of power; and when a gracious lord meant to signify his intention to protect a town he sent his glove as a sure sign of his willingness. The glove, too, was the token of defiance when one knight declared war against another; and to show his fealty to his mistress, he bound her brocaded glove to his helmet. Long gloves came in at the end of the seventeenth century. Nell Gwynne's gloves were a proverb for their beauty. All through this time gloves were prettily set off with lace, ribbons and fringe, although the fashion of the finer artistic embroidery of the middle ages was falling into disuse. The bare hand was deemed an offense, and the costliness of gloves defined their wearers' social position.

Professional Jealousy.

Malibran and Sontag, the two famous singers, were rivals, and once cast to sing in "Romeo and Juliet." Sontag was a German, very sweet and gentle, but not so quick as Malibran, who was a Spaniard. The latter, who played Romeo, did her best to puzzle and torment poor Juliet at rehearsals, and when begged by her to say on what part of the stage she was going to fall in the last scene, always replied she really did not know, really could not tell; sometimes she died in one place, sometimes in another, just as it happened. On the night of the performance, Sontag meekly prepared to follow Romeo, who maliciously insisted on dying close down to the footlights in front of the curtain. Juliet fell dead by his side, and the fair corpses had to be removed by two red-plush liveried footmen in good view of the audience.

CHLOROFORM IN EARLY DAYS.

A Student's Experience With the New Compound in 1851.

Your notice of the discovery of chloroform in 1847 recalls a curious experience in my Cambridge undergraduate life, say a writer in the London News. One evening in January, 1851, I went into a chemist's shop and ordered more photographic chemicals to be sent to my rooms hard by. I was lodging on the parade. Seeing an ounce bottle of chloroform on the counter, I bought it out of curiosity and took it away with me, leaving the chemicals to follow. In my own rooms, seated in an armchair, I put four drops on my handkerchief, and, carefully placing the bottle on the table at some distance from me, I sniffed the handkerchief. A pleasant sensation and a singing in my ears was the only result. So, shortly afterward, I counted out eight drops and acted as before. The next thing I remember is finding myself on the floor on my back, my dress undone, my face, etc., dripping with cold water, and hearing a voice, "He's coming to, I do believe." Yes, it was so. I came to after having been unconscious for two hours and a half. Next day my doctor, when out for the foxhounds, was greeted with: "Hulloa, doctor, so you raised a man from the dead last night." "You may well say that," was the reply, "for I had given up all hopes." I was very puzzled on account of the effect of my carefully measured dose. All I could gather from the servant was that she had brought me up a parcel from the chemist, and seeing me asleep, tried to wake me; then, "finding I was dead," ran down into the shop, calling out, "Mr. M. is dead." Two Trinity men were in the shop. One went on to the 6 p.m. chapel, telling everyone of my sudden death; the other, after a glance at me, kindly called in Dr. C.

Some time after the mystery was cleared up. The "slavery" gave warning, and the day she left she made the following confession: "You remember that night you were nearly dead, sir. Well, you know, Sir, I thought you had fainted, and I see the bottle on the table and thought it was salts, so I took out the stopper and held it to your nose; but, as it didn't do good, I poured a lot of it out into my hand and rubbed it all over your nose and mouth." I told the doctor the story. He replied: "Well my dear fellow, all I can say in this: if ever you have to undergo an operation, you can tell your family doctor that you can take chloroform." Thank God, that necessity has never arisen.

HUMORED OR HUMBAGGED.

No Amount of Beating Will Make an Obstinate Camel Budge an Inch.

Camels are not like horses, says the Ashton Reporter. If a horse does not want to do anything we make him. If a camel does not want to do anything he leaves it undone. No amount of coaxing, no amount of cruelty will make him budge. He has the determination of a mule combined with the strength of an elephant. A camel is one of those aggravating brutes which will drive a hot-tempered man to distraction. Nothing will persuade him to listen to reason. He will oppose your will with a passive resistance that is absolutely unconquerable. The only way to treat a camel is to humer if you cannot humbug him. They will often lie down if you load them with the proverbial last straw, and you might beat them to death or offer up all the pleasures of paradise before they would get up. They are pig-headed beasts. Sometimes when they have quite a light load they turn nasty and throw themselves to the ground. But although they are obstinate, they are not cute, and an Arab, by pretending to submit, can generally get the better of the stubborn beasts. The drivers will ostentatiously remove three or four packages from the load, and the animal with an inward chuckle of satisfaction, rises at once, without perceiving that the parcels have meanwhile been returned to their former place. As he flatters himself he has shirked some of his duty he swings away with a light heart, gratified beyond measure, like a spoiled child, at having its own way. The camel is an unsociable beast. He is also habitually dull, except when he is sniffing the salt air of the desert. When he is treading the sands, with the burning sun on his back and the boundless waste before him, he feels himself at home. The immense heat makes him bubble over with pleasure and fills his frame with sublime intoxication. It has been stated on the best authority that he can go nine days without water. And if you had ever seen a camel drink water when he does get a chance of quenching his thirst you would not be surprised at this. They have been known to put away seven gallons and a half at a time.

When a boy is lost, policemen know at once that he can never be found from his mother's description of him.

When a woman wants to be in bed by 10 o'clock, she should begin getting ready by 9.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAOK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892. Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PAOK, EDITOR.

We owe allegiance to the State; but deeper, truer, more To the sympathies that God has set within the bosom's store. Our party claims our fealty; I grant it so, but then, Before man made us partisans great Nature made us women.

Vote for the woman suffrage amendment.

A law has just passed giving school suffrage to women in Ohio.

A good way to look after Bettie is to vote for the amendment.

Send us 10 cents for a beautiful amendment campaign badge.

We will send the FARMER'S WIFE from now until after the election for 25 cents

The editor has gone to Nashville, Tenn., to attend the national convention of charitable institutions. We take the opportunity of placing her picture in this issue.

Ohio is the twenty-third state to grant school suffrage to women. Thus the half way stile has been passed. The bill first passed in the senate and on April 24th passed the house by a vote of 55 to 26.

We give a report in full of the Topeka mass convention. These meetings have been held in the different towns in Kansas during the month of May, commencing at Kansas City, May 4th. All have been largely attended and compare favorably with the Topeka meeting.

THE PROGRESSIVE POLITICAL LEAGUE.

The woman's state meeting will be held in Topeka, June 11th, 12th and 13th, the same time as the People's party convention. The women throughout the state are cordially invited to attend.

In a recent copy of the Kansas Breeze, in answer to the question, "Will the Amendment Carry?" Editor McNeil replies as follows: "Our present belief is that it will, but there may be enough men in Kansas who still blame Eve for Adam's having to go out of the garden business, to vote it down." Reader, do you belong to that company?

Frances E. Willard is coming home. Passage on the steamship, Teutonic, which sails June 13th, has been secured. Miss Willard will go directly home from New York and remain until the meeting of the national prohibition convention in Montreal, Canada, early in July, where she has promised to speak. Her plan is to spend the rest of the summer in the Catskills and not to undertake any public work till fall, when she will come to Kansas.

Let us bring women down from the clouds where the poets have sometimes placed her, and let us bring her up from the slime where beastly passions have degraded her, and let us place her on a good, solid, clean earth by the side of man, and so that the twentieth century may see man and woman sitting side by side full sunnied in all their powers, dispersing gladness and each reverencing each, and living even as they should, in love.—Rev. Annis F. Eastman.

The New York suffragists have received a valuable acquisition to their ranks in the person of Chauncey Depew. His pronounced expression on this subject created quite a little stir in New York. Considering his change of heart he speaks as follows:

"I have seen the error of my ways. That is, I think that times have changed. Woman herself is different in some respects from what she used to be. She owns a large amount of property, upon which she is taxed. She has become a great industrial factor. She has a right to say how she shall be taxed and under what laws she shall conduct her business. I think the beginning of my change was in Wyoming a few years ago. I was traveling through the state and met a great many of the prominent men. I asked them about the working of woman suffrage and heard nothing but praise for it. I found out that my old ideas about all the horrible things that would happen to the home were unfounded. I think that woman has a right to the suffrage, and that giving it to her will do good rather than harm, so I signed the petition."—Lincoln Beacon.

THE EQUAL SUFFRAGE CAMPAIGN.

The Kansas Equal Suffrage association has just commenced an aggressive campaign in behalf of the constitutional amendment that is to be voted upon at the coming election. Meetings have already been held at Kansas City, Leavenworth, Lawrence, Topeka, Valley Falls, Atchison, Hiawatha, Burlingame, Osage City and Cottonwood Falls, and a large number of meetings are advertised in other parts of the state. In these meetings the Kansas women are desperately in earnest in this campaign. They are striking for a right which, denied to man, would unhesitatingly be declared to be tyranny.

In these meetings which are being held prior to the assembling of the party conventions, the chief fight is for recognition in the party platforms. These women are such impractical politicians that they seem actually to believe that party platforms should enunciate principles on the sole ground that they are right, and should not refrain from their enunciation on the ground of expediency. They seem further to believe that party policies should be so far governed by the platform declarations upon which parties are elevated to power as to render the supplemental statement, (and we mean what we say,) entirely unnecessary. They further declare that the masses of the people agree with them in these strange doctrines, and that only the politicians and office seekers in either of the leading parties of the state are manifesting any uneasiness in view of a possible platform declaration in favor of equal suffrage. Some of these women in both of the leading parties intimate that the incorporation in the platforms, or its omission therefrom, of a declaration in favor of the amendment will be received by them as an indication whether the people or the politicians and office seekers control the conventions, and they say they shall govern themselves accordingly. Very strange politicians, these women. They do not seem to have any regard for "expediency" whatever. The question of right seems to be all they think of. They lack experience in real politics, you see, and they are so impractical. If they should be given the ballot it will be just like them to carry these strange doctrines into practice, and who can tell what the effect might be upon the "dear party" and upon the man who is dodging around through the underbrush to escape from the office that is in pursuit of him?

These women intimate further that the great moral problems that are demanding the recognition of political parties must not be set aside much longer on the ground of expediency. They have little faith in expediency and seem to think that a political party that builds upon it rests upon a very unstable foundation. They say that a party in order to endure must draw to its support the better rather than the baser elements of society, and this can only be done by building upon the eternal principles of right and justice. There are even some men foolish enough to agree with these impractical women upon this subject, and it is hard to tell just what will come of these strange doctrines. We present them for the consideration of our readers. Somehow we are unable just now to discover the weak points in their novel theories, but they are so inexperienced and impractical that we turn them over without further ceremony to the experienced statesmen of the land.—Topeka Advocate.

That Summer Vacation.

It pays to get away from work once in a while. No money is ever more wisely spent than for a vacation, no matter how brief. It pays to go to the right place and travel over the most comfortable line getting there. The right place for Kansans is in the Rocky Mountains, where the air is pure and dry, and the hills are sky high. The right way to go is over the Santa Fe Route, the through vestibule trains to Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Denver or Glenwood Springs. Rates are way down this year. Inquire of nearest Santa Fe Route Agent.

THE FARMER FEEDS THEM ALL.

[But the prices for which he can sell his output is fixed by members of the various "Boards of Trade" who "Toll not, neither do they spin."]

The king may rule o'er land and sea,
The lord may live right royally,
The soldier ride in pomp and pride,
The sailor roam o'er the ocean wide;
But this or that, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

The writer thinks, the poet sings,
The craftsmen fashion wondrous things;
The doctor heals, the lawyer pleads,
The miner follows the precious leads;
But this or that, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

The merchant he may buy and sell,
The teacher do his duty well;
But men may toil through busy days,
Or men may stroll through pleasant ways;
From king to beggar, whate'er befall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

The farmer's trade is one of worth,
He's partner with the sky and earth;
He's partner with the sun and rain,
And no man loses for his gain;
And men may rise, and men may fall,
The farmer he must feed them all.

God bless the man who sows the wheat,
Who finds us milk and fruit and meat;
May his purse be heavy, his heart be light,
His cattle and corn and all go right;
God bless the seeds his hands let fall,
For the farmer he must feed them all.
—Good Roads.

FROM KANSAS WOMEN.

To the Women of the Ashland District,
Kentucky, Greeting:

Although we know that we are only voicing the sympathy and sentiments of the representative womanhood of the Nation in this expression, yet we specially desire you to feel and know that your sister women of Kansas fully endorse and most heartily approve of your protest against Col. Breckenridge being returned to the halls of Congress to represent (?) the interests of the silver-haired mothers, the loyal wives and the innocent daughters of the Blue Grass State. We rejoice in the spirit of women who dare to brave the world in their attack upon this form and species of entrenched vice which has insolently intruded its brazen front and coiled its slimy folds about our National Capital, vitiating and poisoning our national life. That Col. Breckenridge, this self-confessed, shameless monster of vice has shown himself wholly incapable of appreciating the nature and enormity of his offense is proved by his daring to insult his constituency by again asking their suffrages for the position he has disgraced and dishonored.

And because we do not believe it possible for a moral leper who cannot be true and loyal to the mother of his children, to be true to his political constituency; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we women of Kansas join hands with our Kentucky sisters in demanding that no man henceforth be elected to Congress who does not require in other men and exemplify in his own life the same standard moral purity that is rightfully demanded of women.

Signed,
EMMA D. PAOK, editor FARMER'S WIFE.
ANNA C. WAT, Secretary Kansas Equal Suffrage Association.
MRS. A. G. LORR, Pres. Radical Reform Christian Association.
MRS. ELIZABETH M. WARDALL, Secretary Woman's Progressive Political League.
BINA A. OTIS, State President Woman's Progressive Political League.
MRS. B. E. MAXLEY.
ANNA WARDALL.
Topeka, Kansas, May 12, 1894.

STATE COUNCIL.

The Woman's Progressive Political League.

Our constitution provides that the annual meeting of the league shall be held the second Tuesday in June of each year. The place of holding the coming meeting was left with the executive committee to determine. Topeka has been selected as the most convenient place. The executive committee has called a special meeting June 11, at 3 p. m., in Representative hall. An informal reception will be held at 8 p. m., same place. A cordial invitation is extended to all men and women of the People's party to be present.

People's party papers please copy.
BINA A. OTIS, President.

SPECIAL MEETING.

We, the undersigned members of the executive committee of the Woman's Progressive Political League, unite in calling a meeting of the League at Topeka, June 11, 5 p. m., in Representative hall.

BINA A. OTIS, President.
S. L. RUGGLES, Sec. W. P. P. L.
E. W. CRUMR, Chairman.
C. E. PIXLEY, Sec. Ex. Com. W. P. P. L.
MARY H. HELLER.
May 9, 1894.

THE NEW ZEALAND WAY.

Our consul at Auckland, New Zealand, in a report just made to the state department at Washington says:

"To one accustomed to the broad principles underlying legislation in the United States, creating individual independence and self-reliance in the people, the tendency of legislation in this country (New Zealand) affords an unfavorable contrast. Here the state is looked to for almost everything. It is expected to form roads and build bridges in the country, find remunerative occupation for the unemployed as well as to support asylums, hospitals and charitable institutions for the aged poor and the helpless and infirm members of society. It owns and operates the railways of the colony, the post-office and telegraph and telephone lines, out of which there is made a considerable profit that goes to swell the general revenue, thereby relieving taxation to that extent. There is also a government life insurance department which enters into a spirited competition for business with both local and foreign companies. There is also a government savings bank, which, with the insurance department, yields a handsome profit every year. All these profits are available to assist in defraying the expenses of the government. All these institutions are satisfactorily and economically conducted except the railways, to the management of which, whether ill or well founded, some exception is taken."

KANSAS SUFFRAGE MASS MEETINGS FOR JUNE.

A "sweep" of 100 two-day county mass meetings has been arranged for June. Four of these meetings will be in progress each day. The dates are, in part, as follows. It will be observed that they overlap:

The following meetings will be addressed by Mrs. Chapman Catt, Mrs. Diggs and Mrs. Jenkins:

June.
1-2 Stockton,ooks county.
4-5 Osborn, Osborn county.
6-7 Gaylord, Smith county.
6-7 Smith Center, Smith county.
7-8 Phillipsburg, Phillips county.
8-9 Oberlin, Decatur county.
11-12 Atwood, Rawlins county.
12 St. Francis, Cheyenne county.
13-14 Iola, Allen county.
14-15 Goodland, Sherman county.
15-16 Colby, Thomas county.
18-19 Oakley, Logan county.
19-20 Wakeeney, Trego county.
20-21 Ellis, Ellis county.
21-22 Arkansas, Russell county.
22-23 Ellsworth, Ellsworth county.
25-26 Salina, Saline county.
26-27 Lincoln, Lincoln county.
27-28 Hill City, Graham county.
28 Wadsworth, Kearney county.
28-29 Hoxie, Kearney county.
29 Plainville, (Mrs. Diggs).

The meetings at the following places will be addressed by Miss Susan B. Anthony, Rev. Anna H. Shaw, Miss Helen L. Kimber and Mrs. Rachel L. Child.

June.
1 Independence, Montgomery county.
1-2 Chanute, Neosho county.
1-2 Iola, Allen county.
5-6 Yates Center, Woodson county.
6-7 Neodesha, Wilson county.
7-8 Howard, Elk county.
8-9 Eureka, Greenwood county.
11-12 Eldorado, Butler county.
12-13 Arkansas City, Cowley county.
13-14 Sedan, Chautauque county.
14-15 Winfield, Cowley county.
15-16 Wellington, Sumner county.
18-19 Kingman, Kingman county.
20-21 Wichita, Sedgewick county.
21-22 Newton, Harvey county.
22-23 Marion, Marion county.
25-26 Lyons, Rice county.
26-27 Hutchinson, Reno county.
27-28 Pratt, Pratt county.
28-29 Greensburg, Kiowa county.
29-30 Dodge City, Ford county.
30 and July 1-2 Garden City, Finney county.

How Woman Suffrage Works in New Zealand.

Henry George says that "in New Zealand there is no tax on improvements; the tax is on land values, and although it has only been in existence a short time, the effect for good is already perceptible. While there is poverty and depression all over the rest of the commercial world, and New Zealand, by reason of her business relations is not entirely free from it, yet there are no tramps nor paupers in that land and soon poverty will exist there only as a name.

The conservative New Zealanders, knowing that women are naturally conservative, recently gave them the right of suffrage, under the impression that this vote would increase their strength. But the very first election under this act showed them they had made a mistake in counting on the conservatism of the woman vote, for it arrayed itself from the start on the side of progress and in opposition to the monopolization of land. Speculation in land has practically ceased in New Zealand, and as a consequence poverty and its attendant evils will be banished."

TREATMENT OF INDIANS.

[From the Western Jewel.]

The newspapers throughout the United States have given much publicity and picturesque accounts of the four Delaware Indians, Steven Busy, George Washington, Simon Secondeye and William Easy, who took the treatment at the Kansas City Keeley Institute, some weeks ago. The sensational papers would have their readers believe that the Indians were "uncivilized," "wild and woolly, and hard to curry," and wore a dazzling variety of clothes, including red blankets, plug hats and speckled shirts. In the highly educated East, these sensational stories might be taken as true, but here in the West the people know that the majority of the Delaware, Shawnee and Osage Indians are not inferior to our boasted civilized races. Many of them are highly educated, refined, and of the best moral character, and are not so slow in their conception of right and wrong, cause and effect.

The four Delaware Indians referred to, after thorough investigation of the Keeley cure, and the effect it had upon one of their friends who had taken the cure several months before, voluntarily entered the Institute at Kansas City, Kansas, with the full determination of ridding themselves of the curse of alcoholism. The cure of those four Delaware Indians will have a wholesome effect upon the Indians in the Territory and will prove to all Christian people that their less favored brothers are learning the ways of their more enlightened neighbors, and are anxious to have the curse that is ruining their lives removed, that they may have a standing in their tribe and among the more civilized nations equal to any.

The Delaware Indians, as a general rule, are well-to-do, industrious, and have a goodly store of this world's goods, and the four who took the treatment had ample means of their own to pay their way through the Institute. The action of the Delaware tribe in offering to assist those who are unable to take the treatment and wish so to do, is an example that should be followed in every community, and is one that should not be forgotten by those who have among them erring friends who are individually too poor to take advantage of the vital benefits to be obtained by taking the Keeley treatment for inebriety.

That the Indians can be cured of inebriety by the Keeley cure there is no doubt, and from the numerous inquiries now being made by the chiefs of the tribes we look for a great increase in the ranks at the Kansas Keeley Institutes from the Indian territory. At the present time two members of the Osage tribe are undergoing treatment, and the physician in charge speaks of them in glowing terms.

The editor of the JEWEL hopes to be able to give to our readers a letter from our Indian graduates in the June issue.

Deafness Cannot be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

THE WESTERN RURAL.

The Western Rural and American Stockman, published at Chicago, is without doubt the leading journal of its class, having been in the field for more than thirty years, and is the only Semi-Weekly journal in the world. The Monday edition is devoted to commerce, transportation, finance, crop conditions, markets, and a summary of telegraphic news from all parts of the world.

The Thursday edition is devoted to farm and household affairs, a department being devoted to every branch of farm and garden culture and live stock. Also to literature, science, hygiene, education, poetry and a young people's department. Each of these two editions is complete in itself, and the subscription price for both editions being but $1.25 the subscriber gets two complete and valuable papers for one subscription price. With this low price of $1.25 there is also given a beautiful 12-color picture of the wonderful World's fair and Chicago, entitled the "Dream City," 16x26 inches, for framing, as a souvenir of the "White City" that is now but a dream. We will club the Western Rural and American Stockman with the FARMER'S WIFE, at only $1.75, every subscriber receiving both editions of the Western Rural one year and the picture of the "Dream City" free. Sample copies of the Western Rural, both editions, will be sent to any one by addressing, MITCHELL GEORGE, Publisher, 324 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

It Grows in Texas, It's Good.

The Texas Coast country vies with California in raising pears, grapes, and strawberries. The 1893 record of H. M. Stringfellow, Hitchcock, Texas, who raised nearly $6,000 worth of pears from thirteen acres, can be duplicated by you. G. T. Nicholson, G. P. A. Santa Fe Route, Topeka, Kansas, will be glad to furnish without charge an illustrated pamphlet telling about Texas.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies
—OR—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

SUPFRAGISTS.

(Continued from first page.)

to equal suffrage and as one of the objects of this campaign is to answer objections and quiet the fears of the lords of creation, I may be pardoned by referring briefly to some of them. One objection I hear made is that voting would destroy the femininity of women. Do not, I pray you, become unnecessarily alarmed, my brothers. Ages of ignorance and crime could not do that. Centuries of abject slavery could not do that. Working in the fields and with the herds in Europe for generations could not do it. Toiling in the mines and at the forges and over the anvils in England could not do it. Living in the hovels and bogs and ditches of Ireland could not do it. And working at starvation wages in the sweatshops of American cities could not do it. Then have no fears, my brothers, that a broader and higher intelligence and a wider field of mental activity would tend in the least to destroy or impair the femininity of our women.

"Another objection that is made is that the immoral women would control the elections. If that is so, my brothers, then I am frank to admit that you know more about that subject than I do. Let me tell you something, my brothers. Do not try to handle a keen, two-edged sword by the naked blade. You can imagine what the result would be. How many immoral women do you suppose there would be if there were no immoral men? How many more immoral men do you suppose there are than immoral women? It might surprise you if you knew the actual facts. My honest opinion is—and I give it only as an opinion, without note or comment—that the least that is said about this objection the better the showing will be for the masculine side in this controversy. Another objection made is that women could not endure the physical duties that would be imposed upon them by full suffrage. This certainly is not a tenable objection. Many men who are entitled to vote never perform any physical duties at all.

"In modern years women have gone into nearly all avenues of business and are becoming familiar with nearly all callings and professions. They are lawyers, doctors, preachers, merchants, clerks, editors, farmers and some of them are politicians. And this higher and broader education of the women, especially in the fields of business and art must necessarily exercise a wonderful influence over the rising and future generation of men. My doubting brothers, it might be well for you to remember that kings and emperors and presidents and governors and even bishops are but the gifts of women. And that women are the mothers and teachers of all those who would deny them the equal citizenship and equal rights under the law.

"And this conclusion, my friends, is apparent and inevitable, that woman by her powers of transmission and the influence of her teaching not only lays the foundation but builds and moulds the superstructure for all the greatness of man."

MRS. JENKINS SPEAKS.

Mrs. Johns next announced Mrs. Theresa Jenkins of Cheyenne, Wyo. Mrs. Jenkins is a lady of pleasant appearance who has had seventeen years experience in the suffrage movement in Wyoming. She was heard with the closest attention, giving as she did details of the work which have seldom appeared before. She spoke as follows: "I have voted 17 years in Wyoming and I have lived through it. I come as a living example of what woman suffrage has done for me. (Mrs. Jenkins is rather large). Most of the men in Wyoming are as large as I am. In that state we women belong to all parties and they belong to us. Some of them would like to have a quit claim deed but we women of Wyoming are of the clinging kind and we cling to them regardless of their desires.

"The very first legislature which met in 1863 after Wyoming had been declared a territory by act of Congress, when they met at Cheyenne, realizing that the rough element of the state had great power, granted to women the right of suffrage. Neither party shouldered the blame for this. They all needed us. They said that a large number of crazy cranks in the east wanted to vote and that they would come out to Wyoming and make good wives for its citizens. Many women came, but I was not one of the crazy cranks that came at that time. We revolutionized things. This is so, because the men say so.

"An unsuccessful attempt was made to repeal this act when Wyoming was admitted as a state, but a clause was adopted in the constitution whereby no one was disbarred from office on account of sex. This was done by both parties. The admission of Wyoming hinged upon that one clause in our constitution. It was such a long agony of suspense but it did not result unfavorably to the women, though I understand several men did get sick. In March the House passed the bill and in July the Senate passed it. It passed in Congress strictly on party lines. The Republicans wanted us because they would get two senators and were willing to take us with that clause in our constitution, but the Democrats had no need for us and fought the clause. For the first time in political history, women were placed on the broad plane of political equality.

"At the last session of the legislature both branches concurred in a resolution to the effect that the exercise of suffrage in this state has been of great benefit, and that copies of the resolution be sent to every governor and legislature in the nation.

"In our state no one can vote who is not able to read. We believe that no man should vote upon a question of finance who is not able to read. It is conceded that the women vote more intelligently than the men. The men say so, and we believe everything they say because they have never deceived us. We have a compulsory educational law, and the women see to it that it is enforced. We have a law which says equal pay for equal work, regardless of sex, and that also is enforced. We women are not at all afraid of corporations. There is none greater in this country than the Union Pacific, yet when the lessees of its employed women and children, we women, through the Knights of Labor, compelled them to obey the laws. All these things have been done in the last three or four years, and I think, sometimes, that it would take three or four years to tell about it. I want to say that all our women vote. My father was a great politician. He used to leave the house early in the morning on election day and be gone all day. 'Voting.' When I was invited to vote, I hurried on my work, got the lunch ready, and went down town to cast my ballot. It took exactly ten minutes, and I was very much disappointed as I had counted on that day as my day out.

"The women of Wyoming have voted upon all questions, and through their ballots have prevented the sale of our water works in Cheyenne, and we control them ourselves, and when it became necessary to build a large viaduct near our city, the women turned out and voted and compelled them to build it themselves, and secure a large price for their bonds."

Mrs. Johns announced that, as a change, an interesting ceremony called the taking of a collection would take place. While this was being done the Alhambra Mandolin club favored the crowd with a selection. They were heartily encored and acquitted themselves very creditably.

MRS. SHAW'S ADDRESS.

Mrs. Annie Shaw now came forward and addressed the convention. She was listened to with the closest attention. Her clean cut logic and flexible voice went straight to the hearts of her hearers. If anything could convince a disbeliever in woman suffrage it would be the sight of a woman with such a remarkable intellect. No speaker was listened to during the convention with more general satisfaction and delight. Mrs. Shaw said:

"A few weeks since in the campaign in New York state, a man said to me, 'the men are going to let the women fight it out, although they believe in it themselves.' I think that this is about the meanest thing that ever was said. From the time the first foot was placed on Plymouth Rock, good women have been found by the side of good men. They founded five different colonies in this country before they got one that succeeded, and it was not until our forefathers brought our foremothers along with them that they said:

"Our foremothers gave up their tea, and did more, they melted their plate and spoons to make bullets for our forefathers, and when we come to you, you say, 'Fight your own battle,' when they melted their possessions to give you ammunition to fight your own battles with. In older days, men who were not church members could not vote. I wish it were so now. You men would not be counted. We women would have it all our own way. Perhaps that would bring the men into the church.

"The democratic party left the women exactly where they were under King George, although they freed the nation. The republican party freed the slaves, but left us where we were before. The slave was enfranchised, but the poor colored and the poor and the rich white women were left exactly where they were under the dominion of Great Britain. Gentlemen, every principle of manhood requires that you fight our battles with us, as we have fought your battles with you in the past. We do not ask you to give up anything. We do not ask you to divide anything. We do not ask anything that does not belong to us. We only ask our liberty. We simply ask you to restore a right.

"When the question of the suffrage plank in the Wyoming constitution was before congress, the democratic speakers who opposed the measure on that ground, exhausted every adjective in the language to express their devotion for women. Mr. Washington, in his remarks, pointed to the gallery where the women were packed in like sardines, and said: 'Shall we drag beautiful, pure, lovely woman from the pedestal upon which we have placed her, down to our level?' I was sitting in that gallery and turning to Miss Anthony, I said, 'Aunt Susan, do you know that men have been worshipping you from a pedestal all these years?' 'No,' she replied, 'but if they have been doing it, it only goes to show how well they keep a secret.'

"No, gentlemen, all we ask of you in this state is, that you send your delegates to the state convention, instructed to vote for a woman suffrage plank in the platform of every political party in the state."

Mrs. Shaw's remarks were shortened by the passing of a fire engine, with its attendant excitement, and for a moment it looked as if the crowd would become panic stricken, but the presence of mind of Mrs. Shaw and Mrs. Johns kept the attention of everybody to the stage, and the danger was fortunately averted.

At the conclusion of Mrs. Shaw's remarks, the following resolution was placed before the meeting:

Resolved, That the political parties of the state be urged to acknowledge in their respective platforms the justice of the pending amendment and the wisdom of its adoption.

The men only were called upon to vote, and a majority of the men present did most certainly vote for them. The women were also called upon to express their desires by a rising vote, and none admitted that they did not desire equal suffrage.

Mrs. Johns then adjourned the convention.

MRS. RACHEL CHILD.

The vice president, Mrs. Diggs, took the chair and introduced a distinguished co-worker from Iowa, Mrs. Rachel Child. She is of very pleasing appearance and spoke interestingly. Citizenship, she said, was not a requisition for being a qualified elector, and in some states it only requires three months to convert an ignorant foreigner who cannot speak the English language and who cannot read his name into an elector with far more rights than the intelligent women of this country. She spoke of the Kansas picture at the World's fair showing so graphically woman's political peers. She said the maniac, the idiot, the criminal and the Indian were all in some respects her superior, for under certain conditions they might all become electors, but the barrier of sex was unsurmountable. The women are outclassed by the most degraded tramp who will condescend to tramp for a few weeks in a certain locality. If women had been in politics from the first, said Mrs. Child, politics would have been as pure as the church and the only way to clean the muddy pool is to direct into it woman's moral influence.

MRS. BINA A. OTIS.

Mrs. Bina A. Otis made a very interesting talk. She said if the suffrage amendment did not pass now, it could not pass for seven years and by that time Kansas would be among the last of the states of the union to give women the ballot. Mrs. Otis said the politicians claimed it would hurt the amendment if a suffrage plank was incorporated in the platforms, but she could not hear of a man who opposed suffrage who advocated putting a plank in the platforms so as to defeat it.

MRS. DIGGS' SPEECH.

Mrs. Annie L. Diggs is no doubt the best known woman speaker in Kansas with the possible exception of Mrs. Lease, and is second to that lady only as an orator. Mrs. Diggs made the most important speech at the meeting Thursday, May 10th, and it was one of those odd, interesting little speeches such as nobody except Mrs. Diggs can make. People who had never heard her before whispered when she appeared, 'Isn't she cute!' She is, and her speech was 'just like her.' Among other things Mrs. Diggs said, were:

"There is a man in Topeka who says that if the amendment carries the foundations of society will be shaken and home life will be at an end. We can't feel offended at this statement if a person is so far behind the times as to make it. It only deserves a laugh and our ridicule.

"Any self-respecting woman can go anywhere under the sun unattended, and receive nothing but the most respectful treatment from the men.

"It is said that the women can't vote and go to the polls without neglecting their babies and household duties. I notice that we can go to church, or the theater, or a circus, or into society without anybody, not even the editors, howling about the neglected babies. It doesn't take near as long to go to the polls, but the moment we go there the men for the first time in their lives begin to worry about the little ones.

"What is the use of going over all those old objections to equal suffrage? They are not arguments, they are simply objections. There is not one living argument to-day. It is said that we can't go to the polls in safety. I have gone a great many times and I would rather go there than to the post-office on a crowded day.

"When I was in Washington I visited the old home of the father of his country at Mt. Vernon. I saw the negro quarters where the slaves used to gather after their work was over and sang, played their banjos, danced their jigs and ate hoc-cake. They were a happy race then. Later, I visited the Washington police court one morning. It seemed to me very much like the old slave auction block. Most of the culprits were colored and many of them were women. The women were asked questions just as shameful and degrading as any ever asked them when they were offered for sale. I also went through the colored slums where it is not safe for a person to go even in the day time without a star and a bluecoat with you. The grandchildren of those old slaves were there like hunted animals, their hands against every man, plotting mischief and murder. Under these circumstances it seemed to me that the great civil struggle did not accomplish all that was intended. Don't misunderstand me. It would have been awful had that great struggle with its cost of bloodshed and treasure and heartaches been in vain; but as long as this condition prevails the great question of chattel slavery is not entirely settled."

Mrs. Diggs continued: "Men and women need each other. They inspire one another. God made no mistake when he put us on the same planet and put boys and girls in the same family. When a man goes to the far west he becomes semi-civilized. Then he sends for the women folk and gets civilized again. Both elements are essential. You men have run the nation a good while and have been only partially successful. The nation has been well fathered, but it hasn't been enough mothered. You are confronted by conditions you admit baffle you. Better let us help you out. We ask for the franchise not because it would be nice to vote. We don't care anything about that. Our reasons are that the country needs all the moral and common sense help it can get.

"There was a time when this country was not fit to live in, and the atmosphere was not fit to breathe. Finally the monsters of the deep left the continent and gave way to a more desirable settlement. These reforms have continued up to the present time, and equal suffrage is the next in this line of evolution."

Mrs. Diggs created some amusement in describing the difference between herself and Mrs. Johns. "Mrs. Johns is the sweet one," she said. "She is the winning one who does the pleading. I have another plan. I am the fierce one. I scare people." The audience greatly enjoyed being frightened by little Mrs. Diggs.

THREE MINUTE TALKS ABOUT

NEW MEXICO

Is the title of an illustrated folder describing the farms, ranches, mines and towns of New Mexico. The profits of fruit raising are set forth in detail; also facts relating to sheep, cattle, and general farming. No other country possesses such a desirable climate all the year round. Write to C. T. Nicholson, G. P. A., A. T. & S. F. R. R., Topeka, Kas., for free copy.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

RHEUMATIC SALT, curing hundreds. By mail $1. Brown Bros., Druggists, 1008 Hancock St. Brooklyn, N. Y. Physicians supplied.

Married Ladies Send 10c for Royal Safeguard. No drugs; no fraud; every lady needs it. LADIES EMPORIUM, St. Louis, Mo.

$25 a week made writing at home by LADIES. Particulars for stamp. EASTERN TOILET CO., Stillwater, Me.

For the Boys A Watch or Kodak. No money out. Write Box 230, Sidney, Ia.

HOW (with useful presents) for 10c and addresses of 10 married ladies. Box E, Athens, Ga.

WANTED.—Eight or ten men to represent our well-known house in this state. Our large and complete stock and various lines, such as nursery stock, plants, bulbs, fancy seed potatoes, fertilizers, etc., enable us to pay handsome salaries to even ordinary salesmen. Wages run from $75.00 to $125.00 per month and expenses—according to material in the man. Apply quick, stating age. L. L. MAY & CO., St. Paul, Minn. (This house is responsible.)

The West and South Must Now Draw the

On the old humpbug East. Get the best in the Northwest, with great combination offer for one year—Northwest News illustrated weekly, Independent, Cosmopolitan Magazine of New York, and a 25¢ bottle of Dr. Gony's Magic Liniment, greatest of all wound dressing and healer without a scar—$2.50 for the three. Northwest News Publishing Co., Grand Forks, N. D.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address: CHAS. HUGHES, Box 302, Pensacola, Fla.

GREY HAIR MADE DARK By a Harmless Home Wash. Will also make the hair grow. Full directions for 25 cts. Mrs. Hunter, 2660 Lucas Av., St. Louis.

$25 to $50 per week. To Agents, Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plaster." Only practical way to repair roofs and worn balconies, porches, etc.; quickly done by dipping in melted metal. No experience, painting or machinery. Thick plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; fine finish when taken from the plaster. Every family has plaster to do. Plaster sells readily. Profit large. W. P. Harrison & Co., Columbus, O.

General or local Agents. $75 a week. Exclusive territory. The Rapid Dish Washer. Washes all the dishes for a family in one minute. Washes, rinses and dries them without wetting the hands. You push the button, the machine does the rest. Bright, polished dishes, and cheerful wives. No scalded fingers, no scalded hands or clothing. No broken dishes, no must. Cheap, durable, warranted. Circulars free. W. P. HARRISON & CO., Clerk No. 12, Columbus, O.

WOMAN'S VOICE & PUBLIC SCHOOL CHAMPION.

Have you ever seen a copy of this paper? Do you wish to know what the custom women are doing to protect the public schools from their enemies, the Romanists? Do you desire to read weekly a full account of the famous patriotic meetings held in Music Hall, Boston, Mass., each Sunday? Do you want to know of Mission, W. C. T. U., and King's Daughter's work? Then subscribe for the "Woman's Voice," $1.00 a year. SAMPLE COPIES FREE. Ellen Trask Hill, Editor and General Manager, Room 9, Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass.

AGENTS $75 A WEEK using or selling PRACTICAL PLATING DYNAMO. The modern method, used in all factories to plate new goods. Plates gold, silver, nickel, etc., on watches, jewelry, table-ware, bicycles and all metal goods; fine outfit for agents; different sizes; always ready; no battery; no toy; no experience; no limit to plating needed; great money maker. W. P. HARRISON & CO., Clerk No. 15, Columbus, Ohio.

PATENTS Promptly secured. Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels registered. Twenty-five years experience. We report whether patent can be secured or not, free of charge. Our fee not due until patent is allowed. Reissue Book Free. H. B. WILSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

AGENTS $10 a day at home selling LIGHTNING PLATE and plating jewelry, watches, tableware, bicycles, etc. Plates almost anything you want, and on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. Anyone can plate the first effort. Goods need plating at every house. Outfit complete. Wholesale to agents $5 up. Big profits on sales, all warranted. Circulars free. H. F. Deino & Co., Dept. No. 6, Columbus, O.

We teach—You Practice. In other words, we teach you to teach. You start you in business, at which you can rapidly gain the dollars. We can and will, if you please, teach you quickly how to earn from $5 to $10 a day at the start, and more as you go on. You can start at any age. In any part of America, you can commence at home, giving all your time, or spare moments only, to the work. What we offer is new and it has been proved over and over again, that great pay is sure for every worker. Easy to learn. No special ability required. Reasonable industry only necessary for sure, large success. We start you, furnishing everything. This is one of the great stories for the time.

YOU PRACTICE. In useful, inventive progress, that enriches all workers. It is probably the greatest opportunity laboring people have ever known. Now is the time. Better means lost. Full particulars free. Better write at once. Address, GEORGE STINSON & Co., Box 488, Portland, Maine.

INCUBATOR. In useful, inventive progress, that enriches all workers. It is probably the greatest opportunity laboring people have ever known. Now is the time. Better means lost. Full particulars free. Better write at once. Address, GEORGE STINSON & Co., Box 488, Portland, Maine.

INCUBATOR. In useful, inventive progress, that enriches all workers. It is probably the greatest opportunity laboring people have ever known. Now is the time. Better means lost. Full particulars free. Better write at once. Address, GEORGE STINSON & Co., Box 488, Portland, Maine.

HATCH CHICKENS BY STEAM WITH THE IMPROVED EXCELSIOR INCUBATOR. Simple, Perfect, and Self-Regulating. Thousands in successful operation. Guaranteed to hatch larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other Hatchery. Patentee and Sole Manufacturer GEO. H. STAHL, Quincy, Ill.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

KANSAS AMENDMENT 1894.

These Badges can be had by addressing the FARMER'S WIFE, Topeka, Kas. 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen, $6.00 per 100.

BRIDAL AND BURIAL.

It was a soldier's bridal day;
His darling stood in robes of gray
To give to him her heart.
The soldier wore the army blue,
And vowed his vows of honor true,
Till "death their lives should part."

Above them hung our banner bright;
Each heart was sad, and yet a light
With hope he might not fail.
And that same happy, gala day,
He would return, with her to stay,
When bugles did not call.

"Haste to my rescue!" Freedom cried.
The soldier marched away—she died.
As white as winter snow
He came again; alas! alas!
They hid his face beneath the grass
Full thirty years ago.

Under the pillow where his head
Was lying the dear bride-wife spread
Her wedding-gown of gray.
They found her picture on his breast,
And left it undisturbed to rest
Till God's memorial day.

Her brow wears signs of the years;
Her eyes have not forgot the tears
They shed that vanished day;
Her locks have lost youth's loveliness;
Their hue is like her bridal dress,
Of unobtrusive gray.

Time is grief's healer; but she waits
Alone for him who by the gates
Of heaven records the hours
Till she shall come with love as true
As when he wore the army blue,
Or lay 'mid funeral flowers.
—Frank Leslie's

CAPTAIN JIM.

"To-morrow is Decoration Day, comrades. Report for marching orders as early as nine."

"We'll all be here, Major. I wonder if Captain Jim will?"

A group of grand army men were burningish their accoutrements in the village hall. A curious bystander made the query.

"Who is Captain Jim, may I ask?"

"Captain Jim Prescott," replied the second speaker, "is an old soldier—none braver in the war. He came back minus an arm, got married, and let a happy and prosperous life till two years ago. Then drink got hold of him. You know what that means. He went down. Last year his broken-hearted wife left him. Only his daughter, Edna, a beautiful girl of seventeen, clung to his broken fortunes."

"Do they live here?"

"In the old cottage he once kept so trim she is sacrificing her life for him, for Norman Bea'e, one of the finest young fellows in town, wants to marry her, but Edna believes it her duty to care for the sad wreck man has made of Captain Jim. About three months ago an old comrade took him South, on the chance of reforming him. Edna has great hopes, so has our Colonel. He told me Jim would be here to-night to join in the ceremonies to-morrow, but I fear he has fallen by the wayside."

Edna Prescott, a sorrowful participant in this bit of family history, thought so, too, as, watching from the window of her lonely home, the hours went by and her father did not appear. She had received encouraging letters from his comrade, but her hopes now misgave her and seemed to predict failure for her many plans for reuniting husband and wife.

Her mother, who was living with a sister in an adjoining place, would certainly visit the village cemetery where her brothers were buried on the morrow, yet when morning broke after a sleepless night, Edna had scarcely the heart to engage in the day's ceremonies.

She was arranging some flowers when the sound of muffled drums told her that the procession had started. She gazed from the window, sadly thinking of other days like this when Captain Jim had looked the hero he was at the head of his old company. She recalled, too, the last Decoration Day, when his fatal fall had made him an object of pity to all his friends. Would that humiliation be repeated on this solemnly sweet May morning?

"Oh, what is this? Father on earth, my joy is complete: Father in heaven, I thank thee!"

Down upon her knees in prayer, the happy tears dimming her sight, Edna sank. The survivors of Company A were marching by, and at their head, clothed in new, neat uniform, clothed, as well, in his right mind again, the bleared eyes gone, the noble face serious with earnest dignity, was—her father!

One glance told Edna that he was reclaimed. That moment of joy atoned for all the dark fears of the lonely night.

When she gained the cemetery the ceremonies of the day had begun. On everybody's lips the name of Captain Jim hovered, coupled with words that showed how lovingly he was esteemed, how welcome in this new guise of manhood.

It was just after the final address that Edna went to the soldiers' monument. A veiled form was kneeling at its railing. Edna recognized her mother.

About to speak, she paused. Her father and the Colonel were approaching. Captain Jim saw the kneeling form. His lips trembled. He glanced appealingly at Edna. She took his hand in silence and led him forward.

"Mother," she murmured in the ear of the veiled mourner, joining the twain in tremulous finger-clasp, "let this poor one hand plead for its dear owner. Look up and see!"

"And let my earnest heart, truly brought purified through the fire of temptation and affliction, join in the prayer that you will forgive the past. Mary, can you doubt me this time?"

Mrs. Prescott looked once at the changed, earnest face of the reformed man. Then she put out her arms, and those two were one again.

"Edna!"
The weeping, happy girl started as the name was softly whispered, and thrilled as well, for her lover spoke.

"My dear," he continued, "is not that reunion a presage of the future from which I may take hope?"

"Norman," murmured Edna, "can you doubt my heart's wish? My father will not need me always—now."

And so, amid the glory of the odor-

IN THE WILDERNESS

ous lilies and the sanctity of memories true hearts alone can understand. Those four knew that love ineffable had been gained and regained upon that solemn, peaceful Decoration Day.

Peace Now Reigns.

The birds are nesting in the murderous cannon's moss-covered muzzle.

THE Argentine Pacific Railway, from Buenos Ayres to the foot of the Andes, runs 211 miles without a curve and with not a single cutting or embankment more than three feet deep. This is probably the longest piece of straight railway in the world.

MEMORIAL DAY.

It Is Now Generally Observed Throughout the Country.

In nearly every town in the Northern States the streets on Memorial Day resound to the sound of martial music, and the surviving veterans march together, not now, as they did so many years ago, to the camp and the battle field, but to that last camping ground where have been laid all that was mortal of so many of their comrades. As they place their floral tributes upon the mounds that are marked by a miniature emblem of the flag under which they marched and fought, and in defense of which and what it represents so many of those whose graves they decorate gave up their lives, or received wounds and disease from which they have since suffered and died, they cannot but devote a moment's thought to the time when they, too, shall have answered the last roll call, and with "lights out" shall have sunk into their last slumber, to be awakened only in the great hereafter. They devote a thought to the memory of those who do not lie in those graves, near home and among their kindred, who still cherish their memory, but who, uncoffined and unknelt, were buried in trenches, or in but hastily made graves upon the fields that their sacrifices redeemed to the Union and to Freedom.

For a few years after the observance of this day was begun by the returned soldiers, they were left to perform their sad duties almost alone, unassisted, and scarcely noticed except by the friends of those around whose graves they gathered, but now it has become a national observance, a tribute to the valor and the patriotism not only of the dead but the living, and, while the few remaining comrades are allowed the privilege of placing the flowers of spring upon the graves, the Women's Relief Corps, many of whom also made their sacrifices for their country in those trying times, are proud to accompany and assist them, while the Sons of Veterans and the Daughters of Veterans stand by to show their readiness to continue in the good work of keeping alive the memories of the soldiers and the soldiers' deeds when the time, not far distant, shall come, that the Grand Army of the Republic has become so reduced in numbers as to be no longer able to perform their share.

In many places the Grand Army posts are escorted by the local companies of the State militia, who, if they are not "eager for fray," and desirous of an opportunity of showing that they, too, are loyal, courageous and able to endure hardships, would not be likely to be found wanting in those qualities, if there should ever be in their day or generation a necessity for it. Children of the public schools almost unconsciously absorb more of the love of country from the martial music, the waving flags and the respect shown to the veterans than from the addresses of the eloquent orators of the day. The townspeople turn out in large numbers, for on day at least forgetting political differences, and most of them convinced that, no matter how many are receiving pensions who are unworthy of them, or fail to handle them wisely, there are none such in the ranks that march by them, or among the loved ones who were left behind by those who lie beneath the flower-decked mounds.

Nor is this the only benefit of Memorial Day observances. Not only are the dead soldiers, though they may have passed away more than thirty years ago, thus kept in mind and honored, but all who have loved ones who have gone before them are led to beautify their last resting place, and for a

The Loyalty of Woman.

'Tis meet that for our warriors,
We come Memorial Day
With flags unfurled, while drum-beat
And bugle lead the way.

That o'er their last encampment,
Where never stirs a soul,
In memory of their valor,
The boom of cannons roll.

But save in gentlest whispers,
Come not in woman's name;
Drum-beat or blare of bugle
Should not her deeds proclaim.

Yet, tho' her duties led her
Not in the battle's heat,
Her zeal spurred men to conquest,
And cheered them in defeat.

And where death's angel hovered,
Her foot sped swift and sure;
Her touch brought balm and healing,
Her voice strength to endure.

Did woman's heart e'er falter,
In war of gray and blue?
To God, or Flag, or Country,
Her heart e'er prove untrue?

For every wounded soldier,
Or hero that hath died,
Some woman, too, hath suffered,
In soul been crucified.

Ah! 'tis the prayers of woman—
Methinks the sad refrain—
That give to martial music
A subtle sense of pain.

The brightest deeds recorded
In God's own book above,
Are of man's dauntless courage,
And woman's deathless love.

As comrade is to comrade
Is she to veteran true;
And each to each shall cherish
The gratitude that's due.

Their names may not be severed,
The veteran's deeds we own;
But woman's hands upheld them,
The "power behind the throne."
—Libbie C. Baer.

An Echo of Memorial Day.

Chorus of Decorators—You've got the flag upside down.

G. A. R. Veteran—Reckon I know what I'm doin'. Bill, here, fell of a mule at Chancellersville an' struck on his head.—Judge.

THE NATION'S DEAD.

They Lie Buried in Eighty-three National Cemeteries.

The nation's dead are buried in eighty-three national cemeteries, only twelve of which are in the Northern States. The principal ones in the North are Cypress Hill, with its 3,786 dead; Finn's Point, N. J., with 2,444 unknown dead; Gettysburg, Pa., with 1,967 known and 1,608 unknown dead; Mount City, Ill., with 2,565 known and 2,721 unknown graves; and Woodlawn, Elmira, N. Y., with its 3,900 dead. In the South, near the scenes of the fearful conflicts, are located the largest resting places of the nation's heroic dead. Arlington, Va., 16,264, of which 4,319 are unknown; Chalmette, La., 12,511, of which 5,674 are unknown; Chattanooga, Tenn., 12,962, of which 4,963 are unknown; Fredericksburg, Va., 16,251, of which 12,770 are unknown; Jefferson Barracks, Mo., 11,490, of which 2,900 are unknown; Little Rock, Ark., 5,692, of which 2,317 are unknown; City Point, Va., 5,122, of which 1,374 are unknown; Marietta, Ga., 10,151, of which 2,693 are unknown; Memphis, Tenn., 13,997, of which 8,817 are unknown; Nashville, Tenn., 16,526, of which 4,700 are unknown; Poplar Grove, Va., 6,190, of which 4,001 are unknown; Richmond, Va., 6,542, of which 5,700 are unknown; Salisbury, N. C., 12,126, of which 12,032 are unknown; Stone River, Tenn., 3,602, of which 288 are unknown; Vicksburg, Miss., 16,600, of which 12,704 are unknown; Antietam, Md., 4,671, of which 1,818 are unknown; Winchester, Va., 4,559, of which 3,365 are unknown.

The dust of 300,000 men who fought for the Union find guarded graves in our national cemeteries. Two cemeteries are devoted to the heroic souls who passed away in the prison pens, those festering fields of death of the same name. Andersonville, Ga., harbors 13,741, and Salisbury, N. C., 12,126. Of the Grand Army whose legions are dust, 275,000 sleep in the blood-stained ground of the sunny South, and 145,000 of them fill unknown graves. The total Confederate loss will never be known, but estimates place it at 220,000 out of the 1,000,000 men enlisted in the Southern service. They fought the war on the defensive plan, and were acclimated, which gave enormous advantages.

Fish Have No Souls.

The Moslems, like the Jews, were commanded not to make images of anything in heaven or in earth, and Mohammed added: "Therefore, if ye must make images, make images of things which have no souls, such as trees or plants." His Sunnite followers have never transgressed this rule, and their friezes and capitals and paneling are either in geometrical patterns, or are ornamented with symmetrically twined boughs and leaves.

The Hindu, on the other hand, never loses an opportunity of introducing gods, elephants, tigers, horses and birds—anything living that he can think of except fish. For fish have no souls, and the believer in the transmigration of the spirit eats fish with impunity, though he would die rather than eat beef, and has religious scruples with game.—The Century.

Sand Beach, Pa.

After the Grip

Broken Down by Dyspepsia, Indigestion and Headache Spells.

"I feel it my duty to tell what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for my wife. She had the grip and after the fever was over she was not able to do her housework, had dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation and headache, spells of dizziness and hot flashes. I saw in a paper what wonderful cures were made by Hood's Sarsaparilla. After my wife had used one bottle she realized she was much better. She is now using the fourth bottle and has improved in health so much that she does her own housework. I am so thankful for what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for her that I would not be without it in the house."

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

SAMUEL R. MILLER, P. M., Sand Beach, Pa.

Hood's Pills become the favorite cathartic with every one who tries them. 25c. per box.

WE WILL MAIL POSTPAID a fine Panel Picture, entitled "MEDITATION" in exchange for 18 Large Lion Heads, cut from Lion Coffee wrappers, and a 2-cent stamp to pay postage. Write for list of our other fine premiums, including books, a knife, game, etc. WOODSON SPIRIT CO. 409 Huron St., TOLEDO, OHIO.

"Dr. Pellet cured you, I understand?" "Yes." "He's a homeopath, I believe?" "Yes." "Then you are sugar cured, I suppose?"

The Watches of the Night

When the repeated kind experienced by persons troubled with insomnia, soon bring about an alarming condition of the nervous system. The shaking hand, confusion of the brain, lapses of memory and loss of appetite indicate, with terrible precision, the ravages produced by loss of sleep, which if unremedied must destroy mental equilibrium altogether. No better and thorough nerve exist than Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Common sense and experience point to its early and steady use in cases of insomnia. It strengthens weak and replaces the tension of overstrained nerves, which, by the way, a resort to unmedicated stimulants will never do permanently, while the aftereffect of such excitants is most prejudicial. Under the influence of this benign invigorant, appetite, digestion and sleep return, and bodily comfort and health are alike promoted. It is invaluable in chills and fever, liver complaint, constipation, rheumatic and kidney trouble.

Where rumor is aloft gossip finds smooth sailing.

A bashful young man, like corn, turns white when he pops.

Steelyard.

The last syllable of "steelyard" does not signify a measure, but owes its origin to the "yard," or court, in London where traders sold their steel, and was regulated by the "Merchants of the Steelyard." In this yard, or court, there would stand some kind of balance for weighing metal, and this meaning soon supplanted the original word.

Good cooks can make pie of everything, from beefsteak to vinegar.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

"The Woman's Standard," AN EIGHT-PAGE MONTHLY.

Devoted to the interests of the home, and the legal and political status of women.

Fifty cents a year in advance; three months on trial to new subscribers 10 cents. Sample copy free.

THE WOMAN'S STANDARD,
DES MOINES, IA.

L. HARLBURG,
FIRST CLASS
BLACKSMITHING AND GENERAL REPAIR SHOP.

Country Work Solicited.
Prices Low as the Lowest.

CALL AND SEE ME.

922 Kansas Avenue,
NORTH TOPEKA.

Scientific American Agency for PATENTS
CAVEATS, TRADE MARKS,
DESIGN PATENTS,
COPYRIGHTS, etc.

For information and free Handbook write to MUNN & CO., 361 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.
Oldest bureau for securing patents in America.
Every patent taken out by us is brought before the public by a notice given free of charge in the Scientific American
Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Weekly, $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

A MAN
ACQUAINTED WITH THE GEOGRAPHY OF THE COUNTRY WILL OBTAIN MUCH INFORMATION FROM A STUDY OF THIS MAP OF THE

Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific RAILWAY.
Fast Express Trains daily between MINNEAPOLIS, ST. PAUL and Northern Points to CHICAGO and throughout the West and Indian Territory on the South,
via the Albert Lea Route.
For Tickets, Maps, Folders or desired information, apply at any Coupon Ticket Office, or address
E. ST. JOHN, CHICAGO, ILL.
Gen'l Mgr. Gen'l Tkt. & Pass. Agt.

HUMPHREYS'
For Piles—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding; Fistula in Ano; Itching or Bleeding of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.
For Burns, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant —the healing wonderful and unequalled.
WITCH HAZEL OIL
For Boils, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Fistulas, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Chafing or Scald Head. It is infallible.
For Inflamed or Caked Breasts and Sore
Nipples. It is invaluable.
Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.
Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price.
HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.
THE PILE OINTMENT
B. L. CRANS,
10 Spruce St., N. Y.,
Room No. 4.
Newspaper
Advertising.
Attractive advertisements are prepared and placed in all newspapers and magazines.
Rates, terms and full information may be obtained in regard to this publication from Mr.
B. L. Crans, who is our authorized agent.

WILCOX'S COMPOUND
TANSY PILLS
Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail.
If your Druggist don't keep them, accept no substitute but send 4c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

PATENTS
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge.
For information and free hand-book write to
H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law,
Opp. U. S. Pat. Office. WASHINGTON, D. C.

UNSATISFIED
This startling novel will be mailed to you sealed on receipt of 10 cents
in coin, 20 in stamps.
Also our Catalogue
All publications
the same price.
BOOKS BY THE MILLION
Regularly 25c. 50c. 75c. 1.00 each
Now 10c. 20c. 30c. 40c. 50c. 75c. 1.00 each Special Dept.
MINERVA PUBLISHING CO.
2012 Broadway, N. Y.

$2,500 in Prizes FOR TELLING THESE WORDS—
C-R-S--SH-L-D-A-S
The above letters and dashes represent words of very pleasant associations at Christmas season.
What are they? Each dash stands for an omitted letter. When the omitted letters are supplied the words will pay the following rewards for correct answers received before February 15th, viz.:
For the first correct answer, $2,500.
For the second correct answer, $1,000.
For the third correct answer, $500.
For the fourth correct answer, $250.
For the fifth correct answer, $100.
For the sixth correct answer, $50.
For the seventh correct answer, $25.
For the eighth correct answer, $10.
For the ninth correct answer, $5.
For the tenth correct answer, $2.
For the eleventh correct answer, $1.
For the twelfth correct answer, 50c.
For the thirteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the fourteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the fifteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the sixteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the seventeenth correct answer, 1c.
For the eighteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the nineteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the twentieth correct answer, 10c.
For the twenty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the twenty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the twenty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the twenty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the twenty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the twenty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the twenty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the twenty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the twenty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the thirtieth correct answer, 50c.
For the thirty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the thirty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the thirty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the thirty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the thirty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the thirty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the thirty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the thirty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the thirty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the fortieth correct answer, 2c.
For the forty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the forty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the forty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the forty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the forty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the forty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the forty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the forty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the forty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the fiftieth correct answer, 10c.
For the fifty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the fifty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the fifty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the fifty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the fifty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the fifty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the fifty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the fifty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the fifty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the sixtieth correct answer, 50c.
For the sixty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the sixty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the sixty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the sixty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the sixty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the sixty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the sixty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the sixty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the sixty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the seventieth correct answer, 2c.
For the seventy-first correct answer, 1c.
For the seventy-second correct answer, 50c.
For the seventy-third correct answer, 25c.
For the seventy-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the seventy-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the seventy-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the seventy-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the seventy-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the seventy-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the eightieth correct answer, 10c.
For the eighty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the eighty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the eighty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the eighty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the eighty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the eighty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the eighty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the eighty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the eighty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the ninetieth correct answer, 50c.
For the ninety-first correct answer, 25c.
For the ninety-second correct answer, 10c.
For the ninety-third correct answer, 5c.
For the ninety-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the ninety-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the ninety-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the ninety-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the ninety-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the ninety-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundredth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-first correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-second correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-third correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-tenth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-eleventh correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-twelfth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-twentieth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-thirty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-fortieth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-forty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-forty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-forty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-forty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-forty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-forty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-forty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-forty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-forty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-fiftieth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-fifty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-fifty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-fifty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-fifty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-fifty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-fifty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-fifty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-fifty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-fifty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-sixtieth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-sixty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-sixty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-sixty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-sixty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-sixty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-sixty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-sixty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-sixty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-sixty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-seventieth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-seventy-first correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-seventy-second correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-seventy-third correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-seventy-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-seventy-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-seventy-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-seventy-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-seventy-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-seventy-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-eightieth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-eighty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-eighty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-eighty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-eighty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-eighty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-eighty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-eighty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-eighty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-eighty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-ninetyth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-ninety-first correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-ninety-second correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-ninety-third correct answer, 25c.
For the hundred-ninety-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the hundred-ninety-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the hundred-ninety-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the hundred-ninety-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the hundred-ninety-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the hundred-ninety-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundredth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-first correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-second correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-third correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-tenth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-eleventh correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-twelfth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-twentieth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-thirty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-fortieth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-forty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-forty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-forty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-forty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-forty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-forty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-forty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-forty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-forty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-fiftieth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-fifty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-fifty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-fifty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-fifty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-fifty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-fifty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-fifty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-fifty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-fifty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-sixtieth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-sixty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-sixty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-sixty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-sixty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-sixty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-sixty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-sixty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-sixty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-sixty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-seventieth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-seventy-first correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-seventy-second correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-seventy-third correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-seventy-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-seventy-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-seventy-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-seventy-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-seventy-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-seventy-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-eightieth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-eighty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-eighty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-eighty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-eighty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-eighty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-eighty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-eighty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-eighty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-eighty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-ninetyth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-ninety-first correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-ninety-second correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-ninety-third correct answer, 1c.
For the two hundred-ninety-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the two hundred-ninety-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the two hundred-ninety-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the two hundred-ninety-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the two hundred-ninety-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the two hundred-ninety-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundredth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-first correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-second correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-third correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-tenth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-eleventh correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-twelfth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-twentieth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-thirty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-fortieth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-forty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-forty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-forty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-forty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-forty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-forty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-forty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-forty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-forty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-fiftieth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-fifty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-fifty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-fifty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-fifty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-fifty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-fifty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-fifty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-fifty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-fifty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-sixtieth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-sixty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-sixty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-sixty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-sixty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-sixty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-sixty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-sixty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-sixty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-sixty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-seventieth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-seventy-first correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-seventy-second correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-seventy-third correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-seventy-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-seventy-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-seventy-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-seventy-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-seventy-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-seventy-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-eightieth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-eighty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-eighty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-eighty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-eighty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-eighty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-eighty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-eighty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-eighty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-eighty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-ninetyth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-ninety-first correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-ninety-second correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-ninety-third correct answer, 5c.
For the three hundred-ninety-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the three hundred-ninety-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the three hundred-ninety-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the three hundred-ninety-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the three hundred-ninety-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the three hundred-ninety-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundredth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-first correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-second correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-third correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-tenth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-eleventh correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-twelfth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-twentieth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-thirty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-fortieth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-forty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-forty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-forty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-forty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-forty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-forty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-forty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-forty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-forty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-fiftieth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-fifty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-fifty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-fifty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-fifty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-fifty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-fifty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-fifty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-fifty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-fifty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-sixtieth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-sixty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-sixty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-sixty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-sixty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-sixty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-sixty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-sixty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-sixty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-sixty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-seventieth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-seventy-first correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-seventy-second correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-seventy-third correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-seventy-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-seventy-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-seventy-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-seventy-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-seventy-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-seventy-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-eightieth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-eighty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-eighty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-eighty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-eighty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-eighty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-eighty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-eighty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-eighty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-eighty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-ninetyth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-ninety-first correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-ninety-second correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-ninety-third correct answer, 25c.
For the four hundred-ninety-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the four hundred-ninety-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the four hundred-ninety-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the four hundred-ninety-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the four hundred-ninety-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the four hundred-ninety-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundredth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-first correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-second correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-third correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-tenth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-eleventh correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-twelfth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-twentieth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-thirty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-fortieth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-forty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-forty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-forty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-forty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-forty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-forty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-forty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-forty-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-forty-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-fiftieth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-fifty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-fifty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-fifty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-fifty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-fifty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-fifty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-fifty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-fifty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-fifty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-sixtieth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-sixty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-sixty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-sixty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-sixty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-sixty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-sixty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-sixty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-sixty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-sixty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-seventieth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-seventy-first correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-seventy-second correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-seventy-third correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-seventy-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-seventy-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-seventy-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-seventy-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-seventy-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-seventy-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-eightieth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-eighty-first correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-eighty-second correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-eighty-third correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-eighty-fourth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-eighty-fifth correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-eighty-sixth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-eighty-seventh correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-eighty-eighth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-eighty-ninth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-ninetyth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-ninety-first correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-ninety-second correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-ninety-third correct answer, 1c.
For the five hundred-ninety-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the five hundred-ninety-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the five hundred-ninety-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the five hundred-ninety-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the five hundred-ninety-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the five hundred-ninety-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundredth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-first correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-second correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-third correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-eighth correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-ninth correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-tenth correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-eleventh correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-twelfth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-thirteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-fourteenth correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-fifteenth correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-sixteenth correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-seventeenth correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-eighteenth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-nineteenth correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-twentieth correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-twenty-first correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-twenty-second correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-twenty-third correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-twenty-fourth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-twenty-fifth correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-twenty-sixth correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-twenty-seventh correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-twenty-eighth correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-twenty-ninth correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-thirtieth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-thirty-first correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-thirty-second correct answer, 10c.
For the six hundred-thirty-third correct answer, 5c.
For the six hundred-thirty-fourth correct answer, 2c.
For the six hundred-thirty-fifth correct answer, 1c.
For the six hundred-thirty-sixth correct answer, 50c.
For the six hundred-thirty-seventh correct answer, 25c.
For the six hundred-thirty-eighth correct answer, 1

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, JUNE, 1894.

VOL. XII, NO. 40

For the Farmer's Wife.

OUR REMONSTRANCE.

BY FANNY L. FANCHER.

Pray, don't you let us vote, men,
O, don't vouchsafe us ballots;
Oh, why this fuss, and fanning now
'Mong women whom we all allow
Are naught, if not ranting zealots!

Please do not let us vote, men,
The whole thing is so vexing—
Your laws we think, are often just.
We're represented; hence we must Remonstrate o'er such unsexing!

Now you'll not let us vote, men,
We're suited with our right—
Our jewels, gems, and rare laces,
Our poodless, our fair doll faces,
And never are we asked to fight!

We beg—don't let us vote, men,
Nor office hold, these we'd not prize:
Since home's our only proper sphere,
Our pugs, and offspring, there to rear—
Though powerful, keep from us franchise!

You'll never let us vote, men!
Some will not, ah, we are told
That men who liquors wish to sell—
And thereby make of earth a hell—
Our ballots ever, will withhold!

THOSE OBJECTIONS.

For the FARMER'S WIFE.

Yes, it is asked, "Who will rock the cradle when the mother goes to vote?"

Cannot the person rock the cradle when the mother goes to vote who rocks it when she goes to pay the taxes, or the penalty of legal misdemeanor, or when she goes calling or spends the evening at a reception.

It is urged that giving women the right of franchise or the right to execute political opinions would cause dissensions in the family. The husband and wife who quarrel because they differ from each in opinion do not love each other and the sooner they are separated the better it will be for the morality of our country.

It is said that if our women are allowed to vote they will all want to hold office and go into public life and our homes will be desolated and destroyed. Why not as well say that men must not be allowed to vote for fear they will want to hold office and go into public life, and all our business and professions will be deserted and destroyed, and no support provided for the homes.

It is said that, allowing women to go to the polls and vote will throw them in the society of immoral, objectionable men. As long as our most effete society welcomes the moral death-head at its door, what need of discrimination at the polls?

Society expresses no concern whatever when a woman marries a man whose character is as blackened and besmirched as her own is pure and spotless, but she must not for a moment step into the presence of such a man at the polls.

It is said that political rights will make our women too independent, and they will not marry. When a woman does not love a man sufficiently to give up all other things for him her marriage is not a divine one. No other thing has ever been a greater ban to humanity than its innumerable loveless marriages. As long as women must marry for home and support, just so long will they be enslaved, and a race born of slaves can never be free.

It is said that contact with the world will rob woman of all her womanliness. She who is born truly womanly will ever be so. No vicissitude of life ever robbed the true woman of her womanliness. An undue amount of effrontery is not to be admired in either man or woman, but why should a woman be timid and shrinking? Has not woman as great a right to a place upon earth as man?

Our race must have both a father and a mother. Is it more just to say that woman should not be allowed to vote because she cannot be the father of the race than it would be to say that man should not vote because he cannot be the mother of the race?

If it be true that man represents the physical ultimatum of his race, is it not just as true that woman represents the moral ultimatum, and if either of these ultimatums should decide the right to a voice in making the laws of a nation should not the moral ultimatum hold precedence over the physical?

Giving women the right of franchise it is said, will make the world no better, and will only add expense. It is not a question of better or worse, but of justice. Women would have just as much right to vote injudiciously as men.

It is said women never yet has proven herself either man's physical or mental equal. From the fact that the burden of reproduction has fallen upon woman, justice demands for her a less portion of the world's remaining physical efforts. The physical powers of man and women differ, yet each are of equal value to the world. The difference between the masculine and feminine intellects has hitherto been a difference in giving opportunities of development. Woman for the last fifty years has been rapidly proving to the world there is no sex in intellect. If man for century after century, had been taught he had little or no brain, if his mental powers had been entombed through all the past as have been those of women, the list of man's mental achievements would not today out-number those of women.

It is said that giving women the right of franchise would give a large class of our objectionable women power influence. Does not giving men the right of franchise give a large number of immoral, dishonest, intemperate men power and influence?

It is feared that giving women the right of franchise will bring about some sort of widespread disaster. Has this been the result in Wyoming? Instead statistics prove mental and moral improvement. For five thousand years of the world's history men have held exclusively all the rights of legal construction and governmental, and every nation of the past has ultimately come to a state of ruin and dissolution, and in the vital organism of our own civilization exist the germs of mortal decay. Could the pie be in a much worse state of demoralization if women should get her puny fingers into it?

It is said women knows nothing of politics. How many male voters have who are thoroughly versed in the basic principles of our governmental process, or who have made a study of civics and political economy?

Yes, it is said the woman question is but a side issue. If men were independent of maternity such might be the case, but as long as all humanity is nurtured from the embryonic state into being by women and must have all its physical, mental and moral potentialities filtered through her the condition of its womanhood should be the first consideration of every nation. A nation cannot rise above the source of its mental and moral powers.

And so on, and so on ad finem. There never existed an objection to justice that did not exist without a base.

—LUELLA R. FRAYBELL.

Winfield, Kansas.

JUDGE HOWE, OF WYOMING, ON WOMEN JURORS.

Chief Justice Howe, of Wyoming, has written a letter in which he manfully acknowledges that woman jurors have proved a surprise to him. First, stating that he had no part in helping the women of his state to gain suffrage rights, and that he objected to the notoriety brought upon him by reason of having to hold court with feminine jurors in the box for the first time in America, the Judge says:

"With all my prejudices against the policy, I am under conscientious obligation to say that these women acquitted themselves with such dignity, decorum, propriety of conduct and intelligence as to win the admiration of every fair-minded citizen of Wyoming. They are careful, pains-taking, intelligent and conscientious. They were firm and resolute for the right, as established by the law and the testimony. Their verdicts were right, and, after three or four criminal trials, the lawyers engaged in defending persons accused of crime began to avail themselves of the right of peremptory challenge to get rid of the female jurors, who were too much in favor of enforcing the laws and punishing crime to suit the interests of their clients. After the grand jury had been in session two days, the dance-house-keepers, gamblers and demimonde fled out of the city in dismay to escape the indictment of women grand jurors. In fact, I have never, in my twenty-five years of constant experience in the courts of the country, seen more faithful, intelligent and absolutely honest grand and petit jurors than these."

A GREAT CONVENTION.

Every County in the State Represented.

THE PLATFORM FULL AND STRONG.

Lewelling Renominated by Acclamation.

SILVER 16 TO 1.

The Suffrage Amendment Declared For.

REFERENDUM CALLED FOR Wild Enthusiasm—"Courageous, Honest, Earnest, and Enthusiastic"—Victory in the Air.

THE PEOPLE'S PARTY STATE TICKET.

For Associate Justice. GEO. W. CLARK.
For Governor. L. D. LEWELLING.
For Lieut. Gov. D. I. FURBECK.
For Secretary of State. J. W. AMIS.
For Treasurer. W. H. BIDDLE.
For Attorney Gen. JOHN T. LITTLE.
For Auditor. VAN B. PRATHER.
For Supt. Pub. Inst. H. N. GAINES.
Congressman at Large. W. A. HARRIS.

The People's Party State Convention has just finished its labors. It was one of the most remarkable ever held in the state. As an indication of its character, a prominent Republican, when asked by the writer for his opinion of it, said: "It is a great convention, and I admire it for its pluck, its honesty, its earnestness, and its enthusiasm."

Every important question that came up before it was given full, free and fair discussion. There was no gag on anything. A whole day was devoted to the consideration of the suffrage question, and, when the motion to indorse finally carried, pandemonium broke loose, and a scene of enthusiasm broke forth seldom witnessed in any convention.

Threetimes the convention went wild: First, over the nomination of the officers of the Dunsmore house to preside; second, over the adoption of the suffrage amendment; and finally, over the renomination of Governor Lewelling.

Seldom is such a greeting accorded to any man as that given to Governor Lewelling by this great representative gathering of farmers and laborers, showing that he is nearer the hearts of the common people than any man in Kansas.

The time is too short to give a detailed account of the interesting proceedings of the convention and do it justice. Suffice it to say here, that it was a splendid representative body of the People's Party. Its actions were marked by deliberation and care, and, in spite of the long and earnest debate over the suffrage question, the convention broke up with the utmost good humor, and the delegates went home feeling an assurance that victory will again perch triumphantly on the banner of the Peoples Party next fall.

The suffrage planks as adopted in its platform:

WHEREAS, The People's Party came into existence and won its glorious victories on the fundamental principles of equal rights to all and special privileges to none; therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor the pending constitutional amendment, but we do not regard it as a test of party fealty.

Some women may have all they want, and so do not care for the ballot. We don't claim that women should be made to vote, but that she should have the right to if she wanted to. Look how she answered to that privilege in New Zealand. The London Times says:

"Returns which have been prepared giving the number of women who voted at the last general election in New Zealand shows that the women were prompt to exercise the newly created franchise. Dunedin had 7,744 women on the roll, and only 1,335 failed to record their votes. Many of the absentees were no doubt deterred by the heavy rains which fell on the polling day. In Auckland, out of 6,660 on the roll 5,283 voted; in Wellington 6,146 out of 7,280 voted, and in Christchurch 5,989 out of 6,710 went to the poll. In the country districts women whose names were on the roll exercised their privilege in large numbers. Waltemo, where the minister of lands was a candidate, has the best record, for in that constituency only 90 out of 1,326 failed to vote."

SUFFRAGE OBJECTION.

For the Farmer's Wife.

There are so many petty objections advanced by the opposing force of suffrage but sum them all up and get down to the base and they dissolve into the worn-out hobby of "St. Paul and feminine degradation." I candidly and conscientiously believe, with all my heart, that there are only theories advanced to prop up a growing, quaking fear in the bosom of our lords. Oh, if this passes what will we do? Petticoat government! Can we, can I ever humble my manhood to a woman's whims? Oh, ask yourself ye "legal male minds," would you submit peacefully and quietly to be governed by laws, rules and usages constructed by women alone? Women in the white house, women everywhere, and you "pay up and shut up," as we have done? Oh, that's why you fear. If a man robs another he is always afraid for that other man to ever get where, may-be, he can have a sinch on him. But remember W. E. (we) will rule together. You go on as before legislating for your pocket books and the saloon keepers, and we will try to balance the world that it may not topple over, and even matters up a little by legislating for the home protection, good morals and justice.

A man said to me, why "kick" about justice, when a case is decided in court the woman is always given the advantage, isn't that good enough? Sir! I answered, we do not want the advantage, we are perfectly willing to give justice to men, and would prefer it for ourselves as well. And if women were given the advantage in courts of justice (which, by the way, they are not as a majority at all), it would only be right and a kind of a getting on a drunk and then give the wife a new dress to kinder make up for it—game, you see? Most all of our grand, noble men who have lived in the past and been great national redeemers, have declared on the rostrum they owed all that was good in them to their mother or wife. Now, remember, that mother and wife accomplished their good on susceptible men. What if they had had you to work on, opposer to all good for woman, would you have been so influenced? Now tell me what these women might accomplish with the ballot to rule and count instead of the heart to plead and be so often refused. It is not possible to dream, even, the good that may come out of it. You dear lovers of prohibition in our fair Kansas, do you know a good woman a hold of a good man who would be influenced by this good woman tipped over the balance in our favor, and we owe it—even to a woman.

Now, people say this country is too fast and we are away ahead of ourselves. I will give you a national problem scientifically solved. Women have been for fifty years advancing rapidly in all public positions of advancement and growth except our capitol.

1st. Our national and state treasuries are in a critical condition.

2d. Not enough public work going on by our states and cities to furnish employment as fast as we populate.

Women must either go back to the loom and the spinnel, or else she must put her brain with man's to solve the financial problem of addition.

Brothers, do you not see you have run against a circumstance, and you actually do not know what's the matter, nor how to get out. Now "don't take to the woods," but call on your balance wheels and say here take this piece of paper and help us out of this muddle, and I'll stand by you till its done if it takes all summer.

ALICE M. BAIRD.

SUFFRAGE AND SUFFRAGISTS IN TOPEKA.

The People's Party Adorn the Plan.

The Topeka campaign, as we might call it, for it has in reality been a separate field of labor, the seat of war, and the scene of the hardest battle ever made in the history of the women of America for their own personalliberty, was inaugurated on Tuesday, June 5th, when the women who have so bravely and unflinchingly faced the ridicule of the ignorant, or worse yet, thoughtless men who formed the opposing force they must meet if they would conquer.

The first move was made by the Republican force, at the state convention of that party, held in Topeka, June 5th and 6th, and although Laura M. Johns had armed herself fully with all the accouterments that she had ever before deemed necessary when waging a political warfare for the men and the opinions they represented, yet when she strove to gain entrance by using the same tactics that had been of so great an advantage to her party and its adherents, she was ignominiously defeated, by having the door of republican partisanship resolutely closed in her face, and, in spite of her strenuous efforts otherwise, kept so during the entire convention.

Stung to the quick by the steady persistence of the convention refusing to recognize their presence, or their plea for recognition, these brave women retired from that portion of the field with a determination that, if they could not win their vantage ground within the ranks of the republican party, they would seek its enemies' camp, and see if the freedom that the populists claim as their own would be extended to them.

In this they were not to be disappointed, for at the hands of the people's party they, from the very first, met with kindly courtesy, and their claims for recognition were always allowed.

So, not as a reward for past favors that these women have done, but because they recognize the justness of their claim to political and social equality, the men of this party, at one o'clock, Wednesday, June 13th, 1894, adopted the woman suffrage plank, not as a test of fealty but because they deemed it right. Miss Anthony and Miss Shaw have both recognized the generosity of their brethren, and will speak for this party which has indorsed suffrage whenever and wherever they speak of or on woman suffrage, deeming it as nothing more or less than right that they should do so.

We had thought this must be a non-partisan effort, and still consider that it must largely be so, for it is the work of women for women, no matter what their party affiliations may be. And because our republican women met with defeat in their camp is no reason that they should not partake of the rights their populist sisters have won for them. Nor should there victors deny their sisters the right to speak with and for them upon this subject. We did not think, until after the republicans failed to put the plank in their platform, that it could possibly go into that of either of these great parties; but we mean to keep our faith with the people, and to not forget that we said we would walk the plank if it was made a portion of either platform.

Like Anna Shaw, we have committed ourselves, for now in honor, due to these men and brothers, we must "whoop" for the men who "whoop" for us.

Let us hope that this was the wisest course our brothers could pursue, and let us follow their example by keeping in the middle of the plank, and not tempt the fate of being pushed therefrom, if we don't mind our business as far as the rest of their platform is concerned.

Yours for the cause of suffrage, and the plank that supports it, remembering that November tells the story for all women of Kansas as well as your sister worker.

ZYESTHRA.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

THE GROUND HOG,

Which Searches for Its Shadow on Candlemas Day.

The ground hog, whose solar observations on Candlemas day have such an important bearing on the latter half of winter (at least according to popular belief) has the honor of having many names, the best known of which is "woodchuck." Linnaeus calls it "mus manax," which means that it is a cross between a mouse and a monkey. It is the "whistler" of the French Canadians, the "thickwood badger" of the Hudson Bay country, and the "tarabaran" of Alaska.

The animal's habits do not vary with the multitude of his titles. He lives in a burrow remarkable for its extent. It is dug in the slope of a hill or by the side of a big stone, making an excavation 20 to 30 feet long, which descends obliquely four or five feet, then gradually rising to a large round chamber, where the groundhog family sleeps and brings up its young. The little ones are born three to eight at a time.

The first rain that falls copiously after haying is over cause the fresh grass to spring up anew. This second crop in many places consists largely in red clover, which the groundhog regards as a most delightful delicacy. It eats so much during the later part of August and the first half of the following month that it becomes exceedingly fat and inert. About September 30 or a little later it goes into winter quarters, and it does not come out again to stay until the middle of March.

During the term of hibernation physical waste is reduced to a very low point, the heart's action slackening and the breathing becoming so slight that it can only be detected by delicate instruments. Even when kept in a warm house through the cold season a tame groundhog becomes torpid at the usual date and remains so until the hereditary habit has been carried to the customary term. In this latitude the hibernation of the animal is not so complete as farther north, and a few hundred miles farther south it is interrupted by periods of wakefulness, during which the woodchuck goes abroad and gets its meals. The practice of hibernating is merely a device of nature for enabling the animal to get along without food at times when there is no food to be had. Otherwise it would perish and the species would become extinct.

When the Sun Is Hottest.

The fact has long been recognized that the sun is a variable star. Of course its variations are slight, else they would have a disastrous effect upon the earth. The regularity with which sun spots gradually increase and then decrease in number and size is, however, a sufficient indication that, as viewed from a great distance in space, and with sufficiently delicate means of observation, the sun would run through a cycle of variations in brightness once in every eleven years.

It might well be supposed that if such changes take place they would be more easily perceived from the earth than from a greater distance. As a matter of fact, however, there are practical difficulties which render it almost impossible to get an accurate measure of the variation from year to year in the amount of the sun's radiation that falls upon the earth.

It has been undecided whether the sun is hotter or colder when it is most spotted. Some observations have indicated that the sun is hotter when the disturbances that create sun-spots are most active, while other observations have, at the same time, tended to show that less heat is then received on the face of the earth than is received when there are practically no sun-spots.

Recently, however, M. Saveliev has reported to the Academy of Sciences in Paris the result of experiments and calculations made by him since 1800 which strongly go to show that not only is the sun hotter when it is most spotted, but that it is precisely at such times that the surface of the earth feels the greatest intensity of solar radiation.

If M. Saveliev's conclusion remains unshaken, it will settle a question that has long been more or less of a puzzle, and will aid in the solution of the problem of the sun's influence upon the earth's weather.

In connection with this it is not uninteresting to remember that, at present, we are not far from a maximum period of sun-spots, or in other words, according to M. Saveliev, from a time when the sun's heat is most intense on earth.

Curing Sick Headache.

If you ever have sick headache, and want it cured quickly and effectively, with none of the debilitating effects of anti-pyrene or kindred drugs, just take a tablespoonful of red pepper, mix it with vinegar to a thick paste and spread upon a cloth, cotton or linen, bind upon the forehead with a handkerchief, from temple to temple, then take about two grains of the red pepper in a teaspoonful of vinegar and swallow it. The mixture on the forehead will burn, but will not blister, and in the course of ten minutes the headache will disappear under the stimulating effects of this remedy, leaving the patient feeling as if such distressing things as sick headaches were unknown to the human family.

A Fable of Two Brothers.

A certain man was hanged, that he died. And he left two sons, honest men.

Now one of the sons was a blacksmith. But the other became a physician.

And after that their father had been taken from them, these brothers made their homes in other lands.

And the blacksmith would have prospered. But it befell that one asked him how his father made end.

And the blacksmith, looking angrily upon him, answered: "He was hung." For the blacksmith was an honest man.

Howbeit, presently, when a horse was missing, men gathered and hanged the blacksmith, saying: "This man must take after his father." So the blacksmith did take after his father; but whether he caught up with him the tale telleth not.

And at the same time, in his own city, one inquired of the physician by what means his father died. And the physician covered his face and wept.

But while he wept he considered, saying within himself: "If I say, 'he was hanged,' then shall I shock this man and give him pain; and it is my office to relieve pain. Nevertheless, I must tell the truth."

He said, therefore: "My father died of heart failure." And again he wept, the questioner weeping with him.

Then, this being told, men said: "Doubtless, since his father died of heart failure, this good physician and loving son hath made study of kindred diseases." So they resorted unto him.

And the physician became a specialist. And he looked at them who came and coughed once and sneezed twice and demanded $100. And they gave gladly. For the physician was an honest man.—Kate Field's Washington.

Well Prepared.

A minister's wife, who is not so seriously minded at all times as her husband is, tells some laughable stories relating to marriage ceremonies which he performed while they were living in a newly settled district in the backwoods of Canada.

The minister always felt it to be his duty to give each young couple a little serious advice before he performed the marriage ceremony, and for his purpose he usually took them aside, one at a time, and talked very soberly to each of them regarding the great importance of the step they were to take, and the new responsibilities they were to assume.

One day he talked in his most earnest manner for several minutes to a young woman who had come to be married.

"And now," he said, in closing, "I hope you fully realize the extreme importance of the step you are taking, and that you are prepared for it."

"Prepared," she said, innocently; "well, if I ain't prepared, I don't know who is. I've got four common quilts and two nice ones, and four brand-new feather beds, ten sheets and twelve pairs of pillow slips, four linen table cloths, a dozen spoons, and a good six-quart kettle. If I ain't prepared, no girl in this county ever was."

Not a Grammarian.

A certain Western Senator—whose name is not necessary for the purpose of this story—had an apt illustration on his lips the other day, and he would have given the Senate the benefit of it if he had not noticed Mr. Bland sitting on the Democratic side of the chamber. The Senator had been criticizing the language of the Seigniorage bill. Mr. Bland is the author of that bill and is from Missouri.

"I wanted to tell the Senate," said this Western Senator, "of the story of two men who were discussing an article which one of them had read. After one man had criticized it pretty freely, he turned to the other and said: 'Are you a grammarian?'"

"Heavens, no," was the reply, "I am a Missourian!"

"I think that story would have been appropriate to the Bland bill," said the Senator, "but I really did not like to get it off while Mr. Bland was within the sound of my voice."—Washington Post.

Football for Soldiers.

An account is just made public of how an Englishman escaped from the Matabele warriors by means of strategic dodging learned from football play. The young soldier ran the gamut of forty Matabeles, shooting one horseman during his scrimmage among them. After this it is urged that football should be part of the training of soldiers.

The world's remnant counter is crowded with people who imagine they are styles in advance.

HOME AND THE FARM.

A DEPARTMENT MADE UP FOR OUR RURAL FRIENDS.

One Water Trough for Several Fields—Convenience of a Folding Feed Rack—A Tasteful Corner Sideboard—The Farmer's Garden—Agricultural Notes.

Unique Water Trough.

Good, pure water is one of the essentials of health, and a thriving condition in farm stock. Often a pump, wind-mill, or the overflow from springs or running streams can be utilized and the accumulation stored, or so distributed that stock from four fields may drink the water from the same trough. This will prove a great saving in the construction and maintenance of several troughs, and as stock from one field can be watered just as readily as those pasturing in four, the advantage is quite apparent. The manner of arranging the fences for a sixteen-foot trough is shown in Fig. 1, engraved from a sketch by L. D. Snook. If thought best one or two slats may extend across the trough where the fences cross it at the three points. In Fig. 2 is shown the plan of utilizing a caldron kettle for the same purpose. If these are used only during summer, they will be found very durable, and will last many generations. If ice is allowed in the kettle, there is danger of breaking it. If possible, drill a hole in the bottom for rapid cleaning, leaving this open when not in use. If a large circular cover is adjusted, but little rain will enter if exposed during the winter season. Both of these plans are equally available for use under barn basements where stock is usually wintered in several flocks, in fact the same trough is available for both localities, as it is readily placed in position. This will be found more practicable than watering stock from a pail, as many farmers have done for years. As to the manner of getting the water into the trough, many plans are feasible, adopting the one considered the most practical with the immediate surroundings.—American Agriculturist.

FIG. 1. WATERING TROUGH FOR FOUR FIELDS.

FIG. 2. CALDRON WATERING TROUGH.

A Corner Sideboard.

It is frequently the case that there is not proper wall space near the center of the walls of one's dining room for a sideboard, and in such an event one of these most serviceable articles may be fitted into a corner of the room. The accompanying illustration shows a homemade structure that any one at all handy with tools ought to be able to make very readily. The wood used should be such as will harmonize with the other furniture of the room, or, if that is a variety of woods, as is frequently the case, more latitude may be taken in selecting a handsome wood for this purpose. Oak, ash, cherry, or whitewood may be used with good effect. Let the top and front be treated with simplicity, placing the work of finishing in the direction of securing a handsome service, rather than an ornamentation of "filigree" work, that is neither effective nor in good taste.

CONVENIENT SIDEBBOARD.

Bee Culture.

We see a good deal said about keeping hogs, sheep, poultry, and other farm stock to consume what would otherwise be waste products, and so add to the profit of the farm. Why are not bees named in this list more frequently? Surely there is no product which would be more wholly wasted, were it not for them, than that which they gather from the flowers and the fruit. The farmer need not be a bee keeper on a large scale any more than he need keep a large flock of poultry, but he should have some of each. Fifty colonies are perhaps enough for any one who does not wish to make a specialty of the business. Begin small and work up if you find that it suits you.

A farmer of our acquaintance began with two colonies ten years ago to test the matter. He says that they never failed to pay expenses, including the value of his own time and labor, any single year. He sells both bees and honey, and so his colonies vary from twenty-five to fifty. He says that with himself there is less expense and worry in producing $100 worth of honey than in getting the same amount from either hogs or poultry, and that he finds the chances of an unprofitable year much fewer. Honey is in steady demand in all markets, and a really fine article does not have to go begging for a purchaser. There is a great difference in the quality, and this does not depend wholly on the food, as some people imagine. The strain of bees has something to do with it, and the man who handles the bees and the product has much more. Honey must be in attractive shape when put on the market if it is to sell well.—Ex.

The Farmer's Garden.

This should consist of not less than one acre of the best soil, 8 by 10 rods, and if it runs over a knoll so as to vet north and south slope it will prolong the fruiting season. Fence it from the chickens and have no shade trees in or about the garden; everything needs sunlight and culture. The ground should have from 10 to 20 loads of the best manure to the acre every year. All rows should run the entire length and be cultivated with the horse. If you don't want 19 rods of any one vegetable fill it out with something else, and the same with fruit. But you do want a whole row of grapes on the sunny side, for you can buy two-year-old Concord vines at $1 per dozen, and if you have more than you can eat, they are worth more to give away than to sell, but your grocer will give you 4 or 5 cents per pound for them, and after four years planted, ought to bear 20 to 40 pounds. Eight feet from the grapes plant a row of currants, gooseberry and pie plants, so you can drive over this row to mulch, then 8 feet from this a row of blackberries, then a row of red raspberries, next black raspberries the entire length of the garden, one row of pistillates, one row of perfect flowered varieties side by side, the rows 4 feet apart and the plants 2 to 3 feet.—G. J. Kellogg.

Folding Feed Rack.

It is often convenient to feed a horse for a single meal in a place where a permanent crib would be in the way, says Farm and Home. The illustrations show a feed crib that can be put in position in a moment, and when not in use can be turned up against the wall. Less room still would be taken by leaving the lower part of the slat work hinged directly to the wall. Pieces of rope or straps could take the place of the chains if desired. The benefits of this rack are too apparent to need explanation further. The whole cost of making and putting in position is slight and any man handy with tools can put one together in half an hour.

CLOSED.

OPEN.

Agricultural Atoms.

USE dry straw for bedding.

SMALL hogs make the best meat.

KEEP the orchard fenced from all stock.

PLENTY of grass with a little grain will keep pigs in good market condition.

WHEN hens are moulting the accumulation of feathers should be cleared out at least once a week.

BE sure and put all tools carefully under shelter before they are rusted or otherwise damaged.

TO LEAVE the bees a reasonable supply of honey for the winter is better than attempting to feed them.

UTILIZE small potatoes by boiling with meat scraps and feeding on a day. Mash while warm and thicken with bran.

PLAN the garden so that as fast as one crop is matured another will take its place and thus have a succession of fresh vegetables and keep the land occupied.

GRASS needs a solid, firm soil to grow freely and live long. Yet it is hard work to get the ordinary farmer to use the roller after or before sowing grass seed.

HAVE you a spare bit of ground? Plant a fruit tree, take care of it, and thus add to the value of the farm. In time it will fully pay for the work and trouble.

A WELL-BROKEN horse is worth $25 more than an unbroken one. Few horses become thoroughly trained to all kinds of work within two years, and many are never well trained.

FARMING differs from any other business, in that it demands the personal care and oversight of the proprietor in every minute detail. This is the reason why attempts to carry on agriculture upon the wholesale plan have rarely been successful.

A BEAUTY FROM THE WEST.

Miss Ethel Washburn, Stepdaughter of the American Minister at Vienna.

It is generally conceded that the court etiquette of Vienna is more rigid than any other in Europe. Some American Ministers to the Austrian capital have found considerable difficulty in accommodating themselves to the formalities so closely observed there, but the present representative from this country, Bartlett Tripp, has been particularly lucky in this respect. He attributes his good fortune largely to the fact that he is stepfather to one of the most lovely girls ever seen in an American legation. Miss Ethel

MISS ETHEL WASHBURN.

Washburn, the young lady in question, took Vienna by storm on her arrival there. Besides being the possessor of rare personal attractions, Miss Washburn is also gifted with a goodly amount of sound American common sense, and in almost no time she had mastered enough of the intricacies of court etiquette to stand all members of the family in good stead. Miss Ethel is a daughter of Mrs. Tripp by a former marriage, her father having been one of the Minnesota Washburns. At the time of her mother's second marriage seven years ago she was known as "the flower of Minnesota," and Mr. Tripp, who was then Chief Justice of the Territory of Dakota, was congratulated many times on securing two such household treasures as the mother and daughter.

ANCIENT HISTORY.

The Chicago Evening News Tells of the Rise of St. Louis.

St. Louis now claims a population of 600,000, which, if supported by figures, makes the Missouri metropolis the fifth in size of the large cities of the United States.

St. Louis was founded in the year 3001 B. C. by a protoplasm who was off his feed and didn't care what he did. Having started the place, however, he didn't feel like leaving and did not leave until he discovered that it was no place for a live, go-ahead proto—and he left. As nothing was ever heard of him afterward, it is believed by eminent authorities that he went up into the Ozark hills and kicked himself to death for having boomed such a town.

About the twentieth century, B. C. the late Mr. Chedorlaomer made an expedition to St. Louis and up to the day of his death he regretted it. In his memoirs he says: "Of all the dead, past-due burps that I ever honored with my presence St. Louis takes the cheese." Mr. Chedorlaomer was a close observer and knew what he was talking about. The next person of note to visit the town was Shalmaneser in the year 701 B. C. He mistook it for a national cemetery and did not stop off, but proceeded on to Keokuk, Iowa.

The town wobbled on with indifferent success until William the Conqueror's time, when some live business man built a morgue and then it began to grow. Abe Slipsky's discovery of the Mississippi in 1421 gave the town a boom and the census of 1425 gives it a population of 105. When it is recalled that only 4,500 years before all that there was of St. Louis was a protoplasm this rapid growth is fraught with interest. During the last 500 years its progress has been a trifle slow but steady.

Mr. Chedorlaomer would scarcely recognize the St. Louis of to-day. It has several business blocks, a post-office and a railroad lands freight and passengers within walking distance of the town pump. Travelers between the north and south stop off for lunch. In business it is retrospective.

The struggle going on in New York for the equal rights of women recalls to the Sun the case of a Buffalo man who loaded two shot-guns, and, handing one to his wife, requested her to fight a duel with him. The duel ended in the precipitate flight of the woman through a window, carrying the sash with her, and the man, of course, was held for assault with intent to kill. His conviction was regarded as certain, and it was held that his proposition to fight a duel, and placing the woman upon practically equal terms with him, would not excite anything except laughter before a jury, whereas, if it had been the case of one man fighting another, it would be exceedingly difficult to secure a conviction.

REFUSE OF MARBLE.

Fragments Which Used to Be Despised Made into Ornamental Shapes.

As a striking instance of modern ingenuity that gathers up everything, that nothing be lost, and turns it to some account, the transformation of marble fragments into things of beauty, is cited by the New York Tribune as conspicuous. Formerly tons of clippings of the finest marble were thought of no better use than to make roads or marble dust. Now the little fragments are brought even from the far famous quarries of Carrara—home of the Sicilian anarchists—and are reunited in a solid mass to form household ornaments, parts of buildings, mantels, monuments, etc. In a large brick structure in one of the small cities on the Sound is the factory of the company engaged in the marble mosaic business. As one enters he sees barrels full of marble of all colors, the fragments being of various sizes, from that of a pea to that of an egg or larger. The smaller sizes are already reduced enough to form the mosaic, but the larger ones are crumbled by powerful machines, then carefully screened so as to get an even grade of the size desired. The particles are then mixed with a composition of cement and other materials, and the mass is molded while soft into the desired shapes. Lying about one sees various molds for table tops, brackets, urns, mantles, cornices, paper weights, etc. When the mosaic has hardened it is smoothed and polished like solid marble, and takes a mirror-like finish. The various colors of the marble are made to appear to great advantage by contrast in some articles. For instance, a checkerboard will be laid out in the squares of red and black, alternating, on a table top of gray marble. The makers claim that the composition will last for a long time out of doors, and it has for a long time been used already (more particularly in the West, where it was first introduced) for building fronts, cemetery vaults, tombstones, etc. It will be seen that the marble mosaic has a great advantage in the way of cheapness over solid marble work. The material costs much less than solid marble in the block, while the work of molding, admitting as it does of indefinite duplication, is a less expensive process than cutting by hand. While many may be skeptical about the durability of marble mosaic as an outdoor building material, there is a good demand for the small articles finished for indoor ornaments.

A COLLEGE-BRED FARMER.

He Thinks That Work in the Fields Is the Ideal Existence.

William Henry Bishop, in an article on "Hunting an Abandoned Farm in Upper New England" in the Century, describes the delightful home of a literary man and his family on the shore of Lake Winipisegoo. The house was simplicity itself, he says, rather a camp than a villa, and it purposefully held as little as possible to give a housekeeper any uneasiness.

A son of the family above adverted to was settled about as far from Center Harbor, down Lake Asquam, as was his father from it on Lake Winipisegoo. His pastures rose steeply to the bold crag of Red Hill; in front of him lay long, slender islands, like black steamers at anchor, and across the lake rose upon the view Black Mountain, Whiteface, Rattlesnake Hill, and Chocorua, varying all their tones with the passing hours. The young proprietor was a college man, and had pursued for a while some city occupation; but he had taken to farming out of pure love of it, and not the worst severities of winter had been able to daunt him. He hoed with his men in planting-time, pitched hay with them in haying-time, and lugged his own heavy buckets of sap through the snow in early spring, in maple-sugar time. It was a vindication of the ideal, a testimony to the world of actual, hard physical labor, which, for us, despite the disparagement of the indolent and the maledictions of the working-man who gets something too much of it,—is most desirable, a beautiful, beneficent thing. We please to marvel when a city person goes off heartily into the country, and yet the following paradox is true; namely, that it is city people who are precisely the best fitted for the country. Your average denizen of the country has no appreciation of "natural scenery," never raises his eyes to notice it, scarce knows that it exists; thus he suffers all the disadvantages of the country without its principal compensation.

A New Science.

We have had graphology, phrenology and a dozen other "ologies" for discovering personal characteristics, but the latest in this line is termed "scarpology." And what do you imagine the professor of this new science studies in order that he may tell you what you are or are not? Your old shoes! The doctor examines a shoe which has been worn for at least three months, and draws therefrom the most marvelous deductions. He discovers "between the lines," energy, apathy, anger,—in short, all your weaknesses, large and small. For instance, if the toes and the soles are used evenly, it betrays energy upon the part of a man. With a woman it denotes fidelity, family love, and order. If the external edge of the sole is principally used it shows in either sex obstinacy and aggressiveness. If the pressure is mainly upon the inside edge, it denotes weakness and irresolution upon the part of men—upon that of women, sweetness and modesty. If hereafter you see curious eyes directed to your feet, console yourself with the notion that you are being studied by a "scarpologist."

Printed Poison.

Not long ago a gang of boy bandits was broken up in New Jersey. The boys called themselves Red Rangers. They had built a hut in the woods and were carrying on an extensive plan of plunder and burglary.

They confessed to the Judge before whom they were arraigned that their whole plan was drawn from 5-cent novels, and one of them was reading "Yellow Dick's Last Treachery" when he was caught.

A 16-year-old boy, who entered a house at night in Poughkeepsie and undertook to commit a robbery by first chloroforming a sleeping woman, admitted that he had taken his plot in detail from one of many dime novels he had read.

All this wretched mass of sensational and degrading reading-matter—"literature" is not the word to use—has been truly called our "free institutes for the promotion of brutality and burglary."

News-stands, book-stalls of the poorest kind, railway stalls—all seem to vie with each other in the display of this debasing stuff.

It is time that the right of the public to be saved from having its eyes constantly offended, and its intelligence and sense of decency insulted, should be thought of.

The United States Supreme Court once declared that "No Legislature can barter away the public health or the public morals. Government is organized with a view of their preservation."

Legislation against the public sale of pernicious books for young people might well be extended and enforced.

—Tooth's Companion.

The Exact Moment.

To know by instinct the exact moment at which to stop doing something is an inspiration. Josh Billings never gave sounder advice to his readers than when he admonished them to "stop boring" when they had struck oil, adding by way of information that many a man has bored "clean through," and let the oil "run out at the bottom." A man may successfully tamper with his health up to a certain point and recuperate, if he stops at the right moment, but a day beyond, it is too late. He may enter into business enterprises that yield a handsome profit, if conducted up to a certain point of expenditure, but, elated with success, he goes a step further, and almost before he realizes what has happened, he is over a precipice. The desire for a "little more," has been the rock upon which many a well-built financial ship has been stranded. Like the dog in Aesop's fables, in trying to grasp the second piece of meat, which is but a shadow at best, we lose both.

There are "exact moments" for things also. The proper time to extend sympathy is not always understood by those who feel most deeply for the sorrow of their friends, and thus with the best intentions, the words which soothe only add to the discomfort of the afflicted, and a coolness has risen between those who were once closest companions. The courtesies of life demand that we shall carefully study such points as these, as well as others which are more practical.

Language of Ants.

We are accustomed to think of most of the smaller insects as voiceless, ants among the number. That they had some means of communication we knew, because of thousands of cited instances of concentrated action which could not have been caused by personal instinct, but it has been thought that this communication was rather through the antennae than by any animal sound. Lubbock and Landors, however, became convinced that the little creatures did "voice their sentiments," but in tones too high pitched to be detected by the human ear. Janet, the French naturalist, has gone still further in his experiments in this line, and has at last been able to ingeniously prison the sounds so that we may hear them. The noise that they make is so slight that it is impossible to detect it in a single ant, but by confining a mass of the little creatures between two pieces of glass, in a space surrounded by a ring of putty, a very distinct noise is heard when the glass is held to the ear. It is described as resembling that given out by a liquid lightly boiling in a closed vessel. At times it changes to a "scream" somewhat like that of the cricket, only, of course, very slight in comparison of volume. In no case can any of this be heard unless the insects are disturbed, so they may be considered as notes of warning.

REFUSE to allow some men to impose on you, and they hate you forever.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON

CAREER OF ENGLAND'S GREATEST GENERAL.

The Victories Won by Him Conferred a Crown of Glory Upon His Country—Honors Without Measure Were Showered Upon Him.

Napoleon's Conqueror.

The time may perhaps come when, war being a thing of the distant past, the successful general, through whose efforts a country is victorious over its enemies, will not receive the applause and praise of men. At present, however, we are far from this state, and no man now receives greater honor than he who has led a winning fight. Of men who in modern times have been thus distinguished one of the greatest was Arthur Wellesley, Duke of Wellington. Certainly he was the greatest soldier England has ever produced and one of her finest men.

Arthur Wellesley was born May 1, 1769, in Ireland. From early life he was destined for the career of a soldier and was given a military education in France at the College of Angers. In 1787 he entered the English army and, a few years later, first saw actual service in the Duke of York's army in Holland. In 1796 he went to India with a company of soldiers under his command, where his brother, the Marquis Wellesley, arrived shortly after as Governor General.

The First Victory.

It was here that the young soldier won his first victory. It was during the Maharatta war, and with only a handful of men he came across a large force of the enemy. He completely overcame them, thus securing the brilliant victory of Assage. The victory of Argaum followed and the fort of Gawulghur, supposed to be almost impregnable, also capitulated to Wellesley. For this he received honors at home, was made Knight Commander of the Bath and Chief Secretary of Ireland. He also won a seat in the House of Commons and was publicly thanked by that body for his services.

THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

The next scene of this great soldier's triumphs was Spain and Portugal, whither he went to assist in the expulsion of the French. The battles of Vimiera and Talavera freed Portugal from the French dominion and Wellesley now turned his attention to Spain. During this campaign he won the battle of Salamanca over Soult, one of his most brilliant victories, and finally pursued the French army into France. He received several titles from the English government for these victories, the last being Duke of Wellington, and large grants of money were made him. Again he was formally thanked by Parliament and it may be here noted that twelve times during his career was this special honor paid him. As a crowning glory after his Spanish campaign Wellington was made field marshal of England.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

The Field of Waterloo.

In July, 1814, Wellington was appointed ambassador to France, and in that capacity went to the Congress of Vienna. While this body was sitting Napoleon escaped from Elba, and the sessions were broken up. It seemed probable that Napoleon would go to Belgium, and to this country's defense proceeded an army under Wellington and one from Prussia under Blucher. The battles of Ligny and Quatre Bras were succeeded, June 18, 1815, by the great engagement of Waterloo. It was undoubtedly the greatest battle in modern times. The invincible Frenchman and the undaunted Englishmen met to try conclusions, and on the issue of that contest, it is not too much to say, hung the fate of the world. To recapitulate the events of that memorable day, to show how the French forces were gradually forced to yield until victory was no longer possible, would take too long in this place. There was no question that the victory was in the hands of the English and Prussians, and that the French were no longer to be considered the conquerors of the world.

WALMER CASTLE.
[A country house of the Duke of Wellington, where his death occurred.]

After the battle Wellington marched on Paris and there, at the request of the allied sovereigns, remained for three years in command of the army of occupation. Honors without measure were showered on Wellington by the English Government; large grants of money, an estate, and various high offices were presented to him, while the allied forces gave him medals, decorations and orders.

AMERICAN BOY'S ENGLISH PRIZE

Why H. M. S. Worcester Flew the Stars and Stripes.

Says the Washington Post: Spruille Braden, who died suddenly at the residence of W. E. Clark, No. 301 E street, Northwest, was at one time a famous American boy. In 1878 he graduated at the head of his class on H. M. S. Worcester, winning the Queen's medal for scholarship, carrying off two first prizes and being honorably mentioned.

The story is quite interesting. In 1875 he went from his home, Indianapolis, Ind., where he had received a high school education, to England with his mother, Mrs. M. B. Braden. She had friends there, and the boy, then 15 years old, concluded to try for admission to the training ship, H. M. S. Worcester. He had an English accent, and as no questions were asked as to his permanent home he said nothing. Neither the officers nor his classmates knew that he was an American, and when class-day came, in 1878, great was their surprise to learn that her Majesty's medal had been won by an American, Spruille Braden. There was some complaint, but Commodore Smith, of the Worcester, declared that since an American had fairly won an American should have the medal. Then the flag of the United States was run up the mast of the training ship, which was the first knowledge the Admiralty and the 500 guests from London had that an American boy had carried off the valued prize.

Mr. Braden, then 18 years of age, returned to his home in Indianapolis, and soon after was tendered a place by Secretary of the Navy Thompson in the bureau of yards and docks while a bill which had been introduced in the Senate making him an ensign in the United States Navy was pending. Young Braden accepted the place tendered by the Secretary, and the bill passed the Senate unanimously. There was considerable opposition to the idea of making the plucky young American an ensign over the graduates of Annapolis. The matter was discussed all over the country, fully as many newspapers favoring the appointment as opposing it. But the House of Representatives adjourned before considering it, and Braden, who was naturally modest and retiring, gave up the idea of entering the navy.

Show and Substance.

We suppose it is useless to tell those who have little money to spend, and have worked day and night to get that little, to think twice before they make an outlay of their hard earnings. But we can't refrain from saying, "What a pity!" when we see the children of parents in very moderate circumstances, trussed out in flimsy finery, when good, substantial clothing might have been procured for half the money, in which they would have looked much prettier and more respectable. We often say, "What a pity!" when we see a working-girl flaunting a showy, dress bonnet that ill accords with her gown or shawl. We often say, "What a pity!" when we see a clerk dressed more extravagantly than his employer, or putting into the hire of a dashing carriage all the earnings of a week, or sporting the equipage on the promise of doing so without any expectation of performing that promise. The rainy day of disaster that is sure to follow all this sunshine of folly, they will not see, though disgrace, and sickness, and a workhouse bed, and a nameless grave loom up in the future for many of them. "We can be young but once," is capable of more than one interpretation, as they seem to forget.

Stone for John Boyle O'Reilly's Grave.

According to the Boston correspondent of the Critic there is an interesting history connected with the stone which has been brought from Ireland to mark the grave of John Boyle O'Reilly. More than thirty years ago O'Reilly was in the old churchyard of his younger days, and while in that mood carved his initials, "J. B. O. R.," on a stone of the wall of the church nearest the Boyne. Afterward he spoke of the incident to an old friend in Ireland, saying, "I should like to be buried just under that spot, and, please God, perhaps I may be." His desire has not been carried out, but the rough stone on which he scratched his initials will be placed over his grave at Holyrood, Mass., the guardians of the Drogheda union, who are the custodians of the Dowth graveyard and its contents, gladly sending it as an expression of their regard for the brilliant Irishman.

Overreached Himself.

Do you know how to whistle "Daisy Bell?" asked the man who had advertised for an office boy.

The boy thought that he saw the trend of the question and promptly answered "Naw."

"I guess you won't do then. I wanted a boy who had been through the attack and recovered."—Indianapolis Journal.

SOMEHOW a married man suggests a reserved chair at a country entertainment, with a "Taken" placard lying on it.

"I was told to make yez stand 'round," said the Irish foreman to his gang, "an' the next wan I see doin' a stroke at work, he'll be bounced."—Grip.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PAUK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1902.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PAUK, Editor.

The women in the People's Party never forget their friends. Neither do the men.

We would hate to be the man to vote or work against the amendment and let it be known.

No party like the People's Party, to have a clean slate to begin with, and a good plan it is, too.

It is what the people want in the party that we have. The politicians as a rule are not consulted.

Now the women of Kansas have something to work for, and with all good people working with them they will have nothing to fear.

Had the women the same right under the law to vote that the men now possess, Breckenridge would not dare to again run for Congress.

Let the different parties speak upon the question of female suffrage; if we have friends we want to know it now, and if we have enemies, we want to discover them without delay.

All politicians may have some political wisdom, but the party that fails to meet the issue the women now desire to present, will be put to it in the future for excuses, that will be availing for neglecting to do so.

The women of Kansas may differ on many lines of thought and be honest in their opinions, but they are still suffragists and friends, and under such circumstances their victory for the amendment is sure.

The women of Kansas now beseech each politician and each party for the right the meanest man outside of a penitentiary enjoys; it would be right to aid them; it would be chivalrous to accord it to them, and it would be both cowardice and injustice to refuse.

The day after the convention a gentleman said to us, "Well, you have the plank, and if you win, what will you women do then?" We said, "Why, bless your dear heart, we will keep our offices, from the president down to the road overseers, filled with the best people the world affords, and it will be so well understood that no others will apply."

The political parties of Kansas cannot escape the issue the women of Kansas propose to force upon them. Good warning friends, and if a little later you call on the mountains to fall on you it will be from your own want of wisdom and incapacity to discern the road to justice. Even did we not want your aid, the failure of any party or any men to give women a respectful hearing on the only great question that is now agitated which concerns her, would be characterized by a name worse than folly, and nearer stupidity and cowardice.

We have heard it said how difficult it is to save those who do not want to be saved, and that the majority of women are slow to attempt anything like emancipation. How strongly they oppose being liberated. How willingly they submit and kiss the hand that has smitten them for all these many years, and if the ballot is placed in their hands they will refuse to use it.

Such talk is disgusting in the extreme. If all true, thinking people will but enlighten themselves on the true status of things just as they honestly exist it will be apparent to all, that the majority of the women are uniting their forces on this subject—that of the enfranchisement of their sex. And let me say that all the combined forces of the politicians from all political parties cannot divide them.

We told you so. We knew that the men in the People's Party were strong suffragists. Why, the editor of the Kingman County Journal was so afraid that there were people in his town who did not really know just where he stood on the suffrage plank, and in order to explain things satisfactorily and prove to the doubting ones that he was squarely on the plank with both feet, when he went home from the convention which was held at Topeka, he donned a Mother Hubbard and sun bonnet and marched up the street to the music of two brass bands. And P. P. Elder, of whom the people were a little shaky over, just because he thought a woman should sing bass to be qualified to cast an intelligent ballot, was so much exercised and concerned, "Lest the fair pleaders for the plank should fail, that he came very near making a Repub" speech.

Just think, doubting the sincerity of such people. We should be very careful before rendering our judgment for fear of doing an innocent person injustice. Sisters, you should be on your guard.

Everything will be done by the enemies of the amendment to mislead the people.

The latest thing out is the report that the nominees on the Populist ticket will not speak on and in favor of the suffrage plank.

Such idiocy. Will anyone believe for one moment that those nominees, after having accepted the nomination with the suffrage plank in the platform, would not endorse it, and that they will not advocate and work for it. Why, the man who would be so blind as not to give it his hearty support from the rostrum would be defeated, and would richly deserve to be. Not only that, but the Republicans will speak for the amendment, for the rank and file of that party are solid for suffrage.

We cannot vouch for the nominees on that ticket, but we will give the opposition to the amendment one dollar cash for every speech the nominees on the Populist ticket makes (the governor included) in which they do not speak in favor of suffrage. We know whereof we speak.

EVERYBODY PLEASED.

C. Hoffman, of Enterprise, one of the most prominent delegates at the People's Party convention, (and by the way a German) writes Mrs. Annie L. Diggs in regard to that great bug-bear about the foreign vote. He says:

"Mrs. Annie L. Diggs, Topeka, Kansas:

DEAR MADAM:—I stopped at Manhattan and met lots of people there as well as on the train, everybody, of course, talked about the action of the convention. The enthusiasm which the convention manifested is re-echoed by the men and women of the state, and I predict a most glorious victory both for the amendment and the party. Another point on the 'terrible foreign vote.' I have talked with half a dozen foreigners, some of them leading men, and every one of them is glad it went into the platform. They are decidedly 'for' it."

Now that we have all the good folks on our side, there will be no such thing as fail.—Ed.

There is a woman in Boston that belongs to twenty-two clubs.

The only way to get the upper hand of woman is to be more woman than she is herself.

The most dreadful thing against woman is the character of the men that praise her.

Many women swallow at one mouthful the lie of flattery, and drink truth that is bitter drop by drop.

A Washington woman supports herself by shopping for other women on commission.

There are two hundred and eighty-eight cities in Kansas in which women have municipal suffrage on equal terms with men.

"I would shut every rumhole," says Rev. Bodkin.

Then you would have to shut the mouths of nine-tenths the politicians.

Our little boy was reading a newspaper and asked if "Hon." prefixed to a senator's name meant honest. We told him it did (not).

Women are more loyal to principle than men are. A great many Republicans favor giving the ballot to their partners in life's affairs, but are afraid to proclaim their loyalty.—Topeka State Journal.

General Depression.

General depression in business calls for Humphreys' Specifics. You cannot afford to experiment in hard times. Humphreys' Specifics are economical and sure.

THE EQUAL SUFFRAGE BAND.

BY MRS. JOSIE BOROUGHS.

TUNE—"When the Mists Have Rolled Away."

We are working, bravely working
In the equal suffrage cause;
We would educate the people
That the woman must help make laws;
"Equal rights for all," our motto,
"Special privilege to none,
Peace to all the human family—"
Shall this noble work be done?

CHORUS—

Now the clouds of strife are passing
Will the blindness disappear?
We can see the truth and love it
In the light of this glad year.

Yes, the politician temper
Whispers low his oft told lie,
Scattering now the seeds of mischief
Broadcast over all our land,
Those seeds are yielding a harvest
Of poverty, death and woe,
Of ignorance, crime and madness—
And are we going to help him sow?

CHORUS—

Though men's mistakes are many,
Pause not to count them o'er;
For the present needs our labor,
And it needs it more and more.
Let us then as E. S. A.'s,
Quickly to the rescue fly—
One in heart and one in action
We will conquer bye and bye.

CHORUS—

SHALL WOMEN VOTE?

It is objected that women are already represented by men to whom the world of politics and affairs belongs; and that to give women the ballot would be to increase the numerical vote without altering for the better the proportional vote.

But: First, if all women felt themselves to be represented by the vote of men, no woman would seek a change; second, to give them the suffrage would not only increase the numerical vote, but add a new moral element to political action.

It is objected that this theory of a betterment of morals is an assumption.

But: the theory that no betterment would occur is an assumption also, and one may offset the other.

It is objected on the one hand that women being essentially like men, do not need the vote, and on the other, that being essentially unlike men, they ought not to vote.

But: If they are essentially like men, the State has equal need of their votes, and they have the same right to vote. If they are essentially different, then that difference is the measure of the injustice done them in a denial of the ballot.

It is objected that women ought not to vote, because their physical peculiarities remove them from arduous contact with affairs, and make it necessary that they should give the greater part of their time to the care and rearing of children.

But: as a matter of fact, only a small class of women is sheltered from arduous contact with affairs, and even among these no difficulty is now experienced in adding the most absorbing interests, social, charitable and intellectual, to the duties of the wife and mother. Moreover, there is a large and growing class of intelligent unmarried women, unaffected by this consideration.

It is objected on the one hand that women are too good for politics, and must not be contaminated by them, and, on the other hand, that they are too untrustworthy and too uninformed to be permitted to vote.

But: politics, whether considered as a science or an art, is one of the loftiest studies known to the human mind. Neither man nor woman can be too good for that study; and, if women are untrustworthy and uninformed, then the most efficient remedy for these short comings will be the opportunity and the necessity for improvement which the duty of voting would bring.

It is objected that if women voted they would be liable to military service, to jury duty, and to the holding of office, all of these being impossible to women in the nature of things.

But: the direct relation between voting and bearing arms ceased on the day when soldiers were first hired to fight.

All modern warfare is carried on by paid armies, which the taxes of women help to pay. If it becomes the duty of women to serve on juries, they will doubtless serve with the faithfulness and intelligence that they now bring to charity-boards, church-committees, school-boards and improvement associations. As to further office-holding, conspicuous ability and a general demand for their services would probably induce some women, as these considerations now induce some men, to consent to take office, even against their self-interest. In any case, capacity would be the test of fitness, and not sex.

It is objected that to give women the vote would be to sow dissension in families, because if the husband and wife do not agree as to candidates and measures, quarrels must ensue which would break up family peace.

But: this position is that of the old common law which declares that husband and wife are one and that that one is the husband. Public opinion long ago pronounced this an untenable doctrine, and the statutes of every civilized State expressly disavow and discountenance it. Why should the old theory of the common law be expected to survive in the domain of politics alone?

It is objected that women are too inexperienced and too little accustomed to responsibility to be of value in political affairs.

But: it is experience itself which teaches, and the conferring of responsibility which develops the sense of responsibility, in women as in men.

It is objected that if equal suffrage is acquired, only the ignorant, the vicious, and the unqualified women will vote, while the capable and excellent will forsake the polls.

But: the suffrage is not intended for the capable and excellent only. Every adult citizen is entitled to representation, and it is the duty of intelligence and virtue to instruct and elevate, but not to deny or suppress, the vote of ignorance and vice. Besides it is impossible that the conscience of women, which impels them to constant, daily self-sacrifice in the whole conduct of life, should be silent in the vast concerns of the body politic, or that they should shirk one most important duty while performing all minor ones.

It is objected that even if intelligent and upright women vote, they will find their will set aside by a majority of servile ones, under the dominion of a foreign church.

But: statistics show that even in this city there is a positive numerical preponderance of voters outside this thoroughly organized communion. Again, the influence of the priesthood of this church is on the side of temperance and morality. And yet again, even were this not so, the most un-republican, the most undemocratic, the most un-American sentiment conceivable is that which would disfranchise any sect. The proposition needs only to be stated to be seen in its grotesque impossibility.

Finally, while all the wise and all the foolish objections now offered to the plea for equal suffrage cannot here be stated, it is well to remember that these are objections only; not reasons; far less, the expression of principles. Equal suffrage must come as the next step in the evolution of the Democratic Idea. Men and women, we are all concerned to see that so grave a responsibility comes to a community which has the largeness of mind to overcome its prejudices, the clearness of vision to recognize the changing form of its ideals, the honesty to accept and discharge, in good faith, the new duties which this change must lay upon it.

DR. MARY PUTNAM JACOBI,
MRS. HENRY M. SANDERS,
MRS. ADELE M. FIELDE,
MISS C. A. RUNKLE,
MRS. ROBERT ABBE,
MRS. CHAS. RUSSELL LOWELL,
New York City Committee.

THE THIRD PARTY PROHIBS.

The prohibition state convention at Emporia, nominated the following ticket: Governor, I. O. Pickering; lieutenant governor, H. F. Douthart; secretary of state, J. N. Howard; associate justice, Judge J. R. Silver; auditor, J. F. Perkins; treasurer, Rev. Jas. Murray; attorney general, M. Van B. Bennett; superintendent public instruction, Mrs. A. Allison; congressman-at-large, Major Frank Holsinger. The platform declares for free coinage of silver, 16 to 1; woman suffrage; government control of railroads, telegraphs, etc., even to the extent of ownership if necessary; government issue of legal tender paper money to increase in quantity with increase of population and against issue of liquor permits in Kansas by the federal government. There were seventy-six old soldiers, fifty preachers, and forty women in the convention.

A FEW LEADING QUESTIONS.

Under a representative form of Government such as ours, who should make the laws?

The people.

Do the people make our laws?

No; half of the people are excluded therefrom.

Who makes our laws?

Men.

Do not the laws concern women?

Yes.

May they not take part in making the laws which they must obey?

They may not. Men alone make the laws for men and women.

If women transgress the law who decides the penalty, tries, convicts and punishes them?

Men.

May not mothers help make the laws that decide their legal relations to their children?

No. Men alone do that, and they made the law at first so that in not one state in this Union did any married mother have equal legal control or custody of her children. Their father had the legal ownership of them, and could remove them from the mother's custody with or without her consent. In only six states has this law been changed. Kansas is one of the six.

Why is the law so one-sided?

Because one sex alone has been making the laws.

Who makes the laws that decides the rights of husbands and wives in case of separation?

Men only.

When a husband brutally assaults his wife who shall make the laws to punish him?

Men.

Who makes the laws concerning the property rights of husband and wife?

Men.

Who shall pay taxes?

Men and women.

Is the property of women taxed the same as that of men?

Exactly the same.

Who makes the laws governing taxation?

Men.

Who may say how tax moneys collected from men and women shall be used?

Men only.

May not a capable woman who runs her own farm or other business have a vote in elections that concern her interests as much as those of any man?

No; but the most incapable man in her employ may.

May not a woman of education, who understands the questions of the day, vote?

No; but the most ignorant of men may.

May not the women who teach the boys in our schools vote?

No; but the boys they instruct may vote.

May mothers who have given sons to the state and nurtured them in the fear of God and love of their country—may they not vote?

No.

Why?

Suppose you tell.

Who may vote?

All men, white, black, red and yellow—Indians, Negroes, and naturalized Chinamen, foreigners who have declared their intention of becoming citizens may vote.

And may not women who have spent their lives and substance here and have helped build up this nation and who possess all the essentials to useful voting, vote?

No.

Why not?

Because they are guilty of the crime of being born women.

Does this seem to you to be right? Do you think the women of Kansas should be continued in disfranchisement?

If you regard women as individuals, and if you believe in the principles of your Government, you must concede that it is but simple justice that Kansas women be put in possession of the ballot.

The men of this state are usually broad-minded and progressive. They will vote on the pending Woman Suffrage constitutional amendment on the 6th day of November next. We, their sisters, mothers, wives, daughters, sweethearts and friends, entreat them to vote "Yes," on the amendment. "So mote it be."

WOMEN FOR COXEY'S ARMY.

In a small hall in South Fifth avenue, New York, was held recently one of the most interesting and important meetings ever attended by unemployed women in New York. At this meeting the question of sending a delegation of women to meet Coxey's commonwealth army when it reaches Washington was discussed. The question was put to vote. It was almost unanimously decided that a delegation should go to Washington and meet the army on its arrival there. All those who were anxious to enroll were invited to put their names on the paper lying in front of the chairman. A wild break was made for the sheet. The girls fell over one another in their anxiety to put their names down as volunteers.

Unlike the Dutch Process
No Alkalies
—or—
Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely
pure and soluble.
It has more than three times
the strength of Cocoa mixed
with Starch, Arrowroot or
Sugar, and is far more economical,
costing less than one cent a cup.
It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY
DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.
W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

THERE IS A GOLDEN TIME A DAWNING.

BY IDA M. MADOLE.
TUNE—"Swanee River."

To nature's twin, man and woman,
God gave the earth;
And He trusted its wide dominion
To their united worth.
Oh! listen to the voice Eternal,
Be wise in time--
Ere our nation, like others crumble--
Oh! heed the mandate divine.

CHORUS--

The soul of freedom is waiting
For a truer home,
Where honest hearts in bondage beating,
Shall never again be known.

I see a golden time a dawning
Not far away;
I hear the tramp of footsteps coming
Bringing a better day;
When wrong before the light of reason,
Shall backward roll,
And the bell of truth throughout creation,
A knell to error, shall toll.

CHORUS--

Out from the ranks of honest voters,
I hear a song;
List to the silver tones a pealing
As they are marching long;
All up and down our loved nation
Echoes the sound;
Soon joyous notes of woman's freedom
Shall ring, the whole world around.

AN EYE-OPENER.

EANNY L. FANCHER.

For the Farmer's Wife.

DEAR SUR--My woman she sampled a hull lot o' papers till she finally settled down 'pon yours as bein' the most practical, so I let her hev the money fer to git it rite along, an' I hev been readin' of late the wimmins talks, which 'pears to me as sumwhat nonsensical--nothin' to be wondered at, howsomever, for it sht, an' never kin be, wimmins speer to rite for the papers, an' they allus make a mess on't if they try. But I've been a thinkin' o' givin' in a few o' my ideas, which I'm sure'll prove a sort o' eye opener to these misguided sistren. I, for one'd jest like to go back to the good old days when wimmin knewed their place. Why, when I was a leetle shaver wimmin could't c'lect a sent o' their day's arnins, for 't properly b'longed to their husbands, her time bein' his'n; if she went out to work munny she arned was ritefully his'n. But now, owin' to these rantin' wimmins' rights wimmin, things is changed an' in most of the states property laws is tampered with. If a property is cumulated of course it b'longs to the man, for he's made it all, she haint done nothin' but a leetle housework, an' its perfectly preposterous to think o' sich a thing as her havin' a third to will away in case she died fast--she'd likely give it to her gals, or to some church what don't need it an' her man does need it to carry on his bizness; for he'll hev to marry agin.

The law 'lows 'at men kin take better care o' children so it's all rite for him to giv' 'em away. I believe 'thar's but four states foolish 'nuff to give the mother ekal legalrite to the children. 'Thar is lots o' trouble made by wimmin gettin' out o' their speer. So many on 'em hev got together in W. C. T. U.'s an' other nonsensical doin's, to talk matters over til they hev ben gettin' fanatical like, so they find fault with man's just laws. Let wimmin be kept as of yore at their nittin' an' quilt patchin' an' 'thar'll be no danger. Spinnin' ain't 'expected of 'em nowadays--more's the pity, for the more work wimmin an' gals hev to do the less time they hev to think.

It has all'us been disastrous to giv' larnin' to those you'd keep in subjection, an' this trouble all comes from educatin' galls. My Mandy kin read an rite, an' 'thet's nuff for a woman to no to bring up a family. She's willin' to be rooled by me--as the Bible enjoins 'bout wives; howsomever, sense the temperance craze she's bound to work with those wimmin, an' I've sot my foot down agin it. She's allus ben willin' heretofore to let me go to the polls for, an' promise her I'll vote agin likker, but that I can't do every time for 'tain't popelar and best. She's inclined to worry on 'count o' our boys. A good mother's sort o' like a hen, ready to fite at anything she's feared will go fur her young 'uns. Mandy's a queen in her hum, 'thar I let her rool, only I don't low no nonsense with my money. I give her 25 cents now an' then when she asks for it, provided she tells how it's to be spent--she noes better'n to buy any gew-gaws. An' she's sartin to never darken my doors agin if she thinks o' votin, so she never will. Like meny another sensibel woman she's satisfied with her rights. She's willin' to work an' slave a hull life time as wife an' mother, an' to die at last a beggar--an' I'm willin' that she should.

Yours, truly,
ZACHARIAN HARDHACK.

It Grows in Texas, It's Good.

The Texas Coast country vies with California in raising pears, grapes, and strawberries. The 1893 record of H. M. Stringfellow, Hitchcock, Texas, who raised nearly 80,000 worth of pears from thirteen acres, can be duplicated by you.

G. T. Nicholson, G. P. A. Santa Fe Route, Topeka, Kansas, will be glad to furnish without charge an illustrated pamphlet telling about Texas.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BETHANY, NEB., May 25, 1894.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Topeka:

DEAR MADAM:--Your paper accidentally fell into my hands, and I want to congratulate you for your efforts in getting out such a neat and splendid monthly. I notice the sisters of Kansas have formed the "Woman's Progressive Political League," with "clubs" here and there. This is a grand move in the right direction. Just what I have been urging the women of our state to do for a year. May success attend all your efforts to uplift humanity. Please inform me when the Woman's League was organized, how much of an organization you have in your state, number of members, etc. Please send me constitution and circulars if you can. Perhaps while I am traveling over the state I might get subscriptions for your paper. I send you a copy of the first document ever written in Nebraska to inaugurate a political movement against both old parties in Nebraska. My pen wrote every line, and little did I think in April, 1890, that the effort a few were making here in an obscure way would so soon result in the "National People's Party," and the "Omaha Convention," and "Platform of Principles." I have been in the front of the fight in this state, this makes the fourth year, and I propose to remain in the work until victory perches upon our banner and a People's Party president is in the White House, backed by an overwhelming majority in Congress that will inaugurate a new regime for this Nation, on principles that recognize the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. Yes, women, too. God bless the women. We have very many noble women in this state who are battling as best they can for humanity. But I must stop short.

Fraternally yours in the work,
W. F. WRIGHT,
State Organizer of "Nat'l Alliance Aid."

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Topeka:

DEAR MADAM:--You will find enclosed an order for your very worthy paper, THE FARMER'S WIFE. Also a request or an inquiry regarding the Woman's Progressive club or Woman's Alliance. The Republican ladies have had a club organized for several months at this place and are very energetic in their work. Is there not some way that we can organize at this place that will help our work along in this community. If so, please give us the needed information. I have written several letters regarding this matter, and made no headway yet, but perseverance and pluck may accomplish something in that line yet. I am a farmer's wife, and I assure you that we need to educate ourselves up to a much higher standard than we are at present. There must be something done to bring before and educate the wives and daughters of the farmers to a better understanding of what is needed and required for their personal interests as regards woman's suffrage and temperance. I do wish we could have a good lecture and organize. I am sure there are many ladies who would fall into line. The Republican ladies of our town boast of their intelligence. It makes me very indignant, while I do know that we have fully as much intellect and talent, if they only had a chance to bring it out. Yours fraternally,
MRS. M. E. RICKERTS.

LE ROY, KAN., May 30, 1894.

Mrs. Emma D. Pack, Topeka:

I received copies of your FARMER'S WIFE. I like it so well and am so "chuck" full of suffrage I send twenty-five cents for it till after the Amendment carries (for it will). I also enclose a little "tidbit" you may publish. I write for four or five papers, as that seems to be my "forte" in the cause. We have a club here of which I am secretary and am also county president. We must work hard. I would like something in your next paper about the County Fair in October, by suffragists, that I may be posted and post my friends. We will try and help some way.

Yours for justice,
ALICE M. DAVID.

THE WOMAN'S PROGRESSIVE POLITICAL LEAGUE.

The Woman's State league held a large and enthusiastic meeting at Hamilton hall, the evening before the People's State convention. Fully 3,000 people were present. The following was the programme:

Five-minute speeches by Emma D. Pack, on "Women's Organizations;" C. J. Tucker, on "The Truth;" Carrie E. Tiffany, on "When Doctors Disagree;" Elizabeth Wardall, on "Sioux Indians versus Dakota Women;" Anna Champe, on "Backbone;" Emma Trounder, on "Office Seekers;" Anna C. Wait, on "Our Forefathers;" Fannie R. Vickery, on "Our Foremothers;" Eva L. Corning, on "Progress of Women;" E. W. Crumb, on "What of the Future;" Eva M. Blackman, on "City Government;" and last, but not least, Althea P. Stryker, on "Political Sense"--all won their just meed of praise, and showed us that the women of Kansas were thinking, acting and speaking when opportunity was afforded them to do so.

The following resolution was adopted: WHEREAS, The People's Party of Kansas in convention assembled, standing upon the high moral grounds which they have hitherto occupied, have proved their devotion to the fundamental principles of the party, equal rights to all and special privileges to none, by placing in the party platform an indorsement of the pending constitutional amendment; therefore we, the People's Party women, reaffirm our allegiance to all the principles enunciated in the platform, and pledge to the party our united and hearty support.

A GOOD ONE.

BURLINGTON, KAN., June 3, 1894.

Dr. J. Y. Simpson:

DEAR DR.:--I know you are pleased to hear from any of those who have taken treatment under you, hence this letter. New converts to any doctrine, belief, creed or practice are proverbially enthusiastic in their statements concerning the same, and as I am a recent graduate of your school and therefore not qualified from personal experience to speak of the lasting effects of the Keeley treatment, I will try and avoid any "gushing" enthusiasm regarding the cure, but will briefly as possible give you my impressions, "before and after taking."

One of the most remarkable things that struck me "before taking" was the fact that those who had taken the cure should exhibit such an inordinate desire to advertise their past deplorable condition and weakness before the public. I saw that educated, refined and sensitive men published their past abasement and their reclamation, knowing that the world would see and read of it. I could not understand it. And when I read the statement that a large class of graduates from some Institute left their club room with banners flying, their hats waving in the air, with shouts that would discount a "cow boy," I confess that a feeling of disgust came over me. All this "before taking."

I had never had an opportunity to see or talk with any one who had taken the cure, and when I entered the Institute I felt as I presume all others do under the same circumstances, "That while many were cured, or thought they were, mine was an exceptional case and there was very little hope for me," but a few days works a wonderful transformation in one's feelings and thoughts, in fact the change commences immediately. Those who are taking the cure use their utmost endeavors to remove from your mind every possible doubt as to the certainty of an absolute cure. They lay bare all their past life, the condition they were in when they commenced the treatment, and their present condition and feelings. Visitors come in who took the treatment from three months to three years before. They give you their past history and their present condition and feelings, and assure you of the absolute certainty of a permanent cure. A feeling of confidence takes possession of you. Your thoughts and feelings undergo a wonderful change, and an irresistible impulse seizes you to "cry aloud from the house top," to publish the glad tidings to the world that others in like condition may seek the only salvation there is for the liquor habit. This feeling becomes stronger, day by day, as you feel the effects of the treatment in your own person and continue to hear from others who have had a thorough test of its efficiency by time. If any feeling existed in your mind that it was a disgrace to take the cure, that feeling passes away like mist before the morning sun. You soon feel you are doing the noblest act of your life, and that the disgrace consists in your actions for many years past that necessitated your taking the cure. There is just as much propriety in saying it is a disgrace for a sinner to repent--come forward to the mourners' bench and seek forgiveness and salvation; or that it is a disgrace to be taken to a hospital for treatment of any disease. The liquor and morphine habits are a disease for which there is no salvation in this world other than the Keeley cure. There is no comparison, however, that can be made as to the feelings of the patient while being treated for this disease with his feelings while being treated for other diseases. Each day he finds himself growing physically and mentally stronger. He feels absolutely certain of a permanent cure. The future looks bright and hopeful, and when he steps from the Institute, at the close of four weeks' treatment, he feels that he "has been torn again"--"snatched from the jaws of death, out of the gates of hell." Who on earth have a better right to shout, wave their hats and banners and make the welkin ring with their glorious shouts of redemption. For years they have been star actors in that thrilling drama of "Ten barrooms in a night and an hour in each," and at the close of each performance have found themselves in the condition of

"The smiling young woman of Nigar Who went out to ride on a tiger; At the end of the ride She came back inside, With her smile on the face of the tiger."

And they shout the glad tidings, that the Keeley "shot" has knocked the tiger "out of time," and that the smile will never again leave their own face, but continue to grow and broaden as time passes.

Well, Doctor, I have just glanced over this letter and I notice that I commenced by saying, that as a new convert I would try and not "gush over" with enthusiasm. I think the thought will occur to you as you read it, "Well, if he writes this way when he don't 'gush,' what kind of a letter would he write if he did 'gush'?" Doctor, I can't help it. While you eradicate one disease, you inoculate us with two others--cacethes loquendi and cacethes scribendi. There is nothing serious or very dangerous in either, unless the Keeley cure is mentioned in our presence, then the disease is liable to break out in violent eruptions, of which the above and foregoing is a sample. When one is taking the cure he feels the force of the truism, "That man's extremity is God's opportunity," and he further feels that Dr. Keeley is the agent selected to take advantage of that opportunity. And if he feels "a rage for speaking," or "an itch for scribbling" about the cure, who shall say him nay? With kind regards to the class, I am
Yours truly,
B. L. KINGSBURY.

How's This!

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure.

F. J. CHENEY & CO., Props., Toledo, O. We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligation made by their firm. West & Truax, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O.

Walding, Kinnear & Marvin, Wholesale Druggists, Toledo, O. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Price, 75c. per bottle. Sold by all Druggists. Testimonials free.

That Summer Vacation.

It pays to get away from work once in a while. No money is ever more wisely spent than for a vacation, no matter how brief. It pays to go to the right place and travel over the most comfortable line getting there. The right place for Kansas is in the Rocky Mountains, where the air is pure and dry, and the hills are sky high. The right way to go is over the Santa Fe Route, on the through vestibule trains to Pueblo, Colorado Springs, Denver or Glenwood Springs. Rates are way down this year. Inquire of nearest Santa Fe Route Agent.

RUDY'S PILE SUPPOSITORY

Is guaranteed to cure Piles and Constipation, or money refunded. 50 cents per box. Send stamp for circular and Free Sample to MARTIN RUDY, Lancaster, Pa. For sale by W. R. KENNADY, Druggist, N. E. corner Fourth and Kansas Ave., Topeka, Kansas.

A CHANCE TO MAKE MONEY.

I have berries, grapes and peaches, a year old, fresh as when picked. I use the California Cold Process; do not heat or seal the fruit, just put it up cold, keeps perfectly fresh, and costs almost nothing; can put up a bushel in ten minutes. Last week I sold directions to over 120 families; anyone will pay a dollar for directions, when they see the beautiful samples of fruit. As there are many people poor like myself, I consider it my duty to give my experience to such, and feel confident anyone can make one or two hundred dollars round home in a few days. I will mail sample of fruit and complete directions, to any of your readers, for eighteen two-cent stamps, which is only the actual cost of the samples, postage, etc., to me.

MRS. WILLIAM BAIRD, E. E. Pittsburg, Pa.

For the Boys

HOW (with useful presents) for 10c and ad- dresses of 10 married ladies. Box E, Athens, Ga.

The West and South Must Now Draw the

On the old humbug East. Get the best in the Northwest, with great combination offer for one year--Northwest News Illustrated weekly, Independent, Cosmopolitan Magazine, of New York, and a St. Louis of Dr. Gould's Magic Liniment, greatest of all wound dressing and healer without a scar--$2.50 for the three.

Northwest News Publishing Co., Grand Forks, N. D.

FLORIDA SHELLS. A box of nice and beautiful Sea Shells sent upon receipt of $1.00. Address, CHAS. HUGHINS, Box 302, Pensacola, Fla.

GREY HAIR MADE DARK By a Harmless Home Wash. Will also make the hair grow. Full directions for 25 cts. Mrs. Hunter, 2660 Lucas Av., St. Louis.

THREE MINUTE TALKS

ABOUT

NEW MEXICO

Is the title of an illustrated folder describing the farms, ranches, mines and towns of New Mexico. The profits of fruit raising are set forth in detail; also facts relating to sheep, cattle, and general farming. No other country possesses such a desirable climate all the year round. Write to G. T. Nicholson, G. P. A. A. T. & S. F. R. R., Topeka, Kas., for free copy.

SANTA FE ROUTE.

FREE TO ALL!

For only 10 cents to pay for a subscription to our 32-page family journal, we will send you, absolutely free:

FINE 18K ROLLED GOLD RING, BEAUTIFUL BREAST PIN, COLLAR BUTTON, PEN AND PENCIL, HANDKERCHIEF, KEY RING AND TABLET, AND 100 PICTURES.

This great package of goods sent free, as above, or we forfeit $100. Address, C. R. VICTOR & CO., 61 Park Place, P. O. Box 1356, New York.

General or local Agents $75 a week. Exclusive territory. The Rapid Dish Washer, Washes all the dishes for a family in one minute. Washes, rinses and dries them without wetting the hands. You push the button, the machine does the rest. Bright, polished dishes, and cheerful smiles. No scalded fingers, no soiled hands or clothing. No broken dishes, no mess, cheap, durable, warranted money maker. W. P. HARRISON & CO., Clerk No. 12, Columbus, O.

AGENTS $75 A WEEK using or selling PRACTICAL PLATING DYNAMO. The dynamo method, used in all factories to plate new goods. Plates gold, silver, nickel, etc., on watches, jewelry, table-ware, bicycles and all metal goods; fine outfit for agents; different sizes; always ready; no battery; no oil; no experience; no limit to plating money; a grand money maker. W. P. HARRISON & CO., Clerk No. 15, Columbus, Ohio.

PATENTS

Promptly secured. Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels registered. Twenty-five years experience. We report whether patent can be secured or not, free of charge. Our fee not due until patent is allowed. 32 page Book Free. H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

AGENTS $10 a day at home selling LIGHTNING PLATER and plating Jewelry, Watches, table-ware, Bicycles, etc. Plates finest jewelry gold as new, and on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. Anyone can plate the first effort. Goods need plating at every house. Outfit complete. Different sizes, all warranted. Wholesale to agents $5 up. Big profits, good seller. Circulars free. H. F. Delno & Co. Dept. M. 6, Columbus, O.

$25 to $50 per week, to Agents, Ladies or Gentlemen, using or selling "Old Reliable Plater." Only practical way to replace rusty and worn knives, forks, spoons, etc.; quickly done by dipping in metal solution. No experience, polishing or machinery. This plate at one operation; lasts 5 to 10 years; does finish when taken from the plater. Every family has plating to do. Plater sells readily. Profits large. W. P. Harrison & Co., Columbus, O.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE.

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

KANSAS AMENDMENT 1894.

These Badges can be had by addressing the FARMER'S WIFE, Topeka, Kas. 10 cents each, $1.00 per dozen, $8.00 per 100.

WHEN WE PLANT THE TREE.

What do we plant when we plant the tree?
We plant the ship which will cross the sea,
We plant the mast to carry the sails;
We plant the planks to withstand the gales—
The keel, the keelson, and beam, and knee;
We plant the ship when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we plant the tree?
We plant the houses for you and me,
We plant the rafters, the shingles, the floors,
We plant the studding, the lath, the doors,
The beams and siding, all parts that be;
We plant the house when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we plant the tree?
A thousand things that we daily see;
We plant the spire that out towers the crag,
We plant the staff for our country's flag,
We plant the shade from the hot sun free;
We plant all these when we plant the tree.
—Henry Abbey.

TOLD ON THE RAIL.

"Are you all right, ma'am?"
"All right, thank you."

The engineer jerked a cord that let loose a horrible, long, shrill whistle, and moved a great steel bar at my side that I watched with awful suspicions of oil and heartrending fears regarding my new peacock-blue silk dress.

The grimy-faced fireman pulled open the door of the furnace and with much clatter poked at the fire within, then shoveled in some coal, clashed the door shut, and we were off.

And all this happened in a mere trifle of the time that it has taken to tell it.

I looked at my watch.

It was 7 o'clock and broad daylight, for the time was summer.

Seven o'clock and the wedding was at 8 and we had fifty miles to go!

I suppose my face had an anxious look when I turned it toward the engineer, meeting his full gaze.

"Oh, I'll get you there in time, ma'am; I'm bound to. We'll make the fifty miles in fifty minutes, and weddin's mostly never are on time. And the Superintendent telegraphed you'd be there."

"Did he. That was very good of Cousin John. I was so flurried that I never thought of that."

And I felt relieved, as I judiciously gave another tuck to my silken robes.

As I did so, I received a dreadful jar, that caused me to drop them again, and materially decreased my mental temperature.

A realization was forced upon me of the frightful way in which we were dishing over the rails; while at the same time, the atmosphere within the engine grew hotter and hotter.

With desperate efforts, I learned to maintain my center of gravity, though, as I gathered together again my breath and my robes, I clasped despairingly the window ledge beside my high seat.

Presently, as one will grow accustomed to any situation, I became quite used to the frantic bounds of our madly-speeding conveyance, and even commenced to take some interest in my surroundings.

But to me, all unused to this novel and frightful way of traveling, the fleeting landscapes and flying villages were only productive of a decidedly unpleasant, dizzy sensation.

"We are traveling at a terrible rate," said I to the engineer.

He saw that I had spoken, but as I had not pitched my voice nearly loud enough for him to distinguish the words he called out:

"What is it, ma'am?"

"We're traveling with terrible rapidity," I almost screamed. "Are you sure there is no danger?"

"Oh, no! none whatever, ma'am; this is a perfect engine."

"I suppose you are accustomed to it," I ventured. "Cousin John said you were one of the oldest engineers on the road."

"Yes," he said, brightening up.

"I was an engineer here when the Superintendent was only a little boy, the son of a conductor; but you see we don't often have a call to travel like this, and I'm not likely to forget the first time I did it."

I saw by his looks that the reminiscence was a pleasant one, and, to encourage him to converse, asked:

"Why? Did something happen?"

"Well, I reckon something did happen," he said, emphatically, getting as near to me as the consistent performance of his duties would allow.

"I would like to hear about it," I shouted, sympathetically.

"Well, ma'am, you see I was a young feller then, only just promoted to be an engineer; an' there came an awful storm that lasted about three days.

"Everything went right along the road until the third day, when late in the afternoon they commenced to get worried in the office, because something was the matter with the wires.

"They couldn't git no messages; and an Eastern train that had been due for half an hour had not been heard from along our part of the line.

"It stormed awful! just as if it never meant to stop!

"The rain came down in bucketfuls, and the wind was blowin' a roarin' hurricane, to say nothin' of the thunder and lightning that commenced about dark.

"Well, I didn't run no regular train yet. I was kept about the yard shifting cars and the like and goin' out on specials; and as I was loadin' in my engine, thinkin' that I blessed my stars I hadn't to be on the road such a night, who should jump up in my box but the old superintendent himself, and a dreadful grave face he had, too.

"Abe," says he, "do you think you could take engin' number 4, the Lightning, and carry me down to Coon's Creek faster than you ever went before in your life?"

"I reckon I could, sir," says I.

"Very well; call Morris,"—Morris was the fireman—"and I'll be with you in two minutes."

"Well, sir," said my companion, getting so excited that he quite forgot his passenger was of the female sex; "in five minutes we was just a-flyin' along that road like mad, with the storm howlin' all around us, and the rain fairly sizzlin' down on the engin'."

"Morris and I kept a sharp lookout, with our hearts lyin' pretty near our throats; for we wasn't very sartin as to what minute we might come to some unlucky end.

"You see, the road wasn't no double-tracker, all the way, in those days; we had passed two out-trains waitin' at stations for the delayed Eastern; and thought we might just as likely as not telescope into it along the track. And you see that wasn't a very cheerful thought, with us travelin' at the rate of nearly a mile a minute.

"The old superintendent said never a word; but he couldn't even smoke the cigars he lighted, o'ly kept bitin' the ends off and pitchin' 'em away.

"And when we got down into the Coon County, in the long stretches of wood—we'll soon be a-passin' through 'em, ma'am—the wind was jest a tearin' at trees and made the limbs and shades beat across the track, that even with the light of the engin' we couldn't always make out what they was; and a dozen times or so Morris and I looked at each other a sort of good-by.

"But at last we flew out of the shades, almost down by Coon Creek.

"You see, 'twas a dangerous sort of a place; first the creek, with a narrow bridge—and one track across it, and then a high bit of land, through which the road had been cut with a sudden curve.

"Well, we were just a-sweepin' near enough to see that the creek was awfully swollen, when Morris gave a scream.

"Good heavens!" says he, "there's a woman on the bridge!"

"I looked, and sure enough there she was; taking careful steps from one plank to another, with the river a-rushin' beneath her.

"Abe," says the superintendent, "stop the engine! for heaven's sake, stop the engine!"

"I can't, sir," says I. "It's too late," and just then she saw the light of the engin', turning round, and threw up her arms; and there we were, bearing down upon her—though Morris was slowing up the best he could.

"A sudden thought came to me.

"There wasn't but one chance in ten for the woman's life, and that chance I'd give her, for the sake of the mother and sister I loved at home.

"I sprang out on the engin', and down to the cow-catcher.

"The bridges, as I said afore, was narrow; and it hadn't so much as a plank of sidin'.

"I reached my place just in time. Another minute and she would have been lost—so young and pretty she was, too.

"As we came down upon her—she standin' there, balanced on one of the logs—I gathered all my strength, and flung her into the river."

"Good gracious!" cried I, wrought up to a state of intense excitement by the narrative, "I thought you were going to try and save her!"

"That's just what I'm a-tellin' you," said the engineer. "You see, by the time we got across the bridge we slowed up. Now, sir," says I to the superintendent, "I'm a good swimmer. Can I go in after the girl?"

"Yes," says he, "and, Morris, you take a lantern and go on ahead along the track, and give me the other, and I'll see if I can help Abe, here, rescue the girl."

"I just hopped right into Coon's Creek.

"I knew the current would bring her toward our bank, only a little lower down.

"And sure enough I found her, and got her out in no time; and, if you'll believe me, the plucky little thing was a-clingin' to an oil can she had, and as soon as she opened her eyes called out:

"I'm all right! Take the oil—quick, quick!"

"Take the oil for what?" says I, thinkin' she must be somethin' wrong in the head.

"But just then I saw Morris' lantern come rushin' back along the track, like mad, and he a-screamin' to the superintendent.

"There's been a land-slide round in the cut, and the wires are broken, and the rails half-covered with sand and stones!"

"Yes, that's it," said the girl, "and the Express hasn't come yet!"

"And then she closed her eyes, as if she had done her duty, and left the rest with us.

"Well, the Superintendent sent Morris round the other end of the cut with his lantern, and when the express came along, twenty minutes after, he succeeded in stoppin' her;

for, you see, she was a-runnin' kinder careful like, owin' to the damage done by the storm, and her bein' so behindhand.

"So you see there wasn't no catastrophe; though likely there'd been one if she sailed over so lightly into the cut, or if we had either.

"Of course, there was a good deal of delay, and I s'pose some of the people grumbled 'cause they didn't get nothin' to eat till next day.

"But there always will be some unreasonable folks in every crowd."

"And the girl?" I asked anxiously.

"Oh, she was all right, and folks made no end of a fuss over her.

"You see, she kept house for her father in a small cottage the other side of the creek; and he was taken with a pretty severe attack of rheumatism, and sent her to the nearest neighbor's toward Coon's Corners, to get him some liniment; and she discovered the landslide and hurried home, and the old man, knowin' the Express hadn't gone by, sent her back with oil to build a signal."

"Have you ever seen her since?" I asked greatly interested.

The fireman grinned and the engineer smiled at me patronizingly as he answered:

"Yes, ma'am, I see her mostly every day, now. You see, she and I've been married these fifteen years. Ah, here we are at Coon's Creek."

"What!" said I, looking out upon the splendid iron bridge we were crossing. "This is Lynwood River, and we're almost at Lynwood!" I added, with delight.

"Yes, ma'am; but this used to be called Coon's Creek, and Lynwood was Coon's Corners. Here we are. It still wants seven minutes to 8 and I guess those ladies and gentlemen waitin' over there are your friends."—Boys of England.

RED IT WASN'T OPEN.

Critical Purchase on Which Depended the Fate of a Business Policy.

"The trouble with us," said the druggist thoughtfully, "is that we don't keep open late enough. There is lots of late business at a drug store, and a man will patronize that store in the daytime that he is obliged to patronize at night. It would pay us to keep open later, and not rely so much on the night bell."

The partner was a little doubtful, and called attention to the extra expense of gas and a clerk, but he finally gave in, the main argument being that the late sales would certainly pay the extra expense, and that the number of regular patrons secured would result in a profit.

Both staid up the first night, one enthusiastic, and the other skeptical. One explained that, of course, they couldn't expect a customer to drop in the first thing, and the other remarked that he would be surprised if they sold enough in three nights to pay for the gas burned by one jet in half an hour.

They watched the people who occasionally passed the store and the partner shrugged his shoulders and said "see?" every time a man went by.

It was pretty nearly time to close up when a boy came in and bought a 10-cent package of cigarettes. The druggist would have enjoyed throwing the boy out, as he heard his partner laugh, but he refrained. It was nearly midnight, and the extra two hours they had remained open had resulted in a profit of a cent or a cent and a half.

Then a man came hurrying along the street. He saw the light in the window and made a bee line for the store.

"Here he comes," exclaimed the druggist joyfully. "Some one sick sure. I tell you we ought to keep open for humanity's sake if not for profit."

"George! I was afraid I wouldn't find you open," exclaimed the man as he entered.

"We intend to remain open till 12 or 12:30 after this," explained the druggist as he went around behind the counter.

"It's a good thing, a good thing," said the man approvingly. "One can never tell when he may need something from a drug store. Give me three 2-cent stamps, please."

Not a word was said as they closed and locked the doors. The druggist did not feel like saying anything, and the partner thought it dangerous. And the next night they closed between 9 and 10 as they had formerly done.

Lost Dignity.

Irish viceroys are stripped of their sovereign attributes as soon as they reach English waters, which gives point to the following story told of Lord Loughton and a lady with whom he was acquainted. They both found themselves on board the Holyhead packet. During the voyage from Ireland the lady treated the Viceroy with ceremony and respect.

So soon, however, as the packet entered Holyhead harbor she said to him, "Now, Bobby, you're no longer a viceroy, so take my bag and make yourself useful."—London Truth.

The insane asylum is crowded, so stop worrying. The cemetery is getting new inhabitants every day: take care of your health, or you will be one of them.

AH SIN PLAYING IRISH MUSIC.

A Chinese Fiddler Who Prefers Celtic Melodies to Melican Tunes.

Extensive as is every San Franciscan's knowledge of the city's Chinatown, says the Call, nowhere can be found a citizen who had any recollection of hearing of a Chinese who played popular airs on a violin with any sort of a touch that is suggestive of early training and an ardent admiration for music. But Lee Fong is just such a heathen prodigy, with a history that is of exceeding interest. They call him "Tom Flanagan," for, strange to relate, the boy has a liking for Irish airs and melodies and plays them in preference to the compositions of German or American composers. Tom came to California, about eight years ago. He first listened to the playing of a violin at a theater in Oakland. He liked "Melican music," and often stood for hours at a park or open-air concert listening to a brass band discourse popular airs. Finally the idea struck him that it would be possible for him to learn to play the fiddle, so straightaway he hied him to a second-hand store, where he purchased a violin for $6.

"Me no like China music," said he with a contemptible sneer. "Too much dum, dum, too muchee squeak."

With the help of a German, who jokingly undertook to give Tom preliminary instruction in the production of harmonious sounds, the Chinese learned to handle the bow with considerable dexterity. His advance was rapid, and in less than two years, Tom could do musical justice at any country hoe-down, and inspire even a more elevated social gathering with exhilaration when he drew music out of the violin strings.

"Ilish music heep lively," said Tom, as he drew his finger along his violin bass string. "You like me play for you?"

"By all means."

"I play."

"The Wearing of the Green," "Kil-larney," and an Irish jig followed. Tom's arm swung with an easy motion and his foot beat time. His eyes dilated a little and his mouth twitched, showing that he felt in his very soul the vibrations of the sweet Celtic melodies.

A TABLE CONSERVATORY.

How One May Be Made to Grace Your Summer Drawing-Room.

Somewhere about the house you may have a small table which is of no special use. Look it up and convert it into a little conservatory fit to grace your summer drawing-room. You don't know how to do it? Well, here is the plan to follow:

The preparatory work is accomplished by a coat of white enamel. After this is thoroughly dry, cut a round hole in the center of the table, just large enough for a deep tin can to be fitted in. Fill this with water and then place your flowers within. They may be changed each morning, and will keep fresh all day. Another pretty idea is to fill the tin pan with earth and have ferns growing there.

A TABLE CONSERVATORY.

Let some flowering vine be in the center, trained to wind itself about the legs of the table.

Gets His Own Price.

Though Mr. F. Marion Crawford probably earns more money by his pen than any other living writer he is perhaps not so well paid in proportion to the amount of work that he does as is Mr. T. B. Aldrich. As a matter of fact, Mr. Aldrich always puts his own price on his work, and he is always sure of getting it. One magazine of New York City takes everything that he sends it. He simply writes the price in a corner of the MSS., and it is paid. What a delightful aspect of literary success this presents! A few weeks ago an editor wrote to Mr. Aldrich: "Won't you please drop a poem into our slot and draw out as much money as you want for it?" Mr. Aldrich dropped a dozen lines, as directed, and drew out $30."—New York Recorder.

THE YOUNG DOCTOR—"Just think, six of my patients recovered this week." The Old Doctor—"It's your own fault, my boy. You spend too much time at the club."—Life.

"THAT'S what I get for my pains," sobbed the small boy, as he swallowed a dose of castor oil.—Philadelphia Record.

"I feel it a Duty

To tell the world that Hood's Sarsaparilla has saved my life. I had dizzy spells, nausea and pains in my side, caused by bad condition of my liver and kidneys. Soon after I commenced to take Hood's Sarsaparilla I began to feel better.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

I took four bottles and I now consider myself a well woman." Mrs. PAULINE RUBY, Buffalo, Iowa. Be sure to get only Hood's.

Hood's Pills are purely vegetable, 25c.

WE WILL MAIL POSTPAID a fine Panol Picture, entitled "MEDITATION" in exchange for 25 Large Lion Heads, cut from Lion Coffee wrappers, and a 2-cent stamp to pay postage. Write for list of our other fine premiums, including books, a knife, game, etc. Woolson Spice Co., 450 Huron St., Toledo, Ohio.

The fisheries question: Did you bring the fish?

The bill-poster knows his place, and there he sticks.

Summer Resorts of the East via Vandalia and Pennsylvania Short Lines.

The short route from St. Louis and the only one over which fast express trains run to Cresson, Altoona and other retreats in the Alleghenies, to which Tourist Tickets at reduced rates will be sold during the season. For reaching the Adirondacks, the White Mountains, the Catskills, and places of summer sojourn in Eastern New York, Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine, these lines offer exceptional advantages, being the most direct to New York, where connection is made for any of the retreats in the mountains of the east. Newport, Fall River, Narragansett Pier, Nantucket, Martha's Vineyard and the delightful resorts down on Cape Cod, are readily reached from New York, from which point passengers have choice of rail route or palatial steamers of the Fall River Line. Atlantic City, Cape May, Long Branch, Asbury Park, Ocean Grove, and resorts on the New Jersey coast are reached via Philadelphia or New York over divisions of the Pennsylvania System. For details address J. M. Chesbrough, A. G. P. Agent, St. Louis, Mo.

THE only thing that can keep you out of Heaven is your keeping Heaven out of you.

No one can serve God and mammon at the same time, but a great many try to.

You can tell about how much people love God by the way they treat His children.

Men are very often most like the devil when they think they are doing God a service.

The devil never gets tired of shooting where he can now and then make a doubt stick.

The people who live in the dark are not those whose hearts are full of God's promises.

The devil never runs from the preacher who attends theaters, and base ball matches.

The devil likes to be around when a wicked man is preached into Heaven at his funeral.

No man can get rich anywhere who undertakes to do without asking permission from God.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

IS NOT HORSERADISH.

MONKSHOOD RESEMBLES THIS ROOT, BUT IS POISONOUS.

Bought the Roots of a Peddler, and Were Brought Near to Death's Door—Another Family Poisoned by Sardines—Dangerous Pushcart Men.

New York Family Stricken.

One of the most serious dangers which test the vigilance of the careful housewife was forcibly illustrated by a couple of instances in New York the other day. In one case six persons were poisoned by eating monks-

HORSEADISH—LEAVES, FLOWERS, AND FRUIT.

hood roots which had been bought of a pushcart man for horseradish and in the other three were poisoned by sardines which had been purchased of one of the same class of itinerant merchants. One of the victims, Jacob Sarason, who thinks now he was very near death from eating the poisonous monkshood, with his wife and three children and Abraham Cohen as a boarder, lives at 136 Madison street. The peddler came down Madison street the other afternoon calling out horseradish. Mrs. Sarason bought two roots from him. When her daughter Aul began scraping them for the evening meal she noticed that one of the roots was softer than the other and not nearly so pungent in smell.

The Sarason family, with their boarder, sat down to a dinner of fish and horseradish at 7 o'clock on Friday night. Mr. Sarason complained of feeling ill about 9 o'clock. His lips began to burn and his tongue felt as if it were swelling. He had a pain around his heart and an intense nausea. His head ached and there were shooting pains in his face, and altogether he was a very sick man. Mrs. Sarason developed the same symptoms, and then one after another the members of the household except the daughter, Aul, succumbed. They were very much frightened, and so were all the neighbors, who suspected that pestilence had got into the house. Miss Aul ran to a drug store for help. Before she reached it she was stricken down and she was carried back helpless. A doctor was summoned and when he learned that the family had been eating horseradish he diagnosed the cases as acute aconite poisoning. Opium, which is a partial antidote for this poison, was administered.

Monkshood does not closely resemble horseradish, although it is frequently mistaken for it. With a little care it can be readily distinguished, especially if it is in flower, for the flowers are blue and of a peculiar hood shape, while horseradish flowers are white. The root has not the pungent taste of horseradish. The taste is bitter at first, and it brings on a numbness of the tongue and a tingling sensation in the lips.

MONKSHOOD—LEAVES AND FLOWERS.

The two plants are really so dissimilar that it would seem impossible that horseradish growers should allow the poison plant to grow alongside the esculent. Yet the two have been confounded so much that every doctor knows what to suspect when supposed horseradish makes anybody ill.

The other case of poisoning was that of a woman who bought a box of sardines very cheap from a pushcart peddler in Hester street, and with her two little girls, aged eight and three, made a lunch of them. All three became very sick. A little girl in passing heard them groaning, and entering the room found them lying helpless on the floor. The child told the housekeeper and the latter sent for an ambulance which took the sufferers to the hospital. Under treatment the condition of the patients rapidly improved. The sickness is supposed to have been caused by tin or ptomaines, as the sardines were in bad condition.

FAST DISAPPEARING.

The Picturesque Prairie Schooner of the Far West.

The prairie schooner was the Mayflower of Western immigration. The family that crossed the Mississippi to the sound of its creaking wheels feels a decided advantage over the one that was hurried westward on the luxurious divans of a Pullman palace car. Not unlike a vessel was it with its huge poke-bonnet-like white canvas cover, sailing steadily through the sea of waving prairie grass.

A lean and lazy team, a bearded man on the front seat, a wife and babe surrounded by bedding, cooking utensils and provisions just visible beneath the half-raised side curtains, some chairs tied to the rear, and a colt or cow led behind—that was the prairie schooner's cargo. In early days, when danger threatened, scores of these unique vessels traveled together and plodded toward the mountains along the well-defined wagon trails leading across the plains. But in latter years each has gone by itself, and the single family that has made it a habitation while in search of an abiding place has steered as fancy or interest dictated.

The prairie schooner was freighted, as is the white-winged traveler of the ocean, with hopes and sorrows. Oftentimes the long journey, the furnace-heated south-winds and the constant jar wore out the tiny spark of life in the baby's breast, and the mother never recalls the pilgrimage without thinking of a little mound that nestles low amid the prairie grasses somewhere along their course.

At an artists' exhibition last winter a Western railroad president purchased, at an exorbitant price, a large painting of a typical prairie schooner. "I shall hang it," said he, "beside a superb drawing of my private car. Had my parents not ridden in a prairie schooner I should not now enjoy the luxury of a palace on wheels."

THE OLD-TIME PRAIRIE SCHOONER

HIDING PLACES FOR ROBBERS.

Subterranean Dens Found by Two Ohioans While on a Hunting Trip.

Two farmers, John Davis and Charley Schlosser, while out hunting recently near Delaware, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, accidentally stumbled onto the hiding place of a band of robbers. They were prowling around in a very wild and unfrequented place on the banks of the Olentangy, near the little village of Clinton, when their attention was attracted to a deep hole in the ground, very similar in appearance to the many sinkholes which are found in this part of the country. Davis went down and found the opening to be an outer entrance to a subterranean passage in the side of the hill. Torches were improvised and the two men crawled into the entrance. About ten feet in they found two or three ledges of rock, arranged like a short flight of steps, which led down into a large chamber. The light from the torches showed the room to be nearly square, measuring ten feet. The floor, walls and ceilings, though formed only of clay soil, were as hard as stone or the cemented floor of a cellar. A hole in the wall near one corner of this chamber proved to be a door opening to a low narrow passageway which led to a room similar in size and appearance to the first, except that the ceiling was arched.

Another door opened from this chamber into a third chamber, the largest of them all, with high vaulted ceiling formed by an immense arched roof. From this hall another gallery led to a smaller inner room farther in the earth. All four of the rooms were built in the solid clay, dry and hard, and devoid of all living things. Nothing of much importance was found, although the general appearances of the subterranean cavities gave evidence that it was once used by a gang of men as a storehouse or hiding place. The partition walls between the rooms were from four to eight feet thick, while the ceilings were from seven to fifteen feet high. The rooms were all perfectly dark, save from the light of the torches. The cave had no ventilation whatever except that afforded from the outer opening. When the rooms were dug, how they were constructed and what became of the earth removed from them, can of course, be the merest conjecture. It seems, however, that they were used by outlaws at no very remote period.

SHOOTING DEER FROM TREES.

Curious Sport Indulged In by the Apple Growers of Arkansas.

In the apple-growing regions of Arkansas the natives have a way of deer shooting entirely original with themselves. Deer love apples and in the vast orchards they go free. Not only do the deer eat the apples, but when the fruit is all gathered they turn their attention to the bark on the young trees and the branches of the elder ones. In the fall when the apples are plentiful the native watches for deer signs, and when he locates the trees which the deer frequent he goes to work gathering the fruit, always leaving two or three trees unpruned that bear the favorite apple of the deer. After the fruit gathering is over he turns his attention to harvesting venison. The deer come to the orchard to feed in the night, and when daylight comes he away in some secluded hollow and sleep. When the moon is in the first quarter the native takes his gun and goes out in the early evening to lie for the deer.

Generally two or three hunters scatter out about the apple trees that are left full fruited to lure the deer to destruction. They climb into the branches of the trees a short distance from the ones that bear the fruit, and remain silent and motionless to await the coming of the game. Shotguns are the weapons and buckshot the ammunition used. Usually the hunters do not have long to wait before they can hear the deer approaching. The game comes cautiously and it is sometimes an hour after the game has been sighted or heard before he presents himself at the apple tree where he feeds. From a station in a tree, says a writer in the St. Louis Republic, I watched one night for an hour and a half and during all that time deer were in sight, but not close enough to shoot. At last a splendid buck came up on the opposite side of the trees and began reaching up and picking apples. Presently a doe put in an appearance. I sat there admiring the pair, waiting for them to move around a little to give a better shot, when "Bang!" "Bang!" in rapid succession my companion's gun sounded about 100 yards from where I was stationed, starting the beauties that I had considered as good as dead, and as they started off I tried to get my gun in position to shoot as they ran, my foot slipped, and down I went in a heap on the ground. My companion, however, who had fired the shots was more successful. When I reached him he had a buck and doe lying beside the apple tree and was just in the act of cutting their throats. He said there was no use remaining, as the deer would not come back again until near morning and maybe not that night. I killed a doe the next night and the native duplicated the performance of the previous evening. His record for the season was twenty-seven deer, all killed in the same orchard, which covered an area of about 100 acres.

A True Charity.

Charity does not consist in doing "great things," but in doing what we can. A lady of moderate means, but large and tender heart, felt deeply for the poor during the past winter. She determined that not one scrap which could benefit another, should be thrown from her table. Everything was arranged systematically. Jars received each day the coffee grounds and tea leaves which had had their first "drawing." Receptacles of different kinds were used for scraps of meat, pieces of bread, cold vegetables, etc. No matter how small the portion left, nothing was discarded. Each morning these were arranged in as appetizing a manner possible, and sent to a destitute family, with the result that three persons have been fairly fed for the whole season, by that which would otherwise have been thrown away. Would not this idea, carried out upon a larger scale, do much to solve the great problem which is racking the brain of the city government in large places—that of disposing properly of waste material? Could not an association be formed and a wagon sent out every day to collect such "left-overs," as people might have to spare? These could be distributed every day to the needy, and almost an army would be fed at no expense for food.

Approach of Age.

The first feature which denotes the approach of age is the eye. The eye may be wrinkled and crow's feet which come early in life, and are caused by various untoward circumstances. But the whitened ring which encircles the iris, can be the result of but one thing, the passage of time. It is known as the arcus senilis. The coloring matter of the iris changes with advancing age and becomes lighter.

Apple Salad.

Did you ever try such a thing? It sounds preposterous doesn't it? And yet it is called very good. Cut celery fine. Cut tart, juicy apples in the same way and cover with lemon juice to keep them from growing dark. Mix apples and celery and cover with French dressing, placing the mixture tastefully upon lettuce leaves.

The Royal Baking Powder is indispensable to progress in cookery and to the comfort and convenience of modern housekeeping. Royal Baking Powder makes hot bread wholesome. Perfectly leavens without fermentation. Qualities that are peculiar to it alone.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

If the devil can only get your eye he doesn't care what becomes of your feet.

SIN is only limited by ability. A flea would kill an elephant if it could.

"THE Lord upholdeth all that fall, and raiseth up those that be bowed down."

WHEN everything else seems to be giving way, try standing on a promise.

"THE Lord will be a refuge for the oppressed, a refuge in times of trouble."

THE man who wrongs God will have very little regard for the rights of men.

TEACHING children to be stingy is only another way of teaching them to steal.

Those Little Sieves,

The kidneys, separate from the blood, as it passes through them, impurities for which the final medium of liberation from the system is the bladder. When their function is suspended direful results ensue. Among these are dropsy, Bright's disease, diabetes and maladies which terminate in some one of these. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters stimulates the kidneys, not as an unmediated alcoholic stimulant would by exciting them, but by gently impelling them to renewed action and perpetuating their activity and vigor. Thus the blood is once more insured purification and the organs thereby saved from destruction. Malaria, constipation, liver complaint, nervousness, dyspepsia and rheumatism are all thoroughly remedied by the Bitters, which is, moreover, a most thorough appetizer, general tonic and sleep promoter. Use it regularly, not semi-occasionally.

Mrs. Younglove: What's the baby crying so pitifully about? Nurse: He's cutting his teeth, ma'am. Mrs. Younglove: Are you sure? He acts as if his teeth were cutting him.

"Hanson's Magic Corn Salve." Warranted to cure or money refunded. Ask your druggist for it. Price 15 cents.

Men of the highest respectability sometimes stand in front of a soda fountain and deliberately wink at a violation of the law.

Hegeman's Camphor Ice with Glycerine. The original and only genuine. Cures Chapped Hands and Face, Cold Sores, etc. G. Clark Co., N. Haven, Ct.

Wife: I went to a new dry goods store to-day. Husband (sadly): I suppose, as usual, that you opened a new account there? Wife: No. They didn't know me, so the things are coming C. O. D.

Indisputable.

Why spend $1 for a bottle of medicine when one box of Beecham's Pills, costing only 25 cents, (annual sale exceeds 6,000,000 boxes) will cure most diseases? This is because constipation is the cause of most ailments and Beecham's Pills cure constipation. A valuable book of knowledge mailed free, on request, by B. F. Allen Co., 365 Canal St., New York.

He calls his girl his "little lamb," And there the variance lies; She must be more mature, because At him she casts sheep eyes.

Hall's Catarrh Cure

Is taken internally. Price, 75c.

The world is full of trouble because there are so many folks who would rather have 10 cents now than $10 after awhile.

When Visiting Kansas City Stop at the Blossom House, opposite Union Depot. First class in every respect. Rates, $2.50 day. Cable cars to all parts of the city pass the door.

Charlie Youngnoodle: I've brought the ring tonight, Alice. Alice: Let me see it. It looks too large. Charlie Youngnoodle: Oh, that's what all the girls said.

Shiloh's Consumption Cure. Is sold on a guarantee. It cures Incipient Consuming Cough. It is the Best Cough Cure. 25c, 50c, & $1.00.

She thought a good deal of her young and handsome admirer, until he wrote her a note saying he was ill, and that the doctor said "it was 2 menny 'cigarette'."

"Beware of vanity, my boy. The birds of gaudy plumage do not make the best eating." "No, indeed. The parrot never gets into the soup."

Singleton: I am suffering dreadfully; cutting my wisdom teeth, you know. Double-up! Don't say; I didn't cut mine till after I was married.

To the Seashore at Slight Cost via Vandalia and Pennsylvania Short Lines.

For the National Educational Association Meeting low rate excursion tickets to Asbury Park will be sold via Vandalia and Pennsylvania lines July 7th, 8th and 9th. Atlantic City, Cape May, Long Branch, Ocean Grove, and numerous other summer havens along the New Jersey Coast are near Asbury Park, to which these lines lead direct from St. Louis. Solid vestibule trains daily from St. Louis to Philadelphia, with convenient connection in Union station for frequent trains for the seashore. Ample time for an extended sojourn. For details, address J. M. Chesbrough, Assistant General Passenger Agent, St. Louis, Mo.

To a Cat.

In an old cafe in Venice there lived a magnificent cat, the pet of all the guests. This cat died lately peacefully, and when the news got about some neighbors made a collection of 200 francs for the purpose of erecting some sort of a monument. The work was confided to two artists, who modeled the statue of the cat in clay and took a plaster cast, painted like bronze. The other evening this little monument was inaugurated at the cafe, and so great was the crowd that the doors had to be shut. The ceremony was conducted in serio-comic style; speeches were made, poetry was recited, the monument was placed in position, and, finally the master of the cafe was presented with an album containing prose and verse, and a number of pretended letters of condolence, signed with the names of high personages. As the sculptors refused any remuneration, the sum collected was distributed among the poor.—London News.

ENLIGHTENMENT

enables the more advanced and conservative Surgeons of to-day to cure many diseases without cutting, which were formerly regarded as incurable without resort to the knife. RUPTURE or Hernia, is now radically cured without the knife and without pain. Clumsy Trusses can be thrown away!

TUMORS, Ovarian, Fibroid (Uterine) and many others, are now removed without the perils of cutting operations.

PILE TUMORS, however large, Prolapsa and other diseases of the lower bowel, are now removed and perfectly removed without cutting.

For pamphlet, references and all particulars, send 10 cents (in stamps) to World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

MY WIFE CANNOT SEE HOW YOU GET IT AND PAY FREIGHT.

Buy our 3 drawer walnut or oak iron bedstead $14.00. It is a perfect High Arm Sledgehammer machine. Fully padded, nickel plated, made to last and heavy work; guaranteed for 10 Years. Will hold 300 lbs. weight. Send for our new and complete list of Steel Attachments, shipped anywhere on 30 Days' Trial. No money required in advance. Buy from factory and save dealer's and agent's profits.

FREE Cut This Out and send to-day for machine or large free catalogue, testimonials and glimpses of the World's Fair.

OXFORD MFG. CO., 343 Wabash Ave., CHICAGO, ILL.

WORN NIGHT AND DAY.

Holds the worst ruptures with ease under all circumstances. Perfect Adjustment. Comfort and Cure. New Patent Improved. Illustrated catalogue and rules for self-measurement sent securely sealed. G. V. HOUSE MFG. CO., 74 Broadway, New York City.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION

CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Takes root. Use in time. Sold by druggists.

ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES CATARRH

PRICE 50 CENTS, ALL DRUGGISTS

MONEY

For rich and poor. Such security as you have, returnable in easy payments. Agts. wanted in every locality. Enclose postage for particulars. U.S. Savings Loan Co., Ohio Nat. Bk. Bldg., Wash'n, D.C.

PENSION JOHN W. MORRIS

Successfully Prosecutes Claims. Late Principal Examiner U.S. Pension Bureau. Write in last year, 15 adjudicating claims, city also.

K. N. U. T. 570-25

When answering any of these advertisements please mention this paper.

Kansas Historical Society

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD. TOPEKA, KANSAS, AUGUST, 1894. VOL. XII, NO. 12.

THESE WOMEN FOLKS.
A PARODY.

BY FANNY L. FANCHER.

These women folks do crowd us awfully,
Crowd us awfully,
Crowd us awfully,
These women folks do crowd us awfully.
'Tis such a shame I think!
I do declare the whole thing worries me,
Whole thing worries me,
Whole thing worries me,
I vow, I vow, this whole thing worries me,
So I'll take another drink.
The tradesmen claim they make such steady
help,
Make such steady help,
Make such steady help,
The tradesmen claim they make the best of help,
They gamble not they say--
So, pray, look at my once fat pocket book,
Once fat pocket book,
Once fat pocket book,
Oh, pray, look at my poor lean pocket book:
They've got my job away.
These women claim the laws are one sided,
Are quite one sided,
Are sure one sided,
They claim man's laws are very one sided,
Perhaps in this, they're right!
And so they want the powerful ballot box,
Powerful ballot box,
Powerful ballot box,
They clamor for our powerful ballot box:
For it they'll have hard fight.
For who, pray tell, would rock the baby,
Would rock the baby,
Would rock the baby,
For who, indeed, could rock the baby
Should we their rights allow?
I'm not the man to yield one jot to them,
Yield one jot to them,
Yield one jot to them,
I'm not the one to yield one whit to them--
And shall not soon, I vow!
Those western states are sure foolhardy,
Are sure foolhardy,
Are sure foolhardy,
Those western men are fools, foolhardy,
To set their women free:
For women folks do crowd us awfully,
Crowd us awfully,
Crowd us awfully,
These women folks still crowd us awfully,
For this, their centurie.

CHORUS.

Then forward, men, hurrah!
Come, join this serious fray,
We'll hoist our flag and on to victory
Or they may gain the day.

IS THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT
A POPULIST MEASURE?

Quite a number of Republicans who claimed to be in favor of the suffrage amendment, previous to the Populist convention, have now changed their minds, excusing themselves on the ground that it has become a Populist measure, and they will not vote with the Populist party. Let us see if this declaration agrees with the facts in the case. The proposition for the suffrage amendment is the product of our last legislature, regardless of party, race, color or previous condition of servitude. It was carried by almost unanimous vote, the Populists and Republicans voting with each other in getting in the greater number of votes for the measure. It has been nearly two years since this amendment was proposed, and we never heard of any party being made responsible for it, or posing as champions of the cause. It went forth to the people and has been thought of, talked over and discussed in a private and public way, till nearly all who read and think for themselves have made up their minds on the question, regardless of party issues or public favors. It was the opinion of the leading men in both parties that it should not be championed by either party, but go before the people free and untrammelled by party spirit or influence. Now it is plain that if it is a party issue, that issue was made in the last legislature when the amendment was proposed, and not when it was placed in the Populist platform. The proposition for or against will be on all the tickets alike. If it was right before the convention to confer the privilege of franchise on the women, it is right now. No Populist convention, no class or clan can prevent me from casting my ballot for the cause I believe to be right. Now, my dear Republican brothers, if you are honest in believing woman's suffrage a good thing, then walk up to the polls and vote regardless of the planks in any platform. Some one says you must vote with some party in order to get laws enacted for its regulation. Fortunately it is not true in this case. This suffrage amendment needs no laws for its enforcement or regulation. It simply strikes out the word "male," and all the laws governing elections now in force on the statute books will apply to the additional citizens that become enfranchised through this amendment. No Republican or Democrat who was in favor of the amendment previous to the convention, can show any good reason for changing his mind now. The fact is apparent that our Republican friends who profess a change on this frail pretense, never were at heart for woman's suffrage, but have sought this device by which to palliate the offense it may give to their female friends, thinking they would not be shrewd enough to see the deceit practiced upon them. But for the man who was honestly in favor of the amendment previous to the Populist convention, and now refuses to vote for it simply because the Populists placed it in their platform, places himself in no enviable position before the eyes of a sensible community. About as silly as some little girls I have known who would not wear their beautiful dress simply because some one whom they did not admire had one of the same pattern. I will not at this time discuss the ethical or political phases of this question, but must say that my right to vote I hold as the most sacred trust bestowed upon me by my beloved country. It makes me greater than president, greater than governor, greater than any officer who is elected to serve the people, because I bestow upon them the high privilege of their places. Can an officer be above them that confer the office? Can a man be greater than his maker? Is an officer above the people? No. Then my vote is higher than any office, and while it may exalt it can make our enemies our footstools. I know many good women, intelligent women, who desire this exalted privilege, who are pleading for it with all the eloquence of a woman's heart or tongue, who realize in their inmost soul the great importance of good government; whose intelligence can grasp the highest thought and solve the most intricate problems of the present time; whose very nature is stirred with patriotism and fidelity for their beloved country, and they would help to lift it to a higher plain, but they are denied all tangible means of promoting good government, and must simply bow in submission to their lords and masters, because they have no weapon of defence. There are men now posing on the rostrum in this enlightened age and uttering sentiments in regard to our suffragist women, that would arouse the indignation of an Arab sheik or Hindu polygamist. Our great Declaration of Independence declares that all men are free and equal, and have certain inalienable rights, etc. Our modern anti woman suffragist put great stress on the word "men," construing that great principle to not apply to women. But all principles of logic applying to this case have always assumed the fact that "men embraces women." The modern tyrant anti suffrage speaks thus to the women of the present time: "We are the law-makers, you must obey them. We make laws to tax you; laws for the distribution of your property; laws to take your children from your arms. Yes, laws to hang you, and you dare not, cannot make a tangible resistance." Every sound principle of ethics and human justice is violated in these declarations. It tramples on the very rights and privileges that our revolutionary fathers fought through a long and bloody war to establish. Thus the justice, right and equity of the women is ignored, and if they dare ask for justice, as Rienzi has said, "be answered by the lash of the venomous tongues" of the anti-suffragists and especially of the mighty sheik or would-be governor, David Overmeyer. To encourage the friends of this cause, allow me to read what some of our greatest men have said on this subject: In the administration of a state neither a woman as a woman nor a man as a man has any special functions, but the gifts are equally diffused in both sexes.--Plato. I go for all sharing the privileges of the government who assist in bearing its burdens, by no means excluding women.--Abraham Lincoln. In the progress of civilization, woman suffrage is sure to come.--Charles Sumner. Justice is on the side of woman suffrage.--William H. Seward. I think there will be no end to the good that will come by woman suffrage, on the elected, on elections, on government and on woman herself.--Chief Justice Chase. Woman suffrage is undoubtedly coming, and I for one expect a great deal of good to come from it.--Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. For over forty years I have not hesitated to declare my conviction that justice and fair dealing, and the democratic principles of our government, demand equal rights and privileges of citizenship, irrespective of sex. I have not been able to see any good reasons for denying the ballot to women.--J. G. Whittier. I take it America never gave any better principle to the world than the safety of letting every human being have the power of protection in his own hands. I claim it for woman. The moment she has the ballot, I shall think the cause is won.--Wendell Phillips. I trust that these great spirits may this day be pleading for you in the higher courts above; and let none falter nor cease work until the ballot shall be counted at the next November election, when I feel assured that the victory will be ours.

MY NEXT DOOR NEIGHBOR.

My next door neighbor's face was a study--half pleased, half vexed--as she came in, and, taking off her little, red shawl, hung it across a chair back, and began wiping the dinner dishes. "I've just been a havin' another suffrage argument. John brought Mr. Slowkum home for dinner. He lives way out on the prairie somewhere. I've seen 'im often, but I'd no idee how he'd vote, an I was bound I'd find out. I let him and John talk crops, an I asked 'bout the schools, an the'r chickens, an--then, as I handed 'im 'is second cup o' coffee--say I, Mr. Slowkum, how do you stan' on the suffrage question, as is to be voted on this fall?" "Woman suffrage!" said 'e, "I'm opposed to it, ma'am." "Do tell!" says I, "what are your reasons?" "Why, 't'aint cordin' to nature. God made man to rule the airth. Don't your Bible say so?" "No," says I, "I read, in that blessed book, that it says, 'let them have dominion,' when it is a parceling out the lot o' Adam an Eve." "I tell you, madam, God made man to rule, an He made woman to keep the house, and raise the children, an make a happy home for them an the man, an be content, an not to be a medlin' in men's affairs." "But," says I, "ther's lots o' women as has no children to raise, nor no home to make happy; what o' them? An ther's lots o' husbands as won't be happy the'r selves, nor won't let the'r wives be happy. An, too, ther's lots o' good women who, after the'r children air all growed up an gone to homes o' the'r own, find they hav' fifteen or twenty o' the wisest an' best years o' the'r life afore 'em. Now, it seems to me it would be a good thing to call them into the councils o' the nation. You know what the Bible says about a multitude o' counsel." "I tell you," says 'e, a growin' excited like, while John was a squirming an' a clearin' 'is throat like all possessed, "the Almighty never intended for women to hav' anything to do with public affairs. He said for women to be in subjection." "Yes," says I, "to the'r own husbands, but it don't say anything 'bout bein' held in subjection by laws made by men only; an, furthermore, it says for the men to love the'r wives as the'r own body, an, when you keep that command, you will be as willin' for women to vote--which she believes to be her right--as you air to vote yourselves, as, of course, you know is your right." "Now I hold," says 'e, "that women should take the lead in church work, an' temperance, an' reforms o' that kind, an' them things, along with the'r home work, 'll keep 'em busy. But I hope I may never see 'em mixed up in the corrupt middle o' politics." "It's mainly because you men hav' got politics in such a muddle," says I, "that we want to vote. We believe that politics, for all parties, an' for all people, ought to be even, an' straight, an' regular, like the different stripes o' warp in a rag carpet, an' why you air so determined we shant help you to make 'em that way we can't understand." "Well, madam, if the day should ever come when women can vote, my wife will never go to the polls!" "Why," says I, "won't you 'low 'er to?" "No, ma'am, she don't believe in it." "An' why don't she believe in it?" says I, "but 'e never answered that question, an' that give John a chance to say something 'bout the weather, an' the suffrage question was dropped. But I've been riled in my mind ever since. I've alus noticed that them as break the biggest lot o' the commandments, make the most fuss about other people's short-comin's; an' them as knows the least 'bout the Bible, air alus a quotin' it in support o' any argumet they may get into; an' them as has the least fear o' the Lord afore the'r eyes, air alus a brin'in' in His thus say so ag'in the'r fellowman--'speshial' if that fellowman happens to be a woman." "Now, if our Father had intended for one o' the pair to rule the earth, an' the other one, He would first have made 'im ruler o' 'imself." I suggested that, doubtless, they were so made. "Then what's come to 'em in all these years, that we hav' sich an army o' slaves to drink, an' tobacco, an' the'r our wrong doin's." Years of yielding to temptation has brought a lack of will-power, an' 'pear to her will-power 'nough, when it comes to standin' in the way o' women's votes, an' a keepin' up some o' the evils o' the law." "Well," she added, smilingly, "if man was made to rule, our votin' will be the turn in the road that 'll lead 'im back to 'is first estate. Our first work will be to make laws as shall help man to become ruler o' 'imself, an' also, help woman to become a perfect helpmate for 'im." "Amen!" said I, reverently, and "that will be the dawn of that blessed day, when His Kingdom shall come, an' His will be done on earth." "Yes," she replied with glistering eyes, "an' why can't they see it that way?" AUNT LOUISA.

Subscribe for the

"FARMER'S WIFE,"

ONLY 50 CENTS A YEAR.

OPPOSITION TO WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Con Healy sums up the objections of Kansas remonstrants in a letter to the Salina Advocate, as follows: "The following reasons why women should not be given the privilege of voting are given just as they were culled from the groups of threes and fives and lives and dozens that stood around on the streets and discussed the all absorbing topic on last Saturday. They are fair samples of the reasons given by Populists, Republicans and Democrats, and with the exception that the more forcible and expressive phrases heard on the streets are sacrificed for the sake of elegance and rhetoric, they are quoted just as heard." A stalwart Democrat: "Women have no business in politics. That is not their sphere." Another Democrat: "Women have as much right to vote as men, but they don't want to vote." A Republican: "My wife don't want to vote." Another Republican: "My wife wants to vote, but I tell her that I am the delegate that casts the vote for both of us." A moss-back Democrat: "Women have too many rights now. They have more rights than the men." A sentimental Democrat: "Put women on an equality with men, and men will no longer feel bound to protect and respect them." An old bachelor Populist: "Woman naturally leans on man and looks to him for protection and support. Man was intended by nature to be the provider and protector, and woman was intended to rock the cradle." A Populist head of a large family: "My wife has done more toward making a home and a living since we have been in Kansas than I have. She managed the farm for two years at one time, while I held a county office, and I spent all I made out of the office trying to get re-elected. All that saved us from bankruptcy was the fact that she wasn't in politics, too. If she wants to vote, excuse me." A sanctimonious Republican: "The Lord intended man to do the voting." A sanctimonious Democrat: "Amen. The Lord never intended that woman should vote." (No passage of Scripture was quoted to prove either assertion, but the impression was made that both were special revelations to the man who made them.) A Populist of a mathematical turn: "Female suffrage would double the vote and thereby double the corruption and the expenses of election." Another Populist: "Not one woman out of twenty would vote if they had the chance." A Democratic pessimist: "Only the very worst class of women would vote." A Democratic Free-thinker: "Women are easily influenced, and they would vote as the preachers would tell them. Religion and politics would become mixed, and in a few years we would be under the rule of the church as badly as ever were the people of Europe. Remember what I tell you; that will be the result of woman suffrage." A Y. M. C. A. Republican: "Only the most degraded class of women in the cities will vote. The great mass of Christian women in the cities and country will never go near the polls." A badly-scarred Populist: "All the women in the cities will vote and the women in the country will not, and by that means we will be ruled by the towns." An alarmed Republican: "The women of the country mostly belong to the Alliance and have been taking more interest in politics than the women in the towns. The country women will vote and the town women will not, and we will be ruled by the country--see?" A mild-mannered Populist: "Every woman would vote the same way that her husband did, and we would only double the vote without making any change in the result."

A peace-loving Democrat: "Woman would vote contrary to the wishes of her husband, and the result would be domestic trouble, divorces and shattered homes." A home loving Democrat: "Woman would take too much interest in politics and neglect the home. She can't tend the baby and the caucus at the same time." Another Democrat: "You can't get women to take any interest in politics; they are too much taken up with gossip and dress, and when election day comes around they would know no more about voting than a man would about trimming a hat." A colored voter, politics unknown, more than likely a Democrat: "The average woman is not intelligent enough to vote. She is smart enough in some ways, but she has no education in that line." A Democrat, foreign born: "My wife is a damn sight smarter than I am, but I have too much respect for her to ask her to vote. Man is by nature the ruler, and he has held that position from Adam down to the present." A philosophical Democrat: "It is woman's nature to quarrel over insignificant matters, and to quibble over small things. She can't take a broad view of anything. If she could vote, she would keep the state in continual strife over things of no importance." A far-seeing Republican: "Women have a tendency to rush into things blindly. They don't stop to reason, or consider or weigh matters. They jump at conclusions without inquiring into details or particulars." A Populist who believes in special privileges to none: "If women vote, let them work poll-tax and be prepared to shoulder a musket and go to war." A philanthropic Democrat who is concerned about the destiny of the human race: "It is necessary that woman's life be as quiet and free from excitement as possible. The turmoil and contention that are connected with politics would so affect women as to have a bad effect on generations yet unborn." A bashful old Populist bachelor: "The Australian ballot law requires that the voting booths be so constructed that the lower limbs of the voter be exposed as high as the knees." A broad-minded Republican: "If women voted, they would want the tickets cut, biased, scalloped around the edges and printed on pink perfumed paper. They would insist on having the booths trimmed with fringe around the edges and bottom, and having a looking glass in every booth. Then when they got in there to vote, the men would have to stand around and wait while the women arranged their hair and straightened their hats." A fastidious young Republican dude: "A handsome woman becomes positively ugly with the ballot in her hand." A pessimistic Democrat: "Women in politics would become jealous of each other, and none but very homely women could be elected to office." Many men of one mind hide their real objections, whatever they may be, under the rather indefinite observation that "women's sphere is in the home." One voter who is only half as broad and doubly as indefinite as the last class mentioned: "Woman's sphere is a hemisphere." In this way the great army of anti-suffragists surged back and forth all day, arguing and contending and contradicting and wailing and refusing to be comforted. But as the day wore away, the arguments that were jagged and rough-edged in the morning, had, by friction and jostling with other contradictory arguments of the same nature, become smooth and harmless, and the men who had wielded them as deadly weapons in the morning discarded them as worthless. Though but few took any particular pains to defend woman suffrage, yet by the time evening came, most of the opponents of the cause had succeeded in convincing each other that they were wrong, and woman's rights had gone up fifty per cent.

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

SOME mighty good climbing has been done in cowhide boots.

MORE than one man has fallen from the force of his own blow.

SOME people try to make up in plumes what they lack in pluck.

WHISKY has gone up 3 cents a gallon, but it continues to go down at the same old scale of prices.

A THOUSAND typewriters were burned in Bridgeport. Fortunately they were not young lady typewriters.

IT is said that so much farm land in England has lately been allowed to lapse from cultivation that wild animals, which ten years ago were in danger of extinction, are now flourishing and increasing. The badger and the otter, for instance, are reported to be thriving greatly on agricultural depression.

A BROOKLYN Judge has decreed that a young man has a right to court a nice girl on the front door step, and warns policemen to attend to other business. The decision is all right, but the young people of Brooklyn are to be pitied all the same. The front door steps on a lighted street is a mighty poor courting ground.

A TRIAL shipment of eggs has been made from Victoria to London, England. Before shipping, the eggs were rubbed with grease, then packed in small cases with bran, flour, lime, and meal. This method of packing proved very satisfactory, for when the cases were opened the eggs were found to be perfectly fresh and sweet, while there was an entire absence of all musty effluvia or sweating.

THE question of the increase of the regular army of Federal forces will shortly be discussed by Congress, and any increase of importance will doubtless encounter fiery opposition. Yet a proposal to add 5,000 men to the small force of 25,000 can hardly be considered as immoderate. If an army of 25,000 men was not thought disproportionate for a nation of three millions of freemen, very jealous of military power, a force of 30,000 cannot be dangerous to the liberties of 70,000,000.

A WEALTHY retired New York minister (fortunate that he is retired), in a late interview on the evils of the times, said: "I tell you there are too many people in the world. There is only one remedy—war or pestilence. Sweep 2,000,000 off the face of the earth. That is China. That is the only remedy. We are wrong in our civilized ideas of mercy and kindness. We nurse incurables in hospitals and keep the criminals in penitentiaries. The Lacedemonians used to exterminate them. That is a good idea, too. The world is really no better than it was at the time of the flood."

THE English newspapers manifested a great deal of interest in the vast railway strike in this country. That was all natural enough, for it was a mighty interesting subject to consider—no matter from what standpoint viewed. But these same English newspapers went much further. As is usual when anything happens in this country which approaches a crisis, they published columns of opinions which possessed little or no value on account of the ignorance of English writers concerning American affairs, and these opinions were interspersed with solemn advice to the American people how to get out of the dilemma. The United States have always been able to settle troubles arising within these borders. We shall continue to do so, and foreign advice, to be appreciated, must come from disinterested quarters.

In an article in the New York Press on "The Future of the Human Race" the statement is made that "the coming man" will be physically and morally better than the man of to-day. Undoubtedly this is true. At any rate, it would be strange if it should not be true. It is interesting to note that moral and physical improvement usually go hand in hand. What are termed moral laws are mainly built upon natural laws, and defiance of one is generally a defiance of the other. Vicious habits are sins against the body as well as against the conscience. Nature is a judge that mercilessly punishes infractions of her decrees. She allows no mitigating excuse of ignorance to soften the blow. It is through a wider regard of this fact which is hurtful and that which is needful to the thorough working of the engine called the human body, that the future man is likely to be a healthier type, morally and physically, of his race than his brethren of the present age.

THE Cramps, shipbuilders, will receive $750,000 bonus over the enormous purchase price, owing to the fact that the new cruisers Minneapolis and Columbia both exceeded the speed required by the Government specifications by a knot or so an hour. The vessels would probably have made the speed required had there been no bonus provided for in the contract, but only heavy penalties for every knot they fall below requirements. The extra money paid is excessive. A new ship of smaller size might have been added to the navy for $750,000.

THE American housewife's greatest vices are the direct result of her excessive virtues. She loves her family with an unselfishness that a man seldom possesses, and cannot understand. And in direct proportion as she loves her family does she worry about it. She worries much about her girls, and more about her boys, and most about her baby. So it happens that she seldom has a moment that is free from care. The strain of her domestic anxiety is perpetual. Such tremendous nervous tension cannot continue indefinitely without some day resulting in a physical and nervous collapse. This collapse does not come all at once. A collapse never does. It begins with irritability, querulousness, and an inability to control one's emotions. So it is that the mothers who love their children the most usually scold them the loudest. Because they love them they worry about them, and because they worry about them they lose their nervous equilibrium; and after they lose their nervous equilibrium, it is as impossible for them to refrain from scolding as it would be to refrain from breathing.

At this season farmers' wives and many other wives are hurrying up their housework to get time to go out in the hot sun perhaps a mile or more from home to pick berries to put up for winter use. This ambition to provide some delicacy for the family is praiseworthy, and the women deserve sympathy and more aid than they usually get from the men folks. But there is such a thing as going too far with this business. Hot weather, when the berries are in season, is when they are relished and needed most, and daily wants should be supplied first. Some women will be careful when planning a house to have windows to let sunlight into the living rooms, and when they move in will fill every window with house plants so no light can get in or sight get out. Others will pinch and contrive to get berries enough to fill a certain number of jars to show their neighbors, and use dried apples in the family all summer in order to do it. These are some of the results of trying to do as much or a little more than some other woman has done in the same direction. But it would be better to keep some of the plants in the yard and use the dried apples in the winter.

OUR ANIMAL FRIENDS criticise unfavorably the bills offered at Washington to provide for the calling of an international conference "for the better protection and care of animals in transit." The least objectionable bill is the one introduced by Mr. Cullom, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. This reduces the number of delegates to five, leaves the President of the United States free to select them at his own discretion, and drops the $5,000 salaries named in the bill introduced by Mr. Cummings. But it provides that the pay and allowances of the "Commissioners" shall be "at the rate of $10 per day and actual necessary expenses," giving a rather wide leeway. The paper suggests that the members of such a commission ought to receive nothing but their expenses, and that no man ought to be a member of it who is not sufficiently interested in the work to be willing to give to it his time without compensation. The persistent introduction of the feature of "pay and allowances" is painfully indicative of a desire on the part of somebody to provide for himself or friends while ostensibly laboring for the protection of animals from needless cruelty while being transported over the ocean.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR CUR RURAL READERS.

Description of a Piggery Fitted to Care for One Hundred Pigs—The Timbrel Strawberry—Corn the Coming Cereal—General Agricultural News and Notes.

A Model Piggery.

Breeders of thoroughbred strains of swine not only wish to have a neat building for their fine stock, but also one which will permit the separation of many individuals. The accompanying illustrations, from "The American Agriculturist," present in

FIG. 1. PERSPECTIVE VIEW OF MODEL PIGGERY.

Fig. 1 the elevation, and in Fig. 2 the ground plan of such an ornamental structure. This model piggery is fitted with conveniences for easily caring for one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five pigs. The box, a, by the window is to receive the swill, and the truck, c, in the passage was to hold the mixed feed of swill, grain and hot water, or milk from the set boilers, b, and from the truck the pigs are fed as it is drawn from one end of the passage to the other. The four pens, which come in the center behind the killing room, and the boiler room, d, can be shut off from the pens on each side of them, and so are much warmer, and can be used by the breeders while the pigs are quite small. The other pens are to accommodate six large pigs or ten small ones. The upper story of the center square is used for the storage of grain and of straw for bedding.

FIG. 2. GROUND PLAN OF PIGGERY.

Use Sharp Tools.

In working either farm or garden tools, see that they are in perfect order—the wheels well oiled, the belts tight and the blades sharp and polished. It is a great mistake to try to do good work with a rusty, dull hoe, or to use a shovel-plow or cultivator that is so dull that it requires a man's strength to keep it on the ground, in addition to which it overtaxes the horses to pull it.

It not only can not cut the weeds off properly, but the ground is not thoroughly stirred. Have the blades taken out and ground, or, if very blunt, send them to the shop to be pointed.

A hoe should be kept bright and sharp at all times; it will then cut up the weeds, and mellow the ground with very little exertion on the part of the worker. The editor uses a file for this sharpening, having the men take the file to the field with us. One file will last for several days. It requires but a few minutes' work to get the hoes sharp, and the extra work done is worth the wages of an extra good man. A German whom the editor had in his employ said the filing of the hoes was not a good thing, but it was not many days before he came to the opinion that it saved his strength to have a sharp hoe. A sharp hoe will cut through clods and among high weeds, where a dull hoe will not be able to penetrate. When the hoe is wet, rub it dry, and then rub on a little coal oil; just a little will answer.—Baltimore American.

Value of Irrigation.

Prof. G. H. Fuller says lack of water is reducing the area cultivated in Kansas. The question is not simply of putting in one or a few crops that have their long and regular periods of seed time, culture and harvest, but to select a variety that will most fully occupy both the farmer and the soil. Crops in which skill in growing, harvesting and marketing count for much are chosen. The farmers of that portion where water is within easy reach by windmill pumps seem in a fair way to rank the highest in intelligent effort to make the most out of the forces and appliances with which they work. This is one of the compensations of irrigation. The same amount of land may be made to yield much greater returns, but to do this more thought must be given to the work. The people of such regions be come well-to-do, not to say wealthy; they are refined and educated. Irrigated counties sustain a greater population per square mile. The people are collected in villages and hamlets. Their greater variety of productions gives them a good living and an opportunity to make their surroundings pleasant and artistic.

Winter Dairying.

Henry Talcott, the Ohio Dairy Commissioner and a successful farmer, says he can make $50 to $75 per cow easier by winter dairying than he can $25 to $40 per cow by having his cows calve in spring, as most farmers yet do. He is not bothered much with cows and caring for milk while he is growing his summer crops. Winter dairying diversifies farm industries, and furnishes that something to do in winter, the lack of which is the chief obstacle to success of Northern farmers. But it requires ensilage and warm stables for cows in winter to make winter dairying profitable. It is harder also to raise the fall-farrowed calves, partly because milk is more expensive in winter and they are apt to get less of it, and partly because when milk it is not sometimes to be given cold, and throw the calf into an attack of scours. With some cheaper substitute for milk, and care not to give the calf any cold feed or drink, the fall calf can be kept in thrifty condition.

Corn the Coming Cereal.

Not a few careful observers of the signs of the times predict that before the new century dawns corn will reach a higher price than wheat, which can be produced the round world over. Already the money value of this distinctively American crop is nearly double that of the wheat crop of the country. As a food it is fast gaining high favor among the people of the Old World. It is easily raised and does not exhaust the soil, and has been the surest and greatest source of wealth for this country. The corn belt is a limited one, considering our immense area. Land within its limits has never shown any permanent depreciation. In the course of events farm values in this corn belt must range higher and prove more profitable than mines and mineral wealth.

Sweet Potatoes.

Sweet potatoes can endure quite a period of drought, but the rows must be kept clean, however, or weeds and crab grass will put in an appearance, robbing the potato plants of moisture and rendering cultivation difficult. The vines may be thrown on either side of the row to permit of the cultivator, or may be bunched around the trunks on the hills. Keep the soil loose until the weeds are destroyed and the vines cover the ground completely.

The Timbrel Strawberry.

But few newly introduced fruits have received so favorable encomiums from expert judges and professional fruit growers as have been showered upon the Timbrel strawberry, the original stock of which is owned by E. W. Reid, Bridgeport, Ohio. All those who have seen it and tried it pronounce it a variety of unexceptional merit.

THE TIMBRELL. The flowers are pistillate; berries very large, uniformly conical, of beautiful crimson color; firm, and of excellent quality; season very late. Its foliage is strong and healthy, and the plants are wonderfully productive. For quality, healthiness, vigor, and large average size combined, the introducer claims that there is no other variety to equal it.

Farm Notes.

MANY people fail with poultry because of neglect. Fowls respond to good treatment as readily as the dairy cow or other animals.

NO ANIMAL will thrive if overfed. It will seem to gain rapidly for awhile, but, sooner or later, the digestive organs become impaired and disease results.

THE Massachusetts Experiment Station made an experiment in feeding skim milk to calves and pigs. The result showed that it was equivalent to selling milk at 35c a hundred.

THE young steers are the ones that pay. They should be well-bred, so as to grow rapidly. There is no necessity for keeping a steer longer than when it is three years old. The greatest gain in weight is when they are young.

WHEN the ground becomes very dry the roots of beets and turnips are apt to split with the sudden start they will make with the first good rain. The preventive is cultivation to keep the soil crumbly and as a much, thus preventing evaporation of the moisture that may remain in the soil.

THE "Farm and Fireside" says that bagging grapes as soon as the bloom has fallen will prevent rot. The fruit is much more beautiful when grown in bags. One pound manilla bags are used. The bag is opened, drawn carefully over the bunch and pinned above the cane from which the bunch is growing.

HOW CHILDREN QUARREL.

The Game of Brag as Overheard in Pleasant Tompkins Square.

On one of the seats four little girls were observed the other day indulging in the feminine—masculine, also—propensity for quarreling. The most self-assertive of the group was a diminutive damsel whose head was adorned with a hat of monstrous red plumage. Sarcastic comments on her part had evidently irritated her companions:

"She's a sassy thing, Sally. I wouldn't speak to her no more," observed a young miss on the right.

The sarcastic damsel sniffed, but said nothing.

"Don't let's sociate with her no more," remarked a second.

The three little girls arose, and the third one had her say. "You can just keep away from our party, Mary Baum," she said. "We ain't a-goin' ter look or speak to you no longer."

The self-assertive maiden in the monstrous hat gazed contemptuously upon her whom companions as they marched away. She shrugged her shoulders complacently. "Huh! Dere is odders," she observed, with a world of significance in her tones.

A short distance away sat two little boys who were comparing notes on family matters.

"Us folks has got de biggest family," remarked the first one, confidently.

"Retcher ain't," returned his companion.

"Yes we has—Dere's me, an' me two brudders, me daddy, me mudder, me aunt and me uncle. Kin you beat dat?"

"I should say," was the response. "We's got seven gals and boys in our family. An' dere's tree grown-ups."

"Well, anyhow, me daddy can buy out your daddy."

"Kin he? Oh, kin he? Me daddy's a hoss-car driver an' he owns a big stable wid two hunderred hosses."

"Dat ain't nothin," retorted the imaginative youth. "Me daddy's a janitor an' he owns a house on Secon' avenoo dat's five stories high, and wid a hunderd people livin' in it. See?"—New York Recorder.

Nicotine and Tobacco.

Many people regard tobacco and nicotine as synonymous terms, though it is known that there are varieties of tobacco which contain practically no nicotine whatever. A venetian doctor, Sig. G. B. de Toni, has been making some exhaustive researches on "Nicotiana Tobacum"—the variety of tobacco generally used by smokers—and has just published the results of his investigations. He finds that nicotine, which is an alkaloid, is located chiefly in the epidermal tissues, but is entirely absent from the seed and young plant. In the root of mature plant it occurs in the cortical tissue, and especially in the layer of cells immediately beneath the epidermis. In the branches, leaf stalk, lamina of the leaf, peduncle, calyx and corolla it is confined almost entirely to the epidermal cells, and occurs chiefly in those at the base of the hairs. In smaller quantities it is found in the anthers and pistil, but the mesophyll and assimilation tissue of the leaf were entirely devoid of nicotine in all the samples examined.

Dr. Toni believes the function of nicotine to be simply excretory, being a product of the reduction of oxygenous substances. By some it has been assumed that nicotine exercises a protective influence on the tobacco plant to keep marauding insects at bay; but this assumption is not borne out by observation, as both the fresh and dried leaves are eaten by many insects.

Bank of England Notes.

Among the curiosities which are occasionally shown to favored visitors to the Bank of England are some specimens of ancient notes, a number of them of denominations no longer in vogue, such as £1, £15, and £25. There is also carefully preserved the oldest surviving note, one of the year 1699, the amount being written in ink. Another curiosity is a note for £1,000,000, which was required for some transaction between the bank and the Government, but in this case, too, the amount is written with the pen. The longest time during which a note has remained outside the bank is 111 years. It was for £25, and it is computed that the compound interest during that long period amounted to no less than £6,000.—The Collector.

The Dog Answered the Salute.

A dog owned by Capt. Orcutt, keeper of the Wood Island light, has become famous this week. It is customary for passing steamers to salute the light and the keeper returns it by ringing the bell. The other day a tug whistled three times. The captain did not hear it, but the dog did. He ran to the door and tried to attract the captain's attention by howling. Failing to do this he ran away and then came a second time with no better result. Then he decided to attend to the matter himself, so he seized the rope, which hangs outside, between his teeth and began to ring the bell.—Lewiston Journal.

INDIVIDUAL freedom is the cornerstone of labor's temple.

A Detroit Builder.

HE TELLS A REMARKABLE STORY OF HIS LIFE.
CAME TO DETROIT ABOUT FORTY YEARS AGO.

Levi Elsey's Experience Worthy Serious Attention.

(From the Detroit Evening News.)

Away out Gratiot Avenue, far from the din and turmoil of the business center, there are many attractive homes. The intersecting streets are wide, clean and shaded by large leaf-covered trees, and the people you meet are typical of industry, economy and honest toil. There are many pretty residences, but none more inviting in its neatness and home-like comfort than that of Mr. Levi Elsey, the well known builder and contractor, at 74 Moran street, just off Gratiot. Mr. Elsey is an old resident of Detroit, having moved here about forty years ago. He has erected hundreds of houses in different parts of the city, and points with pride to such buildings as the Newberry & McMullen and Campaw blocks in which he displayed his ability as a superintendent.

"I have seen Detroit grow from a village to a city," he observed yesterday in conversation with the writer, "and I don't think there are many towns in America today equal to it in point of beauty. I know almost everybody in the city, and an incident which recently happened in my life has interested all my friends.

"It is now about eight years ago since I was stricken down with my first case of illness. One cold blustering day I was down town and through my natural carelessness at that time I permitted myself to get chilled right through. When I arrived home that evening I felt a serious pain in my left leg. I bathed it that night but by morning I found it had grown worse. In fact it was so serious that I sent for my family physician, and he informed me that I was suffering from varicose veins. My leg swelled up to double its natural size and the pain increased in volume. The agony was simply awful. I was laid up and never left my bed for eight weeks. At times I felt as though I would grow frantic with pain. My leg was bandaged and was propped up in the bed at an angle of 30 degrees in order to keep the blood from flowing to my extremities.

"I had several doctors attending me, but I believe my own judgment helped me better than theirs. After a siege of two months I could move around, still I was on the sick list and had to doctor myself for years. I was never really cured and suffered any amount of anguish.

"About two years ago I noticed an article in the Evening News about my friend, Mr. Northrup, the Woodward Avenue merchant. In an interview with him he stated that he had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and that they cured him. I knew him very well, having built his house out Woodward Ave., and I thought I would follow his suggestion. I must confess I did so with marvelous success. From the time I began to take the Pink Pills I felt myself growing to be a new man. They acted on me like a magical stimulant. The pain departed and I soon was as strong and healthy as ever. Before trying the Pink Pills I had used any amount of other medicine without any noticeable benefit. But the Pills cured me and I was myself again.

"When a person finds himself relieved and enjoying health he is apt to expose himself again to another attack of illness. Some three months ago I stopped taking the Pink Pills, and from the day I did so, I noticed a change in my condition. A short time since I renewed my habit of taking them with the same beneficial results which met me formerly. I am again nearly as strong as ever, although I am a man about 56 years of age. I tell you, sir, the Pink Pills are a most wonderful medicine and if they do as well in other cases as they did in mine they are the best in the world. I freely recommend them to any sufferer."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache and after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

The Dog Answered the Salute.
A dog owned by Capt. Orcutt, keeper of the Wood Island light, has become famous this week. It is customary for passing steamers to salute the light and the keeper returns it by ringing the bell. The other day a tug whistled three times. The captain did not hear it, but the dog did. He ran to the door and tried to attract the captain's attention by howling. Failing to do this he ran away and then came a second time with no better result. Then he decided to attend to the matter himself, so he seized the rope, which hangs outside, between his teeth and began to ring the bell—Lewiston Journal.

UNCLE SAM'S ARMY.

REGULARS AND MILITIA NUMBER 125,000 MEN.

How They Co-operate with Each Other—President Could Call Out the Unorganized Militia, Which is Over 1,000,000 Men—Modern Military Discipline.

Forces of the United States.

The calling out of Federal troops to suppress the recent railroad riots in Chicago and in other parts of the country has necessarily put people to talking about the United States army. The many years of peace in the country have removed from the minds of the people a good deal that is now of interest. The following authoritative statement of the condition of the army will be appreciated by our readers:

The army of the United States consists of the following forces, in officers and men:

	Officers.	Enlisted men.	Aggregate.
Ten cavalry regiments..	42	6,000	6,482
Five artillery regiments.	280	3,675	3,955
Twenty-five infantry regiments.	877	12,125	13,002
Engineer battalion, recruiting parties, ordnance department, hospital service, Indian scouts, West Point, signal, and general service	667	4,142	4,709
Total.	2,156	25,922	28,078

The United States is divided into eight military departments, as follows:

Department of the East (General Howard)—New England States, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Kentucky, Tennessee, Ohio and the District of Columbia.

Department of the Missouri (General Miles)—Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas, Indian and Oklahoma Territories.

Department of California (General Ruger)—California and Nevada.

Department of Dakota (General Meritt)—Minnesota, South Dakota (excepting so much as lies south of the forty-fourth parallel), North Dakota, Montana, and the post of Fort Yellowstone, Wyo.

Department of Texas (General Wheaton)—State of Texas.

Department of the Platte (General Brooke)—Iowa, Nebraska and Wyoming (excepting the post of Fort Yellowstone, Wyo.).

Department of the Colorado (General McCook)—Arizona, New Mexico and Colorado.

Department of the Columbia (General Otis)—Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Alaska, excepting so much of Idaho as is embraced in the Department of the Platte.

The regular army of the United States, as given above, consists of 20,000 men. Only half of these would be available for active service in the field. It would take 10,000 men to guard the government property throughout the country.

The Militia.

Every nation has a reserve, under its law military, on which its defense would fall upon the serious discomfiture of the regular army. This system differs in each country. In the United States the systems adopted by the various States, although differing in many ways, have a general conformity, and a thorough understanding of the system of any one State will enable a person to grasp the entire reserve system of the United States.

The militia is divided into two great classes: first, the active or organized militia and the unorganized militia. The first is variously called the national guard, the volunteer militia and the State guard or State national guard. The organized militia of the United States is a little over 1,000,000 men, while the unorganized is over 1,000,000.

The requirements for enlistment in the organized militia may be stated as only those male citizens between the ages of 18 and 45, except certain ones exempted by law. The exemptions may be briefly stated as those serving in the army and navy of the United States, those physically disqualified and those belonging to religious denominations having an article of faith prohibiting the performance of military duty. Persons are in some States exempted by service in the late war or for a certain length of service in the national guard.

The Governor of each State is the commander-in-chief of the national guard of that State, and the recruit takes an oath to bear true faith and allegiance to the United States as well as to the State. In case the organized militia are insufficient the Governor can call for recruits to fill the companies to their maximum strength or to form new companies. In case these volunteers are insufficient, he may draft even to the extent of calling out whipping, bucking and gagging, tying up by the thumbs and various other methods of barbarous torture. The actual experience of the last thirty years has demonstrated that discipline can be maintained without the infliction of such punishments. The older method was to drill the soldier into a mechanical machine, caring little or nothing about his individual intelligence, but under more modern tactics and with improved firearms this mechanical perfection is not so essential as formerly. The old ramrod stiffness of the soldier is disappearing; he is no longer buttoned, breeched and belted as if poured into a mold. His little finger, for generation pinned to the seams of his trousers, has at last acquired a natural swing. More careful study of military ethics has demonstrated the uselessness as well as the barbarity of laying every man in a Procrustean bed and requiring the same exactitude from the loose-jointed and compactly built. At the same time a long and careful training is necessary to the making of a good soldier. Once a Frenchman is uniformed and a musket is put into his hands, he is ready to cry "Vive la France," ready to march beneath the tri-color flag wherever he is led, but it is a very fallacious idea to think that a soldier can be made simply by dressing a man in uniform and putting a musket in his hands.

The shoulder-to-shoulder courage that comes of discipline is indispensable, but it must yield precedence to that courage which comes of intelligence, self-reliance, and of perfect knowledge of the use of weapons, and what the individual must do to protect himself while inflicting the greatest possible damage upon the enemy. In this intelligence the national guard is well equipped, all being men of intelligence and fair education. General Sheridan's opinion of the militia was that in time of war it would prove itself the equal of any trained soldiers.

The national guard has done much for itself, and is deserving of the highest praise. Devoting time, money and talents to the service of the State without pay, struggling along without proper armories, drilling without proper arms, equipment or clothing, and above all without the moral support and courteous attention of the people at large, it has reached a high point of excellence. In no case has the militia been cowardly or inefficient. It takes much more courage for men to walk along the streets, silently and steadily, subjected to jeers and scoffing and sometimes even showers of missiles, when they have their uniforms on and guns in their hands, than it does to load and fire.

The ideas indulged in by many in the dim ages of the past and by some of the fools and narrow-minded people of today that it is all fun for the militia—that the officers and men comprising the national guard have no other end every one under the law liable to military duty.

The strength of the national guard and of the available arms bearing population of each of the States and Territories is as follows:

	Total enlisted.	Total available for service.
Alabama.....	203	2,002
Arizona.....	29	2,313
Arkansas.....	210	2,191
California.....	436	4,138
Colorado.....	73	716
Connecticut.....	199	2,467
Delaware.....	65	663
District of Columbia.....	129	998
Florida.....	98	910
Georgia.....	274	2,677
Idaho.....	31	426
Illinois.....	327	3,329
Indiana.....	294	2,567
Iowa.....	128	1,104
Kansas.....	104	1,479
Kentucky.....	111	1,180
Louisiana.....	114	1,141
Maine.....	59	1,014
Maryland.....	181	1,678
Massachusetts.....	401	3,567
Michigan.....	184	2,746
Minnesota.....	118	1,912
Mississippi.....	112	1,096
Missouri.....	164	1,553
Montana.....	43	542
Nebraska.....	97	1,077
Nevada.....	52	538
New Hampshire.....	104	1,073
New Jersey.....	281	3,766
New Mexico.....	72	651
New York.....	756	12,489
North Carolina.....	199	2,210
North Dakota.....	64	435
Ohio.....	308	4,236
Oregon.....	135	990
Pennsylvania.....	631	7,713
Rhode Island.....	106	1,053
South Carolina.....	371	4,052
South Dakota.....	41	470
Tennessee.....	77	1,178
Texas.....	248	2,816
Vermont.....	34	696
Virginia.....	141	3,124
Washington.....	104	1,896
West Virginia.....	87	775
Wisconsin.....	183	2,167
Wyoming.....	11	592
Totals.....	8,128	102,628

The discipline and administration conform as nearly as possible to that of the United States army, as well as the system of tactics and field exercises. The great difference between this system and that of foreign countries is that the services of our soldiers are voluntary, while in foreign countries they are obligatory for a certain number of years. There are now but two countries where enlistments are wholly voluntary, and these are England and the United States. It will be seen by the development of the national guard during the last ten years that the relation of the national guard to the people is being more deeply studied and the results more promptly acted upon than ever before. It is the same all over the United States equally; each State is becoming more desirous of perfecting the training of its citizen soldiery and awarding them more support than at any time in our national history.

Patriots of the Future.

It is less than fifty years since the whole military and naval world believed that discipline could be maintained only by force of knocking down, whipping, bucking and gagging, tying up by the thumbs and various other methods of barbarous torture. The actual experience of the last thirty years has demonstrated that discipline can be maintained without the infliction of such punishments. The older method was to drill the soldier into a mechanical machine, caring little or nothing about his individual intelligence, but under more modern tactics and with improved firearms this mechanical perfection is not so essential as formerly.

FIELD THREE-POUNDER.

The old ramrod stiffness of the soldier is disappearing; he is no longer buttoned, breeched and belted as if poured into a mold. His little finger, for generation pinned to the seams of his trousers, has at last acquired a natural swing. More careful study of military ethics has demonstrated the uselessness as well as the barbarity of laying every man in a Procrustean bed and requiring the same exactitude from the loose-jointed and compactly built. At the same time a long and careful training is necessary to the making of a good soldier. Once a Frenchman is uniformed and a musket is put into his hands, he is ready to cry "Vive la France," ready to march beneath the tri-color flag wherever he is led, but it is a very fallacious idea to think that a soldier can be made simply by dressing a man in uniform and putting a musket in his hands.

The shoulder-to-shoulder courage that comes of discipline is indispensable, but it must yield precedence to that courage which comes of intelligence, self-reliance, and of perfect knowledge of the use of weapons, and what the individual must do to protect himself while inflicting the greatest possible damage upon the enemy. In this intelligence the national guard is well equipped, all being men of intelligence and fair education. General Sheridan's opinion of the militia was that in time of war it would prove itself the equal of any trained soldiers.

The national guard has done much for itself, and is deserving of the highest praise. Devoting time, money and talents to the service of the State without pay, struggling along without proper armories, drilling without proper arms, equipment or clothing, and above all without the moral support and courteous attention of the people at large, it has reached a high point of excellence. In no case has the militia been cowardly or inefficient. It takes much more courage for men to walk along the streets, silently and steadily, subjected to jeers and scoffing and sometimes even showers of missiles, when they have their uniforms on and guns in their hands, than it does to load and fire.

The ideas indulged in by many in the dim ages of the past and by some of the fools and narrow-minded people of today that it is all fun for the militia—that the officers and men comprising the national guard have no other end every one under the law liable to military duty.

The strength of the national guard and of the available arms bearing population of each of the States and Territories is as follows:

	Total enlisted.	Total available for service.
Alabama.....	203	2,002
Arizona.....	29	2,313
Arkansas.....	210	2,191
California.....	436	4,138
Colorado.....	73	716
Connecticut.....	199	2,467
Delaware.....	65	663
District of Columbia.....	129	998
Florida.....	98	910
Georgia.....	274	2,677
Idaho.....	31	426
Illinois.....	327	3,329
Indiana.....	294	2,567
Iowa.....	128	1,104
Kansas.....	104	1,479
Kentucky.....	111	1,180
Louisiana.....	114	1,141
Maine.....	59	1,014
Maryland.....	181	1,678
Massachusetts.....	401	3,567
Michigan.....	184	2,746
Minnesota.....	118	1,912
Mississippi.....	112	1,096
Missouri.....	164	1,553
Montana.....	43	542
Nebraska.....	97	1,077
Nevada.....	52	538
New Hampshire.....	104	1,073
New Jersey.....	281	3,766
New Mexico.....	72	651
New York.....	756	12,489
North Carolina.....	199	2,210
North Dakota.....	64	435
Ohio.....	308	4,236
Oregon.....	135	990
Pennsylvania.....	631	7,713
Rhode Island.....	106	1,053
South Carolina.....	371	4,052
South Dakota.....	41	470
Tennessee.....	77	1,178
Texas.....	248	2,816
Vermont.....	34	696
Virginia.....	141	3,124
Washington.....	104	1,896
West Virginia.....	87	775
Wisconsin.....	183	2,167
Wyoming.....	11	592
Totals.....	8,128	102,628

The discipline and administration conform as nearly as possible to that of the United States army, as well as the system of tactics and field exercises. The great difference between this system and that of foreign countries is that the services of our soldiers are voluntary, while in foreign countries they are obligatory for a certain number of years. There are now but two countries where enlistments are wholly voluntary, and these are England and the United States. It will be seen by the development of the national guard during the last ten years that the relation of the national guard to the people is being more deeply studied and the results more promptly acted upon than ever before. It is the same all over the United States equally; each State is becoming more desirous of perfecting the training of its citizen soldiery and awarding them more support than at any time in our national history.

Patriots of the Future.

It is less than fifty years since the whole military and naval world believed that discipline could be maintained only by force of knocking down, whipping, bucking and gagging, tying up by the thumbs and various other methods of barbarous torture. The actual experience of the last thirty years has demonstrated that discipline can be maintained without the infliction of such punishments. The older method was to drill the soldier into a mechanical machine, caring little or nothing about his individual intelligence, but under more modern tactics and with improved firearms this mechanical perfection is not so essential as formerly.

The old ramrod stiffness of the soldier is disappearing; he is no longer buttoned, breeched and belted as if poured into a mold. His little finger, for generation pinned to the seams of his trousers, has at last acquired a natural swing. More careful study of military ethics has demonstrated the uselessness as well as the barbarity of laying every man in a Procrustean bed and requiring the same exactitude from the loose-jointed and compactly built. At the same time a long and careful training is necessary to the making of a good soldier. Once a Frenchman is uniformed and a musket is put into his hands, he is ready to cry "Vive la France," ready to march beneath the tri-color flag wherever he is led, but it is a very fallacious idea to think that a soldier can be made simply by dressing a man in uniform and putting a musket in his hands.

The shoulder-to-shoulder courage that comes of discipline is indispensable, but it must yield precedence to that courage which comes of intelligence, self-reliance, and of perfect knowledge of the use of weapons, and what the individual must do to protect himself while inflicting the greatest possible damage upon the enemy. In this intelligence the national guard is well equipped, all being men of intelligence and fair education. General Sheridan's opinion of the militia was that in time of war it would prove itself the equal of any trained soldiers.

The national guard has done much for itself, and is deserving of the highest praise. Devoting time, money and talents to the service of the State without pay, struggling along without proper armories, drilling without proper arms, equipment or clothing, and above all without the moral support and courteous attention of the people at large, it has reached a high point of excellence. In no case has the militia been cowardly or inefficient. It takes much more courage for men to walk along the streets, silently and steadily, subjected to jeers and scoffing and sometimes even showers of missiles, when they have their uniforms on and guns in their hands, than it does to load and fire.

The ideas indulged in by many in the dim ages of the past and by some of the fools and narrow-minded people of today that it is all fun for the militia—that the officers and men comprising the national guard have no other end every one under the law liable to military duty.

The strength of the national guard and of the available arms bearing population of each of the States and Territories is as follows:

	Total enlisted.	Total available for service.
Alabama.....	203	2,002
Arizona.....	29	2,313
Arkansas.....	210	2,191
California.....	436	4,138
Colorado.....	73	716
Connecticut.....	199	2,467
Delaware.....	65	663
District of Columbia.....	129	998
Florida.....	98	910
Georgia.....	274	2,677
Idaho.....	31	426
Illinois.....	327	3,329
Indiana.....	294	2,567
Iowa.....	128	1,104
Kansas.....	104	1,479
Kentucky.....	111	1,180
Louisiana.....	114	1,141
Maine.....	59	1,014
Maryland.....	181	1,678
Massachusetts.....	401	3,567
Michigan.....	184	2,746
Minnesota.....	118	1,912
Mississippi.....	112	1,096
Missouri.....	164	1,553
Montana.....	43	542
Nebraska.....	97	1,077
Nevada.....	52	538
New Hampshire.....	104	1,073
New Jersey.....	281	3,766
New Mexico.....	72	651
New York.....	756	12,489
North Carolina.....	199	2,210
North Dakota.....	64	435
Ohio.....	308	4,236
Oregon.....	135	990
Pennsylvania.....	631	7,713
Rhode Island.....	106	1,053
South Carolina.....	371	4,052
South Dakota.....	41	470
Tennessee.....	77	1,178
Texas.....	248	2,816
Vermont.....	34	696
Virginia.....	141	3,124
Washington.....	104	1,896
West Virginia.....	87	775
Wisconsin.....	183	2,167
Wyoming.....	11	592
Totals.....	8,128	102,628

The discipline and administration conform as nearly as possible to that of the United States army, as well as the system of tactics and field exercises. The great difference between this system and that of foreign countries is that the services of our soldiers are voluntary, while in foreign countries they are obligatory for a certain number of years. There are now but two countries where enlistments are wholly voluntary, and these are England and the United States. It will be seen by the development of the national guard during the last ten years that the relation of the national guard to the people is being more deeply studied and the results more promptly acted upon than ever before. It is the same all over the United States equally; each State is becoming more desirous of perfecting the training of its citizen soldiery and awarding them more support than at any time in our national history.

Patriots of the Future.

It is less than fifty years since the whole military and naval world believed that discipline could be maintained only by force of knocking down, whipping, bucking and gagging, tying up by the thumbs and various other methods of barbarous torture. The actual experience of the last thirty years has demonstrated that discipline can be maintained without the infliction of such punishments. The older method was to drill the soldier into a mechanical machine, caring little or nothing about his individual intelligence, but under more modern tactics and with improved firearms this mechanical perfection is not so essential as formerly.

The old ramrod stiffness of the soldier is disappearing; he is no longer buttoned, breeched and belted as if poured into a mold. His little finger, for generation pinned to the seams of his trousers, has at last acquired a natural swing. More careful study of military ethics has demonstrated the uselessness as well as the barbarity of laying every man in a Procrustean bed and requiring the same exactitude from the loose-jointed and compactly built. At the same time a long and careful training is necessary to the making of a good soldier. Once a Frenchman is uniformed and a musket is put into his hands, he is ready to cry "Vive la France," ready to march beneath the tri-color flag wherever he is led, but it is a very fallacious idea to think that a soldier can be made simply by dressing a man in uniform and putting a musket in his hands.

The shoulder-to-shoulder courage that comes of discipline is indispensable, but it must yield precedence to that courage which comes of intelligence, self-reliance, and of perfect knowledge of the use of weapons, and what the individual must do to protect himself while inflicting the greatest possible damage upon the enemy. In this intelligence the national guard is well equipped, all being men of intelligence and fair education. General Sheridan's opinion of the militia was that in time of war it would prove itself the equal of any trained soldiers.

The national guard has done much for itself, and is deserving of the highest praise. Devoting time, money and talents to the service of the State without pay, struggling along without proper

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS
SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Subscriptions of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 30 cents each will send yours free.

If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription, 50 Cents a Year.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

Mrs. Diggs is doing noble work in Kansas this year.

Mrs. Laura M. Johns will be in Lincoln, September 6th.

"Give us liberty or give us death," is the motto of the laboring masses.

Governor Lewelling is making a noble, manly campaign, which is sure to win.

David is killing with his little slings but few Goliaths in his campaign in Kansas this year.

The Democratic press speaks of David Overmeyer as a level-headed man. Of course, level means flat—on the suffrage question.

Mrs. Johns' suffrage tract, "Leading Questions," has been translated into German. Five thousand copies have been printed.

Mrs. Mary E. Lease delivered her pragmatic lecture on "What Shall We Bequeath Posterity?" at Hamilton hall Tuesday evening, August 7th.

Eight new Amendment campaign clubs were reported to headquarters last Saturday from Atchison, Doniphan and Cherokee counties. They were organized by Mrs. Rath F. Dargun and Miss Helen Kimber.

Mrs. M. E. Haynes has been almost constantly speaking for the Amendment since June 20th, and has organized a campaign club in nearly every place she has held a meeting. Her work has been largely in the Sixth district, where she is a great favorite.

Eva L. Corning has been holding suffrage meetings in the Seventh district with good success. She spoke in Great Bend and Hoisington last Wednesday and Thursday, and came home Friday. Miss Corning has organized clubs in nearly every place she has spoken—thirteen in Lincoln county in April in as many days, excepting Sundays.

The Rocky Point equal suffrage club holds regular meetings enlivened with literary and musical exercises and debates. The question for general debate next Tuesday evening, August 21st, is: "Resolved, That congress should enact a law providing for the employment of the labor left unemployed on account of the use of improved machinery."—Lincoln Beacon.

Although the headquarters of the suffrage campaign committee has been established at room 23, Columbian building, on Sixth street, Topeka, the treasurer remains at Salina. So continue to send all money and money orders to Mrs. Lizzie F. Hopkins, Salina, Kansas, who is treasurer of the State suffrage campaign committee.

Women voted in Union Township, N. J., last week, for the first time, for school trustees. There are two villages in the district, and when the Roselle voters arrived they were accompanied by their wives. Objection was raised, but the chairman ruled that the women could vote under the State law, and then the opposing farmers started home in haste for their wives, daughters and sweethearts, and soon returned with a force of the fair sex equal to the Roselle contingent. All the women voted, and one of their number was elected trustee.

In "Women and Men," Colonel Higginson calls attention to the value of the habits of women acquired in housekeeping when applied to public functions.

He says: "It will be found in almost any American city, on comparing the lists of officers in the charitable societies of fifty years ago with those of today, that whereas they found it necessary to begin with having men as treasurers, women now usually keep these financial affairs in their own hands. This results in a detailed accuracy which is heroic and sometimes pathetic."

A pamphlet of sixty pages entitled, "Legal Condition of Girls and Women in Michigan," compiled by Mr. Melvin A. Root, will be found of much value and interest. It was prepared with great care and was submitted to the critical correction of one of the ablest judges of long practice in Michigan. The pamphlet shows the legal inequalities between men and women that still exist, even in a state so progressive as Michigan, and it furnishes a strong argument for woman suffrage. It is commended in the highest terms by the officers of the State Equal Suffrage Association and others. It may be ordered from Wesley Emery, Lansing, Mich., at ten cents per copy; two copies fifteen cents; fifteen copies, one dollar; one hundred copies, six dollars.

THE STORY DENIED.

The Sunday Capital of August 5th, contained an item stating that Governor Lewelling forgot to mention suffrage in his Garden City speech. Mrs. Bina A. Otis, having some doubt as to the accuracy of this statement, wrote a letter of inquiry to Emma Sells Marshall of Garden City, to which the following is the reply:

Mrs. Bina A. Otis, Topeka, Kansas.

DEAR MRS. OTIS:—Your letter received. The clipping from the Capital is false as regards suffrage. Governor Lewelling spoke in favor of equal suffrage and said just enough and not too much. His whole speech was full of the principle of equal and universal suffrage. I heard many say (and some of them were Republicans) his speech was one of the best they ever heard.

J. Willis Gleed gave a splendid talk here on equal suffrage, the evening of August 24, to a full house. Our suffrage club has over seventy members and is doing good work. I am vice president of the Garden City club and secretary of the county work.

EMMA SELLS MARSHALL.

The rumor has gained some credence that the populists have decided to ignore the suffrage issue in the campaign. There would be no doubt as to the source of such a rumor even if the Topeka Capital had not made it plain.

A. C. W.

WOMEN SPEAKERS.

Women who are billed to speak from a non-partisan Amendment platform: Mrs. Laura M. Johns, Salina; Miss Eva Corning, Topeka; Mrs. Chapman Cat, New York; Miss Elizabeth C. Yates, Maine; Mrs. M. E. Haines, Mrs. Luella R. Kraybill, and Miss Hellen Kimber of Kansas.

From Populist platform: Annie L. Diggs, Topeka; Alla B. Stryker, Great Bend; Eva M. Blackman, Leavenworth; Bina A. Otis, Topeka; Rev. Annie Shaw, Massachusetts; Miss Susan B. Anthony, New York.

From Prohibition platform: Hellen M. Gougar, Indiana.

From Republican platform: Mrs. Smith, McPherson; J. Ellen Foster, Iowa.

From Democratic platform: None reported. Overmeyer not heard from.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, } ss.
LUCAS COUNTY.

FRANK J. CHENEY makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. CHENEY & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for each and every case of Catarrh that cannot be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

FRANK J. CHENEY.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,

[SEAL] Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free.

F. J. CHENEY & Co., Toledo, O.
Sold by Druggists, 75c.

It Grows in Texas, It's Good.

The Texas Coast country vies with California in raising pears, grapes, and strawberries. The 1893 record of H. M. Stringfellow, Hitchcock, Texas, who raised nearly $6,000 worth of pears from thirteen acres, can be duplicated by you.

G. T. Nicholson, G. P. A. Santa Fe Route, Topeka, Kansas, will be glad to furnish without charge an illustrated pamphlet telling about Texas.

AN ADDRESS.

Delivered by Miss M. Katherine Gernon of Russell, Kansas, at the Commencement Exercises of the Graduating Class of 1894, of Which She Was a Member.

The question of woman suffrage is one of the most important of the present day. It first began in England in 1857, and in 1866 a petition of women to the house of commons set forth that the possession of property carries with it the right to vote. The first convention in the United States was held at Seneca Falls, N. Y., in 1848. For a quarter of a century woman suffrage has been a subject of great interest, and is receiving the assistance of men of prominence in all political parties.

In this glorious country of ours we say that the government is of the people, by the people and for the people. But it is only half of the people so long as woman has no voice in it. I think this manifest wrong to one-half of our citizens, who are equal to men in every respect, (except as a class morally their superiority) ought to be righted and this relic of semi-barbarism banished with the past. In some respects, the law is too liberal, while in other cases, it is tyrannical. Look at the thousands landed at Castle Garden, coming from the disfranchised classes of Europe, and few of them can read and write. After remaining here a short time only, they are granted, by our laws, the highest privileges of American citizenship. Compare them to one-half of our nation, who have lived here twenty-one years and over, and who are interested in its welfare, are denied this privilege simply because they are women.

Taxation without representation was the chief cause of the revolutionary struggle. Women who own property are taxed and are subject to the same laws as the men, yet they are refused the right of franchise. History teaches that woman must have votes in order to protect her interests, and those who are subject to the law should have the power to say what the law shall be. Every man votes except when a good reason can be given why he should not. Idiots and insane persons do not vote because they have not the use of their faculties; children do not vote for they lack the necessary knowledge; criminals do not vote for they are public enemies. Now, can any similarly good reason be given why women should not vote? Does she, too, lack the necessary ability? We have and always will have women whose abilities will far surpass the abilities of men. Woman is a citizen of the United States and of the state in which she resides and assists in the support of both when she pays taxes; she can understand our institutions as well as man; she has a faculty for judging as well as man; she is not a public enemy, but a friend to the commonwealth. If no reason can be given why women, as women, cannot vote wisely and well, then on American principles they ought to vote.

Some of the ablest opponents of woman suffrage argue that woman is a creation constitutionally different from man and will always remain different, mentally, morally and socially. I think this is one of the strongest reasons for advocating woman suffrage. One-half of human nature is endowed with a certain way of thinking, feeling and acting. This quality of life is shut out of public affairs. One-half of human nature is embodied in our state, while the other half is left unrepresented. Do you consider this wise? Since God made male and female equal, did he not intend that both these elements should be embodied in laws, customs and institutions?

Some say that home is woman's sphere. It certainly is, but should it be the bounds of her interests? Is it an impossibility to unite an interest in politics with attention to home? It has been proven that it is not. In Scotland the women vote equally with the men in the appointment of ministers and ruling elders. This privilege did not harden women or interfere with their household work. On the other hand, it contributed largely to the success and strength of the church. Therefore, if women voted, it would be a noble advancement and a refinement to the government. But look at the other side. Does the term, sphere, apply more strongly to women than it does to men? Men, too, have their duty to perform; for instance, the clergyman. Why not say that politics will interfere with his duty and he ought to confine himself to his proper sphere. But he can vote simply because he is a man, and woman is denied franchise while her heart throbs with pride for the glory of her country, and with the longing to bring about some great step of progress or some sorely needed reform.

The argument, "woman is ignorant of politics," is often brought up. Is the reason hard to find? What use is it for them to look up subjects in which they have no voice? But give woman the ballot and you will find that she will not make a greater botch of it than men do now. It is argued that politics are too degraded for women to enter. This is no argument against female suffrage, it is an argument against male suffrage. Men have always had control of politics. If they have allowed them to become disgraceful in any way it is time that woman came to the rescue. It is further argued that fighting and grumbling is often going on at the polling booth. Government is not an act of force, but reason, wisdom and knowledge govern. The ballot governs by the most quiet of all authority. It expresses, not rude force, but opinion. Therefore civilized men ought to go to vote as quietly as they go to church. Cannot women vote without being ill treated? If woman did vote it would be to the refinement of the polling booth and would elevate it and dignify it without degrading herself.

Some think that woman is too angelic to vote. I think she is intensely human and so unlike man that she needs special representation. If the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness is as much the birthright of woman as of man then it is no more than just that she should demand that right.

Therefore, woman suffrage should be granted not only because woman's interest is equal to man's, but it is a right which the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution recognize.

TERMS USED IN HERALDRY.

Meaning of Words Used in Describing Devices on Coats of Arms.

For describing the various devices used, heraldry has a language of its own, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The shield is represented by the escutcheon, and the figures on it are called "charges." The colors used are called "tinctures," gold is "or," silver "argent," blue "azure," red "gules," purple "purpure," green "vert," and black "sable." The side of the escutcheon opposite the left hand of the person looking at it is called the "dexter" side, while that opposite the right hand is the "sinister" side, the center being called the "fess" point. "Impaling" is the division of the shield into two equal parts by a perpendicular line, for the representation of the union of two families; the "dexter" is the man's side, and the "sinister" the woman's. The attitudes of animals on the shield are indicated by such terms as "rampant," "passant," and "sejant." When a lion or other beast of prey stands upright, with only one eye and one ear seen, he is said to be "rampant;" when walking forward, with one ear and eye seen, he is "passant;" when sitting, "sejant;" when lying down, "couchant." When both eyes and ears can be seen the word "guardant" is added to "passant," "rampant," "sejant," or "couchant," as the case may be. Looking back he is said to be "regardant," and leaping forward, "salient." The position of other animals is differently indicated. A horse when running is "courant," when leaping, "salient." When shown with full face, a deer is said to be "at gaze," when standing, "statant;" when walking, "tripping," and when at rest on the ground, "lodged." Birds with wings down are "close;" when preparing to fly they are "rising;" when flying, "volant," and when their breasts are fully exposed they are "displayed." When their wings are open and drawn over their heads, they are said to be "indorsed."

His Tailor Humored Him.

The story is told by the Worcester Gazette of a former clothier of that city who had for a customer a man rich in the world's goods, and very sharp in many ways, but not destitute of vanity, and always eager to own the best of everything. This man, of course, liked to dress well, and ordered the best, and, of course, he was humored in this by the tailor. When he would come to try on his coat before it was finished, he was apt to consider it satisfactory, but the head of the shop would come up and look him over, and then say:

"Well, Mr. S., I would like to keep this coat for a day or two longer. It looks real well, but I would like to change the shoulders just a trifle."

Then the tailor would take the coat and hang it in the closet. In a day or two Mr. S. would call again to try on the same garment. The genial tailor would contrive not to see the "try no" until the customer had expressed complete content. Then he would hurriedly step forward and critically examine the coat again.

"Yes," he would say, "it is a very good fit, but if you are not in a hurry, Mr. S., I would like to keep the coat until to-morrow, so I could straighten that collar just a bit."

Of course Mr. S. would be doubly flattered, and say he would wait. The next day the coat would be delivered to him, and Mr. S. would say it was the best fit he ever had. On the quiet the tailor might tell you that he never touched the coat from the beginning, but kept it hanging in the closet all the time.

Family Resemblance.

Experts in handwriting say that all the people of a single generation write alike, and it is well known that most French handwriting has a strong family likeness to the eyes of others than Frenchmen. Nearly all Chinamen of the wash-house class look alike to superficial observers, and persons unaccustomed to colored persons find difficulty in distinguishing one from another. It needs, however, a comparison of two or three family photograph albums of twenty or thirty years ago to convince men and women of to-day that there are striking superficial likenesses running through Americans of a given generation. All these old albums show curious resemblances, chiefly, perhaps, of dress and face, but sufficiently striking for one family album at first glance to be taken for another. As page after page of each is turned over, there is the same succession of men, women and children in full figure, sitting, standing, posed in groups of two or three, with hats, without hats, draped in shawl, and manifestly dressed in their best for the occasion. The photographers of those days chose, the reasons of their own, to make full-length pictures and, as they were usually small, costume counted for a great deal and helped intensify the general likeness running the whole generation on.—New York Sun.

The more the professors try to suppress foot ball the more the students kick.

We call the owl wise, but not because he sits up all night.

OUR BUDGET OF FUN.

HUMOROUS SAYINGS AND DOINGS HERE AND THERE.

Jokes and Jokelets that Are Supposed to Have Been Recently Born—Sayings and Doings that Are Odd, Curious, and Laughable—The Week's Humor.

Let Us All Laugh.

LITTLE DICK—Why do you pray so loud for things you want? God isn't deaf. Little Dick—No, but grandpa is.—Life.

"HARDUP—Hello, Charlie! Your trousers bag at the knees. Dedbroke—I wish they bagged at the pocket-book!—Truth.

IRATE FATHER—When I die, I shall leave you without a penny. Calm Son—Certainly. You can't take money along, you know.—Truth.

BOSTON GIRL—Do you know, I fancy heaven will be much like Boston. Chicago girl—Why? Because there won't be men enough to go around.—Life.

"GIBBS is a great lawyer. His cross-examination always embarrasses a witness." "How does he do it?" "Asks if each statement made in direct examination is true."—Truth.

"THERE's a friend down stairs waiting for you; says he wants you only for a minute." Mr. Catchon—Here, James, take this ten dollars and keep it until I come back.—Fun.

NELLIE—Why do you send out your wedding invitations so far in advance? Millie—Many of our friends keep their money in savings banks, and have to give notice.—New York Weekly.

MRS. SUBURB—Why in the world don't you grease that lawn-mower of yours? Neighbor's Hired Man—The misus told me not to till you had your pianer tuned.—New York Weekly.

SHE—If every atom of the human body is renewed every seven years, I cannot be the same woman that you married. He—I've been suspecting that for some time.—New York Weekly.

"NOTICE Lushley at the banquet last night? Seemed to enter into the spirit of the thing freely." "Er—yes; but not so freely as the spirits of the thing entered into him."—Buffalo Courier.

SHE—Here's a bill from the doctor. He—What's it for? Ethel—I know, mamma. Doctor spoke cross to me yesterday on the street, and I stuck out my tongue at him.—Yonkers Statesman.

DEACON GRAVELEIGH—Do you believe in infant damnation, Mr. Popleigh? Popleigh (who has spent most of the night doing a ghost dance with his youngest—fervently)—You bet I do!—Truth.

"Why," asked the boarder at the head of the table, "are ham and eggs always associated together?" "That," remarked the very bad actor, eagerly, "is just what I would like to know."—Detroit Tribune.

HAUGHTY LADY (who has just purchased a stamp)—"Must I put it on myself?" Postoffice Assistant (very politely)—"Not necessarily, madam; it will probably accomplish more if you put it on the letter."—Newark Ledger.

PATRON—Waiter, waiter! can't you hurry up that steak? I've been waiting ten minutes. Waiter—Sorry, sir; but it takes five minutes to pound it and seven to cook it. It will be ready shortly.—Arkansas Traveler.

BOY—It's awful lucky we have our examinations for promotion now, instead of in the fall when the school opens. Father—Why? Boy—'Cause when school begins in the fall we none of us ever know anything.—Good News.

HE—Do you think, darling, that it would be advisable for me to speak to your father to-day? She—Well, hardly, dearest. He remarked this morning that the fire-crackers you gave my little brother woke him up at 3 o'clock.

WILLIS—When my wife makes me a present it is sure to be something that will last. Wallace—My wife is just like her. Five years ago she made me a present of one hundred cigars, and I have ninety-nine of them yet.—Life.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup.

It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

RICH AND RACY.

A Republican Free-Silver Banker Makes a Monkey of Bristow.

INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

A Stray Fragment from the Monkey-and-Parrot Tune in the Republican Camp.

With regularly provoking to republicans, crazy Joe Bristow's correspondence falls into the hands of the populist committee. The following cross-fire between Bristow and a free-silver republican shows that all is not harmony in the republican camp, and that the republican howl of "parity," "bimetallism," "coin metal," and similar phrases, is not altogether fooling the voters. The letters are as follows:

AGNELIUS TO BRISTOW.

LINDSBORG, August 8, 1894.

Mr. J. L. Bristow, Secretary, Topeka, Kas.:

DEAR SIR—Your favor of July 31, asking for contributions to the republican campaign fund is received, and I can almost say, "not one cent for tribute, but millions for defense," because contributions to a fund to elect monometallists, or such weak bimetallists as to amount to the same thing, is more like tribute to an oppressor than aid to our business interests. Your recommendations are correct. "I am a reliable republican" and have voted the ticket and have worked for it for 20 years, never having voted for any other party. The party, its welfare and success are dear to me, but my own interests and those of my family and friends are of more consequence to me than any party, and if the nominees of the republican party, their organ, the Topeka Capital, and other papers supporting them do not change front on the silver question, favor free coinage, stopping the increase of value in the dollar and consequent depreciation of all property except money, which will bring bankruptcy and ruin to our farmers and business men, I will give my little contributions to some party that can see the hand of oppression and cast it off.

The act of 1873 demonetizing silver was a crime, and the repeal of the Sherman law of 1890 without giving us something better was equally a crime, both perpetrated in the interests of the rich and creditor classes against the honest toiler and business man.

There is at present not a cent added to the circulation in the United States, nor has there been since the repeal of the Sherman law nearly a year ago, and it has been diminished by the shipment of gold and silver that has been sent to our oppressors across the water; so whatever has been added to the wealth of the country has gone to the moneyed and creditor class, at the expense of the owners of property and honest debtors. All of our financial legislation of recent years has been against us and for our English bosses and their copartners on this side, and it is time to call a halt and find where we are at.

It is not my intention to do as some others do, go out of the ranks and herd with a party that, while it may be right on this question, is radically wrong on some other questions of great moment, but to appeal to those who are in the lead to heed the cries of a distressed people, and, like the grand republicans of 1861 to 1868, take and hold the position of a friend to the oppressed, retrieve their now imperiled fortunes as a party, following the advice of J. D. Cameron, and place four words in the platform, "High tariff and free silver," and pledging themselves to work for the success of that principle and all that it implies, restriction of immigration, arbitration of disputes between capital and labor, and pleading the cause of the common people.

This is my stand, and your committee, to do its duty as the conservator of the interests of our party in this state, should see to it that your work is not done in vain or in the interests of those who will, if elected, work for the interests of our enemies and against those who elected them. Give us a guaranty that our money shall be used for our interests, as well as for party success, and I pledge you as much as I can spare and will try to get others to aid.

A. E. AGNELIUS.

A QUESTION OF COMPROMISE.

TOPEKA, Kas., August 4, 1894.

Mr. A. E. Agnelius, Lindsborg, Kas.:

MY DEAR SIR—Yours of August 3 is received, and contents noted. Your closing sentence is: "Give us the guaranty that our money shall be used for our interests as well as party success, and I pledge you as much as I can spare, and will try to get others to aid." This is just what we pledge you. We do not know of a single republican in Kansas that is not in favor of the restoration of silver as a money metal. I know there is not one on the state ticket. As to the manner of restoring it, that would be a question of compromise, as all legislation is where there is such a wide difference of opinion.

I do not agree with you in your more radical statements, but I believe there is no material difference between your ideas and those entertained by Major Morrill and Mr. Blue in regard to their views on the silver question. With best wishes, I am, very truly,

J. L. BRISTOW,

Secretary.

"DENNIS" IS ITS NAME.

LINDSBORG, Kas., August 6, 1894.

Mr. J. L. Bristow, Secretary, Topeka, Kas.:

DEAR SIR—I have your reply of the 4th to my letter of the 3d, which contains the same evasions as have been practiced for several years in all statements made, both by the speakers in the campaigns and our representatives in Congress. They all say they are in favor of the use of silver as a money metal, but they also want it so hampered that we are to remain under the single, gold standard.

You say, "As to the manner of restoring it, that would be a question of compromise, as all legislation is where there is such a wide difference of opinion." We have had all the compromise we want, having had nothing but compromise in the Sherman law of 1890, and which did more damage to the cause of silver than would have been done if that law had contained but one section, and that section repealing the Bland-Allison act of 1878. Silver and its cause has never been hurt more than it was by the passage of the law of 1890.

We want this "difference of opinion" that you mention to be harmonized in favor of the business interests of this country, and when we republicans of the West and South are willing to accept the policy of high protection, which favors the East more than it does the West, they must make but one compromise, containing but one condition, and that the absolute free coinage of silver at its present ratio with gold, the bill that was introduced by P. B. Plumb and which passed the senate before the Sherman compromise was passed. Had our representatives done their duty in Congress by insisting upon that law and taking that or nothing, there would never have been such a thing as the so-called people's party, and the passage of a free-coinage act now will take all the wind out of their sails, leaving them free trade and vagaries that no man of sense will subscribe to. We are losing men every day by our compromise position on the silver question. The party must take a stand on this question, with all uncertainties left out, or "Dennis" is its name.

Yours truly, A. E. AGNELIUS.

A MATTER OF DUTY.

LINDSBORG, Kas., August 7, 1894.

Mr. Thos. L. Bond, Salina, Kas.:

MY DEAR SIR—I have read your essay on the free coinage of silver, and it was not dry reading, nor such as to leave any argument of gold-standard men unanswered. It boldly and plainly meets every objection urged, and to the fair and unprejudiced mind leaves nothing for the American monometallist to stand on.

I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said on this question by yourself and others whose writings are before the voters of the state of Kansas, and if the candidates who are before the people could be forced to place themselves on either one side or the other, that we might vote as we feel on this proposition, I have no fears as to the result.

It is hard for me to think of casting my vote for any other than a republican, and I hope that the exigency will not arise; but I am so firmly convinced that the present agitation of the tariff question is only a great whirlwind created to throw dust in our eyes while the silver question is given second place, and that the lives of our great industries and farming interests depend on a healthy increase of our circulation, it being the wisest course to make the increase by free coinage of silver, that I am constrained to believe that it is my duty to myself, my family and friends to cast my vote for him or them who will work for legislation in the interests of an overburdened and long-suffering people, in place of legislation for bondholders, bond buyers, brokers and others who are speculating in money at our expense.

I send you copies of some of my correspondence, which will give you an idea of how important I consider this question, and a clipping from the Empire of Finance and Trade of July 8, 1894, which, while a Wall street paper, sees things as they are. Please return the clipping. The rest you can use in any manner you please, as I am not hiding my views and have no fear to meet the enemy on any ground, at any time or any place. I am glad to see that you are taking a stand in harmony with my views, and I believe that we are in good company—men whose hearts beat in unison with the poor and oppressed.

A. E. AGNELIUS.

The New Slavery.

A hundred years ago this nation rested on a substantial equality of free and happy homes; there was not a millionaire on the continent, nor a pauper class. The basis has now shifted, and rests on the quicksands of a gilded class of landlords, money lords, vampires, and drones. We are crushing the manhood out of 1 million unemployed producers to make 10,000 plutocrats, who stratify society into princes and paupers, and strike with the dry rot of doom our national character. The industrial system of competition enriches the few and pauperizes the many. It is a struggle of human cannivora. The rich grow in wealth, the poor sink deeper into poverty. The mansion of the millionaire adjoins the alleys where the gaunt children of toil and misery are huddled like hogs. At one end of society we have our noxious and pampered idlers and plunderers with countless millions; at the other the famished serfs of labor, living in enforced idleness, fast sinking into despair and making ready to dynamite our civilization.

Paupers and criminals increase four times faster in proportion than our population. The prisons fill more rapidly than the churches. The army of homeless families, of starving children, has doubled within a twelvemonth. The wealthy classes fatten on the cream of civilization, while industry grows lean on the skim milk. Capital has the pie, labor the crust. Capital reduces wages to the life limits, pockets the profits, and offers free soup to the workman as the amends of this robbery.

Civilization freed the plantation chattels a generation back; but there are now more white slaves sowing cotton than there were black slaves picking it 30 years ago, while the new masters deny any responsibility for the feeding and clothing of their wage slaves. It is safe to say that the whole history of the old chattel bondage does not contain the amount of wretchedness and despair that has filled the cup of the American workingman during the past 12 months. The new slavery is being fastened on civilized men of our own race, who were born free and who hold the love and memories of freedom.

In every large city of the North and West, depots are established whence food is given to famishing crowds. The cowed and shambling multitude are herded like Texas steers at a round-up, and corralled in their misery. Men are trodden under foot by their fellows, whom want has made insane, in the wild struggle for the loaf which may keep alive for one day longer the hungry family. Visit the vast coal fields and you will see men of the white race toiling for a pittance, as men never toiled in the cotton field, in absolute subjection to the will of their master, and with no hope of relief save through the portals of a death more merciful than their brother man. The factory, the mine, the furnace, is closed whenever the caprice or the interest of the capitalist directs; that alone is consulted. The suffering, misery, despair, of the workman is not considered. The plantation slave of old was more sure of the first needs of life—clothing, food, and shelter—than are to-day hundreds of thousands of civilized white workmen. This direful and fatal condition of labor is the result of laws enacted at the bidding of London and Jerusalem, and wholly in the interest of capital. The corporation, the monopolist, the money king, have for many years dictated our legislation and chosen our rulers. They have shaped the financial policy of the nation, and no matter which party fills the offices, Wall street is always in the saddle. The result comes to-day in the wreck of fortunes, the destruction of trade, the paralysis of industry, the demonetization of silver, the shrinkage of all values but gold, the distress of the workman and the producer.

Our present system of competitive, cut-throat civilization, which can insure steady interest to those who have amassed wealth, but cannot insure remunerative work to those who produce wealth, is in its last hours. A new civilization of associated interests based on justice rather than greed will take its place. The evils of this age are made the agents which are to usher in a cooperative industrial system expressive of the golden rule.

THE REMEDY.

The fashionable methods of acquiring wealth during the last quarter of a century have resulted in transferring 95 per cent. of the wealth of the nation to less than 5 per cent. of the population. The people consent that those who have, under the forms of law, thus taken to themselves the profits of national industry may hold their ill-gotten gains—unless they themselves unwisely precipitate the world crisis that will end in canceling the bonded indebtedness of the modern world. The victims only ask that the spoliation shall cease, and that laws be adopted making them impossible in future. If the plutocratic class is wise, it will not object to compromising on this basis. It only holds by paper titles, which will vanish when the people decide to resume their own.—Sermon by Rev. E. M. Wheelock, pastor Unitarian church, Austin, Tex.

New York, July 26.—Rather an unusual sight was witnessed upon Broadway yesterday afternoon, near Chambers street. The street was packed with people. Three fairly well-dressed men came along. They had white shirts. Their clothes were clean, their boots neatly brushed, and they did not look like men who drank. Around each of their necks was a card on which the following was inscribed in big black letters: "I want work of any kind." The pedestrians looked at the men and then at the cards around their necks and stopped to express a word of sympathy. Some offered them alms. "No," they said; "we are not beggars; we want work." It was a strange sight, and a new departure for the unemployed to go about with tags around their necks begging work. This idea will be quickly followed by others, and it will not be long before hundreds of unemployed will be wearing similar cards.

These empty-headed prattlers who are given to boasting about the American eagle and this land of the free would do well to read and reread the above. That there are so few anarchists, robbers, bomb throwers, etc., is really a matter of surprise, when we take into consideration the hardships and want that are abroad in this country to-day. Possibly nowhere else in the wide world is there such dire destitution and real want as in this much vaunted country of ours. Every thoughtful man shrinks from what unquestionably will be the condition of the masses in this country during the coming winter.

Thousands of honest people are patiently seeking work and bread, while the prospect of their obtaining them is decidedly gloomy. Every ship that sails from an American port is loaded with people seeking homes in other countries and other climes. America, through its accursed laws, has become the home of paupers and millionaires. The great middle class has practically passed away. It has become the home for a few children of luxury and millions of children of want.

The Populist League Forwards Words of Encouragement to Captain Kolb.

At the meeting of the populist league last Friday night, the following resolution was adopted, and the secretary telegraphed a copy to Alabama at once:

To Captain Kolb, and the People's Party of Alabama:

We, the populist league of Shawnee county, feel sure we represent the sentiment of the people's party of Kansas when we declare that we believe the populists have carried Alabama; therefore, be it resolved, That we say to you and the people's party: Hold it at all hazards. The will of the people as expressed by their ballots shall prevail against mob law, ballot box-stuffing, and fraud.

The speakers were G. C. Clemens, E. E. Chesney, and F. A. Kiene, the candidate for the legislature in the thirty-seventh district.

When a hungry dog digs up a bone, he goes off and enjoys it. But when that apex of the animal kingdom, man, digs up a crop after hard labor, he takes part of it to the landlord, part of it to the tax lord, part of it to the usurer, part of it to the railroad lord, and divides up with a thousand lords, and goes on half rations, half clothing, and poor school for his bairns. Pity the dog is not wise enough to divide up its bone with a lot of other dogs too lazy to hunt bones for themselves, ain't it? The dog do n't know much, anyway.—Coming Nation.

REPUBLICAN DECEPTION.

JULY 27, 1894.

Editor of the World, Downs, Kas.:

MY DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find a slip containing a verbatim quotation from a letter written by John W. Breidenbach, chairman of the populist state central committee, and sent out to some trusted populists. But the populists who were once faithful are not all faithful now, and, as a result, we have an autograph copy of the letter. Please use this in a way to render it the most effective in your own community. Things are coming our way. The exposures of the populist administration of public institutions of the last few weeks are more than any party can stand under. Let every republican in every community do his duty, and we will win the fight. Very truly,

J. L. BRISTOW, Secretary.

The letter of Breidenbach, alluded to above, is stereotyped and sent out by the republican state committee as "editorial" to the republican papers with this paragraph:

"The people in the western part of the state are unable to contribute anything to the campaign funds, and in order to elect members of the legislature in that section, the campaign expenses must be paid by the state committee. We must secure control of the next legislature."

Now, in light of this omitted phrase, read this extract from this same "editorial":

"This special interest is doubtless because he is a candidate for the U. S. senate, and populist-like he wants to make sure of his own job, and, therefore, seeks to elect members of the legislature, who will favor him."

Here the everlasting, ever-present, never-ending republican lie comes in. So steeped in infamy are they, so imbued with falsification and misrepresentation, that it is impossible for even their state central committee to send out a truthful statement. By omitting the remainder of the sentence they leave, as intended, a wrong impression of it. Here it is:

"We must secure control of the legislature IN ORDER TO REDEEM OUR PLEDGES TO THE PEOPLE."

Note well the words emphasized, for they show that the populist state central committee are ever mindful that they are representatives of the people, and are looking to legislative control, that the laws the people demand may be enacted.

As to the propriety of the letter soliciting funds for the campaign, no honorable person can find the least fault with it. The republican committee must of necessity do the same. They have done so, as their letter published below shows. We commend them for following the honored and approved custom of raising campaign funds honestly and openly, set them by the people's party state committee.

There is no doubt that said committee needs funds "badly." It is a humiliating position for the G. O. P., after 30 years of partisan success, to admit, "we have no offices in the state or nation." God is just and will sometime relieve every nation of tyranny and injustice, and never will He allow Belial, in guise of Cy Leland and the republican party, help Kansas "be herself again" in the good old way of republican rule.

JULY 31, 1894.

Capt. J. I. Hoover, Canton, Kas.:

MY DEAR SIR—You have been recommended to us as a reliable republican, interested in republican success. The state committee this year has no funds except those contributed by the people. We have no offices in the state or nation who can assist us in a financial way in the campaign. There is a good demand for literature, which we must publish and get out at once. We would like to enlist your services. Can you not raise us some money in your neighborhood; any amount, from $1 to $500, and remit to us at once, giving name if possible of each contributor and amount he contributes; if not the name, give us the name of your township and district or precinct, and it will be so credited upon our books. Please take hold of this with some enthusiasm, as it is of great necessity at this time. We believe that every citizen of Kansas, who realizes the condition, is anxious that there shall be a republican victory in this state. It is to his interest financially that the burden under which we have been struggling for two years shall be lifted, and Kansas be herself again. Help us in this cause. If we can get the great mass of earnest republicans actively at work, there is no question of our success. This we must do, and you can materially aid us. Let us hear from you soon, and oblige.

Very truly, J. L. BRISTOW,

Secretary.

A prepared editorial is sent out by the republican state central committee, containing a manufactured account of the penitentiary fight. To this is attached a note, "to the editor," which contains this sentence:

"If the 321 republican papers in Kansas will center their fire upon Mr. Lewelling, and demand that he obey the law and that this investigation be made as the statutes require, it will have a tremendous effect on this campaign."

Here is the republican plan outlined. Here are the tactics of the gang that are going to "redeem Kansas." This is the size of the "stand uppers." This miserable lot of self-important tricksters, whose brains are in their bellies, actually believe that they can fool the people into the belief that the solution of all the great questions—of finance, transportation, labor, and land—will all be had by abusing populists.

To this has the republican party sunk, and for this they will be buried past resurrection in November.

Jefferson's Opinions of Banks.

[I have just been reading Jefferson's correspondence, as found in an edition of his works published by Lippincott, Philadelphia, 1864. He was a prophet as well as statesman. The following extracts from letters written from 1814 to 1820 might have been from letters written from 1873 to 1894, so truthfully do they represent the condition of the later period. The statement that the people's party stands for Jeffersonian democracy could be verified on many other points as clearly as these extracts define our almost perfect Jeffersonian position on the currency question.—H. H. Brown.]

To Thomas Cooper, 1814, he writes:

"Congress may now borrow of the public, and without interest, all the money they want, to the amount of a competent circulation, by merely issuing their promissory notes of proper denominations for the larger purposes of circulation, but not for small."—Vol. 6, p. 382.

In 1815 he writes:

"The government is now issuing treasury notes for circulation, bottomed on solid funds, and bearing interest. The banking confederacy (and merchants bound to them by debts) will endeavor to crush the credit of these notes."—Vol. 6, p. 434.

In 1817 he writes:

"In copying her [England] we do not seem to consider that like premises produce like consequences. The bank mania is one of the most threatening of these institutions. It is raising up a moneyed aristocracy in our country which has already set the government at defiance, and, although forced at length to yield a little on this their first essay of their strength, their principles are unyielded and unyielding. These have taken deep root in the hearts of that class from which our legislatures are drawn, and the sop to Cerberus from the fable has become history. Their principles lay hold of the good, their pelf of the bad; and thus those whom the constitution has placed as guard at its portals are sophisticated and suborned from their duties."—Vol. 7, p. 64.

To Mr. Gallatin, in 1815:

"We are undone, my dear sir, if this banking mania be not suppressed. . . . Put down banks, and if this country could not be carried through the longest war against her most powerful enemy without ever knowing the want of a dollar, without dependence on a traitorous class of citizens, without being hard on the resources of the people, without loading the public with an indefinite burthen of debt, I know nothing of my countrymen. Not by any novel project, but by ordinary and well-experienced means; by the total prohibition of all private paper at all times; by serviceable taxes; in war aided by the necessary emission of public paper of circulating size; this, based on special taxes, redeemable annually as this special tax comes in, and finally within an immediate period—even with the flood of private paper with which we are deluged—would the treasury have ventured its credit in bills of circulating size, of $5 or $10, they would greedily have been taken by the people in preference to bank paper. . . . We are without any common measure of the value of property, and private fortunes go up and down at the will of the worst of our citizens."—Vol. 6, p. 498.

In 1819 he writes to N. Macon:

"I am asked $18 for a yard of broadcloth, which, when we had dollars, I used to get for 18 shillings. From this I can only understand that a dollar is now worth but two inches of broadcloth; but broadcloth is no standard of measure or value."—Vol. 7, p. 111.

In the same year he wrote to John Adams:

"The evils of this deluge of [bank] paper money are not to be removed until our citizens are generally and radically instructed in their cause and consequences, and silence by their authority the interested clamors and sophistry of speculating, shaving and banking institutions. Till then we must be content to return to the savage state—to recur to barter in the exchange of our property—for want of a stable common measure of value, that now in use being less fixed and stable than the beads and wampum of the Indians."—Vol. 7, p. 115.

He writes again, the same year, to Mr. Adams:

"We were laboring under a dropsical fullness of circulating medium. Nearly all of it is now called in by the banks, who have the regulation of the safety valves of our fortunes, and who condense and explode them at their will."—Vol. 7, p. 142.

Again, in 1819 he writes Mr. Adams:

"That bank [the United States bank] will probably conform voluntarily to such regulations as the legislature may prescribe for others. If they do not, we must shut their doors and join the other states which deny the right of Congress to establish banks, and solicit them to agree to some mode of settling this constitutional question. They have themselves twice decided against their right, and twice for it. Many of the states have been uniform in denying it, and between such parties the constitution has provided no umpire."—Vol. 7, p. 142.

To H. Nelson, in 1820:

"The sudden reduction of the circulating medium, from a plethora to all but annihilation, is producing entire revolution of fortune."—Vol. 7, p. 152.

When in Topeka last Saturday to speak at Hamilton hall, Hon. Joseph Lowe, the democratic candidate for attorney general, said that if Abraham Lincoln were alive and should visit Washington county, he would not receive a greater popular demonstration than Governor Lewelling did a few weeks ago. It seemed as if the whole populace turned out to see and hear him. This was frank on the part of Mr. Lowe.

Was it Matthews' Body.

The body of J. D. Matthews, a traveling salesman for a coal firm in Omaha, has been identified by default in the debris of the Rock Island wreck near Lincoln. It was the only body unclaimed by Kansas. Matthews' family lives at Sterling, Mo.

THESE are times when the bottom dollar is also the top dollar.

WHEN THE BIRDS COME.

Who singeth so sweetly,
So blithesome, so clear,
Out there in the garden?
What stranger is here?

Oh, welcome, thrice welcome!
My Linnet, 'tis he!
How long I have waited,
Have waited for thee!

Now warble me winter
May bid us a cheer,
For birding will bring us
The flowers new.

A nest in the hedgerow
Close by he will weave,
And call me each morning
My chamber to leave.

The violet is peeping
From out the frost green,
And soon will the blossoms
Upon it be seen.

And soon in the foliage,
The fragrance afloat,
In his beautiful home
My bird will be hid.

The springtime is with us,
The springtime so dear!
My Sweetheart, my dear friend,
My Linnet is here.

A HUMBLE FAILURE.

I was getting my first lesson in business. "Now, my boy," said Mr. Jenks, the Superintendent, "after all I have told you, I want to give you a bit of warning: If you want any candy, eat all you want in the store, but never take a piece away unless you pay for it. So with everything else. Remember that in business strict honesty must be observed."

I had been in the store for some weeks, selling anything from self-binders to matches—for the store was the only one in the village—when one day a man came slouching in and asked for the "boss." There was nothing striking about him. His face impressed me as being two-thirds covered by a tawny beard, and his dark, uncombed hair hung down over his eyes, contrasting disagreeably with his dusty complexion. A loose cotton shirt, drawn into wrinkles by half a suspender supporting a pair of patched "overalls," with a pair of heavy-soled shoes, identified the man as one of the poor farmers of the plain north of the village. To the "boss" he explained that three years ago he had traded his 2-year-old calf for a colt, and that the colt was now a horse, and that a couple of days ago he had traded his second cow for another horse. Now, having two horses, if he had a mowing machine, he could do his own harvesting very quickly, and then he could mow his neighbor's fields "on shares," and thus pay for the mower. Could the boss let him have a mower and pay for it in the fall? He had never gone into debt so heavily before, and he knew it was a risk, but he thought he could do it, and then his Billy was awfully smart—he had learned his letters already, and he was only six. If he could make a little money with the mower he could buy Billy books and a coat to go to school in the village. I thought the man grew faintly animated as he spoke of Billy. Evidently he was making the greatest speculation of his life for Billy's education. The result was that when he drove home a mower was tied to the half-dozen boards on four block wheels which were his wagon, and the same day I entered in the day-book of the store: "June 3d, Ephraim Goodnow, to one mower, $60. Three months at 1 per cent. monthly."

Sept. 15 had passed, and Ephraim Goodnow had not paid any of the three bills for $61.80 sent him. Mr. Jenks, therefore, sent his assistant to collect the bill, saying that in such a bad year, when all the crops had failed, the store could not afford to have outstanding accounts. But the assistant reported that Goodnow had so money wherewith to pay the bill, and the only way to collect it was to take his wheat—and at the present low rate and the poor year it would take nearly his whole stock—or his horses, which were worth about $40 each.

"Well," said Mr. Jenks, "I need a couple of horses to hurry on the harvesting. Go up to Goodnow to-morrow and take his horses. I'll give him sixty dollars for the span. If he objects—well, we can collect it by law."

The afternoon of the next day then, the assistant and I started out to cross the prairie to the hills, twenty miles away, where Goodnow lived. The ride across the prairie did anything but cheer our spirits. Nearing the foothills, the grass grew scantier and the sand ridges more frequent, and the prairie dogs from their mounds barked at us every few steps. A glistering green snake crawled slowly around a sagebush. Toward sunset we reached Goodnow's home. Home! A hole about four feet deep had been dug in the ground and covered with untrimmed poles meeting at right angles. The poles had been covered with dry branches and these with earth. One gable was walled up with branches and earth like the roof, while the other was closed with sawed boards in which was a door. Two panes of glass, set within a frame in the boards and held in place by a nail at each side, served for windows. To one side of the "dug out" poles had been planted in the ground and covered with willows and straw and earth—that was the stable for the horses and the cow. The cow, thin at the sides, was tied to a post under the shed, and a woman dressed in a dirty yellow gown was milking her. Back of the "house" was a sand pile, where two half-naked children, were throwing handfuls of sand at each other; from the inside of the house I thought I heard the wail of a baby. Goodnow was just coming in from his day's work, driving his horses before his mowing machine. At his side walked a boy about 12, whose dragging gait and dull look bespoke too well the man he would be. On one of the horses rode a little white-haired boy, about 5 or 6, dressed in a dirty shirt and a short pair of pants which was ripped up one leg nearly to the waist—it was Billy. Near the shed the horses stopped, and Billy, with his little hands, struck his horse on the neck and cried, "Whoa, whoa, Jack, whoa," and the horse, seemingly well pleased, put his ears forward and turned his head to get a look at his little friend.

While the assistant was talking to Goodnow I went up to the boy and said:

"Hello, Billy."

He looked at me with a pair of blue dancing eyes and answered very correctly:

"Hello, sir."

"You can read, can't you, Billy?"

I continued.

At that he grew excited and cried, "Mamma, mamma, I can read, can't I?"

The mother, who had heard my question, and whose greatest delight was Billy's accomplishments, quit milking the cow, ran down into the house and brought out a little tattered book of two or three dozen pages. To my surprise it was the remains of a copy of Luther's Smaller Catechism. Resting the book on the collar of the horse on which he sat, Billy read distinctly from the first remaining page, "For of one blood hath God made all men," and without hesitancy the whole of Luther's Comment.

As he ended Goodnow came up and explained to his wife the object of our visit. He had offered to give back the mower and one horse for the use of it—without a horse he must carry his wood fifteen miles from the mountains, and carry his wheat to the mill, which was as far away. But the assistant had insisted on the horses or his wheat—the food for the winter—and had threatened court proceedings.

"You see, mother," the farmer said, "I s'pose Billy can't go to school this winter."

I thought his voice was a little husky as he spoke. The wife and mother said nothing, but their eyes filled with tears. The big boy, with clenched hands, leaned against the now useless mower, and looked straight at us while we led the horses away, while tears cut furrows in the dirt on his face. The little ones of the sandpile also began to understand what was going on, and howled and rolled in the sand. Little Billy sat dazed upon the ground where he had been lifted from the horse. When we tied the horses to our wagon he ran to his mother and hid his face in her lap, crying, not loud, but piteously: "Mamma, they're taking away my Jack—mamma, mamma." Goodnow cleared his throat. The sun must have been low, for I saw his eyes glisten. I, too, felt something moving up my throat until I could not speak.

"Dammie," said the assistant when we had driven over the prairie for some time, "that was a fine piece of work. In the city these horses will bring $100 any day."

Last vacation I passed over the same prairie, and the scene of six years before came vividly to my mind. I stopped at Goodnow's place. A yellow-haired boy of 12 years or so was in the yard. I cried:

"Hello, Billy."

The boy stared at me.

"Is your father at home?"

"Naw."

"Do you still read, Billy?"

"Naw."

And he turned and left me.—Hartford Advocate.

The Only Phrase He Knew.

Sir Andrew Agnew, the last of the hereditary sheriffs of Galloway, had a strong prejudice against the French, and though often thrown into the society of Frenchmen, plumed himself on his ignorance or their language. Once, while journeying to Edinburgh, Sir Andrew halted over Sunday at his daughter's house, and attended the parish church.

The minister, having given out his text from the Old Testament, disputed the correctness of the authorized translation. In enforcing his opinion he quoted the text in the Hebrew original, and the words sounded to Sir Andrew's ear as the French salutation, "Comment vous portez-vous?"

The sheriff writhed in his seat, and it was with the greatest difficulty that his daughter kept him from speaking out his feelings. But as soon as the benediction had been pronounced, Sir Andrew's wrath exploded. To the amusement of the congregation he roared out:

"The scoundrel! Yet I might have forgiven him had he not used the only French words I ever knew!"

Howard Gould is evidently a son of his father. He gave up his sweet heart rather than part with a slice of the Gould estate.

DANGERS OF FACTORY DUST.

Hazard from Fire Being Continually Increased by Improved Process.

Each development of manufacturing processes appears to augment the fire hazard, not merely by reason of the dangers incident to the increased speed of operation, says the New York Journal of Commerce, and also to the concentration due to the greater units of larger buildings, but more especially to the greater amount of dust thrown off by the more rapid manipulation of the stock in the new methods of manufacture. The comparison of the readiness of ignition of the shavings to that of the log holds good in all combustible material, namely, the finer the subdivision the greater the facility of ignition and the greater the rapidity of combustion. The severe accidents occurring in those lines of special manufacturing using powdered wood and pulverized cork, so that these substances can be classed as explosives under such conditions, illustrate the occurrences resulting from such changed conditions. It would be trite to make any references to the explosives of grain dust in flouring mills or of hop dust in connection with the manufacture of malt, but they are continually occurring instances of the explosion of materials not ordinarily included in the list of explosives and which are made so solely on account of rapid combustibility entirely due to subdivision.

A few days ago an explosion occurred in that portion of a print works where the cloth was received into the establishment "in the gray" directly from the mills without any treatment, and was being wound into large rolls preparatory to the processes carried on in that establishment. The short, fine cotton fibers were shaken out of the cloth as dust by the rapid winding to such an extent that it became necessary to put a ventilating hood over the machine. An electric spark at the belt ignited some of the dust, and it produced an explosion which blew off the roof and wrecked the contents of the building with such violence as to seriously injure five men at work in the room.

With the old method of opening and picking cotton by which it was blown into a "gauzium" there were numerous instances of explosions occurring in connection with such fires, but that class of accidents has been very much reduced by the present method of lapper pickers, which wind the cotton into a relatively compact cylinder. The explosion of cotton fibers in napping-rooms are still of frequent occurrence. Within recent years a fire starting in the cardroom of a cotton mill produced an explosion which was exceedingly violent, and spread the flames to an extent beyond the scope of the fire apparatus and compasses the destruction of the mill. The explosion from dust in the various forms of continuous driers used in textile mills have been such as to require the utmost precautions by way of construction and continuous cleanliness in order to secure conditions of safety. When the facing dust accumulating on the trusses of a foundry was being washed from the beams by a stream from fire hose, when the works were shut down during an enforced vacation, such as has occurred during recent times, the dust filled the building and was ignited by the fire at the portable forge, where repairs were under way.

But such fires are not by any means confined to the dust of ordinarily recognized combustible materials. Fires have been known to occur in the dust of iron thrown out from the tumbling barrels used for polishing tanks by their attrition on each other. One form of the well-known parlor fireworks, which produces such a bright fulguration, is merely the combustion of finely divided steel, whose temperature of ignition is so low that the hand can be held, not only with impunity, but also without any sensation of heat directly in the scintillation of the fireworks. The finely powdered zinc, known as "zinc auxiliary," which is used in connection with the rejuvenation of the indigo dye vats in the coloring of cotton, is so rapidly oxidized by a small amount of moisture that fires produced in that manner are of frequent occurrence, and the danger is so well known that many lines of water transportation refuse to take this material under any condition whatsoever.

An Alligator Story.

"Of all the inhabitants of the great rivers of India the alligator is the most formidable," said Captain L. E. Ballou, of London, England, at the Laclede last evening, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. "While I was stationed there several years ago I saw a sight the thought of which always causes a shudder to creep over me. A lady near where I had lived sent a little native boy with a letter to a friend at some little distance, with the request to send a reply. Being a trustworthy little fellow some surprise was felt when he did not return after a reasonable absence. After waiting several hours with no sign of the messenger, a searching party of which I was a member, was made up to try to discover his whereabouts. After scouring the country for some time we came to the river bank, and a short distance away saw a dead alligator lying on the shore with its great jaws extended to their utmost. On examining it to discover the cause of so strange an appearance we found to our horror that it had devoured the missing boy, and had attempted to swallow his head whole. This, however, it was unable to do, and had been suffocated in the attempt. The boy's head was still covered by his turban, which, when removed, disclosed the answer to his mistress' letter, which he was faithfully bringing back. It was supposed that while attempting to swim the river he had been seized by the alligator, as those huge reptiles are very clever in concealing themselves until their victim is well within their reach, and then pouncing on their prey."

Devices of Lawyers.

Lawyers, even eminent ones, have not always disdained the use of tricks in the court-room, or devices by which they produced an effect upon the jury more telling than words could have done.

A suit was brought a few years ago by the people of a certain quarter of Montreal against a manufacturing company. The vile odors of the chemicals used in the works, they alleged, had made the neighborhood untenable, and seriously lessened the value of their property.

Judge and jury were inclined to turn a deaf ear to the complaint. The company was rich and powerful, and an "alleged smell," as their counsel declared, "was too intangible a grievance to grasp."

One of the opposing counsel was seen to go out and not long after returned with two glass retorts.

"Here," he said in the course of his plea for his clients, "are the offending subjects of our contention." He passed them to the judge and then to the jury, who smelled them and smilingly declared them pure and odorless.

"But," said the counsel, the company mixes them!" He suddenly poured the contents of one of the retorts into the other, and the nauseous fumes of hydro sulphuric acid or sulphuretted hydrogen filled the air. Judge, jury and spectators choked for breath. It was necessary to adjourn court until the next day, when heavy damages were at once awarded to the plaintiffs.

In a murder trial before a Western court, the prisoner was able to account for the whole of his time except five minutes on the evening when the crime was committed. His counsel argued that it was impossible for him to have killed the man under the circumstances in as brief a period, and on that plea largely based his defence, the other testimony being strongly against his client.

When the prosecuting attorney replied, he said, "How long a time really is five minutes? Let us see! Will his honor command absolute silence, in the court-room, for that space?"

The judge graciously complied. There was a clock on the wall. Every eye in the court-room was fixed upon it as the pendulum ticked off the seconds. There was a breathless silence.

We all know how time which is waited for creeps and halts and at last does not seem to move at all.

The keen-witted counsel waited until the tired audience gave a sigh of relief at the close of the period, and then asked quietly:

"Could he not have struck one fatal blow in all of that time?"

The prisoner was found guilty, and as it was proved afterward, justly.

Dramatic effects, however, are hazardous agencies to use, as it is not impossible to spoil them by an anti climax—as a member of the English Parliament found when at the close of a fiery adjuration to the government to declare war, he cried out, "Unsheath the sword," and drawing a dagger threw it on the floor.

"Ah!" coolly said an opponent. "There is the knife, but where is the fork?"

A shout of laughter was the result.—3outh's Companion.

Hunting Foxes with Dynamite.

A fox hunt with dynamite was the novel sport of farmers near Point Pleasant, Bucks County, a few days ago. For a long time the farmers had suffered from the incursions of some adroit thief upon their poultry reserves. The thefts were so daring, yet mysterious, that it was decided to set a watch. So when John Swope heard a racket in his henry he ran out. He was just in time to see a big fox, with a nice fat pullet in his mouth, scamper away. The alarm was spread, and a number of Farmer Swope's neighbors assisted him in tracking the fox. They trailed him to his den, under a huge rock, and were then confronted with the problem of routing him. They got some dynamite, fired it, and in a few minutes out came, not one but four foxes, half stunned and blinded. The animals were killed as fast as they appeared, and then the den was walled up.—Philadelphia Record.

DON PEDRITO, a Mexican "saint," is reported to cure many ailments by a touch. As a cure for a man who is broke the successful touch is said to be magical.

"Hanson's Magic Corn Salve." Warranted to cure or money refunded. Ask your druggist for it. Price 15 cents.

Most Likely.—She: There goes the American girl who snubbed a prince. He: The prince was already married, I presume.—New York Weekly.

Karl's Clover Root Tea. The great blood purifier, gives freshness and clearness to the complexion and cures Constipation, 25c, 50c, $1.

One Comfort.—Struggling Post (gloomily): All my verses have been sent back. Wife: Well, I wouldn't worry, dear. They pay so little when they accept them that it does not matter much.—New York Weekly.

When Visiting Kansas City Stop at the Blossom House opposite Union Depot First class in every respect, Rates, $2.50 day. Cable cars to all parts of the city pass the door.

At a Reception.—Host: That is Professor Dryadust, the great scientist. Guest (up to the times): What novel has he written?—New York Weekly.

Money in Winter Wheat—100 Bushels.

That's the way farmers who sowed Salzer's new World's Fair wheat report. It yielded all the way from 40 to 70 bushels per acre, and a good many are so enthusiastic over this wheat that they claim 100 bushels can be grown per acre. The monster winter rye yields 70 bushels per acre, which pays tremendous profits. The John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., send their fall catalogue and samples of wheat and rye for 4 cents postage.

'Twas Ever Thus.—Eastern Man: Those Commonwealthers have succeeded in stealing a train, I see. Now what are they wrangling about? Western Man: They all want to be passengers.—New York Weekly.

Must Have Votes.—Friend: Is your candidate an honest man? Citizen: Um—well, he will be, after election.—New York Weekly.

In Hot Weather

Something is needed to keep up the appetite, assist digestion and give good, healthful sleep. For these purposes Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted. As a blood purifier it has no equal, and it is chiefly by its power to make pure blood that it has won such fame as a cure for scrofula, salt rheum and other similar diseases.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

Hood's Pills cure headache and indigestion.

COOK BOOK

FREE!
320 PAGES—ILLUSTRATED.
One of the Largest and Best Cook-Books published. Mailed in exchange for 20 Large Lion heads cut from Lion Coffee wrappers, and a 2-cent stamp. Write for list of our other fine Premiums. WOOLSON SPICE CO., 430 Huron St., TOLEDO, OHIO.

The State Normal School of Kansas is recognized everywhere as the Great Teachers' Training School of the West. Nearly 1,400 students for each of the past three years. Ninety-one Kansas counties and 8 states represented last year. The New Wing gives us about 75 rooms, all told, for school purposes. The wonderful growth of the school, though coming itself to its one line of legitimate work, is a high commendation to its thoroughness and efficiency. It is the only school in the State whose diplomas are a life certificate to teach. Mileage paid to Kansas students. Tuition free. Expenses as low as anywhere else. Equipment and faculty unsurpassed. Send for circulars. Address A. R. TAYLOR, Pres., Emporia, Kans.

DEE
Pt. Band,
Iron Hoop
OAK BASKET.

A Basket You Can Water Your Horses With. Costs no More Than Any Other Kind, but Will STAND ANYTHING.

WORN NIGHT AND DAY.

Holds the most rupture with ease under all circumstances. Perfect Adjustment. Comfort and Cure. New Patented Improvements. Illustrated catalogue and rules for self-measurement sent securely sealed. G. V. HOUSE, MFG. CO., 74 Broadway, New York City.

CENTRAL BUSINESS COLLEGE
LEAVENWORTH, KS.
All courses of study Thorough, Practical, Comprehensive.
Actual Business Practice from start to finish. Catalogue free

DR. AMY E. PARKER, Magnetic Physician
614 BUCHANAN ST., TOPEKA, KANSAS.

ELY'S CREAM BALM CURES CATARRH
PRICE 50 CENTS, ALL DRUGGISTS

VARICOCELE
Permanently and speedily cured by a surgical operation. PARTICULARS FREE. Call on or address Dr. Coe's Sanitarium, Kansas City, Mo.

PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION
Consumptives and people who have weak lungs or Asthma, should use PISO'S Cure for Consumption. It has cured thousands. It has not injured one. It is not bad to take. It is the best cough syrup. Sold everywhere. 25c.

BARN AND HENNERY.

CORRECT IDEA OF AN IMPORTANT FARM BUILDING.

If You Intend to Be a Good Farmer Start Out with a Determination to Have Suitable Buildings—Light, Convenient and Well Ventilated.

Hints on Building.

This illustration gives a correct idea of a country farm barn, which will interest those who are agriculturally inclined. To the farmer it is one of the most important things how he shall house his stock, and provide storage for his grain, fodder, etc., and yet do it in an economical manner; and the many farm barns that are to be seen, with their chopped up and checkered appearance, indicate that this matter has not had a proper amount of study and forethought. The farmer goes on and builds a little at a time, never thinking or looking far enough ahead to know what his wants really may be when his farm is being worked to its proper capacity.

PERSPECTIVE VIEW.

If you own a farm, and intend to be a good farmer, start out with a determination to have only suitable farm buildings, such as will look well from your neighbor's house. Let your barns look like barns, your houses like houses. We would not for anything have your barns be mistaken for houses, or your houses for barns; for such things we have seen, and it makes us feel as if there was a screw loose somewhere. Barns should not be built for show. They should, of course, be made to look well, and be pleasant spots in the landscape, and built in the most substantial manner possible—should be arranged to save as much labor as possible in the care of the animals that are to be housed and fed in them. Let them be well ventilated and lighted, properly floored; the stone work of the foundation thoroughly built, not dry, but laid up in good cement mortar. Don't invite the rats, as they will come without. And it has always been a mystery to us why the farmers have not, in a general way, been wide awake enough to their own interests to properly house their fowls, instead of letting them run wild over the whole place, and letting them roost on wagons, carts and agricultural implements when not in use and stored; to let them lay their eggs where they please, and then have the pleasure (?) of hunting for them, and often finding them at a late day—such certainly must be the case, else why so many bad eggs among those "nice fresh country eggs." Chickens are one of the most profitable adjuncts to any farm, and it is a very easy matter to keep them where there is a number of cattle to feed.

The hennerly here shown was carried out as an addition to barn at a hillside farm, and shows what a well-regulated hennerly should be to make it both a pleasure and a profit. As the shed below is a necessity in connection with barn, and a roof indispensable, the only additional expense is the floor, one side and ends, with interior fittings, to make a hennerly which will accommodate easily one hundred to two hundred. The floor should be tightly boarded, then covered with a coat of boiled pitch and tar, on which spread soil two or three inches in depth. This will give an excellent scratching and wallow ground. The windows all arranged to slide sideways, the openings on outside being covered with wire netting; the feed-bin built so as to hold several bushels, and arranged to take care of itself, by constructing the bottom so as to empty into a small trough into hennerly, in front of which is placed a perch; the chicks to feed in space adjoining marked "chickens," which is inclosed by pickets, open enough for them to run through. Nest boxes are arranged in tiers, one above another, and loose, so they can be taken through into nest-room, and emptied, and for setting hens, turned around and fed from nest-room. The fattening room is arranged so as to be darker, and will be found desirable for fattening poultry for market or home consumption. A running stream of water should be so arranged as to always supply fresh water in the hennerly, and which should be had in barn for cattle. This could, as in this case, be brought in a pipe from a spring in the hillside, a short distance above the barn, and which not only supplies the barn but the house with a never-failing supply of clear spring water. The run from hennerly is so arranged that fowls can be either let into shed or directly out of doors. This run, being hinged on top, and operated by weights and a cord, is controlled from feed room, thus completely shutting off the hennerly from floor below when required.

PLAN OF BASEMENT FLOOR.

The arrangement of stalls, as here shown, is convenient, and cannot fail but be suggestive for those interested in such matters, while the convenience above cannot fail to please, as the facilities for driving right in with a load from either side is what should always be had in a barn of this class. This barn is, of course, capable of many changes to suit individual wants, circumstances and locations, and is far from costly; and there are farmers who could, with very little trouble, put up their own barns, if they would only wake up to a full realization of their own capabilities.

PLAN OF BARN FLOOR.

Copyright by Palliser, Palliser & Co., New York.

Lion and Horse.

If a lion and a strong horse were to pull in opposite directions, the horse would pull the lion backward with comparative ease; but if a lion were hitched behind the horse and facing in the same direction, and were allowed to exert his strength in backing, he could easily pull the horse down upon his haunches or drag him across the ring, so much greater is his strength when exerted backward from the hind legs than in forward pulling.

Ducks and Geese.

Wild geese and wild ducks show knowledge as to the resistance of the atmosphere and sagacity in overcoming it. When flocks of them have to go long distances, they form a triangle to cleave the air more easily, and the most courageous bird takes position at the forward angle. As this is a very fatiguing post another bird, ere long, takes the place of the exhausted leader. Thus they place their available strength at the service of the society.

Machine-Made Dimples.

A device for producing dimples has come into use in London. It is applied in connection with a wire mask, which is worn on going to bed. A number of screws are so arranged that they force pencil points to press against the chin just where the dimples are desired.

Takes His Wife's Name.

The surrender of his name by a young man in Delaware who recently married a widow, and is hereafter to be known by his wife's name, has elicited considerable comment as a quite remarkable innovation of a custom that is hoary with age.

Celery.

There is one business man in New York who deals in nothing whatever but celery. He is the only man dealing exclusively in celery in the United States, perhaps in the world. He has been in the business eight years, and has built up a large trade.

Good Work for Them.

It was stated in a recent number of Bradstreet's that "convicts from the New York State Prison at Dannemora have constructed 3,400 feet of macadam road and 5,950 feet of cobblestone gutter, set 3,000 feet of curbstone, and made 4,050 feet of earth sidewalk."

Like Our Woodchuck.

The South Sea Islands is the home of a worm which emerges from its hiding-place only one day of a certain change of the moon in October,

ADVICE TO THE BRIDE.

Some Things It Will Be Well to Think About Beforehand.

When you respond don't feel obliged to let out your voice like a newsboy halloing an extra. Neither mumble it as if you had a hot potato in your mouth, but let your utterances be distinct, so that it can be heard across an ordinary room.

Do not allow your demonstrations of affection on the train to exceed the limits of a natural propriety. It is not uncommon for American tourists to carry concealed weapons on their persons.

See your jeweler early, and if you decide on having the bridesmaids' gifts placed in cases, give him time enough to obtain what you desire. A pretty conceit is to have the initials of each one, in sterling, placed on her case.

Begin on your wedding list at the earliest possible moment. A whole year beforehand is not too soon. Even with the utmost care some names will be omitted, and this should be guarded against in every way possible. By doing this you will increase the number of your wedding presents, which is an important item.

If a quantity of rice falls from the brim of your husband's hat when you get into the parlor car, do not look sheepish or disconcerted. Others have been there before you. Merely brush it carelessly away and after a brief interval excuse him and let him go into the smoking car, where he can swear at his leisure.

When you stand up to receive do not, in short conversation with the guests, mention the number and value of your wedding presents or how much they would bring at general auction. You have, of course, figured all this up the night before, but in matters of this sort it is considered better taste to remain silent.

Forget that you have any hands except at the precise moment when you put on the wedding ring. To drop a wedding ring at the fatal moment and have someone sprawl around on his hands and knees at the foot of the altar looking for it will be too much of a strain on the congregation.—Philadelphia Times.

Book-Learning Only.

It is said to be a true story of an English clergyman that, on his appointment to a country living, he went about from house to house asking why the good wives did not go to church on Sunday afternoons. "Milk the cows" was the universal answer. On Sunday morning, therefore, he spoke his mind. "I have been round the parish," he said, "and find you all make the same excuse. Now I have only one thing to request, and that is that you milk your cows the last thing on Saturday night and the first thing on Monday morning."

"Who could hearken to a man in the pulpit, or out of it, after that?" said one old countryman. "But then, you see, he's a book-larnt man!"

Another "book-larnt man" was standing by one day when a country parson was looking at his cows.

"Poor old lady! poor old lady!" said the country parson, apostrophizing one quietly chewing her cud. "I'm afraid we must soon part company."

"But why?" exclaimed the other. "To go to the butcher's."

"To go to the butcher's? Why, I always thought cows died a natural death, and that we only ate oxen!" Dawkins, the countryman of the previous tale, was on the other side of the hedge grunting emphatically at intervals, and the country parson looked across at him with a twinkle in his eye.

"What do you think of that, Dawkins?" asked he.

"Wherever has he hid himself all these days?" asked Dawkins, in irrepressible scorn. "But then," twinkling back at his master, "he's a scholar," aint he? He never ate cow beef! He! he! he!"

Dumas's Revenge.

Alexandre Dumas, the elder, had, as it is well known, some black blood in him, and was of an unforgiving, if not almost cruel nature. In his early years he received a dire insult from one whom he called his friend, Alexandre took no apparent notice of the wrong.

He took him with him into society, introduced him here, presented him there, and so continued for three years, at the end of which time he stood as "best man" at his friend's marriage. The wedding feast being concluded, Alexandre Dumas was leaving the house, when an acquaintance joined him, and, as they walked along, said:

"I have often wished to say how I have wondered at your kindness to Monsieur X, whom we have just seen married. You have the most forgiving nature I ever met with. He insulted you grossly some years ago, and ever since you have devoted yourself to his happiness and at last assist him to get married."

"That's it, precisely," remarked Dumas, slowly, with a sinister chuckle. "I flatter myself that I have given him the worst mother-in-law in France."

PAYING the preacher's salary does not cancel all other debts.

IF THERE are any housekeepers not using ROYAL BAKING POWDER, its great qualities warrant them in making a trial of it.

The ROYAL BAKING POWDER takes the place of soda and cream of tartar, is more convenient, more economical, and makes the biscuit, cake, pudding and dumpling lighter, sweeter, more delicious and wholesome.

Those who take pride in making the finest food say that it is quite indispensable therefor.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

The Plain Sister.

There is one type of true-hearted, unselfish woman whom the world does not know how to appreciate at her full value. She is the plain sister in a family of pretty daughters. The fact that she is not a beauty is regarded by the handsome mother as a personal grievance and by the better looking sisters as an excuse for palming off on to her slender shoulders all the disagreeable burdens that they think are not necessary for butterflies to assume. Instead of being given the best in the way of clothing, in order that the need of good looks which she possesses may be enhanced or any actually unpleasant physical defects may be hidden thereby, the ugly duckling is obliged to take the cast off garments of the favored one and wear them whether they are becoming or not.

When invitations come and the exchequer is rather slim the plain one remains at home, while the dainty, pretty creatures of good fortune are rigged out in new clothes and sent forth to enjoy the light and the music, while poor Cinderella remains behind in a chaos of ribbons, discarded shoes and heterogeneous toilet articles that she must straighten up before the belles return from the ball. She is always expected to perform the services of maid, to be ever ready to wait on the others, preparing the goodies when company is expected, but never requested to join in the festivities she has slaved so hard to make a success. Sometimes a sensible man recognizes the worth of this youthful martyr and bears her away to a new home before the prettier ones have recovered from their astonishment at having been overlooked, but in too many cases the genuine beauty of character lies hidden and unrecognized behind the flaunting, ever-winning presence of beauty of face and form.—Philadelphia Times.

An Arctic Song Bird.

It has been remarked that there is no music in nature's solitudes of ice, says Harrison's Magazine. W. H. Gilder, who accompanied the sledge expedition of 1879 through Great Fish River and Hays River regions, alludes with some feeling to one living scrap of song that he met there, and the struggle it cost him to lay violent hands on the only species of arctic creature that has a tuneful voice.

"I shot two of an apparently distinct species of snipe," he says, "to preserve their skins for the Smithsonian Institution collection. One was distinguished by a sweet, simple song somewhat similar to the lark's, its silvery tones gushing forth as if in perfect ecstasy of enjoyment of sunshine and air, at the same time rising and poisoning itself upon its wings."

"It almost seemed inhuman to kill the sweet little songster, particularly as it was the only creature in the Arctic that uttered a pleasant song. All other sounds were such as the scream of the hawk and the gull, quack of the duck, the yell of the wolf, the 'oof, oof' of the walrus or the bark of the seal—all harsh and unharmonious save the tones of this sweet little songster. Nothing but starvation or scientific research could justify the slaughter of one of these innocents."

"I believe I shut my eyes when I pulled the trigger of my gun, and I know my heart gave a regretful thump when I heard the thud of its poor, bleeding body on the ground."

Bank of England Notes.

Among the curiosities which are occasionally shown to favored visitors to the Bank of England are some specimens of ancient notes, a number of them of denominations no longer in vogue, such as £1, £15, and £25. There is also carefully preserved the oldest surviving note, one of the year 1699, the amount being written in ink. Another curiosity is a note for £1,000,000, which was required for some transaction between the bank and the Government, but in this case, too, the amount is written with the pen. The longest time during which a note has remained outside the bank is 111 years. It was for £25, and it is computed that the compound interest during that long period amounted to no less than £6,000.—The Collector.

A Startling Change.—Miss Reader: How strange it would be if fashion should go back to the old-time brass knockers, instead of electric bells. Mr. Sardonicus: It would seem strange. The knockers always work.—New York Weekly.

When the Liver Reprimands Us.

For our neglect of it by inflicting upon us sick headache, by dyeing the skin yellow, coating the tongue with fur, producing vertigo, pains in the right side and souring the breath, we are little less than lunatics if we disregard the chastisement. If we call Hostetter's Stomach Bitters to our aid, tranquillity and health follow speedily, and with the departure of the symptoms mentioned, departs also irregularity of the bowels, which invariably attends disorder of the liver. In malarial complaints the liver is always involved, and it is a fortunate circumstance that this fine anti-bilious medicine is also the finest specific in existence for every form of malarial disease. Nor is it less efficacious for dyspepsia, failure of appetite and strength, nervousness and a rheumatic tendency. It renews the ability to sleep, and greatly promotes convalescence after wasting diseases.

Poverty Exposed.—Little Dot: I guess Mr. Nixdoor is awful poor. Mamma: Why so? Little Dot: Mrs. Nixdoor told her little girl that candy would spoil her teeth.—Street & Smith's Good News.

To Cleanse the System.

Effectually yet gently, when costive or bilious, or when the blood is impure or sluggish, to permanently cure habitual constipation, to awaken the kidneys and liver, to healthy activity, without irritating or weakening them, to dispel headaches, colds or fevers, use Syrup of Figs.

Studying Up.—Father: What is your sister doing? Boy: Studyin' up for commencement. "Is she poring over school books at this time of night?" "No, sir; fashion magazines."—Street & Smith's Good News.

Hall's Catarrh Cure

Is a constitutional cure. Price, 75c.

Sick, Probably.—First Villager: Well, that's the queerest thing I ever saw. Second Villager: Eh? What? First Villager: A bicyclist goin' along the public street, and he isn't tryin' to break the record.—New York Weekly.

A LIGHT HEART, strong nerves, bodily comfort—these come to a woman, with the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. You can't be anything else but nervous and spiritless, as long as you suffer from any womanly ills.

The "Prescription" relieves every such condition. It builds up your general health, too, better than any ordinary tonic.

PIERCE'S GUARANTEE CURE.

can do—and, by restoring the natural functions, it brings back health and strength.

St. Matthew, Orangeburgh Co., S. C. Dr. R. V. PIERCE: Dear Sir—For four months my wife tried your "Favorite Prescription," and I am able to say that it has done all that it claims to do. She can always praise this medicine for all womb troubles.

Yours truly, E. Israel Matthew

K. N. U. T. 579-34

When answering any of these advertisements, please mention this paper.

ST. JOHN'S MILITARY SCHOOL, Salina, Kansas.

The best boys' school in the west. Gives physical, as well as moral and mental training. Prepares boys for business or college. Patrons have the utmost confidence in the school.

BISHOP OF KANSAS, Rector.

WALTER M. JAY, A. M., Head Master.

Send for Circulars.

Suspended with this issue

Kansas State Historical Society

107

EQUAL RIGHTS TO ALL, SPECIAL PRIVILEGE TO NONE.

FORMERLY CITY AND FARM RECORD.

TOPEKA, KANSAS, OCTOBER, 1894.

VOL. XII. NO. 13.

AUSTERLITZ.

Address of Capt. J. G. Waters at Hamilton Hall, October First.

FOR THE AMENDMENT.

Women Will End Her Days in Kansas
the Orchards of Hesperides.

THE AMENDMENT WILL CARRY.

'Lady, let the rolling drums,
Beat to battle where thy warrior stands;
Now thy face across his fancy comes
And gives the battle to his hands.'

FELLOW CITIZENS:

I believe in an intelligent and an honest ballot and am therefore compelled to advocate women's suffrage. The commercial ballots of this country, all cast by men, which can be bought as you buy sheep in the shambles, are not less than three quarters of a million votes. The vote of the criminal class is not less than half a million. The vote of the ignorant one-half million more. Enough of any of these classes to constitute a majority for the election of president or to carry any ordinary election. It is a fact, that these classes are catered to, by both platforms and politicians at all parties. A vote of the women, added to general mass of voters, of which these classes form a large integral force, would be at one stroke, a fumigant and disinfectant. It would be as efficacious as the order of a Board of Health, in the presence of pestilence. The good women of this country are like Joe Hooker's whiskey, some may say better than others, but they are all good. Their vote would be on the right side every time. Men can be moderated, silenced or changed by an appeal to their pockets; but thank fortune the women don't have these things to appeal to. There is not a good woman in the state of Kansas who could be bought, but there are some men so counted whose votes can be bought for a dollar bill. The whole power of the criminal classes are against her having a vote. The influence of the ignorant is opposed to sharing their privilege with her. And for fear that an ugly and malignant heart disease to which I am addicted may strike me down and leave it unsaid, I want to say while health remains, that if there is a thing that humiliates me as an old soldier, it is to see a colored man opposed to sharing his ballot with the women of this country.

We waded through blood to hand him a ballot. We dug a half million graves to bury his manacles. We purchased his citizenship at a cost of human life that mortgages him to the cause of freedom beyond redemption. We paid for the liberty he now enjoys, such vast sums of money, the bank of the Nation has been almost broken to pay it. If the black man so little values the gift, he cannot appreciate its bestowal on women, the vote in his hand is a pearl in the sow's ear. If he is so ungrateful, that he desires to prevent the women of this country from sharing his own grand station as an armed freeman of the Republic, it argues his own incapacity to enjoy this heritage of valor. I hope it is a mistake to count on a single black man opposing this measure.

The black man who does, forgets our women suffered with him upon the battalions, were lifted for him as a slave; that her rejoicing outcries the hallojahs of the liberated slave upward to the one eternal Father of us all. The black man who sets himself in opposition to this enfranchisement of women, forgets her years of heroism during the war; forgets the cause of freedom, forgets the legends of his kindred, which one hundred years from now, he will boast of as the white man does of his Pilgrim Fathers; forgets his history; forgets the weary journey of his race beneath the midnight skies in search of freedom; to such a man, the North star, the flaming beacon of liberty, no more shall haunt him with the recollection of a tear.

And it were proper to observe, what it prompts an American to bestow the right to vote upon the ignorant pauper of other lands, and deny it to give it to the degraded, vicious and lawless Hun, Slav, Bohemian and Dago and prohibit her to give it to the anarchist, the bomb thrower, the scrofulous, the weak, the leprous, and then say to her she is not fitted for this function? Can it be that it is the political pottor who sees the pliable clay in this degraded vote at his command and under his control, and knows that women are beyond his arts and would be his destruction? The Chinese are excluded because they are in many ways objectionable; the women are to be excluded because they are not, the convict, because he is unworthy, the imbecile, idiot infant and Indian because they are incapable, and women are compelled to consort with this sort of company because they are not.

We exclude males of non-age because they are adolescent, or in the sap, with not sufficiently matured ideas to cast an intelligent vote. I am in favor of lessening the present legal status of coming of age. The youth of this state are ripe enough to vote at the age of fifteen and I believe with them they know more now than they ever will afterwards. They ought to vote. It is a spectacular affair for the observer on Mars, to witness our high school pupils, keen as so many cimeters, intelligent, decent, cultured, under the ban of our law and prohibited from voting while men, ignorant of alphabet and the language of the United States unacquainted with either the bath or our Constitution, strangers to decency and enemies to law, are permitted to exercise the crowning right of all we now possess, or hope for on earth hereafter. The doctrine of the alliance on that matter suits me. The custom of the German we should not pattern after. At the grange picnic are the old man, old woman and children. At what you might call the Presbyterian carouse of the Teutonic, at the table with him are wife, and children. And some other day, when all other people are as wise as I think I am now, it will be our safety and pride that the polls will be a family affair.

The woman, by nature has a closer sympathy, warmer love and a holier affection than the man; and it is almost axiomatic, that interest and affection are in both individual or nation, more valuable than any other traits. The mother is a revelation of Divinity as direct as the Bible. So long as women shall be mothers, so long, are their hands the safest, the wisest and best to guide their children; and this Nation, is a country where there are none so poor, they cannot have a good mother. I speak of good women; the class we designate as vile are a small percentage of the aggregate, too weak in influence and too small in number to be a factor for bad, in the presence of the great host of those, which love calls sister, wife or mother. And of this pitiable class, ninety nine per cent of them were made vicious by contact with some man who votes and possibly is now objecting to any interference with his permissiveness. Would the woman do more to prevent augmentation of this number than the men have done, or strive by the force of law better for their protection reformation than the men have done? If the wolf simulates mercy to the lamb it is because he is not hungry.

Anywhere in the field of morals she would wield the ballot as the projectile whistler from an Armstrong. No Breckinridge would settle in Ashland then.

The Civic Federation which is now attempting to rid Chicago of its gambling houses would be quadrupled in numbers and influence. With men such efforts are epasmodic, but with women, so long as her foot rocks a cradle or lulls a baby to sleep, it would be continuous as the lap of waves upon the shores of an ocean.

We invite the women to cheer and help with their presence every good cause, but at the same time protest that she shall come hand cuffed, and shall seize neither broom stick or flat-iron for aggression or defense. The citizen without a ballot is a galling at the Capital, with its ammunition at Wichita.

The Missouri saloon keeper would never have returned to Kansas after the passage of the liquor law, had the women of Kansas then been given a vote.

As it is now, the man warm upon this question when a campaign is not in the road, or when some Boanerges Sheldon urges them on; but at all other times they take a rest.

The churches of this state would be closed and forgotten sanctuaries if the women were to withdraw from them. The men are Christians by fits and starts and believe in the eight hour law as applied to sacred toil, with a lay off each week. If the men were to be depended on to transmit the gospel down the ages, the decalogue and Lord's prayer would be lost in an obscure twilight before they got one generation down the stream.

The liquor business would, be effectually cornered if you give the women a voice, and there could be no more forceful things said than that all the saloon keepers are against this invasion of their vested rights.

If women were given a ballot they would be dead set against trusts, combines and monopolies, they would evaporate the whiskey trust, they would grind to powder Havermeyer and Claus Spreckel. No syndicate could live with votes in the hands of women, so long as their affection continued for special sales, sales days and bargain counters.

Some reprobate declares when women vote, that Deity, the sun and the like will be dressed with a feminine personal pronoun thereafter. A cut woman observes in reply that it would be a change in consonance with reason. Who ever heard of a man with wings figuring as an angel. And the harbinger of the sun always comes in the guise of a female seraph, pinioned with golden wings, striding the clouds in a chariot of light with coursers of fire, and no man was ever seen in that vehicle with her as her companion or escort.

I intend above all things to say, while the United States has been many times convulsed over the labor question, and guilds, federations, brotherhoods, orders, boycotts and strikes have been in most cases ineffectually resorted to, the workmen of America have seen laying upon the table before them, a formidable weapon, a Damascus blade, which they could reach and use for their protection. They have never thought proper to seize it. That weapon is the women's vote. It is their friend. While women are women they are the workman's best friends. At present they can only pray, and it is a serious prayer, if prayer and Divinity combined, constitute either quorum or majority, against these syndicates which buy senators and play highwaymen in the path of Nations. A woman with a vote in her hand is a demand whose sequence is a compulsion of the right. It is better than all the devices of quarrel, strike or bloodshed. It is a petition that can walk over the grass and into the Capital. If ever a sweetheart were worthy a lover, I command to the workmen, beset by environment too altitudinous to scale and too far to go around, that he put his reliance in the women of the land for her vote is a keener blade than he ever drew and a better weapon than he ever felt.

Where is the argument against giving the ballot to women? There is no serious precedent against it. While we quote precedent and bring it to bear to justify human conduct or to condemn it, it may be well questioned whether it has not been an obstruction encountered every mile the human race has moved forward in the history of the world. The plan of salvation was in contempt of precedent. The railroad is a protest against precedent. No finer illustration exists than Japan with forty millions of people, and twenty years of progress and China with four hundred millions and an unaltered course and precedent for four thousand years. The enlightened policy of progress in Japan will yet fill the Yellow Sea with tubs and boards, soap and unlaundried linen of Chinese precedent. If before us the road is untraveled, pioneer like, we will blaze our way. Experiment may be an unbeaten path but it is the royal highway of progress and the luminous track of science. If because women generally have never been given this unlimited citizenship, if all experiment should be banned, then let us turn our faces back to dead ages, and map our course by the stars we have passed. Let us continue to carry the rock in one end of the sack when we take our grist to mill. If out of this desert arose an empire, if we were not appalled by silence of the sphinx when we looked over the night that enveloped Kansas and sought in vain for answer, we are not to be disheartened now. The route of the pioneer was through the abounding bile lands of Egypt to come here. Fertility and unbroken aridity were divided by the flow of the Missouri. And here despite example, precedent and admonition they came and builded the statliest and noblest structures that adorn the empires of time. We have conquered the past, and the bugles blow that sound the charge on the future.

We live in a Nation whose institutions we desire improved and perpetuated. We hope the glory of its after years will reach us in our graves. The figure summounting the edifice is Liberty. If liberty topples the structure falls. And every hand that can be raised to keep her statue silhouetted against the sky, should be implored to lift them.

In the United States we have had ample opportunity to know what liberty means. We have dwelt in its meadows, and heard the bees drone their way over its fields of blossoming clover. We have climbed the jaggy cliffs of war and hung over its sorrowing and bloody abysses.

Liberty is the missing sense, which philosophers have exploited for and servants have conjectured to exist. It gives the eye a vision of delight, without it the earth is a desert, to the smell it loosens a rare perfume, to the ear there comes a sound of bells which clang an anthem, to the touch it is the grasp of a true friend and to the taste a libation of the gods.

It should be diffused and free as the elements, the wide earth should be ringed with it. The people who live in its cloudless day cannot deny it to those who desire to share it without being deprived of it themselves. It is its own almoner, the greedy hand that would grasp it for another, loses it, the hand that would bestow it, increases its store. Where pity may look or mercy may dwell, in palace or hovel, along the valley or upon the mountain, at the poles or the equator, wherever Justice is enshrined there is its home. And the voice of liberty demands this right for women.

In this country it will not be so much the passion and frenzy for money dominating our lives, our affairs and laws as the denial of its gracious bounty to the humblest soul deserving it, beneath the shadow of our flag.

From what source comes this opposition to this measure? I think it comes from the original Adam, after the fall and from no where else.

From the earliest times, the power that might make right, has controlled the affairs of men and given men that condition of superiority over women, which has made him a refulgent sun in whose shadow she has stood wholly in eclipse.

The primal man, because he chased the deer, caught it and then rendered it, because he had the might to do it, has profited by such prowess ever since. The woman waited upon him at dinner and after he and his burly retainers had eaten the broiled tenderloin, she took what of the briquet that remained.

His avocation of hunter gave him a contempt and disdain for all sorts of work and his spouse was compelled to do the labor, and so, as to women and the druggery of toil he cast upon them, he looked upon them both as menial and servile.

When these noble brutes found as between themselves, a constant battle was not the thing, they came together and formed crude laws, ameliorating somewhat the pillage, rapine and plunder of unrestrained might, each making concession to the other, but none to women. They compelled by their might a division of royal revenues, but in all their brave battles with a king they were merciless to women.

On such a stalk grew all laws, they claimed all for themselves but gave grudgingly the privileges and powers which had descended to them from a werlike and predatory ancestry. Finally these laws ripened into a code which we designated the Common law of England. The ordinary lawyer, now, may first speak of his fee, but next to this, there lies nearest of utterance in his month, an enlogium on this common law.

We cannot follow it to its source high up in the mountains of justice, the pathway there has been obliterated by time. But we know what it is. It is the aggregated demand of the first deer slayer, and every hunter and renderer of the killed carcass since then, it is the warrior or the hunter with his horns and hounds, all the way down the history of men. It is bloodless, merciless and exacting to women, it has hardly courteously notices her. In it she is given that protection the humane soul might give his horse or the pitiful measure of mercy the barbarian would not deny the stranger at night who sought his roof for shelter, or the fleeing fugitive who drops within the cover of his tent and implores asylum there.

The wife took his name, her legal existence was merged in his, her property was his just as soon as he could corral her sheep, live her bees and milk her cow, he could chastize her he could command her and she must obey, she was neither his heir or next of kin, a life interest in a third of her husband's lands became hers on his death, which we know as dower, and which, to the woman who loved and worked and darned and lugged the children all night through their croupy spells, is the definition of nothing ever invented. The husband was the owner of his wife's services, and it was a crime to give her shelter when flying from his cruel treatment. All through these laws, if there is a syllable which gives her any measure of comfort it is because of her husband's interest in her, and whatever it was, was obtained by an appeal to the appetite, stomach and passions of her lord. Between the lines of these laws it read that the woman was an adjunct of her husband and his property as much as his herds or flocks. The law of primogeniture extended only to the sons. There was a single exception made. She owned absolutely but one species of property, and this was her paraphernalia, or apparel. I have often thought if women now loved dresses, which they do not, it was pardonable, for it was the only kind of property for over thousand years they could look upon with the delight of exclusive and absolute possession and ownership.

And here is where we obtain the trend of things against women, here is the source of the opposition against women. And our forefathers had to bring this system of laws, over to this country with them and fasten upon us here the prejudice against woman having under the law either status or existence. Can you wonder you have opposition? The butchers of all the centuries are against you, and they have left behind them a world of contumacious prejudices which you have got to overcome.

Long centuries before any of us were born, influences, powerful as any orator's now, had taken the stamp to defeat this very amendment.

In this campaign, a distinguished gentleman, conspicuous by his open warfare, has by his courage attracted the attention of the state, as the leader of the opposition to this movement. I know him to be a brave, big minded, chivalrous man, and as an able speaker as there is on the hustings. It is only a coincidence and has no other significance, but there is something eternally opposite and fitting for him to advocate in one speech a restricted vote and unlimited liquor. When the time comes that you bring whiskey in and keep women out, it will be when his satanic majesty has got his requisition honored for all he wanted. I would not be in his place for the world. There are lots of good things there is no necessity for a stumper to open his head about. There are lots of bad things he ought not to say.

In his efforts to forge ahead of the prohibition vote, he has attacked woman suffrage. There was no necessity for it. The Democrat that votes for it will hesitate before he puts a cross against his name. When women comes into possession of their own they will use their gentlemen's name to conjure with.

A vicious youngster yelled aloud,
Until his racket drew a crowd:
His mother with her form half bowed,
Bends lightly o'er his cradle,
And then with shoe, the boy she fanned,
Or delt a stroke with angered hand,
That sounded like a lullie.

They heard him blocks far up the street.
As spank and slap she did repeat.
It was a shame so bad to treat,
Her little blood relation.
But naught she did restore the peace,
The hoodlum rig with four police,
Came pell mell from the station.

The City marshal too was there,
He'd push and shove then cuss and swear
And say that boy must have more air
And thus he tried to work us.
Bat still he roared and made things hum.
Just like cal-li-o-pe's that come,
Parading with a circus.

He kept this up without a rest:
His mother offered him her breast,
For colic cramps beneath his vest,
And hoped there by to still him:
Then for a time he yelled so loud,
It looked as if that sullen crowd,
Would snake him out and kill him.

They brought him cakes preserves and such
He failed to eat, to smell to touch,
And while he was not hungry much.
He broke the record snalling.
Again the police of her hand,
Was plied where you must understand,
Would make the lick appalling.

"The bogie man has come!" they cried:
"The wolves will eat you too!" they tried

(Continued on page 4.)

The Farmer's Wife.

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, Ed.

TOPEKA, KANSAS.

AFTER TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS.

A Bigamous Kansas Farmer Found by the Son Who Had Never Seen Him.

About twenty-eight years ago Stewart Strevil and his wife were living on a farm in Bates County, Missouri, says the St. Louis Republic. They were very comfortably situated and he was a great devotee of race horses. He owned two blooded animals, but had not found them profitable. One day he concluded to sell them and he left home in the morning, taking them with him. He never returned, and since then he and his wife have not known each other's whereabouts until a few days ago, when the son, by a mere chance, found his father. Mrs. Strevil could not account for his disappearance. After several days she received a letter from some unknown person in Kansas City informing her that the body of a man, who was doubtless her husband, had been found murdered there and buried. She was asked to accept his grave and care for it, which she consented to do. This was twenty-eight years ago. Meanwhile the afflicted wife endured the grief, which was assuaged only by time. Three months after Mr. Strevil's disappearance a son was born to her and was named Noah. About ten years later Mrs. Strevil was married to James Bowling and several years ago they moved to Bourbon County and located on a farm. The son, now a man 28 years of age with a wife and three children, grew up with them and is still living with them. Until a few days ago he has never heard that a man bearing the same name as his lived in Bourbon County. Last Tuesday he decided to investigate the matter. He called at Strevil's house during the noon hour and was invited to participate in the meal. At the table young Strevil noticed the crippled finger, as described by his mother. The young man waited until dinner was over and then he invited the old gentleman out into the shade of the house, where he disclosed his suspicions, but when the young man gave him the name his mother bore before marriage, as well as the names of his brothers and sisters, the old gentleman broke down in tears and confessed. The decrepit old man was assisted into the house by his son and the aged wife told of the recognition. She was prostrated, but soon recovered and severely censured Strevil for living a lie for twenty-eight years. She immediately packed up her belongings and went to friends in Kansas City. Mr. Strevil is living alone on his farm and is fearful of prosecution for bigamy, though it is understood that proceedings will not be instituted. The old gentleman denies the authorship or knowledge of the letter written from Kansas City when he left his first wife. He believes that the second Mrs. Strevil will return and live with him.

Without a Freezer.

Make an ice pudding without the aid of a freezer, thus: Pour half a pint of boiling milk, sweetened, into a basin containing two well-whisked eggs; stir the ingredients, put them into a clean sauce-pan and stir steadily over the fire until a thick custard is produced, taking care it does not boil or it will be spoiled. Remove from the fire and put aside until cold, then add half a pint of whipped cream to the custard, and either a little liqueur or a teaspoonful of vanilla essence. Ascertain that the mixture is sweet enough, and add some dried cherries or pineapple cut into small pieces and a few drops of carmine, just sufficient to give a pale pink tint.

Put the mixture into a pudding mold with a cover, or an ordinary round cocoa tin that will hold a pint will do quite as well, providing it has a well-fitting cover: stand the tin in a zinc pail, and pack it round tightly with equal quantities of rough ice, broken up into fairly small pieces, and freezing salt; about three pounds of each will be required; then cover the pail entirely with a thick blanket and stand it in a warm corner of the kitchen, near the fire, but not too close, for three hours and a half. Then turn the pudding out of the tin, knocking it on the table if necessary to loosen it, and serve at once.—New York World.

The Engine Driver's Warning.

"By-the-by," said I, "there seems to be quite an epidemic of railway ghosts, judging from the papers. No wonder I should think, considering the number of men killed on the railways." "Yes," said Hodgson, "I have noticed these railway ghosts. One, quite recently, was very well authenticated. It will shortly appear in our proceedings. The story is to the effect that an engine driver was driving his train along a certain railroad. He heard the voice of his father distinctly warning him to stop. He heard the voice so plainly that he felt there must be some danger ahead. He stopped his engine, got out, and walked for half a mile, when he came upon a bridge which had been burned down. But for the warning he would have driven right into the river. The voice of his father saved him and his train. The stoker, who was in the cabin along with the driver, confirms the story as to the driver stopping the engine, declaring that he had heard the voice of his father, and of the finding of the burned bridge.—Borderland.

How a Russian Emperor Financed.

Among other expedients to raise money Ivan resigned the crown in favor of a Tartar Khan, who was baptized under the name of Simeon. Ivan feigned to withdraw himself from public affairs but in reality he held on to them and made the new Czar call in all the charters formerly granted to the monasteries and bishoprics and all the charters were canceled. This curious interregnum, or by whatever name it shall be designated, lasted nearly a year and then Ivan declared he did not like the new regime, and, dismissing the baptized heathen, again took up the scepter, which, as a matter of fact, he had never really discarded.

He issued fresh charters to the monasteries, but was careful to keep back several fine slices of the revenues, extorting from some of them 50,000 and from some others 100,000 rubles annually. We shall see, as Ivan's character is unfolded, that this spoilation of the monasteries was not the only thing in which he resembled our own merry monarch, Henry VIII. He would send his agents into the various provinces, there to buy up at low prices the whole of some particular commodity for which the province was noted.

After retaining the monopoly for awhile he would sell for a high rate, and even compel merchants to buy at the prices he named. He followed a similar course with foreign imports, creating a monopoly and forbidding others to sell their stocks until he had disposed of his own. By these means he cleared 200,000 rubles in a year.—The Gentleman's Magazine.

The Soft Spot.

In every human heart there is a place known as the "soft spot." (Sometimes it is in the human head, but no matter.) The good and ancient belief is that when this soft spot is touched, the fountains of compassion are opened, and the waters of generosity begin to flow.

But one great difficulty is to touch this little place, and so turn on the tap, as it were. It can only be got at through the sight or hearing, and, of course, there are none so deaf as those that won't hear, nor any so blind as won't see.

And if a man won't read our appeals for the tiny bairns that are crying out for food and fresh air, and won't listen to what his kind-hearted friend has got to say about this all-important matter; well, of course, the tap remains just as it was, and does not get shifted, the result is that in course of time it gets rusty, and the source of the fountain gets dried up with stinkiness and vices of that sort.

It is a very dreadful thing to be mean. It is almost as bad to be thoughtless when the happiness—perchance the lives—of others are at stake. I will not say any more though, but I sincerely hope what I have said will touch your soft spot, and set the fountain of your pity going.

Physicians' Notebooks.

A question is raised and discussed by the British Medical Journal. It is, "What becomes of physicians' case books?" It is well known that most physicians keep a careful record of all cases, and where experts are called in consultation there is a regular daily chat which even contains the most minute details of the case from the nurses. Of course no relationship is so private or confidential as that of the physician, and it is naturally a curious query as to what becomes of the records in which they set down everything in black and white. There is one famous physician who is known to use books with a cover that locks, and many doctors probably use great caution to prevent their notes from falling into wrong hands. The best plan is undoubtedly that of the surgeon who once a year or more consigned the record of all his cases to the furnace. Nowadays few cases are published, and the conscientious physician owes it to his patient not to keep records of such a private character that might be misunderstood lying around to be seized upon by the idle or curious.

Uisce, Whisky.

When you ask the peasant boy whom you meet after your dip what is the name of the river, and what is the Gaelic for water, the river, he says, is called the Esk, and the Gaelic for water is uisce. "Uisce!" you say, "that sounds very much like whisky;" and so it is unquestionably, as the schoolmaster may tell you—uisce-beatha, the full Gaelic for the strong drink of the mountains, being neither more nor less than a compound of uisce (water) and beatha, (life,) evidently the Latin vita—can de vie, as the French call it.

But what is uisce? Which appears also in the name of more than one Scottish river. The Esk is simply uisce, the water, the oldest form of the Latin aqua.—Blackwood's Magazine.

HOP PICKING IN KENT.

Women Are Better at It than Men, but Their Pay Is Small.

The working day in the Kent hop-pick begins with full daylight, says the National Review. By 6 o'clock the barns let loose their inmates, and a procession of the pickers wends its way through the meadows and orchards towards the field of labor. There is plenty of water for them if they like to wash; but they are quite content with evening ablutions, and for the most part step from under the sackcloth blankets provided by the farmer, stretch themselves, yawn, grumble a little at they scarcely know what, and set off. The women in-cumber themselves with pots, kettles, provisions and babies. After an hour or two of picking fires are lit among the stripped blue-stalks and a score of simple breakfasts are prepared.

The pay they get is not magnificent. It averages twopence a bushel of cleanly picked hops, and the person who can pick twelve bushels in the day is reckoned a skillful and practiced hand. Women, as one would expect, are better at it than men. They strip a cluster of the cones in the time it takes the inexperienced man to detach three or four cones only. They talk and sing, too, all the while, in a manner that is highly irritating to certain of the men.

There are all sorts and conditions in the hop garden, so that, while on the one hand you may hear girls chanting improper music hall catches, you have only to listen with the other ear to be charmed by the hymns of Moody and Sankey and the Salvation Army. The men, as I have hinted, work more silently and with a certain moroseness. It is with them that the customary strike initiated in the middle of the picking. Either the hops are too small or the pay is too little—the pretext is readily found. During the strike the farmer and his family may well be anxious, but the difficulty soon arranges itself, and the men set to again with a few hearty oaths as a relief to their feelings.

Among the local agricultural hands in the hop garden one often hears very forcible accounts of the ferocity of the pickers. "They'd as soon stick a knife into you as look at you," is a remark that was offered to me from several of them. Yet if they are left to themselves and their own ways, in so far as these do not affect the well-being of their neighbors and the property of the farmer, they seem sufficiently inoffensive.

YOUR ICE MADE TO ORDER.

Frozen Into Little Cubes Just Right for Breaking Into Glasses.

Not satisfied with eking out a scant supply of ice by making it, the ice manufacturers have gone a step farther, and they are now making an improvement that promises to become an immediate success. This is nothing more nor less than the freezing of the ice into prepared forms instead of rough blocks. Every user of ice knows the difficulty and the trouble of cutting ice for the water pitcher or for a glass, to say nothing of the upheaval necessary in the refrigerator before the ice can be reached, when it can be counted upon to split into pieces that are just what is not required.

The new form of ice will be known as "cube ice." It is obtained by the water being frozen in a machine from which the ice emerges in the usual sized blocks, but "cubed," or subdivided to such an extent that a tap with an ice pick (not a blow) will be sufficient to break it up into regular inch and a half cubes, a dozen of which can be dropped without trouble into the ice pitcher, or one into a goblet for individual use. On each of the cubes will appear the trademark of the maker, to serve as a guaranty of genuineness.

Praise for American Banjo Players.

The Amherst Banjo Association sent the college glee, banjo and mandolin clubs—thirty performers in all, and all under-graduates—to England this summer, and they are now making a tour of Great Britain, under the direction of Charles Terry, brother of Ellen Terry. The Amherst clubs gave their first concert on July 13, at Southport, near Liverpool. They had arrived only the day before, after a voyage across the Atlantic, but the Southport papers speak in high terms of their playing and singing. The Southport Guardian says: "The banjo is generally associated with a jerky, unmelodious, step-dance kind of music, but the Amherst students have cultivated banjo playing until it has become a fine art, and the results they obtain are quite a revelation, but the greatest praise must be accorded to the singing. Nothing could be more finished than the rendering of the various glees."—New York Evening Post.

KOREA'S KING AS A SCHOLAR.

His Majesty Once Conducted the Examination at His English School.

In Korea they have a method of civil service examination that is unique. The Chinese go in a great deal for educational tests and all that sort of thing, but nowhere else in the world can be found a system that brings together so closely the chief ruler of the country and applicants for government appointment as in the Hermit Nation. Some years ago the King engaged the service of three American college graduates, and opened an English school in Seoul, somewhat after the style of the University of Tokio. A certain number of students are supported and taught at the expense of the government, the object being, by a seven years' course in English and the natural political sciences, to educate the young men of the nobility for positions of the highest grade. Much opposition to this innovation was at first shown by what might be termed the know-nothing element, but the King never wavered for a moment in his devotion to the school, and each year took personal charge of the examinations. He not only directed but conducted them himself. One of the American professors, in describing his experiences in Korea, thus pictures the method of the royal examiner and his system of marking the candidates:

"His Majesty kept account of every mistake in pronunciation and interpretation, and knew just how to grade the man. In every case he appealed to us for our judgment as to the grade which the man deserved, and afterwards ordered as he thought best. There were four grades: 'tong,' which meant perfect; 'yak,' which meant second; 'chau,' third, and 'poul,' failure. When the King announced what the man was to receive, one of the courtiers picked up a block of wood on which was written the Chinese character for that grade, and, placing it on a salver, elevated it before the King and pronounced the name of the grade in a loud voice. Then the student retired and another was called up. For three days the examination went on, one day being occupied in examining their ability to write English at our dictation. At the end his Majesty took cognizance of those men who had passed the best examination, and the prizes were given in the shape of what is called here 'rank'—which really means some place under the government. There are a score of different ranks, and the rising from one to the other of these forms is the highest ambition of the Korean."—New York World.

An Ante-Bellum "Auntie."

Of the "ante-bellum" aunties in this city, Chloe Peay is one of the oldest and best known. Chloe is now about 70 years of age, and is greatly burdened with flesh. Her life has been marked by the greatest faithfulness to duty. Every virtue of her race has been cultivated by her to the greatest extent, and now she lives a cheerished dependent upon those whom she served so faithfully in her younger days. Before the war she was the property of the family of Gov. Luke Blackburn. At that time Dr. Blackburn lived on a plantation in Northern Mississippi, and when the Union soldiers reached his home he fled on such short notice that no time was left for hiding the family silver and valuables. Chloe was the only one left on the place and everything was in her charge. She placed the silver in an old trunk and hid it in a swamp, where it was found eighteen months later unharmed. While Dr. Blackburn was in the gubernatorial chair she cooked all the state dinners which were held at Frankfort, and they were royal affairs, indeed. Now old Chloe's days of usefulness are about ended. Her beaten biscuits are renowned and she still prepares these for entertainments. Though honored, she is humble, and she is now a welcome visitor in the homes of those who knew her in her younger days.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Bonriot's Wounds.

In the Old World, honorary decorations are sought by old soldiers in much the same way that pensions are sought in the New World. The man who demands public assistance or honors on the ground that he would have gone to the war if he had not had rheumatism is not of any special nationality.

Some of the demands for decorations which foreign governments receive are amusing in their innocent simplicity. Recently the following letter, received by Napoleon III, while he was Emperor of the French, has been made public:

SIR:—I contracted under your dear uncle certain mortal wounds which for thirty years have been the ornament of my life: one in the right groin, and the other at Wagram. If these two stories appear to you susceptible of the cross of honor, I gladly give you my thanks in advance.

(Signed) ANTHONY BONNIOT, honorary corporal of the ex-Young Guard, P. S.—Madame Bonniot will be very sensible of your goodness. Please send your reply post-paid.

It seems sad to relate that there is no record that Napoleon III. ever recognized with a cross the ornamental "mortal wounds" of Corporal Bonniot.

The grievances of drunken men are nearly all the same.

STATE AFFAIRS.

And Capital City News of State Interest.

September Report.

Secretary Coburn, of the Kansas board of agriculture has issued his report for September, and it is of much more than usual interest. The report treats at length upon the subject of feeding wheat, and sums up the conclusions of the reports of the correspondents of the board throughout the state thus:

"In Kansas, under the conditions as to product and prices of wheat and corn existing in the years 1893-'94-'95, wheat has become a very unusual and very important factor in the grain feeding of all classes of farm stock.

"It is superior to corn, pound for pound, as a grain to produce healthful, well-balanced growth in young animals.

"Mixed with corn, oats or bran, it is much superior to either alone for work horses.

"Fed to cows it is an exceptional milk producer, and for that purpose corn is scarcely to be compared with it.

"For swine of all ages, it is a healthful and agreeable food, giving generous returns in both frame work and flesh, but fed whole, especially without soaking, is used at a disadvantage. Ground and made into slops it is invaluable for suckling cows and for pigs both before and after weaning. Yet, while the testimony is so generally favorable to wheat as a food for swine during their growing period the consensus of opinion among shippers, dealers and packers is that in finishing for the market corn, or a large percentage of corn, yields flesh of a texture and quality superior to that made from wheat alone.

"For cattle, it has, at least as a part of their grain ration, a very high value, which is much enhanced in the line of needed variety by mixing with corn, and in a still greater degree by mixing judiciously with bran, oil cake or other nitrogenous foods tending to balance the too carbonaceous nature of the clear wheat.

"With corn and wheat approximating the same price per bushel, it is not unprofitable nor wicked to feed the wheat; yet it can be ground, rolled, crushed, or in some way broken at a total cost not exceeding 5 to 7 cents per bushel, to feed it whole and dry is unwise.

"It can be ground at a cost of 5 cents per bushel, and on a majority of Kansas farms for very much less.

"If grinding is impracticable, soaking from twenty-four to twenty-six hours (the length of time depending somewhat upon the weather and season) is for various reasons deemed desirable, but is injudicious to an extent that its being moist facilitates swallowing without the mastication or the proper mixing with saliva. Any arrangement or system of feeding by which the grain was delivered in such a way that the animal could eat but slowly, would largely overcome this defect.

"It is a superior food for all fowls, and, as a promoter of the maximum egg-production, is unsurpassed by any other grain.

Governor Lowelling accepted an invitation to attend the old soldiers' reunion at Arkansas City and took his entire staff with him.

Capital: The court rooms in the new court house will be small. Of late years this plan is being followed in most of the new court houses. It is no longer considered necessary to furnish seating capacity for half the town in the court rooms.

The Kansas Presbyterian synod received a petition from the Kansas Medical college at Topeka, asking that the synod endeavor to erect a Presbyterian hospital at Topeka, and a committee was appointed consisting of the following members to secure the necessary funds: Rev. S. B. Alderson, Topeka; S. B. Fleming, Wichita; Theodore Bracken, Rev. J. C. Miller, Winfield; W. N. Page, Leavenworth; R. C. McGee, J. D. Van Ness and Thomas Page.

A motion was argued in the district court of Shawnee county to compel Mrs. Lelia Z. Rapier to support her divorced husband, William B. Rapier. The case is an unusual one and has been in the district court more than a year. For many years Mr. and Mrs. Rapier lived on a farm west of Topeka, which is valued at $12,500. The property all finally got into Mrs. Rapier's name. Then domestic trouble and a divorce resulted. Mr. Rapier is over 70 years of age, while his wife is not much over 50. Lawyer Isenhart says his client, Mr. Rapier is completely destitute and will have to go to the poor house unless he can get a part of the considerable property now alleged to be in his wife's name.

Captain Ed. Hayes, of company B, second regiment at Wellington, has been promoted to major. Captain P. M. Holington, company D, second regiment at Newton, has been appointed major. Captain L. A. Linville, of Os born has been appointed major.

Miss Susan B. Anthony is being billed by the populist state committee for seven meetings in Kansas, beginning October 22. The committee tried to secure her services earlier in the campaign, but were unsuccessful. During her stay in Kansas she will not speak under the auspices of the National Suffrage association, but will have her expenses paid by the populist committee, though she will simply make suffrage speeches, without reference to political issues.

HOME AND THE FARM.

A DEPARTMENT MADE UP FOR OUR RURAL FRIENDS.

The Agricultural Department Shows How Wheat Rots the Soil—English Method of Preserving Grapes—Table for Sorting Beans—How to Make a Neat Piazza.

How Wheat Rots the Soil.

The wheat crop of 1893 was estimated by the Department of Agriculture to be worth at the farm $6.16 per acre. To say nothing about the labor and other cost of producing this pitiful yield, the crop took away from the soil fertilizing elements worth more than 86 per cent. of the entire value of the crop as given above. That is to say, according to analyses made at the University of California by Professor Hilgard the amount of the nitrogen, phosphoric acid, and potash removed from the soil by a yield of eleven bushels of wheat per acre would amount to $5.32 at current cost of such substances. The exact figures as given by Professor Hilgard are as follows: For 20 bushels of wheat, 7.85 pounds potash, 11.90 pounds phosphoric acid, and 24 pounds nitrogen. For 3,600 pounds of straw, 36.08 pounds potash, 7.90 pounds phosphoric acid and 18 pounds nitrogen. The cost of these substances per pound is given at 15 cents for nitrogen, 5 cents for potash, and 6 cents for phosphoric acid. To sum up then, we have a necessary manurial cost of $5.32 for producing a crop of wheat averaging eleven bushels per acre. As stated, this amounts to more than 86 per cent. of the value of the crop grown, harvested, threshed, and stored at the farm. As a matter of course, these manurial ingredients or their equivalents must be restored to the soil sooner or later, or a still more discreditable yield than eleven bushels per acre will surely ensue. If the straw be returned to the soil a considerable part may be thus saved, but by sending the grain away from the farm the eleven bushels per acre permanently removes from the soil fertilizing elements worth $2.60 per acre, or more than 42 per cent. of the entire value of the crop. In the light of these facts, how long can American farmers continue to produce wheat at a farm value of $6.16 per acre?

Enlarging a Wheelbarrow's Usefulness.

It is often desirable to wheel away from a lawn or garden, light rubbish, straw, hay, or vines, for which purpose the ordinary wheelbarrow does not give sufficient accommodation. So often is it desired to wheel away light but bulky loads of this sort, that such an arrangement as is shown in the illustration from the American Agriculturist, will be found very serviceable. It is simply a light rack frame that can be attached to the barrow in the same way that the ordinary sides are attached, the addition of a couple of sockets near the handles being the only necessary addition to the barrow in order to accommodate the rack. The construction is so plainly shown in the sketch that added explanation is not needed.

WHEELBARROW WITH RACK FRAME.

Grapes in Winter.

Glasses such as are shown in our illustration are one of the latest schemes of grape growers in England to keep the fruit from drying during the winter. The jar is made of clear glass, and, having a wide mouth, water can easily be added from a small watering can as required, without the trouble of taking it down or moving the grapes. The weight of the bunch will press the immersed end of the stem against the upper side of the bottle, and so prevent its slipping out. It is always best to leave about eighteen inches of stem beyond the bunch when the grapes are cut, as otherwise the berries are apt to crack through—absorbing too much of the water when first stored. It is well also to cut off the immersed end about one inch in three weeks to maintain a free passage for absorption.

TO KEEP GRAPES FRESH ALL WINTER.

Spraying Potato Vines.

The Ohio station recommends a spraying with the Bordeaux mixture for both potato rot and potato bugs. Their compound is 6 pounds blue vitriol, 4 pounds lime to 22 gallons of water, adding 1 pound London purple to each 100 gallons of the mixture. The spraying dates are May 28, June 26, June 29, and July 16. Last year blight appeared about the middle of June, and made bad work with the unsprayed vines. The sprayed vines showed much less injury, remaining green after the others were dead, and yielded a profitable crop, while the unsprayed portion of the field was practically a failure. The tubers on the treated portic were but little affected by scab.

Table for Sorting Beans.

The culture of beans is rapidly increasing, as they generally command a profitable price in the market. In thrashing and winnowing the beans it is almost impossible to remove all pieces of pods and vines, and the shrunken or diseased beans, hence hand sorting is necessary to put the beans in the clean condition which secures the best prices. An ingenious table on which to sort the beans is shown in the illustration, from sketches by E. P. Judson. Fig. 1

BEAN SORTING TABLE FROM ABOVE.

SIDE VIEW OF SORTING TABLE.

presents a view of the table from above, showing the sieve and the spout. A side view is shown in Fig. 2, with the drawers for refuse and bad beans, beneath the sieve. This useful contrivance may be made in portable shape, and the legs can be folded so that it can be brought into the house on cold, stormy days. The legs are bolted to the sides with one bolt each. The height of the table can be varied by making the legs slant more or less, and then fastened by a wooden pin in holes bored to suit. A slide keeps the beans from pouring onto the sieve too rapidly.—Orange Judd Farmer.

An Easily Made Piazza.

Too many country homes are unprovided with shade, where one may get fresh air without hot sunshine during the warm months of summer. Many think they cannot afford to build piazzas, while others object to having these permanent structures on the ground because they shut out the sunshine in the winter when it is specially needed. This is certainly one strong objection to permanent piazzas, unless they can be constructed against such a part of the house that no room may be shaded by their roofs. The illustration, however, shows how a summer veranda can be constructed at small cost of time or money—a veranda that will give shade in summer, and in winter will keep no sunshine out of one's house. A permanent platform is laid before the door, and above this is arranged a light frame, well braced, that can be quickly taken down in the fall. This frame is covered with awning cloth, which is inexpensive, and, if cared for, will last many years. Of course the shape and size can be altered to suit the size or shape of the house.

AN INEXPENSIVE SUMMER VERANDA.

Farm Notes.

GRASSHOPPERS make a good egg food.

As a rule spinach is a very profitable crop.

OVERFEEDING is the most fruitful cause of a failure to lay.

Is butter color and flavor have no relation to each other.

The ashes of the corn-cob contain a large amount of potash.

It is said that fowls that lay white eggs are more prolific than those which lay dark eggs.

A GREAT deal of wet land along the banks of streams and ponds can be used for growing the basket willow.

A SOLUTION of silicate of soda is said to be a perfect preservation of eggs and does not injure them in any way.

AN eight-frame hive for bees is now preferred to the ten-frame Langstroth hive, which has been so long in use.

THERE is no better grain for poultry any time of the year than wheat, except when fattening. When ready to fatten corn should be used.

AGRICULTURAL NEWS

A FEW SUGGESTIONS FOR OUR RURAL READERS.

How Horses Should Be Shod—A Serviceable Potato Sorter—Saving in Labor at Hay Making—Butterline from Dead Horses—Farm Notes.

A Serviceable Potato Sorter.

In some sections where large quantities of potatoes are raised, some kind of sorting apparatus is a necessity. The work of picking over potatoes is something that costs too much to be done by hand, and yet potatoes classed into even sizes always sell better than uneven lots. In the great centers of commercial production of this crop, assorting is always done by some sort of a machine, which varies in the different sections, but are almost always homemade. The one herewith illustrated, from sketches in the American Agriculturist, is in use in New York State by many potato planters, and is a simple and inexpensive affair, and being adjustable it will be found more valuable than many other designs. The general form is usually made eight feet in length, fourteen inches wide at the bottom and eight inches at the top, the sides being six inches high, the whole supported upon four legs nailed to the sides. Six strips eight feet in length, three inches wide and one inch thick form the bottom of the sorter seen in the sketch. The strips, a, are beveled to a sharp edge at the lower side, and the rest in V-shaped notches cut into the supporting strip, r. By taking out or adding to the supporting strips and dividing the spaces, larger or smaller potatoes will pass into the different boxes placed along the length of the sorter, the larger ones being discharged at the lower end, the form of the bottom strips preventing clogging. An incline of twenty inches in eight feet will prove about right, although the form of potatoes to be screened will have much to do with this, a long tuber requiring a steeper incline than a round one.

DEVICE FOR ASSORTING POTATOES.

To Teach a Colt to Lead.

This is a good way to teach a young colt or calf to lead. Put a strap lengthwise around its body and another strap or rope over its back to hold this up. Put on a halter or bridle and tie the halter strap to the rope around the body and put it up through the halter ring. The colt is then ready to lead.—Pearl Harris, Rainier, Thurston County, Wash.

TEACHING A COLT TO LEAD.

Shoeing Horses.

The greatest care is necessary to so shoe the horse that the relative position of the leg to the foot in their normal state should be maintained, says an English veterinary. The bearing of the shoe should be level all around. If heel or toe, the inside or the outside of the foot were too high or low, the relationship of the limb to leg was disturbed—in fact, the whole mechanism of the limb was thrown out of gear. Unequal pressure, however slight, would surely end in serious damage to the limb, and among the frequent results of such treatment is permanent injury to the coffin bone. Contraction of the heel, he maintained, was not an active disease, but a passing condition due to the horse easing his feet so to minimize the pain felt at his heels from bad shoeing. He had little faith in mechanical arrangements for widening contracted heels. "Shoe the horse," he remarked, "so that the bearing surface is properly maintained at the heel, and expansion will follow as a natural consequence."

Winter Dairying.

Henry Talcott, the Ohio Dairy Commissioner, and a successful farmer, says he can make $50 to $75 per cow easier by winter dairying than he can $25 to $40 per cow by having his cows calve in spring, as most farmers yet do. He is not bothered much with cows and caring for milk while he is growing his summer crops. Winter dairying diversifies farm industries, and furnishes that something to do in winter, the lack of which is the chief obstacle to success of Northern farmers. But it requires ensilage and warm stables for cows in winter to make winter dairying profitable. It is harder also to raise the fall-farrowed calves, partly because milk is more expensive in winter and they are apt to get less of it, and partly because when milk it is apt sometimes to be given cold and throw the calf into an attack of scours. With some cheaper substitute for milk, and care not to give the calf any cold feed or drink the fall calf can be kept in thrifty condition.

Apples for Stock.

Prof. Saunders, in an address to the Canadian fruit growers, stated that the food value of apples depends in a measure on the condition of ripeness of the fruit, also on the variety of apple from which the supply is to be furnished. European authorities consider the money value of fodder constituents in ordinary varieties of apples and pears as somewhat higher than those contained in an equal weight of turnips, and those of the apple pomace as about one-third higher in feeding value than the whole apple which has served for its production, and about equal in value to sugar beets. Where apples are fed to stock they should be given in moderate quantities, and should be liberally supplemented with more nutritious and more highly nitrogenous food, such as bran, shorts, or oil cake, with a fair proportion of hay.

To Make a Hayrick.

The cut represents how to make a saving in labor at hay making. AAAA are four poles 32 feet long. They may be made of 4x4 material and spliced. BB are 4x4 and 4 feet long. DD are two timbers 4x4 and 20 feet long, fastened together with 3-inch bolts 12 inches long. A pulley for inch rope is under B and F a trip block for a hay carrier. Any hay carrier that will work on a 4x4 may be used. About 100 feet of inch rope is required, which should run from the top of the poles AA to a stack K. It is unnecessary to dig holes for the poles; when moving the rigging, move but one pole at a time.

The load of hay must be outside of the poles F, as shown in the cut. To unload, from twenty to thirty tons of hay must be put in a rick or eight tons in a stack. In the center of BB a round groove is cut and a yoke made of 1-inch rod passes over BB and down through the 4x4 D. This may be put together on the ground and raised with a team of horses. When the derrick is on the ground, drive a small stake in the ground at the end of each pole to prevent slipping when being raised. M is a stake with pulley for a rope to run from pulley under B for the horse to pull the hay up by. AA is fastened at the top end with a bolt. B is fastened to AA with bolts.—Farm and Home.

Farming in Japan.

The fertilizer most used in Japan is rice straw, cut into small pieces, as with a hay cutter. But cultivators depend mostly upon irrigation from the rivers, and most careful cultivation; not a weed nor a waste piece of land will be seen in a long railroad journey. The farmer utilizes every bit of land he possesses. But farm tools are very crude. The hoe is the chief tool used; occasionally a black bull may be seen hitched to what is called a plow, but the implement is so small it looks like a toy. With the hoe, the blade of which is four inches, the soil is turned over, left a few days in the sun, then leveled and seed put in. Every crop but rice is planted in rows, straight as an arrow. Men and women work in the fields, and rice threshing is performed by drawing the rice straw against the teeth of a saw-like blade, by which the seeds are dislodged.

Farm Notes.

Where can you get a better picture to hang over your desk than an accurate map of your farm, with the fields numbered and correctly measured.

It is cheaper to fatten an animal before winter than after the cold season approaches. If stock is poor on the opening of winter the probability is that they will not pay for the food consumed.

The best time to cut corn is when the most forward husks begin to dry. The husk is a better guide than the leaves. When cut at such a stage the largest proportion of nutritious matter is secured.

The best way to keep honey from candying, says a writer, is to seal it in tight jars the same as fruit. This is the way that the bees do, and it is the only safe way. It should be thoroughly heated before putting up.

The hog is said to be nearly as good a scavenger in the orchard as the sheep, and if allowed to run there he will destroy the worm-infested fruit that falls to the ground, and in so doing he will destroy the worms. He will also enrich the ground.

SLUMS OF LARGE CITIES.

Comparative Figures on New York, Chicago, Baltimore, and Philadelphia.

A report which is of great interest and may prove to have much practical value is that just issued by Labor Commissioner Carroll D. Wright on the slums of leading American cities. Mr. Wright's statistic, which were secured in response to a congressional order for a special investigation, deal with the slum districts of cities of over 200,000 inhabitants. New York is in the lead with a total "slum population" of 360,000, and a "slum" district proper which contains nearly 30,000. Chicago is second on the list with a slum population of 162,000. The Chicago slum district, the region known as "the levee," with some adjacent territory, embraces a population of 117,748, the slum districts of Baltimore and Philadelphia having about the same population.

A fact significant but by no means surprising is the disproportionate increase in the number of saloons in the slum regions over the number in the other parts of the city. In the city of New York entire there is an average of one saloon to every 200 persons. In the New York slum districts there is one saloon to every 129 persons. In Chicago the difference is even more marked, the city at large having one saloon to every 212 persons, while in the district marked out for special investigation by the Labor Commissioner there is one saloon to every 129 persons. The statistics also reveal some obviously natural conditions as to illiteracy and density of population, although a surprise appears in the shape of an announcement that the people in the slum districts enjoy quite as good health, on the whole, as do those in the cleaner and less crowded regions. That this is misleading every one must believe, and Mrs. Florence Kelley, whose slum work is of much practical value to the city, has explained in The Record how the sick of the slum regions quickly go to the grave or the hospital, and so escape enumeration at their places of residence.

The information thus elicited can not fail to be of value to the student of social reform, but let there be no false hopes that any investigation or reformatory work that may be undertaken upon it is going to remove the eyesores which are inevitable to every great city. What has long been apparent in dealing with the slum regions of American cities everywhere has been that they must be controlled and mollified, if at all, by requiring a strict observance of law and of public decency. And to gain this municipal reform must come first. It must precede social reform, which can not be successfully attempted under a local government overrun with political abuses and excesses.

Superfluous.

Bridget is an excellent cook, but like most women of her profession she is opinionated, and insists upon making all her dishes strictly according to her own recipes. Her mistress gives her very full swing not only as to cooking, but as to the purchase of supplies.

The other day her mistress said to her:

"Bridget, the coffee you are giving us is very good. What kind is it?"

"It's no kind at all, mum, said Bridget. 'It's a mixer.'"

"How do you mix it?"

"I make it one-quarter Mocha and one-quarter Java and one-quarter Rio."

"But that's only three-quarters. What do you put in for the other quarter?"

"I put in no other quarter at all, mum. That's where so many shippers the coffee, mum—by putting in a fourth quarter!"

He Had Nerve.

Judge John D. Ellis, the well-known Bellevue (Ky.) attorney, told the following good story on himself while in the city recently, which goes to prove the genuineness of pure rural nerve, still flourishing, it seems, in some outlying districts. One of the Judge's farmer friends called at the Bellevue office a short time ago and submitted a complicated case as to the ownership of some fence rails. After spending nearly two hours in consultation the Judge announced the case was a winning one if properly handled. "Well, I'm much obliged, Judge," said the farmer, making for the door. "I'll go and hire a lawyer," and away he went to the office of another attorney before Mr. Ellis could locate his shotgun and get quick revenge.—Cincinnati Times.

Once.

A newspaper funny man has invented not an absolutely fresh, but a comparatively new joke upon a very old subject.

Miss Timid was talking about her own nervousness, and her various night alarms.

"Did you ever find a man under your bed, Mrs. Bluff?" she asked.

"Yes," said the worthy woman. "The night we thought there were burglars in the house I found my husband there."

The hirer the world owes an idler will never be paid to a dead beat.

THE FARMER'S WIFE.

PUBLISHED MONTHLY.

I. W. PACK, PUBLISHER.

N. R. P. A., K. R. P. A.

ENTERED AT THE POSTOFFICE IN TOPEKA AS SECOND CLASS MATTER.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

If you find this article marked with a blue "X" on the margin, it is a notice to you that your time has expired and you are requested to renew at once so as not to lose a single copy during the year 1892.

Hundreds of our 10 and 25 cent subscriptions expire with this number and the editor earnestly requests that you not only renew but that you get up a club. If you send 10 names for one year at 20 cents each will send yours free. If you do not want your subscription continued after expiration please notify us by Postal.

Subscription 50 Cents a Year

MRS. EMMA D. PACK, EDITOR.

"We Wage a Peaceful War."

There has been a great deal said about the good records of the state officials predecessors. While we have nothing to say against their records, we will say that the records of our present state officials are worthy of notice from the Governor down—The Gov. has shown to the people in every act, that he is a staunch friend of the laborers, be they men or women. The same may be truly said of each and every state official—They have satisfactorily demonstrated to the voters of the state that it is possible for men from the farms to leave the plow and fill places of trust and honor, places which requires "brains" to fill.

The State Treasurer W. H. Biddle and the State Auditor Van B. Prather, are both old farmers. Two years ago they were elected to fill the responsible positions they now hold—not to say that they have conducted the business with credit to themselves and friends who placed them there would not be doing them justice. As business men they have no superiors, they are just such men as the tax-payers of Kansas needs to look out for their interests. And the voters of Kansas Laborers will for two years more have friends who will say to Capital—stand back Labor must and shall be first.

"Though the unfortunate facts confront us that all women can do is, to plead. Yet, we know that the women will do all they can for the Peoples ticket, and they will lose no opportunity to say a good word for the whole ticket for it is composed of honest men.

When the mother element gets in politics they will soon find a place for the decalogue and golden rule. Notwithstanding the assertion of John J. Ingersalls when he said that they had no place in politics. The women realize all too well that the decalogue and golden rule have never had a place in the political arena. For if they had, to day the thousands of homeless people would be enjoying the fruits of their toil and labor and instead of being wanderers and tramps upon the highways, would now be surrounded with the comforts of a home to cheer them as they near the end of lifes journey.

And now the Republicans are instilling their voters to vote the amendment solid. The extra committee one populist and one republican to check off the vote so as to ascertain how many were cast out of each party at every precinct has brought them to this they want to make a showing for the womens vote two years hence. The populist are wide awake and will not be caught by that kind of bait. The amendment will carry by a large vote the only question in which party will give it the largest vote.

At the coming election the women will know for certain who are their friends.

Aunt Columbia to Uncle Sam.

For the FARMER'S WIFE.

I must help run the house, Sam.
For things are going to rack:
The pantry is well nigh empty
And the meal is low in the sack.
The flour bin shows the bottom,
The bacon is almost gone,
And that splendid sorghum 'lasses
Has nearly all been drawn.

You are starvin' the little children
And pettin' the big ones like sin;
Some of the little stand in the street
Like they was't your k'n and kin.
You have't food enough in the house
For good square board all round,
Yet, some of the young'ns stuff themselves
While others half famished are found.

No, you need't go to frownin'.
I intend to Jaw awhile;
You'd better take your medicine
Resigned like, with a smile.
I'm tired of this injustice
And want to take a hand,
At makin' our national household
Happy and healthily and grand.

You've let me do the drudgery
And set in the parlor a little,
But you never thought I knew enough
To boil the political kittle.
You said I was't business like
And was't good at figgers;
I'd better de comb'n' the children's heads,
And carin' 'em of the chiggers.

But I've made up my mind, Sam,
To help you boss this nation,
So you needn't bug your eyes out
And scowl like all creation.
My fingerin' may be shaky
And my brain power sorter tight,
But I'll git along without them bouds
That make the times so tight.

Maybe I ain't business like
But I won't go in debt
Just to let the bankers live easy
Off of our children's sweat.
Maybe my head is't level
But I'll level up the work,
So some won't have the entire load
While others do nothin' but shirk.

I'll clean the national house up
And git some things to eat;
I'll set the gals to weavin' cloth
And boys to carin' meat,
I'll see that the corn and pertaiters
Ain't stole by the corporations,
While you set twirlin' your thumbs and makin'.

Other sech idle gyrations.

Don't tell me I can't understand
Your politics and sich,
And that in the matter of makin' laws
I wouldn't know t'other from which.
I can explain this politics
And you needn't sit and mutter—
Politics means, when it's swimm'd down
Jest simply bread and butter.

EMMA GHEENT CURTIS.

CANON CITY, Colorado.

FROM WYOMING.

Extracts from a Speech Delivered by Sophia N. Reddin Jenkins.

This cause has been espoused by many of the world's most famous thinkers and statesmen, including Washington, Lincoln, Sumner, Wendell, Phillips, Longfellow, Whittier, Garfield, William H. Seward, Chief Justice Chase, George William Curtis, Philip Brooks, Lucy Stone, Mrs. Livermore, Louise Alcott, Maria Mitchell, Harriet Beecher Stowe and Frances E. Willard. Can such an array of brilliant thinkers have made the mistake of advocating a measure that is wrong in itself? The opposers of this measure, the men, can be divided into to great classes. The first class from a mistaken sense of chivalry claim that women are too good to mix in, and be polluted by politics. The other class say, that women are not good enough, have not the mental strength, knowledge or stability. Also, it would be the cause of contention between husband and wife, and that the husband is the one to represent his wife in politics.

In answer to the first class, if women are so pure, moral and conscientious would not these attributes if carried into "corrupt" politics be a very desirable leaven? If politics are so polluted, is it not the duty of every human being to assist in purifying such? Is it more contaminating to cleanse that which is unclean, than to continue to bear the ill effects of such a condition? If a death breeding cesspool were situated in one's door yard, would it indicate a less degree of refinement and purity to cleanse it out, than to leave it to exist to continue its work of destruction? Is the angelic nature of woman any more apt to be injuriously affected in associating with men in making the laws than by coming in contact with these same men in all other relations of life; in the home, in school, in church and elsewhere? Who are these depraved politicians, anyhow? Why, our fathers, husbands brothers and sons.

In answer to the other class that women are too ignorant, frivolous and unreliable to be trusted with state affairs. The query arises "What has made them so?" You have inculcated in her mind from child hood, that it is unwomanly to be "strong-minded" thus placing weak minds at a premium. You have debarred her from participating in all public affairs, thus withholding from her the very means of improvement. In conversing with her, you descend to silly prattle, as if intelligent conversation were beyond her comprehension. As to suffrage causing marital disagreements, if one is inclined to quarrel it takes little or nothing to bring about such, besides it is only a mean, cowardly nature that stoops to such. Is not a domineering person much more apt to quarrel with one that is his legal inferior than if she stood on equal footing with himself? In regard to the husband representing his wife in politics, if he were capable of seeing from two points of view, his own and his wife's, still a large body of owing to the excess of women over men.

Women are gallantly told that her's is the highest of all spheres, that of motherhood, and then they show their appreciation of her sphere by disenfranchising her because she is a woman and capable of such a high destiny. If woman is weak and inferior is not that a sufficient reason that she should have every advantage, that she may gain strength both for her own good and the highest development of the human race? Give woman the ballot, and she will at once become interested in the government and see the necessity of greater political knowledge, that she may exercise her power wisely. In this state Colorado, as soon as women were enfranchised they organized leagues all over the state for the purpose of studying civil government, parliamentary law, and to discuss the important questions of the day. They have also organized themselves into mock legislature to become accustomed to the transaction of legislative business.

In regard to woman being inferior to man, intellectually, a very extensive experience in the school-room has disapproved the assertion. Girls have proven themselves equally as capable and frequently more so, than boys of the same age and opportunities. If such is a fact, the question is propounded, why have not women become as distinguished in scientific discoveries, and inventions as men? In the first place they have done much in this line, in the second place it is comparatively speaking, but a short time since scientific knowledge was at woman's command, and thirdly, her home duties prevents the uninterrupted leisure that man has at his command.

Female education is yet in its infancy, until the year 1819 there was not a single school in the United States where woman could receive knowledge above the grammar grade. In the year 1819 when it was decided to establish an academy for higher education of women, the measure was met by as bitter and intense opposition as that of the most radical opposer of women's suffrage to-day. It was said that to educate women would destroy the sanctity of home, and the nobility of womanhood. How absurd such sophistry sounds to us now! And in a few years, when women have universal suffrage, the arguments that are now advanced against equal suffrage will sound equally absurd.

Think not because woman is treated with equality and justice that she will be any the less willing to marry. There will really be more inducement knowing that her womanhood is revered, and that it will be prerogative to help control the conditions and laws under which those for whom she endures deaths throes, must live.

Marriage will also be raised to a higher standard from this season, when woman help make laws she will no longer be temptation for the half-starved, dependent girl to sell her virtue for bread, or what is often almost as bad in its effects on posterity, to enter an abhorred marriage for the sake of maintenance. In the new order of things woman being conscious of her ability for self-support, will only enter marriage from the highest motive that of congenial companionship and holy love.

We are told women do not desire the ballot, rather as weeping assertion is it not? To this the answer may be made, that so far in all the freedmen themselves, that saw the necessity of the emancipation of the slave and serf. They were so crushed by their bondage that they submitted to their cruel destiny. The only exception to subjected class working for their freedom, is that of woman.

It is true that many women avow they are unwilling to have their political shackles removed. Some of these are surrounded by luxury and see not the necessity of the ballot for themselves, and are indifferent to the inaudible moans of their illy fed and poorly paid sisters; others are afraid it may effect their popularity to advocate an unpopular measure; others because they have not given the subject any consideration, and yet another class who never decide anything for themselves they always oppose what "John" opposes. With the above exceptions the measure is favored by the flower of womanhood everywhere. Remember there is no sex in intellect.

I've a secret in my hear:

Dear voters,
A tale I would impart
Dear voters;
If you'd always happy be,
You must vote for the amendment, "see?"
Then from all debts we will be free
Dear voters.

We want to say to the women that it is good politics to know just who your friends are the suffragist and every one wants to know just how many votes are polled for the amendment how many are populist, how many are republicans, how many are prohibitions and the only way to test this is to have a committee of one populist, one republican at every poll and send the returns to the chairman of the populist state central committee, and republican to the chairman of the republican state central committee. These reports should be the same, and signed by both the populist and republican and there will be no going back on the returns: we understand that Blanks will be furnished for the amendment campaign committee. These blanks should be distributed at once and in the hands of the committee as soon as appointed and the committee should be attended to at once and with not another moments delay.

Let us say to the party that aspires to future greatness and power, ignore not the great issue that is before the voters for their consideration: That of the pending amendment. Ignore not the plaudings of your wives, mothers, daughters and sisters as they plead with you for their political freedom. They are not asking sympathy or charity, they are simply asking for justice. And as lovers of justice, we have no fear that the noble men of Kansas will fail to do their duty in regard to this great question of political equality. We have no fears that our noble heroes will not demand the same rights for their sisters as they enjoy themselves.

No man, who ever intended to vote for woman's suffrage will say he will not do it now simply because one party endorsed it.

The populist to a man will vote for the amendment, so will the republicans and the democrats say "me too."

The times are hard, but there always seems to be opportunities for those who are willing to work. In the past month I have made $175 above all expenses, selling Climax Dish Washers, and have attended to my regular business besides. I never saw anything that gave as general satisfaction. One should not complain where they can make over $9 a day, right at home. I have not canvassed any, so anxious are people for Climax Dish Washers, that they send after them, any lady or gentleman can do as well as I am doing for any one can sell what everyone wants to buy. I think we should inform each other through the newspapers of opportunities like this, as there are many willing to work if they knew of an opening. For full particulars, address the Climax Mfg. Co., Columbus, Ohio. After you have tried the business a week, I publish the results for the benefit of others.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTED.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

AUSTERLITZ.

(Continued from Page 1)

The reprobate would not subside,
Nor could a soul convince him.
They sicked on him a bull dog pup,
Told him the bears would eat him up.
And crunched his bones and munched him up.

They tried the baby songs we know,
That mothers croon so soft and low,
Wh oh all have heard so long ago,
When childhood skies were o'er us.
And here the lad renewed the din,
By catching step and breaking in,
With Gilmore's Anvil chorus.

A woman near was heard to shout,
She knew a way to knock him out,
Dave Overmyer's name would rout,
This terrible infantum;
They whispered it and lo. the kid,
All scared to death, stopped short and hid.

And ended here his tantrum.
There has been no gift denied women by the Almighty. There is no phase of life for which she is not equipped.

There is no law but what she can give it the intelligent considerate judgment the man can.

The Lord has deluged women with every noble trait of character and after the shower had passed, took the sprinkling pot and dampened some of the men with a little of the same article.

And, women, if to-day are denied a right; if there is now a difference in the values of men and women; if you have now got to plead for what should be your own; if the world has been slow to give you the political and civic elevation the men have; if you are still looked upon as not entitled to the same privileges; if you are denied now the same work; if avenues of reputable occupation are now denied you; it is because of the inherited savage which bosses the men who now deposits the vote.

A woman has the same right and liberty of action a man has; she has the right to be protected in life, property and occupation; she has the right to protect her children; to protect her home with all this sacred name implies to an American; she has the right to defeat bad laws and bad people. If she has that right shall her voice be heard in her own behalf or shall we commit her fortunes to the criminal, the abandoned and profligate, who are more than equal to our average majorities?

That which we give with lavish hand to the mendicant and outcast far beyond the seas, ought not to be denied her. It has been said women cannot bear arms and be a soldier. Because she cannot fight why she cannot vote. There is your savage over again. It is absurd as absurd can be. Wars are desolations of the past. The arbitration of Geneva, has been an object lesson of peace to which all nations must yield sooner or later.

I am in favor with measure and shall vote for it. I am not in politics this year have made no speeches and will not. I have tried my best to say what I wanted to say. Before I quit I owe it to Kansas to say for her it is the one place on earth which is nearest a woman's paradise; she has given women a consideration under its laws, no where else in the wide world accorded her. She stands side by side with the man; the law protects her from cradle to womanhood; gives her a homestead regardless of value, which the dissolute husband cannot alienate: she may fill it with her Lares and Penates and it is hers regardless of after vicissitude; she has the open free school, and its equivalent negative in the closed saloon. It is one of the few places on this planet where she is the heir of her husband; she is here his next of kin; she obtains here just as much of her husband's property on his death as he would of hers.

This amendment will carry by a sufficient majority. In the battles of the past, we have had our Marengos with Slavery and the saloon, and women of Kansas, the November sun shall shine on your Austerlitz: There may be a few politicians who may vainly essay to make head against it. The bull who tackled the on-coming transcontinental limited found by a bitter experience and a fragmentary cuticle, that it was only worse for himself.

The adoption of this amendment is one thing needed to doom Kansas as a woman's Heaven, and as she started in the garden of Eden, so here she shall end her days in the orchards of Hesperides.

RUBBER STAMPS, SEALS, STENCILS ETC.

Largest and Best Equipped Stamp Works in the State

Send for Circulars and Prices.
J. C. DARLING, Topeka, Kansas.

WOMEN.

SHOULD THEY VOTE?

An Able Address Delivered By Mrs. M. L. Reynolds of Jackson at the Meeting of the Industrial Legion Held in Summit.

Responding to the favor shown by asking me to say something in behalf of women, let me confess great insufficiency to handle a theme so mighty and important, and will only attempt to throw out a few briefs for consideration, then pass the developing sentiment to the magnanimous manipulations of those wiser and more skillful of speech.

Of the first woman, wife and mother we have very little knowledge. We read she was made after the likeness of God, presented to Adam and given equal privileges with him in the garden of Eden, where she persuaded Adam to partake of that which made him wise as the gods, clearly proving sagacity of mind belonged primarily to woman. Yet, for this manifest accomplishment, she was made subject to man and has remained from that eventful time to the present in bondage which has defrauded her of place in the legislative world and only now is becoming emancipated from the deplorable law and custom which has bound her so long and ostracized her mental worth. In the advancement of science, mechanics and men, women are advancing too. What once was a sufficient character for women is not enough now. We are told by Miss Frances Willard that less than a hundred years ago girls were first permitted to attend the free schools of Boston. They were then allowed to take the place of boys, for whom the schools were instituted, during the season when the latter were helping to gather in the harvest. What a marvelous change this freedom has wrought! A few short years ago women were shut from all the higher aims and opportunities of life. Into no college was she permitted to enter if she would cultivate her mind in the highest walks of science and literature, for the scientist had said that the quality of gray matter of her brain would not enable her to follow a logical position from premise to conclusion; by her physician that she was too delicate and nervous an organization to endure the application and mental strain of the school room; by her anxious parents that that there was nothing a man so abominated as a learned woman; nothing so unlovely as a blue stocking, and yet she comes smiling from her curriculum with her honors fresh upon her, healthy and wise, forcing us to acknowledge that she is more than ever attractive and useful. Education has liberated woman as a sex, and today she is recognized as a worthy competitor in all the different vocations of life, except the legislative right to deliberate and ballot for our body politic. For this exclusion various reasons are proffered, yet one by one are being winnowed away. Here is one of them:

"There are some persons who think that women ought not to vote because they do not fight. Those who hold this view do not, as they logically should, demand the removal from the register of all maimed, halt, blind and aged men, who are at least equally debarred from serving their country as soldiers. Women do not fight, but they risk more for the continuance of the nation than the average soldier does. There is no citizen in the country who has not caused suffering and the risk of life itself to some woman. Surely if it be maintained that there are duties of citizenship which women cannot fulfill, it may be truly retorted that there are other duties of citizenship which they only can perform, and that these are not the least essential."

Strange any one would dare to proclaim such a protest while there survives a woman of civil war times. The prompt and decisive action taken by men of the northern states, in offering their lives, if need be, to put down an unjust, unreasonable and selfish rebellion, was illustrious and sublime; and the ability displayed by our northern women whose representatives were at the front, who had suddenly thrust upon them the double work of providing for and protecting their homes, crippled by the absence of those on whom they were wont to depend, keeping their fireside bright with a burning patriotism cheerful and inspiring, while they were enduring a suspense no language could depict, was equally illustrious and sublime. Valor and fidelity gloriously ended battle for the one and thirty years ago, but for the other entailed a long list of sorrowful cares, which must last so long as there survives a single veteran of that bloody contest, and which are managed with a womanly devotion worthy the highest and purest veneration. If the roll of honor is called by ballot it must pass down both lines, since there is no distinction of merit, though that be merit demonstrated in different ways.

The home is woman's realm and could she do so she would annihilate every foe invading its peace and happiness. Give her the election franchise and she will soon dispose of the one that has done such deadly work since the days of Noah's flood, and at the same time administer attention to another quite as dangerous and formidable—the name, industrial slavery. As to the former, I pledge you she will never give her support to any party fully intrenched in and hopelessly committed to the liquor interests, and for the latter she would legislate for every measure that would tend to a more equalized distribution and so stop the cry of the unemployed from every part of our land, and retire from sight the miseries and wretchedness of poverty seen at every turn. Where all are enlisted in a common cause conflict ends. It is said woman ought not to vote because of her ignorance of the laws of civil government—let the knowledge of such become imperative and see how aptly she will meet the exigency. Though the mass of women of all countries have been intellectually undeveloped, we have instances enough to show that the woman-mind is as powerful, clear-sighted and active as man's. Women have ruled the mightiest nations, mastered the abstruse sciences, led vigorous armies to victory, written powerful books, made vigorous and brilliant achievements in eloquence, commanded vessels, conducted complicated commercial relations, edited influential journals and papers, sat in chairs of learning and everything necessary to show that the female mind is not wanting in power. Stimulate it with the same human ambitions that stir the opposite and I mistake not as many will graduate with honors and be heard from in the high field of intellectual life as we now find of the opposite fitted for the duties of useful professions.

Another throw against woman's suffrage is that she would not use independent action, but would vote as father, brother or husband. Woman is a closer discoverer of character than man, and I believe she would cast her vote where it would best tell for justice, equity and right, making the prophetic words of Elizabeth Cady Stanton an actual realization: "Woman's suffrage means a new and noble type of men and women with equal love and respect for each other. It means equal authority in the home, equal places in the trades and professions, equal honor and credit in the world of work." Our civilization to-day is simply masculine. Everything is carried by force and violence and war, and will be until the feminine element is fully recognized and has equal power in the regulation of human affairs.

And now my dear friends, I leave this subject with you for further consideration—charging my young woman hearers, in the good time coming when you will be an actual force in politics, see that you cover all rum-soaked ballots with those prayerfully baptized in promulgations for all that is high, pure, noble and good, that we who finished our work just as the dawn of a better national life was appearing will have no cause to blush for those who fill our places.

NEW YORK WOMEN.

NEW YORK, Oct. 10.—The great campaign of the women against Tammany and municipal corruption will open on Friday afternoon. Many of New York's most fashionable, most influential and richest women have been enlisted in the cause. The first meeting will be held on Friday at 3 p. m. at Association hall, where Dr. Parkhurst will deliver an address.

In his address Dr. Parkhurst will tell just what reasons prompted him to urge women into the fight. He will say that a debased and rotten municipality is a menace to the home and the honor and virtue of woman.

There will be a council committee of thirty, consisting of one from each assembly district. Col. J. J. Gifford, "Brick" Pomeroy and W. H. Shriver were appointed upon the committee last night.

There will also be a general committee and it is hoped to secure 100 women from each assembly district in this city, making at least 3,000 in all. Mrs. Conthia Leonard, who is the mother of Lillian Russell, made the only speech to the women to the movement against Democracy.

In the tenderloin precinct women have decided to work for purity in municipal politics. A number voted to do so at a meeting of the young people's social culture club held last evening in the home of Elizabeth Grannis.

Lewelling Speaks.

Chairman Breidenthal of the Populist state central committee, this afternoon received the following letter from Governor Lewelling, who is at Ottawa today:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 9, 1894. John W. Breidenthal, Chairman, Topeka, Kan.: MY DEAR SIR:—I have just read a published statement from one Jacobs, of Wichita, charging that money was contributed by the brewers in 1892 in return for pledges of protection in case of the election of the Populist state ticket.

You may say for me that I never had a dozen words with Mr. Jacobs in my life, I never made a pledge or promise of protection for the brewers or any other class of men, nor did I even so much as promise an appointment prior to the election. If any money was collected from the brewers or anybody else upon any such pledge it was done without my suggestion, consent or approval and also without my knowledge. Yours respectfully,

L. D. LEWELLING.

NEW YORK "LEDGER" ON THE POPULIST PLATFORM.

Declares Against Usury and Favors Government Loan and Aid Associations, and Government Banks—Hope for the People—An Honest Paper.

Robert Bonners' paper, the New York Ledger, feels forced to take a stand against the usury of the Shylocks. If the Ledger keeps right on, it will prove of great service to the people's party, for more than a million people read it every week. It says:

"For many years one of the crying evils of large cities has been the extortion of money lenders. Whoever has gotten into temporary emergency and found it necessary to realize on something has learned to his sorrow that the tender mercies of the Shylocks are cruel indeed. Every one is liable to experience temporary embarrassment, and under the old regime this meant the most merciless greed on one side, and the payment of a rate of usury that amounted to little short of robbery on the other.

"Of late our cities have been overrun with money lenders who advanced certain sums, more or less, on furniture and personal property. Most of the borrowers were people whose social or other condition was such that they were willing to endure almost anything rather than make their distress public. On this well-understood fact the lenders operated and extorted their full pound of flesh without discount or delay.

"A very large number of these transactions would scarcely bear the light of day, but the parties most concerned have in almost all cases refused to enter any complaint, and the perpetrators of these outrages have gone on growing more bold and insolent with every success.

"The government pawnbroker has long been a Paris institution, and the state has derived no little benefit from this way of conducting business.

"Some day let us hope that there will be a government loan and building association, where extortion will be impossible, and where quibbles and quirks and technicalities, by which hard-working people are done out of their possessions, will be unknown. If these things pay private individuals, they certainly would pay the government, and these, with the savings banks and various industries turned into government hands, would put the masses of the people in a much better condition, would afford reliable employment and investments that, even though they were smaller in aggregate profit, would be absolutely safe, and would take away from those who have but little between them and need the continual worry which the management of the average savings bank has made inevitable. When a man lends to the government he feels safe; when Uncle Sam takes care of his little hoard, he feels small necessity for worrying about it."

WASHINGTON'S WARNING.

At this critical time when issues are pending that are of such vital interest to the great common people it seems wise for us to take a retrospective view and note some of the warnings of the true patriots of the past. At this period of our country's history the words of Washington in his memorable farewell address of 1776 comes to us with peculiar force, he said "I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state * * * and let me warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effect of the spirit of party generally. * * * In governments of a monarchical cast, patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor upon the spirit of party. But in those of a popular character, in governments fairly elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. A fire not to be quenched, it demands uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume." These words seem peculiarly fitting at this time. This spirit of party, or partisanship, is making every political campaign one of abuse and vilification, personal animosities are resurrected, characters assailed and blackened in a brutal and inhuman manner. This is barbarous and out of place under an elective form of government like our own.

This party spirit is instrumental in arousing antagonism from one political party to measures that are endorsed by other parties. We find at this time that life long friends to woman suffrage are saying that they cannot vote for the pending amendment because a party to which they do not belong have endorsed this issue, to which they have been a life long friend.

Experience has taught us that there is no person so good but that they have their faults, nor one so bad but that they possess some good qualities, and as all political parties are composed of the individual persons we cannot expect to find perfection in any one of them or that either one is wholly evil. I would not for one moment hesitate to say that I believe there are honest men in all the parties, and while they may have difference of opinion on various subjects. I cannot doubt but that they are honest, well meaning patriotic American citizens. Some may possess more of the progressive spirit of the times, and are better students of political economy. This being true, why should every candidate nominated for any office by their respective party be subjected to showers of harsh words, false accusations and vituperation?

A case that is now fresh in memory comes to me. A few months ago the partisan press was heaping vials of political wrath upon the head of so distinguished a citizen as was the first governor of the state of Kansas, the late Charles Robinson, and now within a few days after his funeral are advocating that the state erect a monument in honor of this eminent statesman and Kansas pioneer. Are we not all children of the same wise Creator and citizens of the same republic? Are not all Kansans truly interested in the permanent prosperity of our state? Then why not recognize the brotherhood of all mankind and put aside all bitter spirit of partisanship that is so offensive and has a tendency to make bitter foes.

The initiative and referendum will eventually help the voters of our nation to destroy the bitterness engendered through political parties, and help us to cultivate more true unselfish patriotism. Never were the words of warning by Washington more applicable than at present.

Is This Socialism.

The following is from the pen of Mr. John D. Connolly, United States consular at Auckland, New Zealand:

"The land laws of this country are unique, having no parallel in the modern world, that I am aware of. Of the extension of the franchise to women I can only say that the experiment has proved eminently successful, even beyond the most enthusiastic advocates. Her first effort has raised the moral tone and purified to a large extent the moral atmosphere of politics. Woman has demonstrated here that she is disinterested, unselfish and fully worthy of political confidence reposed in her. As the country having drifted into socialism, as you seem to think, it is only fair to say that there is very little need of apprehension in that respect, at least for the present. At the same time it cannot be denied that the tendency of legislation appears to be pointing that way. If it be socialism to relieve the poor, the workingman, the artisan and the struggling small farmer and the mechanic from the burdens of taxation as much as possible, and compel the monopolist, the land-grabber, the purse-proud and the affluent members of society to bear the weight and expense of government, then socialism is certainly in full swing here. If it be socialism to shorten the hours of the laborer to eight per day, and give him a half holiday in every week, besides at least a half dozen full holidays in the year under full pay, thus affording him more time for rest, recreation and intellectual development than is enjoyed by his fellow workers in any part of the world, then indeed it is undeniable that socialism is rampant in New Zealand. If it be socialism to compel the admission of more pure air and genial sunshine into the work-room and factory, under government supervision, to teach the ladies their rights and how to lawfully and peaceably obtain them, to force the earth-grabber to either sell, subdivide or improve his land so it will produce what nature intended it should, thereby administering to the wants of the people, or place the land within the reach of those who desire homes—if this be socialism, then indeed are the people of this country blessed beyond all others, for all I have enumerated, and more, are they enjoying to the fullest extent today. There is a general diffusion of wealth, no great poverty and not a single millionaire so far as I know. Although legislation does not directly interfere with laudable accumulation, thrift and industry, yet there is no denying that the general tendency is toward checking if not absolutely preventing the acquisition of vast estates in the hands of individuals or companies, to the detriment of the people. This cannot in any sense be called socialism. The men who have inaugurated these honest, Christian reforms are not animated by any spirit of socialism, but by a sincere desire to promote the universal welfare, to resist the aggression of the strong and lend a helping hand to the weak and lowly. You may call these principles by any name you chose, but the facts are as herein related."

WILCOX'S COMPOUND
TANSY PILLS
Perfectly Safe and Sure when all others fail. If your druggist does not keep them, send 4c. postage for "WOMAN'S SAFE GUARD" and receive the only absolutely reliable remedy by mail. WILCOX SPECIFIC CO., Phila., Pa.

REPORTERS!

We want a responsible LADY or GENTLEMAN in every town to act as newspaper correspondent, report the happenings in their community and write articles for publication. Experience not necessary. Big remuneration for good writers. Send stamps for full particulars. MESSIAH PRESS ASSOCIATION, Chicago, Ill.

$25 to $50 per week, to act as PRIVATE DETECTIVE under instructions. Gentlemen, using our "Old Reliable" Plan, can make a practical way to acquire many new worn knives, forks, spoons, etc., quickly done by dipping in acid metal. No experience, selling or machinery. Thick plate of metal operation; lasts 5 to 10 years. Can finish when taken from the tank. Every family has plenty to do. Plaster sells readily. Profit $1000. W. P. Harrison & Co., Colorado, U.S.

DETECTIVES!

Bright, young and middle-aged men wanted in every locality to act as PRIVATE DETECTIVES under instructions. Previous experience not required or necessary. Send stamps for full particulars and get sample copy of the best illustrated criminal paper published. NATIONAL DETECTIVE BUREAU, 241, Broadway, N.Y. * * * * *

THE WOMAN'S TRIBUNE

Edited and Published weekly at Beatrice, Nebraska, by

CLARA BEWICK COLBY,
Price $1.00 Per Year. Trial Subscription, Five Weeks for Ten cents.

THE YEAR'S WANING.

As months it thou true that the years has waxed and waned,
And that so soon must remain nothing but haze and decay—
Earliest cricket, that out of the mid-summer midnight complaining,
All the faint summer in me takes with subtle dismay?
Though thou bringest no dream of frost to the flowers that slumber,
Though no tree for its leaves, doomed of thy voice, maketh moan,
Yet with th' unconscious earth's bodied evil over my soul thou dost cumber,
And in the year's lost youth unmake me still —lose my own.
Answerest thou, that when nights of December are blackest and bleakest,
And when the fervid grate joins me a May in my room,
And by my hearthstone gay, as now and in my garden thou creakest—
Thou wilt again give me all—dew and grace and bloom?
Say, little poet! full many a cricket I have that is willing,
If I but take him down out of his place on my own shelf,
No blither lays to sing than the blithest known to thy shrilling,
Full of the rapture of life, May, morn, hope,
and—himself.
Leaving me only sadder; for never one of my singers
Lures back the bee to his feast, calls back the bird to his tree,
Hast thou no art can make me believe, while the summer yet lingers,
Better than bloom that has been red leaf and sere that must be?
—W. D. Howells in Boston True Flag.

NIGHT AT ROUND TOP.

I made many friends at Brookfield Academy, but headstrong, impulsive Jerry Long was my favorite amongst them all. One day, near the close of the term, he said,—

"Bob, you are going home with me, to stay at least two weeks. Now don't begin framing excuses, for I won't accept any."

Then he walked away as if the matter was quite settled—and it was.

So it came about that three weeks later I found myself, with Jerry, being conveyed across the country in the family carryall toward Round Top, as his home was called. It seemed to me that my friend acted a little queerly on the way. He talked incessantly, and in one instance broke in upon Jason's remarks. Jason was the gardener and man-of-all-work.

"I tell you what, Master Jerry," he was saying, "things are dull enough now that—"

Here Jerry frowned at him, and began to talk about the landscape. Jason looked bewildered, then with a glance toward me, whistled knowingly.

All this gave me the impression that I was being made the victim of a plot of some kind, and my imagination began to run wild. I wondered if any of the Long family had gone mad and been confined in the east wing or the west wing, or the attic, and if they would escape in the middle of the night and choke me, as I had read of their doing in novels. A midnight struggle with a maniac or so was a possibility decidedly unpleasant to contemplate.

It was nearly noon when we ascended the winding road that led to the secluded home of the Longs. Their grounds covered the whole of a large hill, the top of which was a circular plateau. From this the place derived its name. The building itself was a large frame structure—just the kind of a house to be haunted with a mysterious insane annex, I thought.

"Bob, I hope you won't think it mean in me," Jerry said in a kind of nervous haste, when we had alighted and Jason had driven on to the barn, "but the fact is they are gone."

"Gone? Who?" I asked, thinking of the lunatics.

"The whole family. They are at the seashore. I've been there once. It is stupid. I'd rather be here at Round Top—if you will stay with me."

And this was all. I was greatly relieved, and promised to remain the required time, feeling that I should like the place very much.

And like it I did. Jerry invented all sorts of amusements. One of them was shooting at a mark with a bow and arrow, and we became quite proficient in the art. As Jerry put it, we would have made very respectable Indians. When the archery grew tiresome he constructed two lassos of the clothes line, and we sallied forth, with these wild West contrivances. Stumps, broken limbs of trees, and, in fact, any kind of projection that could be found, were promptly caught in the coils. We felt more like Indians than ever.

One day a boy on horseback brought the intelligence that the housekeeper's sister, who lived about four miles away, was seriously ill, and wanted Mrs. Jason to come to her at once.

"All right, Jason," said Jerry. "You and your wife get ready while I hitch up." And he was outside before an answer could be made.

"Just like that boy!" the gardener said. He is good-nature itself. Dress yourself as quickly as possible. Martha, and we'll go."

"But who will get breakfast for the boys?" she asked.

"I'll warrant Jerry won't starve, nor this young man, either. Beside, we may be back again by morning."

And thus it happened that Jerry and I were left together at Round Top. In spite of ourselves, when the sun went down and the twilight deepened, we felt rather lonely. The thought that the nearest neighbor lived a mile away had never occurred to us before, but now it did so with peculiar significance.

We locked the doors and windows, drew the blinds and lighted the lamps. This made things look brighter. Nevertheless, we retired early, and both occupied the same bed just "for company."

It must have been nearly midnight when I suddenly awakened. I was dimly conscious that something had broken my slumber, and lay still to see if the cause, whatever it was, would be repeated.

In less than a minute a slight noise coming from the hall below attracted my attention; at the same time Jerry laid his hand on my arm. "Some one is trying to get in," he whispered.

"Or is already in," I said grimly. "Let's dress."

We rolled out of bed and began to get into our clothes with much more speed than neatness. It is anything but pleasant to be awakened in the dead of night by unusual circumstances, and we were pretty well frightened. After dressing we stood facing each other, with chattering teeth, not knowing what to do next.

"Of course he's after the silver," said Jerry.

The idea that he was not after us brought a feeling of relief, but of course we wouldn't allow him to have the silver.

After listening at the door a short time we cautiously opened it. Jerry crept to the balustrade and peered over it. He drew back quickly and motioned me to approach.

The full moon, being about an hour high, shed its light through the large transom above the front door. By its aid I could plainly distinguish the figure of a man almost directly below us. He was stealthily trying a key in the lock of the dining-room door.

"Wait here—and watch him!" Jerry whispered.

I did not take my eyes from the man, who was completely absorbed in the work of picking the lock. Very soon Jerry was with me again. In his hand he carried one of our lassos. Ere I could utter a remonstrance he had raised the coil above his head, whirled it around a few times and sent it down in the direction of the intruder. It was a rash and unwise thing to do, but Jerry never was in the habit of thinking twice.

Rather through a piece of rare good fortune than skill, the slip-nose dropped over the fellow's head and we drew it tight. The idea was to catch him by the neck, but the coil reached his ankles before it could be tightened.

On seeing something pass in front of his eyes the man started back with an exclamation, the tightened rope about his feet causing him to fall to the floor.

"Pull, Bob, pull!" Jerry cried excitedly.

We put our strength to the task, and soon had the man's heels nearly as high as his head had been. Then we fastened the rope to the baluster.

"I guess he won't be able to cut loose in a hurry," said Jerry, complacently.

"But what if there are more?" I asked apprehensively.

"I never thought of that."

Bang! A shot rang out sharply, and echoed through the empty house. I felt the wind of a bullet that sped past my cheek.

We dodged back quickly. It would evidently be hazardous to go down stairs while our prisoner was armed, and if left alone he might work himself loose in some way. Still we did not intend to give up the fight, so, securing positions where observations could be made in safety, we waited for developments.

Up to this time the burglar had said nothing, but now he called out gruffly,— "You'd better let that rope go. It will be the worse for you if you don't."

Receiving no reply, he began to threaten: the number of evils he proposed to inflict on us in the event of getting free were not a few, and were all ingeniously chosen. Finding this also ineffectual, he relapsed into silence.

Presently he began fumbling in his pockets, and soon we heard the crackling of a match. Holding the light as high as possible, he took deliberate aim at something and fired.

"We must stop that," I said. "He is shooting at the rope."

Taking off my coat I rolled it into a bundle, Jerry following my example. It was not long before we saw the light of another match, and launching one bundle at it, had the satisfaction of seeing it extinguished.

Entering the bedroom we brought out whole armfuls of blankets, sheets, and pillows. Every time the man struck a match we hurled something at him and put it out. Maddened beyond measure, he sent shot after shot in our direction, together with a great deal of profanity.

"Watch him and count the shots," Jerry said, and hurried away to one of the upper rooms.

He soon returned, carrying a ham-mock.

"How many shots, Bob?"

"Six, altogether."

"Are you sure?"

"Certain."

He said no more, but seizing a pillow held it where it could be dimly seen, moving it about slowly. The trick was successful: the bullet cut through the cloth, causing the feathers to fly.

"Now is our time!"

Uttering these words, Jerry sprang down the stairs. Expecting to be shot full of holes, and yet not willing to be outdone in courage, I followed. At the foot our prisoner covered us with the revolver: and demanded instant release on pain of death.

"Might as well put that thing in your pocket, Mr. Man. You can't use a cartridge more than once. Come on, Bob! We'll wrap him up in this hammock," said Jerry, advancing to where he lay.

Taking aim at the boy's breast the villain pulled the trigger. A sharp click was the only result—the seven-shooter was empty.

It was an easy matter for us to roll him up in the hammock until there was no possibility of escape. He looked very much like a fly that a spider had worked upon for a considerable time, not being able to move a limb. Then we lowered his heels.

Consulting the clock, we found it to be shortly after midnight.

"Might as well stand guard over him the rest of the night," I said. "There may be others."

Investigation showed that the lock of the front door had been picked. We secured it and lit the lamps.

The chickens were heralding the dawn of day when the welcome sound of wheels on the gravel driveway announced the return of the gardener and his wife. The report of her sister's illness had been greatly exaggerated.

Jason was not a little surprised when shown our much-bound captive, and started off to hunt up the Sheriff. That individual made his appearance at about 9 o'clock, and before noon landed our "catch" in the county jail.

He proved to be a much-sought after convict who had escaped from the penitentiary, where he was serving a life sentence, and no trial was necessary for his reincarceration.

We resolved to keep our adventure a secret from the academy boys, but it leaked out somehow, and it became necessary for us to punch the heads of several for putting the appellation "cowboy" before our names.—Waverly.

BEAUTIES OF THE WEST INDIES.

Creoles and Quadroons Who Excel in the Arts of Dressing and Flirting.

In Barbadoes, as in the French colonies, the term "Creole" is rightly used to designate the descendants of French and Spanish settlers in the island—not necessarily those who have an admixture of negro blood, says a correspondent of the Philadelphia Record. Some of the Creole women are extremely beautiful, and their dark loveliness is enhanced by the tropical heat which renders English women faded and worn in a few years' time. While an Anglo-Saxon grows red as a boiled lobster under the glowing sun and becomes a "dem'd damp, moist, unpleasant body," one of the Latin race merely looks a trifle paler, with eyes more luminous and dreamy under influence of excessive heat or strong emotion. Some of the quadroon girls are even handsomer than the Creoles, whom they resemble in many ways and generally excel in dressing and flirting. The "race problem," as it is called in the United States, bids fair to be solved here. Many of the most prosperous citizens are colored men, who were born in slavery. The better class of them are ambitious to show the world that they are competent to do what the white man does, and to improve on the model if necessary. Already they are found in every walk of life and branch of business on the island, associating freely with the whites and highly esteemed by them, though intermarriages are comparatively rare. Slavery was abolished only eleven years ago, yet one of the best plantations in Barbadoes is owned by an ex-slave, which is worth, I am told, $100,000, and last year yielded some 300 hogsheads of sugar. This morning I noticed on the street a Sergeant, black as ebony and built like a Hercules, superintending the digging of a ditch by some soldiers from the guardhouse, mostly white who were undergoing punishment. The ebony Hercules carried a rattan, which he applied lustily to the backs of his charges, and it seems to me that the white backs got rather more of it than the black ones.

Japanese Scholar.

A Buffalo paper says that Redcliffe College, formerly Harvard Annex, has among its undergraduates this year the first Japanese girl who has come to this country to be educated. She is a Miss Shida-Mori, and she is described as a charming combination of Japanese features, English dress, American culture, and "Japanese-Anglo" language. She is the daughter of a wealthy banker in Yanagawa, Japan, who was converted to Christianity some years ago and has educated his sons and daughters in that faith. Miss Mori will study in England and France, as well as in the United States, and will then return to Japan to devote herself to educational and missionary work. She is twenty years old.

LOOK AT THE STAR.

And See the Remarkable Changes that Occur.

Neat little cards, printed upon which are six cubes, are now all the rage. There is a little star in the center of these cubes and upon this star you are asked to bend your gaze.

The effect is magical. The cubes are arranged, as in the accompanying cut, with three blocks on the bottom row, two on the next and one at the top.

Look steadily at the cubes a minute.

You will notice a sudden change. Keep on looking and there will be another. First there will be two cubes at the top, three in the middle and two on the bottom row. The star you will find in an entirely different place than in the picture.

No one seems able to explain it, and all who have seen it are in a deep quandary as to what causes the peculiar change.

CROWWELL LACE COLLAR.

Offers a Fine Field for the Display of Stick Pins.

A feature of the Crowwell collar is elegant simplicity. Handsome lace is needed, with a bold pattern. The lines are regular and it takes rather a full figure to shoulder them. There are no points as in the Vandyke, and no epaulets as in the military to build up hollows. This style of neckwear offers a fine field for the display of stick pins and brooches.

CROWWELL LACE COLLAR.

Cultivation of Oranges.

A recent traveler in China and Japan notices that in those countries the orange trees are not grown as we grow them in our country, by training them up to good stems and allowing them to have large and bushy heads, but are suffered to grow low, crooked and stumpy like, more like bushes than as trees such as ours present. The traveler states that the reason given for this by the Asiatic cultivators was that it was much more easy in this way to gather the fruit, and for that reason it was cheaper and more economical to train the trees so than in the form of trees as our orange cultivators do; but this could scarcely be the reason, as the labor in those countries is so excessively low that the extra cost of a ladder and baskets to gather them could scarcely be an item in the calculation. We have recently come across some account of an experiment by an orange cultivator in California, who allowed some of his trees to grow low and bushy, as the cultivator might say "straggling," and had alongside the other trees trained up as if they were apple trees in the ordinary manner of an orange grove, and to his amazement he finds that these unpruned trees, suffered to grow in this way, are more than doubly as productive as those which have been subjected to the pruning necessary to give them an ornamental character. It is more than likely, therefore, that it was this productive character rather than the saving of labor which has led the Chinese and Japanese to adopt this method as their universal plan of civilization.—Meehan's Monthly.

The Blood Orange.

The blood orange, which, according to the best horticultural authority, was first raised by the Spaniards of the Philippine Islands, is a mere variety of the common sweet orange—a creation of man's ingenuity. It was first seen in the markets of Europe during the closing decade of the last century, where it created quite a sensation. Almost immediately there were heavy demands from all the subtropical countries of both Asia and Europe for cuttings of the trees which bore this wonderful fruit. At present, owing to some elicit promulgated from Manila, no blood oranges are cultivated in the Philippines, the European supply being chiefly raised in Malta. There are probably a score of places in the United States and its contiguous islands where blood oranges are doubtably propagated.—St. Louis Republic.

Hood's Is the Best

Ball Medicine, because it purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, and therefore gives strength to resist bad effects from Colds, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Pneumonia, Malaria, the Grip, etc. Take it now and avoid the danger of serious illness. It may save you many dollars in doctors' bills. Be sure to get Hood's and only Hood's.

Hood's Sarsaparilla Cures

"I can truly recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as an excellent medicine. I have taken four bottles and I am better than I have been for two years past. I was all run down; my limbs swelled and my blood was in a very bad condition. Now I am free from neuralgia and better in every way." Mrs. H. CONLEIGH, Hume, N. Y.

Hood's Pills cure all liver ills, biliousness, jaundice, indigestion, sick headache, etc.

WE WILL MAIL POSTPAID a fine Panel Picture, entitled "MEDITATION" In exchange for 13 Large Lion Heads, cut from Lion Coffee wrappers, and a 2-cent stamp to pay postage. Write for list of our other fine premiums, including books, a knife, game, etc. WOOLSON SPICE CO. 430 Huron St., Toledo, Ohio.

A Ruddy Glow

on cheek and brow is evidence that the body is getting proper nourishment. When this glow of health is absent assimilation is wrong, and health is letting down.

Scott's Emulsion taken immediately arrests waste, regardless of the cause. Consumption must yield to treatment that stops waste and builds flesh anew. Almost as palatable as milk.

Prepared by Scott & Bowne, N. Y. All druggists.

"COLCHESTER" SPADING BOOT.

BEST IN MARKET, BEST IN FIT, BEST IN WEARING QUALITY.

The outersole sole extends the whole length down to the heel, protecting the foot in digging and in other hard work.

ASK YOUR DEALER FOR THEM and don't be put off with inferior goods.

COLCHESTER RUBBER CO.

Unlike the Dutch Process

No Alkalies

—OR—

Other Chemicals

are used in the preparation of

W. BAKER & CO.'S

Breakfast Cocoa

which is absolutely pure and soluble.

It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, and EASILY DIGESTIBLE.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

DEE

Pt. Band,

Iron Hoop

OAK BASKET.

A Basket You Can Water Your Horses With. Costs no More Than Any Other Kind, but Will STAND ANYTHING.

Since 1861 I have been a great sufferer from catarrh. I tried Ely's Cream Balm, and to all appearances am cured. Terrible headaches from which I had long suffered are gone.—W. J. Hitchcock, Late Major United States Volunteers and A. A. General, Buffalo, N. Y.

ELY'S CREAM BALM

Opens and cleanses the Nasal Passages, Alleviates Pain and Inflammation, Heals the Sores, Protects the Membrane from Colds, Restores the Senses of Taste and Smell. The Balm is quickly absorbed and gives relief at once.

A particle is applied into each nostril and is agreeable. Price 25 cents, at druggists or by mail.

ELY BROTHERS, 36 Warren Street, New York.

Permanently and speedily cured by a surgical operation. Parties desiring to be cured should call on or address Dr. Coe's Sanitarium, Kansas City, Mo.

VARICOCELE

PISO'S CURE FOR

Consumption and people who have weak lungs or Asthma, should use Piso's Cure for Consumption. It has cured thousands. It is not bad or cake. It is the best cough syrup. Gold everywhere. 25c.

CONSUMPTION.

RAIN AFTER DROUGHT.

The lips of earth the mother were black;
They gaped through fissures, and crevice and crack;
O for the fall of rain!
And the life of the flowers paused; and the wheat,
That was rushing up, seemed to droop in the heat,
And its grass-green blades they yearned for the sweet,
The sweet, sweet kiss of the rain!

The secular cypress, solemn and still,
The sentinel pine on the edge of the hill,
Watched, but they watched in vain;
And the glare on the land, the glare on the sea,
The glare on the terrace, and tower, and tree,
Grew fiercer and fiercer mercilessly;
O for the fall of rain!

The streams were silent, the wells were dry,
The pitiless clouds pass slowly by,
With never a drop of rain.
The priests in the town exhorted a saint,
They passed in possession with prayers and plaint,
But the heavens were cruel, or faith was faint;
Come never a drop of rain.
O for the fall of rain!

One night the sky grew ragged and wild,
With a sound like the lip of and the laugh of a child.

Fell the first sweet drops of the rain;
Moist lips of the mist the mountain kissed,
And cooled the hot breath of the plain;
The emerald wheat leaped gaily to meet
The welcome kiss of the rain;
And the roses around, as they woke to the sound,
Broke into blossoms again;
Oh, beautiful, bountiful rain!

CALLIKOON FACTORY.

Whiter than alabaster, softer than a coverlet of eider-down, the first snow of the season had drifted down over the rocky pastures and brown, wooden fences of Callikoon Farm. Above the cluster of blossoming fish geraniums in the window one could just see a round, dimpled face looking out toward the sunset.

Old Mrs. Carson, driving by on her way from mill, caught a glimpse of it, and called Old Trumpet to "Whoa."

"Poor thing!" said Mrs. Carson. "I s'pose she is dreadfully lonesome. I guess I'll just stop and change the time o' day with her."

Mrs. Hal Haddon herself answered the knock, and though she put her bravest face on it, Widow Carson could see that she had been crying. "Folks gone, eh?" said the widow. "Yes," said the young wife.

"S'pose you'd have like to have gone, too?" said Mrs. Carson.

"Hal said we couldn't afford it," answered Mrs. Haddon, in a low voice. "He was obliged to go to take good care of the old folks; but I should have been only a useless expense. Of course," she added, with a sudden upspringing of the bitterness of her inmost soul, "I know I am only a useless expense all the time. They told me so when they went away."

"Hold you so?"

Mrs. Carson looked over the top of her spectacles in amazement. "Oh, not in so many words!" said Mrs. Hal winking her eyes very hard to get rid of a certain moisture on the lashes. "They are too considerate and polite for that. But their actions speak louder than words."

"Ain't Juliana Joyce comin' to run the shirt factory?" inquired Mrs. Carson.

"I suppose so. There's another trouble. I should like to have gone into the shirt factory like the other women around here, and earned a little go ket money for myself. But Hal said it was too hard for me. I know Hal's mother wanted him to marry Juliana. Juliana is so capable and efficient, she says, and then she looks at me and sighs like a blast furnace."

"Juliana ain't attractive," shrewdly remarked the widow, "but she's proper smart and stirrin'. Tain't every one can manage a shirt factory with a forty-horse water power and eight-and-twenty hands. Expect her to-night, don't you, Mrs. Haddon?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Hal, sighing. Mrs. Carson went her way, and just then the postmaster's little son appeared with a letter, which proved to be from her husband. A loving letter, but in which he stated the date of his return as very uncertain.

Mrs. Hal had hardly perused these words when there came a loud knock at the door. It was Juliana Joyce, wrapped in furs like an Esquimaux. "Is it you?" cried Mrs. Hal, swallowing down her grief until a more convenient season. "Come in. Your trunks—"

"I hain't got none," interrupted Miss Joyce. "I've come to say I ain't coming."

"What?" exclaimed Mrs. Hal.

"Can't," said Miss Juliana. "My sister's lost her wits up to Smoky Town. She's violent. And my brother-in-law, he's telegraphed to say that unless I come right away he and the children's lives won't be safe. I could always manage Miranda in on one of her crazy turns. I'm dreadfully sorry, but it can't be helped. You'll have to shut up the factory until Harry gets back. It's a pity, too, with business just lookin' up, and all them New York orders comin' in. If Harry'd the sense to marry a more capable woman—"

"Isn't that the clock striking five?" said Mrs. Hal, quietly. "If you expect to take the return train to Smoky Town you will have no time to spare."

Miss Joyce chuckled as her sleigh bells jingled down the road.

"I give her a piece of my mind for once in a way," thought she. "What possessed Harry Haddon to marry a wax doll like that I don't know."

Mrs. Haddon went back to the fire and candle, and with one trim little boot poised on the fender, re-read her husband's letter.

"Now is my opportunity," she said to herself. "It is a great undertaking; but surely I can do what Juliana Joyce can. I'll try, any way."

A week afterward, Juliana Joyce shrilly hailed the tinware pedler who traveled from town to town along that remote locality, and who had just come from Callikoon Center. "Hey, Dick Peppercorn!" said she. "How do the shirt hands like the factory shuttin' down till Hal Haddon gets back?"

"I ain't in no position to judge," answered the tinman, "seem' as it ain't shet down."

"Not shet down!" almost screamed Juliana. "Why, who's a ruin' it? It can't be Benhaded Jenkins, cause—"

"It's Mrs. Hal Haddon," said Peppercorn.

"Git out. You're a foolin' me."

"I'm a speakin' gospel truth and nothin' else," protested Mr. Peppercorn. "She keeps the books, and gives out the material, and sees to packin' the order boxes, and she checks off the time, and she jest sets there at the desk all day long, like a cat a-watchin' a mouse hole. And ole Bill Boon, the cutter, he allows she's a better manager and a quicker hand at figures than Harry himself. And that's saying pretty considerable."

"Well, I—do—declare—fort!" slowly uttered Juliana Joyce. "I didn't think it was in her! But she can't keep it up long. She ain't used to that sort of thing."

"Don't know about that," grunted the tinman, as he packed a bunch of dipper where the wheel-tires should not spatter them with mud. "She's got an amazin' sight of grit."

Old Peppercorn was right. Mrs. Harry Haddon had found her level at last. Late and early she was at her post.

"It would be a sorry home-coming for Hal," she thought. "To find the factory shut up and his bread-winner gone. I don't pretend to be a business woman, but I believe that I have some common sense, and I can surely accomplish what any other woman was expected to do."

Nevertheless a strange sensation of loneliness came over her on Christmas Eve, when she sat alone by the blazing logs on the hearth of the old farmhouse.

"Ain't we to have any Christmas, Mrs. Haddon?" Hannah, the hired girl had asked, with an aggrieved countenance, and the young wife had answered cheerfully.

"If course, Hannah! But the turkey must be the very smallest in the yard, and one little mince pie will do for you and me. I'll put a few sprigs of the mistletoe that Johnny Barton brought me from Callikoon Swamp, and we won't let the blessed day pass without some good cheer, lonely though we are."

"Poor dear," thought Hannah, thoughtfully regarding her young mistress' pale face. "It's pretty hard on her to be alone on this day of all others."

She was boiling down a kettle of cider apple sauce in the kitchen, when a chime of sleigh bells sounded as far as the front door and then stopped.

"You go to the door, please, Mrs. Haddon," she called out. "I've got my apple sass a-billin' away like all creation, and it'll be sart'in sure to scorch if I leave it a second now. I guess likely it's Reuby Martin come for the pumpkins you promised him."

Slowly Mrs. Hal withdrew the frosty bolts, that clicked beneath her touch, and turned the key in the big, foot-square lock.

There, outlined against the black-blue heavens, rode a beautiful young moon, instinct with orange light. All around it lay the white winter world, and on the step—the realization of all her hopes and dreams—stood a tall, muffled figure, with shining eyes.

"Lily! My Lily!"

"Hal!"

Did she faint? No, surely not; and yet the first she knew she was laying on the sofa in front of the fire, with Hal's dear, tender face bending over her.

"I dreamed all this last night," she murmured—"all—all! And now it has come true!"

Harry Haddon had taken advantage of a sudden and unlooked-for improvement in his father's condition, and had traveled night and day the sooner to reach Lily.

"You see," she said, when she had told him the whole story of her work in the shirt factory, "I simply fell back on practical good sense. Even Juliana Joyce could have done no more than that."

"There is not one woman in a thousand who would have had the courage to do this thing!" exclaimed Hal. "Lily, you are the greatest treasure man ever won! I'd give a hundred dollars to see my father's face when he reads the letter I shall write to-night—to hear my mother's comments!"

"Have I pleased you, Hal?"

"More than words can express, my dear little wife."

"Then," said Lily, "that is enough for me."—Waverley Magazine.

When a girl looks fresh, and blooming, and good looking, it is a sign she is in love.

THE AMERICAN BEAUTY.

Origin of a Handsome and Popular Rose.

There is an interesting story about the origin of the American Beauty. It was first grown in Washington, and here it attained its renown. The late Hon. George Bancroft, besides being a historian and scholar, was one of the first amateur rose-growers in America. Every year he imported cuttings from the leading flower-growers of Europe. The King of Prussia—when old Kaiser Wilhelm was king—allowed the American historian to have a slip of whatever he might fancy in the royal conservatories. Mr. Bancroft's gardener used to cultivate some of his roses in an old house away out on F, or perhaps it was G street, above Twenty-second street, in the west end of the city. Mrs. Grant had a florist named Field in charge of the White House conservatory. He was a rose-grower of rare merit and skill in his artistic work. One day he happened into the old building where Mr. Bancroft's gardener potted his plants and budded his roses. Over in a corner he observed a rose of a variety utterly unknown to him, and of wonderful size and perfection in form and color. "Where did this come from?" he carelessly inquired of his rose-growing confrere. "Oh, it is an offshoot from some cuttings we imported from Germany," the man replied. It was evident to Mr. Field that the other did not in the least comprehend the value of the new plant. After some talk Mr. Field bought the cuttings he had seen for $5. A year thereafter, when he had propagated his new purchase, and become convinced that he had a new and very valuable variety of rose, which he named the American Beauty, he sold his find for $5,000, the most wonderful result of the investment of $5 on record. To follow his luck a little further, Mr. Field invested his easily earned $5,000 in lands near the city, which in a little less than three years were sold for $50,000. Truth is sometimes stranger than fiction. In this instance it certainly was.—Washington Post.

A Famous Pastor's Wife.

For some years Russell Conwell did not employ a private secretary, and during all that time Mrs. Conwell attended to all his private correspondence, keeping accurate account of all his lecture engagements, and whenever possible going with him upon his tours, writes Maude A. Bowyer in the Ladies' Home Journal.

Mrs. Conwell is tall and of noble presence and engaging manners. Fond of her home, she is a model housewife, looking carefully after every detail in the home and in all purchases for the family, always regulating her duties to be at leisure to do any work or visiting which she, as a pastor's wife, may be called upon at any time to do. Her home is a home to all her friends, and to any and all of the members of her husband's church.

Mr. and Mrs. Conwell's only child, Agnes, who has just past her seventeenth year, resembles both parents in looks and character, and assists them materially in their church work. She is also a teacher in the Sabbath-school connected with her father's church.

The Conwell family spend their summers in the Berkshire Hills, where, nine miles from "the nearest station," stands "The Little House on the Hill." There, for three months of the year, they dispense hospitality with lavish hands. Mr. Conwell spends his weekdays there, returning to Philadelphia each Sunday to preach to his congregation.

The Family.

Diametrically different constitutions and temperaments are found in the same family. One son may be gifted with talent approaching to genius in art or mechanics, while another may have no natural gift except a sturdy manhood, which every one must learn to respect, and it would be madness for one brother, with his practical every-day ideas, to argue against the other, who may seem to him but a mighty dreamer. There is room enough in the world for all kinds and conditions of men and women, provided always that they are honest and true. It is a mother's duty especially to study the inclinations of her children—to keep back no good aspiration, to check no useful talent; however mediocre it may seem to her, it may be the stepping-stone to something higher.

In Good Company.

There are subjects at which even the scoffer must not sneer if he still wishes to be considered well bred. No one may scout religion and still be known as a person of good taste.

When old Monsieur de Montroud, a dissipated society man of the First Empire was in his last illness, the Abbe Petitot was a frequent visitor at his bedside. One day, in the course of a serious conversation, the abbe said to him:

"You have probably, during your long life, been very often tempted to speak lightly, and to joke about religion?"

"No," said the old wit, seriously. "I have always moved in the best society."

ROYAL ABSOLUTELY PURE.

The most Careful Housewife will use no other.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 105 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

Officially reported,
after elaborate competitive tests made under authority of Congress by the Chief Chemist of the United States Agricultural Department, Superior to all other Baking Powders in Leavening Strength.

Maine Wild Lands.

A Maine lumberman says the wild lands of this State would make thirteen States as large as Rhode Island, two as large as New Hampshire and Vermont, and one twice as large as Massachusetts. These lands are located in the following counties: Aroostook, 2,838,618 acres; Franklin, 589,962 acres; Hancock, 362,892 acres; Oxford, 553,651 acres; Penobscot, 827,604 acres; Piscataquis, 2,000,444 acres; Somerset, 1,735,838 acres; Washington, 624,123 acres. The spruce timber lands of Maine are worth more to-day than the pine lands were fifty years ago. This statement is based on the opinion of lumbermen who have been engaged in the business for forty years. The value of these spruce lands have been greatly enhanced by the enormous demand for pulp-wood.—Lewiston Journal.

An Ample Fund of Pleasure and Health may be derived from an ocean voyage and foreign travel. But before one gets one's "sea-legs" on, as the sailor says, the abominable qualms, begotten of sea sickness, have usually to be gotten over. Delicate people suffer, of course, more than the robust from this ailment, but few sea travelers escape it. Against the frightful nausea it produces, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is a reliable defense, and is so esteemed by tourists, commercial travelers, yachtmen and mariners. An ailment akin to sea sickness often afflicts land travelers with weak stomachs. This is often brought on by the jarring of a railway train. Disquietude in the gastric region from this cause is always remedied by the Bitters, which also prevents and cures chills and fever, rheumatism, nervous and kidney trouble, constipation and biliousness.

Tid Bits: Remember, Mary, if you break anything I shall stop it out of your wages. Servant (Impudently triumphant): Do it! Do it! I have just broke that 50 guinea vase in the dormin' room, and if you can stop that out of a pound—for I'm goin to leave at the end of the month—you'll be mighty clever.

STATE OF OHIO, CITY OF TOLEDO, ss.

LUCAS COUNTY.
FRANK J. CHENEY makes oath that he is the senior partner of the firm of F. J. CHENEY & Co., doing business in the City of Toledo, County and State aforesaid, and that said firm will pay the sum of ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for each and every case of Catarrh that can not be cured by the use of Hall's Catarrh Cure.

FRANK J. CHENEY.
Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this 6th day of December, A. D. 1886.

A. W. GLEASON,
Notary Public.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. Send for testimonials, free. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

Sold by Druggists, 75c. Hall's Family Pills, 25c.

"And you discharged youah man?" "Ya-a-ws. Had to do it, you know." "He seemed very anxious to please." "That was just the trouble. He wukked so hard it made me pawisively fatigued to have him wound."

TRUTH always travels in the middle of the road, no matter whom it meets.

The devil is afraid of the man who only has one talent for doing good, and improves it.

That Joyful Feeling

With the exhilarating sense of renewed health and strength and internal cleanliness, which follows the use of Syrup of Figs, is unknown to the few who have not progressed beyond the old time medicines and the cheap substitutes sometimes offered but never accepted by the well informed.

IT takes both grace and grit to get along pleasantly with people who never make mistakes.

THE man who loves his neighbor as himself, is doing all he can to help God to own the earth.

BE a faithful Christian yourself, and you will make it that much easier for somebody else to be one.

If It's a Sprain, Strain, or Bruise

St. Jacobs Oil

Will Cure It

Harlem Life: Lucy: Miss Aylett is not at all pleased with that notice of her in Sunday's paper. Jack: Why, they spoke of her as a handsome brunette. Lucy: But they published her picture.

If the Baby is Cutting Teeth.
Be sure and use that old and well-tried remedy, Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup for Children Teething.

She (just taking up palmistry): I don't suppose you believe that fortunes can be seen in one's hand? He: Oh, yes I do, if the hand is the best out and there is no limit to the game.

Coe's Cough Balm.
Is the oldest and best. It will break up a cold quicker than anything else. It is always reliable. Try it.

"Is your baby strong?" "Well, I should say so. He raised the whole family out of bed at three o'clock this morning, and scientists say that's the hour when everyone's strength is at its lowest point."

"Hanson's Magic Corn Salve."
Warranted to cure or money refunded. Ask your druggist for it. Price 15 cents.

Shackleton (in the diamond business): I had a man in my place this morning who had a wonderful eye. He could tell how much a diamond weighed by just looking at it. Wiberly: He must have been my ice-man.

Karl's Clover Root Tea.
The great blood purifier, gives freshness and clearness to the complexion and cures Constipation, 25c, 50c, $1.

Second Husband: You needn't growl because I don't work. All your first husband did was to whistle. Weary Wife: Yes; but I always found enough shavings after he got through to build the fire in the morning."

ASSIST NATURE
a little now and then in removing offending matter from the stomach and bowels and you thereby avoid a multitude of distressing derangements and diseases, and will have less frequent need of your doctor's service.

Of all known agents for this purpose, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are the best. Once used, they are always in favor. Their secondary effect is to keep the bowels open and regular, not to further constipation, as is the case with other pills. Hence, their great popularity with sufferers from habitual constipation, piles and their attendant discomfort and manifold derangements. The "Pellets" are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. No care is required while using them; they do not interfere with the diet, habits or occupation, and produce no pain, gripping or shock to the system. They act in a mild, easy and natural way and there is no reaction afterward. Their help lasts.

The Pellets cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heartburn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. In proof of their superior excellence, it can be truthfully said, that they are always adopted as a household remedy after the first trial. Put up in sealed, glass vials, therefore always fresh and reliable. One little "Pellet" is a laxative, two are mildly cathartic. As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, or to relieve distress from over-eating, take one after dinner. They are tiny, sugar-coated granules; any child will readily take them.

Accept no substitute that may be recommended to be "just as good." It may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

30 per cent PROFIT
This Month

Anyone can participate in our enormous profits by sending us $10 to $1,000. Highest refs. Write for particulars to

THE TRADERS SYNDICATE
Traders' Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
AGENTS WANTED.

DR. AMY E. PARKER,
Magnetic Physician

122 East Eighth St., Cor. Quincy, Topeka, Ks.

K. N. U. T. 687-42

When answering any of these advertisements, please mention this paper.

WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT.

REMA A. OTIS
ELIZABETH WARDALL, Editors.
"Equal Rights to All."

SHE WHO IS TO COME.

A woman—in so far as she beholds
Her one Beloved's face;
A mother—with a great heart that enfolds
The children of the Race;
Godly, free and strong, with that high bounty
That comes of perfect use, is built thereof
And mind where Reason rules over Duty,
And Justice reigns with Love.
A self-poised, royal soul, brave, wise, and tender,
No longer blind and dumb.
A human Being of unknown splendor,
As she who is to come!
—Charlotte Perkins Stetson.

Note.

We call the attention of our readers to the list upon this page of the places all over the world where women now possess a fraction of ballot rights as well as two states where full suffrage is given. This proves that the objection made by some that woman suffrage is a dangerous experiment is not valid, for its practice has proven to be a benefit wherever tried.

The defeat of Brackinridge proves that the tears, prayers, money and energy of the women in his district were not in vain. The women of the nation rejoice with them, and will carry the memory of their heroic struggle, into all future battles for the right.

Helen Stowell Johnson, of Pa., spoke twice to good audiences, while in Topeka. She was well received, and all will be glad to hear her again upon her return from Colorado, where she is now lecturing.

The Woman's Progressive Political League.

The Topeka W. P. P. L. is working for active co-operation with the People's Party league of the city. Meetings have been held in every voting precinct and in a number of weekly gatherings are the rule. One or two women of the W. P. P. L. are present at most of them to address the audience. These speakers do not confine themselves to the one issue of woman suffrage, but talk earnestly and intelligently upon all the planks of the platform, for their organization is mainly a study of these principles, and have become enthralled by the true Christ spirit contained therein. The Woman's League is an earnest body of women, who meet each week, to discuss important questions of the day, and it is capable of exerting an influence, over the People's Party, that shall be to its growth and progress.

Where Women Have Suffrage.

In Iceland they vote for all elective officers.
In Italy widows vote for members of parliament.
In Croatia and Dalmatia they do so in local elections in person.
In Austria-Hungary they vote by proxy for all elective officers.
In British Burma women taxpayers vote in the rural districts.
In Delaware suffrage is exercised by women in several municipalities.
In Kansas they have equal suffrage with men at all municipal elections.
About 50,000 women voted in 1830.
In Montana they vote on local taxation.
In Russia women householders vote for all elective officers and on all local matters.
In France the women teachers elect women member on all boards of education.
Women have municipal suffrage in Cape Colony which rules 1,000,000 square miles.
In Arkansas and Missouri women vote, by petition, on liquor license, in many cases.
In Montana woman suffrage on local taxation is guaranteed by the state constitution.

Municipal woman suffrage rules in New Zealand and at parliamentary elections also.

In England, Scotland and Wales women vote for all elective officers, except members of parliament.

In the United States twenty-eight states and territories have given women some form of suffrage.

In the Madras presidency and the Bombay presidency (Hindustan), they can do so in all municipalities.

In Utah women voted until disfranchised by the "Edmunds law," when they organized to demand its repeal.

In New York they can and do vote at school elections. The question of the constitutionality of the law is still undecided.

In Sweden women vote for all elective officers except representatives; also, indirectly, for members of the house of lords.

In Pennsylvania a law was passed in 1889, under which women vote on local improvements by signing or refusing to sign petitions therefor.

In Norway they have school suffrage.

In Ireland they vote for the harbor boards, poor law guardians, and in Belfast for municipal officers.

Iceland, in the North Atlantic, the Isle of Man, between England and Ireland, and Pitcairn island, in the South Pacific, have woman suffrage.

The countries of the world where women already have some suffrage have an area of over eighteen million square miles and their population is over 350,000,000.

In the Dominion of Canada women have municipal suffrage in every province, and also in the Northwest Territories. In Ontario they vote for all elective officers, except members of the legislature and parliament.

School suffrage in various degrees is granted to women in Arizona, Colorado, Kansas, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, South Dakota, Texas, Vermont, and Wisconsin.

In all the countries of Russian Asia they can do so wherever a Russian colony settles. The Russians are colonizing the whole of their vast Asian possessions and carrying with them everywhere the "mir" or self-governing village, wherein women who are heads of households vote.

In Wyoming women have voted on the same terms with men since 1870. The convention in 1889 to form a state constitution unanimously inserted a provision securing them full suffrage. This constitution was ratified by the voters at a special election by about three-fourths majority. Congress refused to require the disfranchisement of the women and admitted the state July 10, 1890.

Colorado gave women full suffrage by a popular vote in the year 1893.

What of the Future.

The day is fast approaching when the voters of Kansas will march to the ballot box and register their opinions upon the important issues now before us.

These issues are, stating them broadly—the labor, and the woman suffrage questions. The first is included in the Omaha platform and means if carried out and crystallized into the law, the industrial emancipation of the millions of wage earners all over our land. It would mean that the government would be the agency by which the associated people of the nation would carry on universal co-operation. It would mean, not paternalism, but fraternalism, an association of brothers for their common good.

Is it possible that men will not vote to bring this beautiful dream into realization? The platform adopted by the People's Party of Kansas includes all the above principles, together with that of equal suffrage. The latter, however, cannot be made a partisan issue because it is an amendment to the state constitution, and every voter of every party must cast his ballot "for," or "against" the suffrage amendment.

Who will deny that the enfranchisement of half the citizens of the great state of Kansas, is not an important issue. The progressive people of this country are anxiously looking to the Sun Flower state to see that it does not swerve from its record of being the most wide awake and advanced state in the union. The women have faith in the justice loving spirit which animates the majority of Kansans and believe that they will vote to emancipate, not only their own sex from the thralldom of industrial slavery, but will also gladly give us the rights we crave, and which we believe to be ours. If it be true that thought is the power that moves the world—that it is potent to accomplish whatever it concentrates upon, then surely the united effort of the thousands of earnest intelligent women in this country will have its effect upon the voters of our state, thus making the majority for the amendment so great that the victory for equal rights will be a grand and glorious one.

Notes of Interest.

The news that twenty-five per cent of the delegates to the Colorado Populist convention were ladies is a most interesting piece of information. And nobody was shocked. It was the most natural thing in the world, after all; and it is strange that prejudice has so long shut women from what should be the most effective, moral and Christian sphere of action. The ladies of Colorado take great interest in the social, moral, political questions, and are on hand to help secure good legislators in order to have righteous laws. It would be a great help in Nebraska to the people's cause if our wives and sisters were given the ballot with us.

* * *

A young man of the name of Bok, who edits a mediæval publication alleged to be in the interest of women, says women should be content to leave the work of men to men. Is the young man of the name of Bok the judge of what is work for men and what for women?

In brief, who is to be the judge of what is man's or woman's work? When it comes to that, who has the right to say what is man's dress and what is woman's? The old oriental men wore long skirts and long beards at the same time. Dress for men and women was nearly the same. At length came the necessity for men to hustle a little more lively for their living. They discarded the long petticoats as being in their way for work. Now women propose to do the same thing, the necessity being upon them for active work. Who shall say them nay? It is merely a matter of evolution. Dress is not a matter of sex. It is a matter of individual comfort and convenience.

* * *

The campaign made by the E. S. A. is of small importance compared with that of the People's Party for the suffrage amendment. When every political meeting of a party is a suffrage meeting then can we rejoice and take courage.

* * *

During October a number of distinguished women will come to Kansas under the auspices of the P. P. state committee. Susan B. Anthony will spend two weeks here. Clara B. Colby, editor of the Woman's Tribune and one of the most progressive women in the country will come also. Anna D. Weaver and Mrs. Emery, both known as writers upon reform subjects are expected. We trust they may have a splendid hearing.

A MEMBER WRITES—Having received your paper the Helping Hand, since I took life insurance policy I took it as a compliment from the company as I received it every two months but after consolidation I have noticed the subscription price is 25 cents per year, if I have to pay for it please stop it as I have too many papers to pay for.

ANSWER—This paper is free to all members of the Aid—25 cents a year to others.

CLIMAX BAKING POWDER
PUREST AND BEST
LESS THAN HALF THE PRICE OF OTHER BRANDS — POUNDS 20¢ —
HALVES 10¢ QUARTERS 5¢
SOLD IN CANS ONLY.

HUMPHREYS'
For Piles—External or Internal, Blind or Bleeding; Fistula in Ano; Itching or Bleeding of the Rectum. The relief is immediate—the cure certain.
For Burns, Scalds and Ulceration and Contraction from Burns. The relief is instant—the healing wonderful and unequalled.

WITCH HAZEL OIL
For Boils, Hot Tumors, Ulcers, Fistulas, Old Sores, Itching Eruptions, Chafing or Scald Head. It is Infallible.
For Inflamed or Caked Breasts and Sore Nipples. It is invaluable.
Price, 50 Cents. Trial size, 25 Cents.
Sold by Druggists, or sent post-paid on receipt of price.
HUMPHREYS' MED. CO., 111 & 113 William St., NEW YORK.

THE PILE OINTMENT

TEN REASONS

FOR USING

DOBBINS + ELECTRIC + SOAP.

THE REASON WHY it is BEST from a sanitary point of view, is because of its absolute purity.
" " it is unscented, is because nothing is used in its manufacture that must be hidden or disguised.
" " it is cheapest to use, is because it is harder and dryer than ordinary soap, and does not waste away; also because it is not filled with rosin and clay to make weights.
" " no boiling of clothes is needed, is because there is no abutration in it—it being absolutely pure, can do its own work.
" " it leaves clothes washed with it whiter and sweeter than any other soap, is because it contains no adultration to yellow them.
" " it washes flannels without shrinking, bringing them out soft, white and fleecy, is because it is free from rosin, which hardens, yellows and mats together all woolen fibres, making them harsh and coarse.
" " three bars of it will make a gallon of elegant white soft-soap if simply shaved up and thoroughly dissolved by boiling in a gallon of water, is that it contains pure and costly ingredients found in no other soap.
" " it won't injure the finest lace or the most delicate fabric, is that all these ingredients are harmless.
" " we paid $50,000 for the formula twenty-five years ago, is that we knew there was no other soap like it.
" " so many millions of women use it is that they have found it to be the best and most economical, and absolutely unchanged in quality.

ASK YOUR GROCER FOR IT.

DOBBINS SOAP MFG. CO.,

SUCCESSORS TO

I. L. CRAGIN & CO.,

CHICAGO, NEW YORK, BOSTON,

PHILADELPHIA AND CINCINNATI.

Sheet Music Free.

THE FARMER'S WIFE takes pleasure in announcing that it has succeeded in making arrangements whereby it is enabled to supply, to subscribers only, strictly first class, new, copyrighted, regular 40-cent sheet music ENTIRELY FREE, EXCEPT FOR THE COST OF POSTAGE, ONE CENT PER SHEET.

This is the most interesting and important announcement ever made to lovers of music.

The music is not published in book form, nor is it to be published in this paper, but is regular first-class, full size sheet music, printed in the finest manner on a superior quality of paper, with engraved title. PUBLISHERS' PRICE, 40 CENTS PER SHEET, and in no way can it be obtained at less than that price except through the liberality and enterprise of THE FARMER'S WIFE.

We believe that we will be doing a public service to thousand of our music-loving readers to supply regularly, new copyrighted sheet music, as it is published at one cent per sheet in connection with a subscription to THE FARMER'S WIFE.

OUR OFFERS.

No. 1. Every person who sends 50 cents for one year's subscription to THE FARMER'S WIFE may, by the payment of 12 cents additional (making in all 62 cents) have one piece of new copyrighted sheet music, each week for 12 weeks, making 12 pieces in all, at a cost of but one cent per sheet, to cover postage.

No. 2. Every persons who send 50 cents for one years subscription to THE FARMER'S WIFE may, by the payment of 52 cents additional (making in all $1.02) have one piece of new copyrighted sheet music, each week for one year, making fifty-two pieces in all, at a cost of but one cent per sheet, to cover postage. This music will be mailed by the publishers each week, and will consist of the latest vocal and instrumental pieces, and will be in every way first-class, for which the publishers charge at retail 40 cents per sheet.

SPECIAL OFFER.—Present subscribers who desire this music may renew their subscription at once, and the subscription will be extended one year from the time their present subscription expires, and the music will be sent each week for one year, BEGINNING IMMEDIATELY.

The music is a GIFT from THE FARMER'S WIFE to its subscribers, who are only asked to pay the postage. The retail price for the 52 pieces of music to be sent during the year amounts to the large sum of $20.83, which THE FARMER'S WIFE saves to its subscribers.

In order that every one may satisfy themselves as to the value of the music, a sample sheet will be sent to those who desire it on receipt of 10 cents, to cover expenses, but not more than one sheet will be sent at 10 cents, and that only as a sample. Address

THE FARMER'S WIFE, 119 WEST FIFTH STREET, TOPEKA, KANSAS.

CHRISTMAS FOR THE CHILDREN
Parents, Brothers, Sisters and Friends of THE LITTLE ONES.
You can not make them a Christmas Present that would capture and delight their little hearts like the inimitable BOX O' BROWNIES, consisting of 12 rubber stamps, size of accompanying illustrations, representing the well known "Brownies" in their comical attitudes of Policeman, Fireman, etc., etc., etc.
Every purchaser who will tell us what State this little out-going success will receive in addition to the Box O' Brownies a 5 month's subscription to the popular family monthly Way-side-Gleanings, which is a veritable treasure-house of useful information and fascinating stories for the little folks. Address CONN. NOVELTY CO., P.O. New Haven, Conn.

AGENTS $10 a day at home
Selling LIGHTNING PLATE and plating Jewelry, Watches, Tableware, Bicycles, etc. Place these jewelry goods on wheels, and on all kinds of metal with gold, silver or nickel. No experience. Anyone can plate the first effort. Goods sent at once. Home, thrives complete. Different sizes, all warranted. Wholesale to agents $15 per doz. Agents, send order. Catalogue free.

Patents
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge. For information and free hand-book write to H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Scientific American
Largest circulation of any scientific paper in the world. Splendidly illustrated. No intelligent man should be without it. Yearly $3.00 a year; $1.50 six months. Address MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, New York City.

PATENTS
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge. For information and free hand-book write to H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Patents
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge. For information and free hand-book write to H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Patents
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge. For information and free hand-book write to H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Patents
We secure United States and Foreign Patents, register Trade-Marks, Copyrights and Labels, and attend to all patent business for moderate fees. We report on patentability free of charge. For information and free hand-book write to H. B. WILLSON & CO., Attorneys at Law, Opp. U. S. Pat. Office, WASHINGTON, D. C.

END